3963. Does not sparkling wine, as a rule, mean what is called champagne? Yes—effervescent wines.

3964. In spite of the increase in the duty from 6s. to 10s., the import of sparkling wines has doubled? Yes. My own opinion is that if the duty were raised to 15s., the import would still go on increasing. We find the same result in the case of cigars and tobacco. There is a greater consumption of these articles notwithstanding the increase in the duty; and I think you will find that it is pretty well the same in regard to bottled beer.

3965. Between the years mentioned there was a decrease of 260,000 gallons in the consumption of beer in wood;—how do you account for that. Is it in consequence of an increased demand for Colonial beer? I do not know whether the same reasoning would apply; I presume it would. You will notice that, while there has been a decrease in the importation of beer in wood, there has been a vast increase in the case of bottled beer. There was three times the quantity of bottled beer imported in 1885 than there was in 1876. The inference that this decrease in the importation of beer in wood is attributable to some extent at any rate to an increased demand for Colonial beer is borne out by the figures with regard to the importation of malt and hops. In 1876 the quantity of malt imported was 183,000 bushels, while in 1885 the figures had increased to 406,000 bushels. Then with regard to hops, the quantity imported in 1876 was 526,931 lbs., as against 890,360 lbs. in 1885.

3967. Is it called glucose malt, or simply glucose? It is called glucose. Another material called gelatinised maize is imported as a substitute for malt.

3968. These articles are not included in the figures you have given? Yes they are, because we charged them as malt and the importation was then discontinued. We charge them as malt under the 133rd clause. Glucose pays duty as sugar or molasses according to circumstances.

3969. Is glucose included in these figures? It will be found under the head of sugar.

3971. Are you aware that there is anything deleterious in glucose? I am not aware that there is; that is to say in glucose by itself. When it comes into combination with other things during the process of manufacture it may perhaps be injurious, but glucose alone is not deleterious.

3972. Not when it is made under a sulphuric acid process? That I can't say. Used in the manufacture of beer it may perhaps be injurious, but I think there is nothing deleterious in glucose pure and simple.

3973. You are aware, at all events, that glucose beer has a bad name? I think it deserves a bad name.

3974. Why? I am inclined to think that a great deal of Bright's disease and kidney disease is attributable to it.

3975. It is the subject of even a more serious reproach. It is said that it has the effect of making people insane. We do not know this from what we might call sufficient authority—that is to say, medical authority, or from the Asylum authorities; but there has been an impression on the minds of several witnesses who have been called before us that Colonial beer being largely made out of glucose, causes a great deal of the insanity which exists in the Colony? I do not think there are any data for that assumption.

3976. Can you give us any idea of the quantity of beer manufactured in the Colony, apart from the malt and hops figures? No; I have no means of arriving at any reliable information on the subject.

3977. So that if an excise duty were imposed on beer you would have to make a guess? Necessarily so, because there are breweries all over the country, and we have no returns from them—no reliable returns. An excise duty on beer would be very difficult to collect.

3978. I presume that the deficiency in the consumption of beer in wood, which amounted to 260,000 gallons between the years 1876 and 1885 was made up, and more than made up by the increased production of Colonial beer? Yes.

3979. Mr. Hyam.] Is the decrease in the importation of draft beer made up by the increase in the importation of bottled beer. I am speaking of the quantity? No, it is still below, considerably.

3980. Do you not think that the increase in the importation of bottled beer is attributable to the increased consumption of lager beer? There is more lager beer consumed now than formerly. It comes in at the same rate of duty as the English beer; it can simply displace the English beer to the extent to which it is preferred.

3981. Is there any increase in the importation of lager beer? A considerable increase. I have no knowledge that it is lager beer; I have a suspicion that it contains neither malt nor hops.

3982. You were connected with the Customs-houses in the mother country? I had to do with the docks.

3983. You were brought into contact there with a good deal of spirits and wines? In every process—in vatting, refining, and preparing for this market.

3984. You think that the average wines and beers imported into this Colony are equal to what generally go into consumption in the old country? Quite equal.

3985. And that it hardly pays to import cheap spirits, or beers, or wines? Yes, for the people will have the best article in the market.

3986. Does white spirit go much into consumption? I do not know.

3987. Is there any difference between white spirit and silent spirit. Are they one and the same? The terms mean the same thing—an uncoloured spirit.

3988. Mr. Hutchison.] Does not the presence of fusel oil prove that the spirit is young? Not necessarily. A low and badly-distilled spirit would contain most fusel oil. The quantity of fusel oil is due not entirely to the age but to the preparation of the spirit.

3989. Is it a fact that it is more easy to introduce an inferior spirit than a good one. The inferiority of the spirit is not detected so readily if it is diluted with water? If that be so we have a very good test in fixing the standard at 16-5.

3990. What was the object of fixing the standard at that strength? To improve generally the standard of spirit, and actually to prevent the people paying for spirit and water instead of for spirit.

- J. Powell, Esq.
25 June, 1886.
3991. It has been suggested that bad spirit can be disguised by adulteration with water? We can take out the spirit.
3992. But the consumer is deceived? Yes.
3994. Has the decrease in the importation of bulk beer led to any increase in the consumption of imported bottled beer? No.
3995. As there is a large increase in the importation of malt, it is inferred that Colonial beer is sold largely as English beer? I do not know. I may mention that a case of labels was imported lately. Hotel-keepers in country towns will not keep a hogshead of English beer on tap, for the reason that they cannot sell all of it before it goes bad. To my mind this circumstance supplies an inference that people who are not in good positions will drink Colonial beer, while those who can afford to do so prefer to have bottled beer, because it is more genuine and can be depended on for quality.
3996. But that is questionable now, with this importation of labels? It is not questionable to any one who is in the habit of drinking beer. I have never tasted Colonial beer in my life and I hope I never shall do so.
3997. Mr. Roseby.] Are there no reliable returns obtainable of the quantity of beer manufactured in the Colony? There is no excise duty on beer, and whatever returns are received are merely approximate. The brewers do not furnish any returns.
3998. Are the brewers not supposed to furnish from time to time returns of the quantity of beer they manufacture? Not under any Act of Parliament.
3999. Is there no way of ascertaining accurately what quantity of Colonial beer is consumed by the people? I am not aware that there is any reliable information on the subject.
4000. I should like to have your opinion in regard to two or three matters connected with the liquor traffic. There has been an agitation going on for some time in reference to local option; are you in favor of the principle of giving the people the right to say whether they will have public-houses or not? I am strongly in favor of local option with some limitations. I am certainly in favor of the opinion of the people being taken on the subject.
4001. The present Sunday closing provisions we all know are very often broken. Are you in favor of such an enactment as will enable the law in regard to Sunday closing to be enforced? I think the fact that there are a large number of people who get liquor surreptitiously on Sundays is evidence of the necessity to open the houses under restrictions. I am in favor of the English practice of opening during certain hours on Sundays.
4002. Are you not aware that in Ireland the public-houses are closed on Sundays and that there is a general movement in England in favor of the closing of the houses in England on Sundays? Yes.
4003. Are you in favor of barmaids being employed? I have the same feeling that most of us have. I should not like any female member of my family to be employed in a public-house but I do not think it a subject to legislate upon.
4004. But if it is endangering the morals of the girls should not the law step in? I am afraid that would apply to a great number of other avocations.
4005. Are there any others which have the same dangerous characteristics as this? That I cannot judge of. I think any such legislation as you suggest would be over legislation.
4006. We have been informed that of late years there has been a great increase of intemperance among young people. Do you think there ought to be special legislation with regard to the serving of young people with liquor? I think the matter must be left to the education of the people. I do not think they should be legislated for.
4007. Mr. Colls.] Have you any idea what the white spirit which is imported is used for? I understand it is used for making lemonade and ginger-beer and for manufacturing tinctures, and for a variety of other purposes. I have no doubt that some of it is used for making brandy and gin. I judge from my own experience. Some years back I was occasionally asked to buy white spirit for people in the country and I almost invariably handed them over to the wine and spirit merchants. I had business with one firm who wanted to purchase a quarter cask of brandy and I found I could not get it at the price. I went to one house and they said they could get it at any price. I gathered from that that white spirit was used.
4008. Is it largely used? I do not think it is largely used.
4009. Do you think they import more than the lemonade manufacturers? No doubt they do. Some houses import white spirit more largely than others. I think the best houses do not import it at all.
4010. Is it usual to get returns from the vineyards of the white spirit they use? I do not.
4011. I mean white brandy? I have nothing to do with that. Mr. Barney has. I have seen consignments of low-priced brandy, rum, and gin imported for years past but they have a very slow sale.
4012. We have had inferior samples shown here—brandy as low as 2s. 6d. and whiskey at 3s. Is that in consequence of its being new? I do not know; there may be a variety of reasons for it. I do not know that 3s. is very low. Very little of the cheap spirit has paid duty. It goes away to the Islands.
4013. Mr. Hyam.] Do you remember that years ago a good deal of British brandy was sold here and at home. That does not partake of the nature of brandy at all does it? It is a very bad imitation. It has to pay the same duty as the foreign brandy and that kills it at once.
4014. Do you remember that twenty-five years ago it was largely imported? I remember buying some and sending it to New Zealand but they sent it back again.
4015. Would it be possible to ascertain the quantity of white brandy which has been utilised? If you can tell me the bond marks I can give you the history of it.
4016. Mr. Hutchison.] You do not know the market value of these spirits when they have passed out of your hands? No.

MONDAY, 28 JUNE, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,		G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.,
T. COLLS, Esq., J.P.,		J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Dr. Manning, Inspector-General of Insane, called in, sworn, and examined:—

4017. President.] You have held the office of Inspector-General of Insane or some kindred office for some years? Since the beginning of 1879 I have been Inspector-General of the Insane, while for the previous ten years I was Superintendent of Gladesville Asylum. Dr. Manning.
28 June, 1886.

4018. And prior to your Colonial appointment you were an officer in Her Majesty's Navy? Yes.

4019. Then your experience of the insane really commenced in 1869? Yes.

4021. If a similar return were called for at any time you think that the per centage of permanent insane, due to drink, would be about 5½? From 5 per cent. to 6 per cent. of the whole of the permanent inmates on any given day.

4022. Would some of that per centage be discharged afterwards as cured? A certain number would be discharged, but the admissions of others would maintain the proportion. The percentage on the admissions during any one year is decidedly higher than that rate.

4023. What is it? I prepared, for the sake of a paper which I read before the Medical Society, a return showing the admissions to Gladesville from 1st January, 1869, to the 31st December, 1878. In those ten years 3,077 persons were admitted, and the insanity of 257, upwards of 8 per cent., was due to drink. Then for the next five years—from 1880 to 1884—I got returns from all the asylums, and this information I published in my report for the year 1884. The admissions numbered 2,392, and of these 11 per cent. were due to drink. Dr. Herbert Major, Medical Superintendent of the largest asylum in Yorkshire—the asylum at Leeds—collected from the reports of the Commissioners in Lunacy the English returns from 1876 to 1882, and he found that between 13 per cent. and 14 per cent. of the cases were due to drink. I would explain that in the English asylums the mode of admission is readier than ours, and no doubt this will account for the difference between the English statistics and our own. In this Colony a very large proportion of temporary insanity never reaches the asylums at all; it is stopped in Sydney in the Reception-house and in the country in the gaols. A very large proportion indeed of temporary insanity is no doubt due to drink. Insanity that is due to drink is curable by abstinence and proper feeding; it is cured either in the Reception-house or the gaols or within a few weeks in the asylums, and therefore the permanent inmates—the inmates at any one given day only show a very small per centage. To show the very large number that are stopped in the Reception-house I will quote a few figures. During 1885 there were 362 cases remanded from the police court; 211 recovered in the Reception-house; 140 were sent to the asylum; 4 died; and 7 remained at the end of the year. Of the 211 who recovered in the Reception-house I am quite sure that three-fourths were due to drink. In the up-country gaols in the same year, 413 were received under remand for medical treatment because they had shown to the police signs of temporary insanity; 125 were sent to hospitals; 242 were discharged as sane in due course; and I have every reason to think that fully three-fourths of these latter cases were due to drink. There is no doubt also that these cases discharged as sane from both the Reception-house and the up-country gaols include a number of repeating cases—cases which have come in over and over again, and which have been counted if not twice in one year, at all events over and over again in different years.

4024. Therefore, in order to be at all accurate in the percentages, you have to make some allowance for these recidivistes, because they represent factors to come in twice or four times, and therefore destroy the percentage to that extent? Exactly.

4025. I presume you have no return of these people who come backwards and forwards? I have not kept any return of the people who have been in and out in this way. From January 1 to December 31, 1885, the number of admissions under remand to Reception-house was 346, and of these 12 were re-admissions. From January 1 to June 30, 1886, the number of admissions was 161, and of these 6 were re-admissions.

4026. Mr. Fowler, of the Reception-house, told us that a considerable circuit of drunkards is established there; he says that he recognises faces frequently? I have no doubt that is the case; it is more so the case in Darlinghurst Gaol. Magistrates have power to remand to gaol anyone who has been there before; they do not always send these cases to the Reception-house. Suppose they get a man who is known as an ordinary gutter-drunkard, they do not send him to the Reception-house, where he would be possibly too comfortable; they send him to gaol where the number of recidivistes is larger than it is in the Reception-house.

4027. Then the probability is that, with similar treatment, this Colony would yield much the same percentage as in England? I have no doubt it would yield from 13 to 14 per cent., or perhaps 15 per cent. or more, on the admissions.

4028. So I gather, with regard to admissions, drunkenness has about the same effect in England as it has here? I think so.

4029. There is nothing very differential in drunkenness in this Colony as compared to England? So far as I am aware, the system of drinking here is very different to what it is in England, and is likely, in that way, to lead to more cases of short sharp delirium tremens and temporary insanity. I allude particularly to the way in which people knock down their cheques and drink wholesale for a short time. That custom does not obtain in England to the same extent as it does here, and one has reason to think that liquor is not quite so bad in England as it is here, especially in up-country places.

Dr. Manning, 4030. Have you any cause to attribute insanity, temporary or permanent, to the large consumption of Colonial beer? I have no information on the subject; I do not know exactly what Colonial beer is. I understand it is a very varying compound in the different public-houses and breweries.

4031. We have been told by several witnesses that some Colonial beer promotes insanity, and some hold that it does so more than ardent liquors do;—has it come under your cognizance that it has that effect? I have really no knowledge on the subject.

4032. Do you think that the drinking habit is likely to lead to more acute cases in this Colony than in England? Yes; not because the drinking is chronic but because it is done violently. A not at all uncommon expression for these people to use is, "The police took me when my cheque was in my head." I have heard the expression used in the Receiving-house and the gaol, and no doubt it is true in very many cases.

4033. Do you think, as an authority on insanity, that drunkenness so alters the tissue of the brain as to produce insanity after some considerable use of intoxicants? Oh, yes. The habitual use of alcohol in excess will undoubtedly alter the tissue of the brain; but it alters also and more readily the tissue of the liver and kidneys, and one of the great reasons which makes me think the statistics I have given you are correct is the very few cases in which we are able to trace the result of drink in the post-mortem room. It is a rule of the Department to perform a post-mortem examination in every case, unless the friends make objection; and it is very rare indeed to find kidney and liver mischief. It affords a very strong argument for saying that the number of permanent inmates who are there for drink is a small one. There are several other reasons that make me think that the figures I have given you—and which are opposed to the ordinary idea on the subject—are correct. It is well known that in England insanity is very much greater in the southern than in the northern counties. In Wiltshire, Dorset, and the other southern counties the percentage of insanity is very much larger than in Yorkshire, Lancashire, Durham, and Northumberland. If a large amount of insanity were due to drink you would say that it ought to be found in the places where wages are higher. The Dorset labourer gets 10s. a week; he has to support a family, and he cannot get much drink out of that wage; yet in that part of the world the amount of insanity is much larger than in places in the northern counties, where they get from 20s. to 30s. per week, and where they can and do afford to drink. Another reason is that the cause is so easily packed into one word—"drink." Everyone likes to have a cause for a thing, and the cause is "drink." Insanity is very abstruse in its causation, and this word "drink" is a ready way out of the difficulty. There is another reason still. Patients are always ready to admit that drink was the cause; they get an idea into their heads that if it is due to drink they are likely to recover soon and be discharged. They make it an excuse—a perfectly natural one—and we find that in a number of cases a patient will say:—"What happened to me was due to drink," when there is really good evidence on the other side to show that it was nothing of the kind, that he has been getting insane for years past.

4035. Do you, as a thinker rather than as a professional man, think that drinking is an acquired habit, or that it is a craving for excitement, which is, so to speak, congenital, and to be found in all human beings? That is a rather difficult question to answer. In many cases, no doubt, it is acquired. Then there are other cases which show that in very large populations the climate and mode of feeding, of habits of life altogether, are such as to make people abjure drink. My experience is that the young Australian—the native-born—drinks very little, and this result, I think it may be said, is due altogether to the climate of his upbringing. The American drinks very much less than the Englishman. That may be due to the climate also, and it is due very largely to his manner of feeding. If you go in America to either a restaurant or a hotel you will find that a very large proportion of the things on the table contain sugar, milk, and starch, or some one or other of the hydro-carbons. If people feed largely on oil, fat, and sugar they will not drink because they do not require it; this food takes the place of alcohol, and one of the best known and assured methods of curing people in inebriate asylums, and in weaning them from a liking for alcohol is to make up for it every day in their food, by giving them a large proportion of sugar, milk, or fat.

4036. Did it not then appear to follow that the bushman and the shepherd who live so largely upon nitrogenous food would, as he does, break out every now and then? That was the conclusion to which I was coming, and there is no doubt that there is a great deal to be said for that view of the subject. It is for him a crying physical necessity in very many cases. If you give him a varied diet, made up, I say, of sweets and more vegetables and a larger amount of milk, and things of that sort, he would not be so liable to drink. It is well known that people who do not take any alcohol with their ordinary food eat largely of sweet things. You may almost tell people at table who are total abstainers by their fondness for sweets.

4037. Does the converse hold good? I think it holds good to some extent; I do not imply he is not good, but he takes alcohol in some form.

4038. Is the habit of drinking hereditary? To a very great extent no doubt it is hereditary.

4039. And insanity also? It is also, of course, hereditary—very largely.

4040. I think you have seen the way in which the State drunkard is dealt with in other countries. You have visited the asylums of the United States? I saw the inebriate asylums in America eighteen years ago.

4041. What opinion did you form of them at that time? I thought they were doing a considerable amount of good, but they did not touch the lower classes to any extent. They were dealing with people who had funds, and who were able to pay for their maintenance in them, and there were very few institutions dealing with the lower classes who contribute more to the asylums and gaols than any one else.

4042. Do not these institutions embrace the ordinary artisan, the journeyman, and the labouring man? They did not at that time with the exception of a place in San Francisco where the people were kept only for a very short time.

4043. They were voluntary asylums I presume? Some are voluntary, but most of them had the power of commitment. The Act in the State enables magistrates to commit people for definite periods.

4044. It appeared to you then to be a serious defect that the asylums should be used for the better classes to the prejudice of the classes who contribute most patients to institutions of this character? It seems to me a very serious defect, and I think if anything of the kind is established here—and it would be a very good thing if something of the kind were established—the legislation should provide for both the well-to-do and the poorer class, the artisan and labouring class who drink. I think that any legislation for the inebriate ought to be quite distinct from legislation for the ordinary insane. I had something to do some years ago in preparing the present Lunacy Act, and it was thought advisable then to cut out all the clauses that related to inebriates, because it has not been found well to treat inebriates in lunatic asylums. It was understood that soon after that measure was enacted an inebriate Act would be passed, but that has never been done.

Dr. Manning.

4045. Why was it considered inexpedient to have the two classes—the inebriate and the insane—in one establishment? It was thought to be bad for each class of patient. After a certain stage, when the inebriate has recovered his reason, it is necessary to keep him for some months, and it is a hardship that he should be shut up with lunatics during that time. Being perfectly sane and in the possession of his faculties, he resents the hardship by working on the delusions of the lunatic, and making him very much more troublesome to the officers and people in charge.

4046. He makes fun of them? He is extremely mischievous. Finding he has to remain so many months he revenges himself upon the officers and people in charge by provoking the lunatic, who knows no better, to insubordination, and by working on his delusions, sometimes producing danger to officers and attendants.

4047. That is not so much because his restoration would be jeopardised in any way as because he feels inclined to be mischievous? I think it is very bad for the inebriate—who is sane—to be shut up with insane people.

4049. There is a prevailing opinion that the habitual drunkard is incurable. Taking an average specimen who has been drinking for 10 or more years, and who may or may not have been in either a receiving-house or an asylum, do you consider that either mentally or physically he is a hopeless individual? A great deal depends on his age and the length of time he has been drinking. A man past 50 years, as a rule, becomes very hopeless; the younger he is the more hopeful his case is.

4050. There is nothing then in habitual drunkenness, except when the victim is in declining years, or past the climacteric, to discourage the State from treating that man with a hope of totally reforming him? So long as there has not been any real brain impairment showing itself by symptoms of dementia or insanity.

4051. By far the larger proportion of persons who are sent to the reception-house, and asylum, and gaol, could be treated in a kind of reformatory? A very large proportion could be treated with success. I meet daily, in the streets of Sydney, people whom I have known as inebriates, and who were so far inebriated that they found their way into lunatic asylums; but they have turned over a new leaf, and are doing well in the world now. I am spoken to almost daily by such persons.

4052. But the recoveries are not so many among women as among men. What is the reason—because man has a larger will possibly? There is larger scope for his energies, and a larger field before him if he does turn over a new leaf than there is for a woman, who lives a narrower life, and has fewer interests.

4054. I mean among her own sex? I think that is possibly because she drinks in secret to a great extent.

4055. What do you think of the treatment of the drunkard? I think it is utterly useless. The reception-house, no doubt, is a sanatorium for the drunkard, and has the effect in very many cases of keeping these people from dying or becoming insane. More good, however, could be done for these people in inebriate asylums, because they could be detained a longer time. It is necessary to talk to and advise them, to feed them in the manner I have suggested, and to restore their health; and they come out, after a residence of one or two or three months, certainly more fitted to face the world. But in the reception-house or the gaol, where they are treated only for a matter of ten days or a fortnight at longest, there is no good done except temporarily and by saving life and reason.

4057. And in a large proportion of cases the health of the drunkard would be recovered—in a few months at the outside—sufficiently to permit him to be worked in a suitable manner? After a week or about ten days he would recover his health, so that during the remainder of his stay—which, in my opinion, should not be a short one—he would be employed to a great extent in earning his own living and reducing the expense of the institution. I think, as a rule, it would be very unwise to commit people for a shorter period than three months. I should very much prefer six months to deal with these cases, and during five months of that period a large majority would be able to work.

4058. You think the State might go so far as to punish the habitual drunkard by committing him to six months seclusion? Decidedly, because in addition to punishing him you are improving his health, and giving him a chance to do well in the world. The sentence which deprives him of his liberty is also doing him a great good by giving him a chance of reformation, and putting him in a condition of health to enable him to do so.

- Dr. Manning. 4061. Would it be wise to separate the punishment cases from the treatment cases? I would not speak of it as punishment in any case. It is necessary for his welfare that he should be confined, and we should speak of him in just the same sense as we do a person who is confined in a lunatic Asylum.
- 28 June, 1886. 4062. Do you think there should be two institutions, one to which a magistrate could commit a person, that is one for punishment cases, and another for the voluntary retirement of people? I should be much more inclined not to speak of it as punishment at all in either case. I should give the man who wished voluntary retirement and who had no means to pay, an opportunity to go into one of these places and pay for his maintenance by his work. There must be two divisions in the same institution because people who live by their hands are content with a very much smaller scale of comfort than people who have been used to the luxuries of life.
4063. At present a large number of persons, through drunkenness, commit offences in the eye of the law, that is under the Vagrancy Act, and you are in favour of their being committed by the magistrate for a period not exceeding six months, for this special treatment. Here the bench commit a man, not for a fixed time, but until such time as he recovers; whereas in this other case the magistrate would commit him for a definite period? I do not think there is necessarily any idea of punishment attached to it.
4064. Supposing that a man is brought before the magistrates charged with drunkenness and indecent conduct, or drunkenness and riotous conduct—it is hard to separate the offences—would you still consider that he should be subjected to treatment rather than be punished? I think the two things should be dealt with separately. The man might be punished by being sent to gaol for a certain period, and after that be sent to an inebriate asylum.
4065. Mr. Colls.] Has it ever come under your notice that a larger proportion of persons afflicted with lunacy come from those districts where wine is produced, such as Albury and Maitland? I do not know that the proportion of lunacy is greater in wine-producing districts than in other districts. There may be some special cause in other districts to make the proportion equal to that in Albury or Maitland. For instance, in the remote pastoral districts solitude is a cause of lunacy; but so far as I know there is no district which contributes more than its proportion of insane people to the Asylums. The proportion to population remains very accurately fixed. You get three lunatics to every thousand of the population wherever you go; that is about the proportion in all civilized countries where accurate statistics are kept. In some countries where the statistics are badly taken a smaller proportion is given, but there is reason to think that the actual proportion is about the same everywhere.
4066. Is the Commission to distinctly understand that you are in favour of the establishment of inebriate asylums? I should be very glad to see inebriate asylums established. The subject has engaged my attention for a considerable length of time. I was one of several who attempted to establish one. We subscribed funds and rented a house at Parramatta but the scheme fell through. We had no power to keep people there. To establish them successfully, Legislative sanction would be necessary so that both those who entered them voluntarily as well as those sent to them could be detained for a certain period.
4067. Mr. Withers.] I gathered from an answer you gave to the President that in parts of England where wages are as low as 10s. a week insanity is more prevalent than in places where wages are from 20s. to 30s. a week. I suppose that would show that the insanity is not chiefly due to drink? That was what I was attempting to show. It is impossible for a man with only 10s. a week to get a large amount of drink, whereas the man with 20s. or 30s. may get a very fair quantity. It is well known that the operative classes in England drink much more than the agricultural classes.
4068. Do you think that the poverty-stricken condition and the depression of mind which would naturally accompany such low wages as 10s. a week would induce a species of insanity? I think so because there is a general state of starvation—of the mind as well as of the body—in the southern parts of England.
4069. You have spoken of the number of cases of temporary insanity brought about by drunkenness;—does that temporary insanity exist principally among the lower or the middle classes of the community? In the larger proportion of cases the people who get to the reception house belong to the labouring classes.
4070. And it is probable that they spend too much of their time in the low public-houses? Yes, they either drink more or get worse liquor than people in better circumstances.
4071. Perhaps a little of both, although the analysis made of the liquor sold in the public-houses does not show any great amount of adulteration? I have been astonished at that, and I cannot help thinking that there is a great deal in the liquor which is not got at by analysis. I am sure that kerosene and other injurious compounds are sometimes mixed with grog. I have never been able to believe thoroughly in the analysis.
4072. Are there many young persons, say under twenty years of age, in the lunatic asylums? A large proportion of the inmates of our asylums are young people, but they are more or less weak-minded—idiots; their intellects are congenitally weak.
4073. Do you think that the injurious effect of alcohol is aggravated by immoderate smoking? I do not know that there is any amount of insanity caused by smoking, or that smoking aggravates the effect of drink. I have no experience on the subject.
4074. Mr. Colls.] Have you many young females in the asylums whose insanity has been brought about by drink? There are very few women, indeed, either young or old, whose insanity has been caused by drink.
4075. Are there many persons of the coal-mining class who are generally supposed to be great drinkers? I have not noticed an undue proportion of any one class.
4076. President.] If beer, as made from malt and hops, or even with a small proportion of sugar, had been proved to be a factor in any way in producing insanity, would not the fact have most likely come to your knowledge? I have never heard that pure beer was likely to cause insanity, except when taken in such immoderate quantities as to cause constant drunkenness. Some years ago a gentleman tried to prove that one form of insanity was due almost entirely to beer; that that form of insanity did not occur in spirit drinking countries, but I do not think he established his position.
4077. Do you know anything of the substance called glucose? I have no special knowledge of it but, so far as I know, the immediate results of its fermentation are not specially bad, except when you get new spirit, and all new spirit, from the amount of fusel oil and other impure compounds which it contains, is bad.
4078. I am told that the manufacture of glucose is sometimes assisted by sulphuric acid; would sulphuric acid of itself be in any way likely to produce insanity? None whatever.
4079. Then, so far as your knowledge of the subject goes, you consider that the statement as to Colonial beer beer being likely to cause insanity because of its being largely made of glucose, wants establishing? I think it wants proof. I really know no facts which go towards proving it. Dr. Manning

4080. Mr. Roseby.] I was rather surprised to hear you state that so very small a percentage of those under your care—5½ per cent.—have become demented through intemperate habits;—is not the percentage much smaller than that recorded by similar institutions in other countries? I think you will find that the percentage is pretty much the same wherever statistics are taken. Most of the statistics as I have stated are taken on the admissions; that is a very different thing from taking them on the number under care, because the cases due to drink are curable and they are eliminated. The statistics given to the public as records of the amount of insanity in asylums are taken on the admissions, and I have shown you that from 13 to 14 per cent. was the proportion in the English asylums from 1876 to 1882. 28 June, 1886.

4081. What facilities have you for ascertaining the history of those who come under your care? Where there are friends they are questioned; in other cases we have the reports of the police; and in every case the papers sent with the patients have a column for the information so far as it is known. The reports are corrected by the medical superintendent, and added to if anything is learned from the patients themselves.

4082. If I remember rightly, your predecessor attributed a large amount of insanity to smoking? Yes; Dr. Campbell wrote a book on the subject—a very curious little pamphlet.

4083. You say that comparatively few of those who are taken up by the police in a demented condition come under your cognizance? The temporary cases don't reach the asylums at all.

4084. Will you be surprised to hear that the superintendent of the temporary receiving-house has attributed nearly every case that comes under his cognizance to drink, and that nearly every death that occurred in the receiving-house was the result of intemperate habits? I think I put it almost as strongly. I showed that out of 362 who were sent on remand, 211 recovered, and that of those 211 I was quite sure that three-fourths were due to drink. It is the same in the gaols. I am entirely with you and with the popular idea, so far as temporary insanity is concerned. There is an immense amount of it due to drink.

4086. Have you observed whether those who become insane through intemperance more readily recover than those who become insane from other causes? Yes, I have already mentioned that the insanity due to drink is as a rule a very curable form of insanity.

4087. But you only get it in a permanent form? Yes, but even the cases of pronounced insanity, due to drink, which come on to me, are decidedly more curable than cases of insanity due to other causes. Of course there are some cases which are quite incurable, as when persons have become thoroughly demented their brain being gone; but I am speaking of the general rule.

4088. When an incurable lunatic dies, and a post-mortem examination is made of the body, are any changes found in the brain? We discover some change in the large majority of cases. In a certain proportion of cases the changes are visible; in others they are microscopical.

4090. If there were any change I suppose you would think the case more hopeful, because of the ordinary process of waste? No; if there is a change in the brain there is seldom a recovery, because the brain is a very delicate organ, and any change is fixed upon it.

4091. Then you do not consider that there is any such change in the brain of the drunkard? No, very often it is simply blood poisoning. The alcohol circulating in the system sets up some form of inflammatory or other change but it is not always permanent in its character.

4093. Then the disease engendered in those organs by intemperance is not easily eradicated? No; not when the intemperance has been continued so long as to have caused changes in the liver and kidneys, especially in what we know as the connective tissue of the liver and kidneys. Even though the person may give up drinking, and may afterwards live some years, and enjoy life in a great measure, the changes remain.

4094. I hardly think that you can be fully aware of the actual state of things when you say that the Australian youth of the present day does not drink. That was true when I was a boy here, but we have unchallengeable testimony that of late years our young people have been very much given to drink? I only speak from my own experience, and that is that the young Australian, as a rule, is a sober man. I hold that opinion strongly, and I am inclined to think that inquiry would show that most of those who drink to excess are persons who have come to the Colony, and not those who are born in it.

4095. If you perambulated our public places late at night, or attended some of our harbour picnics, I think your opinion on that point would be very much changed? I do not think that the Sydney larrikin is a fair type of the youth of the Colony. I am speaking of the youth as they are seen throughout the country districts—sturdy sober young fellows in the majority of cases.

4096. I would ask you as a citizen whether you do not think that we have far too many public-houses? I think that goes without saying; there cannot be a doubt on the subject.

4097. Do you not think that we have far too many public-houses which are mere drinking shops, and where a very poor meal can be obtained? There are, no doubt, a great many places of that kind, and even in some public-houses where men lodge, they are very badly served with regard to the food supplied to them. Some time ago I made inquiries as to the employment of some discharged patients; I found that they were in respectable employment, but they were staying at a so-called hotel where neither tea nor coffee was ever served out to them even for breakfast. They were bound to take either beer or spirits, or something of that kind, or cold water. I believe that that is not an isolated case. The public-house I speak of was considered to be a fairly respectable place.

Dr. Manning. 4098. Do you not think that some means ought to be devised, which would materially reduce the number of mere drinking places? I think a great deal of good would be done by reducing the number, and I think it would not be difficult to devise a means.

28 June, 1886.

4099. Do you not think that the people themselves should have a voice in saying how many of these establishments should exist in their midst. Do you, in fact, believe in the principle of local option? I do not know that I would carry it out to its extreme. I think that the present system of allowing the people to say whether any new public-houses shall be licensed is very much better than the former system.

4100. But it is not the people who decide—it is not even the householders—it is only the ratepayers? I should be quite willing to extend the right beyond the ratepayers.

4101. To the electoral franchise? Decidedly.

4102. Do you think the avocation of a barmaid is one which the law should allow young girls to be engaged in? I most decidedly think not.

4103. Do you not think that all houses licensed for the sale of liquor ought to be compelled to provide comfortable accommodation for those who require it? Yes, and comfortable meals, which is the most important. The meals provided in some up-country public-houses are very bad indeed.

4106. And probably that the form in which it is taken presents too large a percentage in a given quantity of food? Certainly; it is not nearly sufficiently diluted. The best form in which it can be taken is claret or some of the light wines.

4107. I am given to understand that lager beer contains only 3 per cent. of alcohol, that is to say, about one-third or three-quarters of the quantity in English beer;—do you know anything of the constituents of lager beer? No.

4108. When you were in America did you remain long enough to observe the working of the Maine liquor law? No; I did not go into any of the States where the prohibitive law prevails, but I was very much struck by the comparatively small amount of drinking in all the American cities. The first time I was in America I stayed two months, and though I went about in all directions, and into the saloons and bars, I only saw one drunken man, and he betrayed his country by his pronunciation; he was not an American. That was in New York, but I had not landed in Liverpool an hour before I saw half-a-dozen drunken men. The drinking in American bars is not nearly so great as is usually supposed. The amount of alcohol taken is small, and it is mixed with sugar and spices in their peculiar form of drinks. Their diet is largely a sweet diet, so that they do not require much alcohol. If you go into a large American restaurant you can pick out the English and Germans by seeing them drink wine and beer. The average American drinks iced water.

4109. Do you consider that the drunkenness here is larger head for head than it is in other countries of Europe which you have visited? You see very little drunkenness in Italy or in the south of France. There is a fair amount of it in Germany, and also in Belgium and Holland.

4110. Do you think it is possible to analyze spirits in such a way as to ascertain their age, apart from the presence or absence of fusel oil? I am not a chemist, and would not like to give an opinion.

4111. It is a question which hardly requires a profound analyst to answer. The tongue can detect whether a spirit is mature or not, and should it seem to be out of the reach of science to provide a criterion by which to ascertain that which can be ascertained by the tongue or palate? One would think that an analyst should have no difficulty in ascertaining that.

4112. I am told that there is very great difficulty? I am not a chemist, and therefore cannot give you a definite opinion on the subject. There are many things in which the palate is quite as keen as any chemical tests.

4113. I asked you the question, because we should be very glad indeed if we could see our way to suggest to the Government some means of preventing immature spirit from coming out of bond; but at present we do not see our way to make a suggestion? I know of no way in which it can be done.

4114. Mr. Roseby.] You expressed the opinion just now that taken in moderate quantities alcohol is not absolutely necessary is at all events beneficial, and may be advantageously used as an article of food? Yes, I hold that view.

4115. I suppose you know that although you are a medical man of high authority there are a large number of eminent medical men who have given an opposite opinion? Yes; but doctors differ you know.

4116. Nevertheless you think that as a rule people would be safer and better if they abstained from alcohol altogether? No, I would not commit myself to that opinion. I am quite sure that there are a good many people who would not be better for abstaining from the use of alcohol.

4118. And they give emphatic testimony in favour of total abstinence? Yes.

4119. Nevertheless you think a little alcohol is beneficial? I think so. That is my experience. The quantity I think necessary is small, but I certainly think that a very large number of people are all the better for a small quantity of alcohol, especially if it is taken in the form of light wines. While agreeing that there is a great abuse of alcohol, I think that it has its use.

4121. If there is the slightest tendency to mental derangement, in your opinion abstinence is very essential to recovery? Very essential. It is one of the things I am constantly preaching; and I endeavour to persuade people to alter their dietary and to take sweet things and oils and milk, so that they should no longer feel the necessity for alcohol. Dr. Manning.
28 June, 1886.

4122. Do you use alcohol to any great extent in the treatment of your patients? Alcohol is used in a certain number of cases. In some cases where there is extreme wasting, and in some cases of extreme melancholia we find it necessary. I believe there are asylums in which alcohol is not used. I have heard of several. But when I have had charge of an asylum I have not been able to do without alcohol altogether. I have not been able to get from milk, beef-tea, and ordinary foods sufficient to repair the waste that occurs in cases of acute insanity. The quantity used is not great, but still the medical men have the power of using it, and they do use it.

4123. But the cases where treatment by alcohol is necessary are rare and exceptional? They are exceptional undoubtedly. Alcohol is not used in the large majority of cases. The cost of alcohol in the asylums is possibly not more than 2s. or 3s. per head per year. This includes of course what is taken by the sick and by those who absolutely need it—those who appear to be fading away. And then you must also take this into consideration: that, though a man is deprived of his liberty, if he has been accustomed to take alcohol in moderate quantities, you have hardly any right to deprive him of this privilege if he is able to pay for it. Because you shut him up in an asylum you have no right to take away a thing that is an enjoyment to him, so long as it does him no harm and his friends wish him to have it. I am speaking of people able to provide it. The alcohol consumed by such persons has of course to be included in the total quantity used in the asylum. Every now and then you will find the wife of a patient saying to you:—"My husband has been accustomed to have his glass of claret or other wine, or his glass of beer, and I should like him to continue to have it." A small quantity does no harm, and because the patient has gone out of his mind—possibly from other causes—you do not wish to add to his misery by depriving him of the small quantity of alcohol he has been accustomed to take any more than you desire to prevent him from smoking a pipe if he wished to do so. Still, taking the whole body of the patients, the quantity consumed is small.

4124. President.] When you speak of alcohol as a food for the repair of waste, I presume you mean physical as well as mental waste—the waste of those who work with their muscles as well as of those who work with their brains? Yes; I was speaking generally.

4125. Mr. Colls.] Would you say from what you saw in America that there was much lunacy there from drink? I do not think I entered into the question very fully with the American superintendents. But I did not gather that their proportion was larger than the English proportion.

FRIDAY, 2 JULY, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,
G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.,

T. COLLS, Esq., J.P.,
J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

George H. Barney, Esq., Chief Inspector of Distilleries, called in, sworn, and examined:—

4126. President.] You are the Chief Inspector of Distilleries? Yes.

4127. You have been in the Distilleries Department for many years? A great number of years.

4128. You have had practical experience of the working of the distilleries law? Yes, I have been through all the grades of the Distilleries Department from the lowest to my present position.

4129. Can you say of what spirits distilled in this Colony consist? It is all white spirit of a high strength.

4130. What is it made of? Molasses and the skimmings of the sugar boilings.

4131. Is that what would be called rum? It is all white spirit; it is made into rum afterwards.

4132. Is it made into rum by flavouring? By flavouring simply.

4133. I presume that there is also a quantity of brandy made here? A small quantity, but it is not allowed to be sold by the wine-growers except it has been first placed in bond. They cannot sell it from their vineyards. The brandy is used for fortifying their wine, for washing out their casks, and that sort of thing.

4134. Are you aware whether the law is evaded? To a certain extent it is; but not very much. I have managed to catch two or three of them selling, but there are always inspectors going round to the vineyards, and I do not think there is so much sold as is generally imagined. Undoubtedly some of them sell brandy to publicans.

4135. Are you aware that in the country a kind of spirit is sold which is clearly brandy, but which many people say is not imported brandy. It is thought to be traced to the vineyards in the neighbourhood where it is sold? Yes.

4136. I presume there is not an inspector at each vineyard? No; but the vineyards are inspected without notice. The inspector goes round five or six times a year.

4137. Can the vineyard proprietors make as much brandy as they please? They can, but few make very much.

4138. Would his still enable him to turn all his wine into brandy? He could not do that; it would take too long. The stills generally hold about 40 gallons.

4139. That would be for one wash? Yes.

4140. You are of opinion that there is not much evasion of the law? I do not think there is.

4141. Do you think then that the inferior spirit—for inferior spirit it undoubtedly is—which is sold in the neighbourhood of Albury, Singleton, and other districts, is imported spirit? I think a great deal of it is white spirit, flavoured with essences of various kinds. They import very strong white spirit now, and it is sold at so low a price that it pays people to get it and flavour it.

4142. What is the price? The Austrian and German potato spirit which is imported here in large quantities can be sold at from 1s. 8d. to 1s. 10d. per gallon in bond.

4143. What is its strength? Some of it is 65 over proof.

4144. That would come to much more than 12s. a gallon? Oh, yes; it would be nearly £1 per gallon duty alone.

G. H.
Barney, Esq.
2 July, 1886.

- G. H. Barney, Esq.
2 July, 1886.
4145. Do you consider that that is taken out for the purpose of being flavoured and mixed, and afterwards sold? No doubt a large quantity of it is.
4146. And it comes in as white spirit? Yes.
4147. Do you consider that a large quantity is imported? Yes; a large quantity. The Collector's report will give you the particulars of the importation. I produce a return showing the quantity of spirits, beer, &c., manufactured in the Colony in the years 1881, 1882, 1883, 1884, and 1885, and the quantity of beer imported from the neighbouring Colonies in 1884-85. (See Appendix.)
4148. I presume that I am right in saying that there is nothing made here but silent spirit, which is made into rum or brandy? That is all; that is of legitimate spirit.
4149. Is any gin made here? None at all.
4150. Any whiskey? None at all. Some time ago an attempt was made to make it here as an experiment, but it failed.
4151. I imagine that beer does not come under your cognizance? Yes, to a certain extent. Some years ago Mr. Watson asked me to make out a return of the quantity of beer made in the Colony.
4152. Seeing that there is no excise, how do you make up the returns? In every town where there is a brewery I have an honorary inspector of distilleries; I write to these inspectors, and they get the information, which is willingly supplied by the brewers. Three or four of the large brewers in Sydney refuse to give any information, and I arrive at their output in a different way.
4153. How do you manage it? I get the information from the other brewers; they know very well what one another turn out.
4154. You could not arrive at a calculation from the quantity of hops and malt imported? That would give it to a certain extent, but it would not be a true calculation; the calculation which I have made is pretty near the mark.
4155. I see that you calculate that the quantity of beer made in 1885 was 14,716,000 gallons;—how does that compare with Victorian returns? I think that the quantity in Victoria is somewhat less—a few thousand gallons.
4156. What is the comparison at per head of the population? I do not know.
4157. Do you know what this Colonial beer is made from? Malt and hops and sugar; a great deal of sugar is used. The quantity which I have stated is not all consumed, because there would be a large reduction from pricked beer and sour beer.
4158. Do not you think that a large quantity of beer is made up from pricked beer and bad beer, improved by English beer? I do not think that much of that is done.
4159. Is not Colonial beer sold as British beer? Yes; I have been endeavouring to get prosecutions, but the agents will not prosecute, and the Government have no power to prosecute for the use of false labels; this is particularly the case with bottled beer. I have caught them doing this repeatedly; in two or three cases I have caught them bottling Toohey's porter for "Bull-dog," and so on, but the agents will not prosecute.
4160. Do they make porter here as well as beer? Yes, but not in very large quantities; it is made at two or three breweries. I have not made a distinction between beer and porter in the return.
4161. Do not some of the brewers deal largely in spirits? Not many of them; the larger brewers, Toohey, Tooth, and the Castlemaine brewery, do; they have special merchants' spirit licenses.
4162. They do not use spirits in connection with their manufactures? No.
4163. I suppose that they do a large business in supplying their own houses with spirits? Yes.
4164. Have you any means of knowing how many houses they have? No.
4165. Do you think that three-fourths of the public-houses are owned by brewers? Not as large a proportion as that.
4166. Are their houses generally good or inferior ones? I think that they are the inferior ones.
4168. Is that done by the brewers? I do not think so; it is done by the lower class of spirit merchants.
4169. Do you think that the publicans do it? Probably they do. I have nothing to do with publicans, and can only speak with regard to the wholesale business. The retailing of liquor is a matter for the police.
4170. You know that large quantities of essences are imported? Yes, a very large quantity of all descriptions; even the vile stuff, oil of cogniac, is imported.
4171. Somebody makes that up with silent spirit as a base? Yes.
4172. Can you give us any idea of how much of this improved and made-up spirit comes into consumption? A very large quantity.
4173. Can you give an approximate estimate of the quantity? No, I have no data from which to arrive at a conclusion on that point. I do not know what is taken out of bond for the purpose.
4174. I suppose the quantity would be more than 100,000 gallons per annum? I do not know; I have no means of forming an estimate.

Mr. William M. Hamlet, F.C.S., called in, sworn, and examined:—

- Mr. W. Hamlet, F.C.S.
2 July, 1886.
4175. President.] What is your official position? I am Assistant Government Analyst.
4176. You furnished these two reports on the samples of spirits and beer submitted to you for analysis by Inspector Lenthall? Yes.
4177. Having yourself conducted the analyses? Yes.
4178. First of all can you explain what these blanks mean in the last column? They were negative results.
4179. You found no trace of any of the things you were searching for? We either found no trace, or very unsatisfactory evidence of the presence of any of these bodies.
4180. How many analyses of any one sample did you make before coming to that conclusion? We generally do them in duplicate.
4181. You examined them for the statutory ingredients? Yes, for alkaloids, and all the things mentioned in section 89 of the Act.
4182. Do you consider that the whiskeys, brandies, and rums, except the first mentioned here, were the manufacture of made liquors, or do you think they were what they were represented to be—that the brandy was made from wine, and the whiskey from malt? My own opinion is that the first mentioned was the only genuine brandy in the whole lot.

Mr.
W. Hamlet,
F.C.S.

2 July, 1886.

4183. And the whiskies? One or two of them were good. About three of them I think were whiskies that had not been tampered with.

4184. But do you think that the bases was silent spirit flavoured. or malt spirit? I believe it was a silent spirit—white spirit.

4185. I presume silent spirit is "a spirit that tells no tales"—a spirit that you can do anything you like with? Yes.

4186. Do you consider the analyses to show the result that a large portion of the spirits you treated are of a character which should not go into consumption? Whether they should go into consumption or not is a question I should not like to answer with a definite yes or no, because I am aware that the public have habituated themselves to demand a certain thing and they have it in these spirits. The majority of whiskies, and brandies, and gins, are made up of silent spirit, flavoured with various essences, and further, the quantity of essence or extract, which is used to give the flavouring to the liquor, is so small, that I, as a chemist, would say that chemistry is unable to detect that small difference. Therefore in regard to the greater number of samples we get, we are simply obliged to say that there are not those things specified in the Act present in the liquors. As a rule we simply find a trace of copper or lead or fusel-oil, and we cannot go so far as to say that they ought or ought not to go into human consumption.

4187. Will age take away all trace of fusel-oil? Yes.

4188. I suppose it goes into the wood of the cask; how is it absorbed? This fusel-oil is an alcohol of the same family as the ordinary spirit alcohol. It is present in all whiskies when first made, derived from genuine malt, and in the course of a few months it becomes decomposed by the action of wood into volatile ether, and is innocuous.

4189. It is still present in the shape of volatile ether but rendered innocuous by age? Yes.

4190. Does fusel-oil, in the form of volatile ether, add flavour? Yes.

4191. That is essential to all whiskies in starting; you do not want it as alcohol but as volatile ether? Yes; if I found it in whiskey in consumption I should say that it was bad whisky.

4192. Suppose you discover traces of fusel-oil, is it right to infer that if that whisky had been matured all that oil would have been converted into volatile ether? Yes.

4193. These, therefore, were raw spirits? Yes.

4194. Do the traces of lead and copper come from the machinery? Yes.

4195. Is anything superadded? No; I found it in Colonial wines which had been racked off from a vat, and allowed to pass through a lead pipe; in fact it set up lead poisoning, and led to some interesting cases as far as I was concerned.

4196. I suppose you are au courant with everything in the way of analysis of spirits? Yes; it is my business.

4197. Can you tell us whether it is possible to devise a test besides the fusel-oil test for the maturity of spirits? Yes, it is quite possible. There is a difference, however, between chemists of research and commercial chemists. I am engaged in the latter calling. We have an enormous amount of work in the Government Laboratory and we should not have time for anything of this sort.

4198. My question is independent of the existing state of things. If it were found advisable to apply a test as to the maturity of spirits, can it be done? The matter is fraught with great difficulty; because the essence which is added to make up a given quantity of brandy is so small compared with the bulk that it is like seeking for a needle in a bundle of hay.

4199. We have here a lot of essences in bottles. I am told that one pound of the essence is sufficient to make 100 gallons of whisky. Would this be a favourable opportunity to operate upon these bottles? Yes.

4200. If whisky, brandy, and gin were manufactured from silent spirit, with the aid of these essences, would any deleterious substances therein be so diffused as to become innocuous? In some of them it would.

4201. Would they lose the deleterious elements? They would.

4202. Do you think that the Government could go to the bonded stores, take samples of spirits, have them analysed, and ascertain whether they were pernicious from being too raw or pernicious from the admixture of any of these essences? Speaking generally, the question whether a spirit is too young, I think is a matter for a connoisseur rather than for a chemist. An inspector who is well acquainted with these things might visit the wine and spirit vaults where mixing would be likely to be done.

4203. But do you think the test of the palate would be accepted? I think the judgment of an expert would be recognised. There are such men as spirit testers, and wine connoisseurs.

4204. Mr. Withers.] Do you think that liquors made from these essences would be injurious? It depends on the quantity of alcohol that is consumed. One grain of fusel oil in 2 oz. of wine would exert a deleterious influence on a man. A less quantity he might drink with impunity. After all it is the quantity that does the mischief. That is a point which is ignored by many in considering the question.

4205. President.] How much anhydrous alcohol will kill a man? Four ounces will kill a young boy. In a man 4 oz. will cause stupor, anæmia, dilatation of the eyelids, quickened action of the heart, and relaxation of the muscles and membranes of the throat, which is the condition popularly described as "dead drunk."

FRIDAY, 9 JULY, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,

A. HUTCHISON, Esq.,

T. COLLS, Esq., J.P.

J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.

G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. W. Hamlet, F.C.S., was called in and further examined:—

4206. President.] Do you consider that manufactured liquors—that is to say, liquors that have been made up by essences and flavouring compounds, and so on, from some given base like silent spirit—do you consider that they are innocent or pernicious? I consider they are innocent, provided they are made from essences similar to those you showed me last Friday.

Mr.
W. Hamlet,
F.C.S.

4207. 9 July, 1886.

- Mr. W. Hamlet, F.C.S.
9 July, 1886.
4207. Those essences seemed to be in the proportion of 1 lb. to 1,000 gallons. Do you think that the innocence you speak of is caused by the great diffusion of the material through so large a volume? Yes, I do.
4208. But in themselves are they pernicious? Some of their constituents are poisonous. I have lately examined them, and I can tell you as far as I have gone that they mainly consist of ethylic alcohol, amylic alcohol, amylic acetate, butylic acetate, and iso-butylic ether.
4209. Now we have heard a little about fusel oil. You were of opinion at your last examination that there was a good deal of nonsense talked as to the perniciousness of one kind of alcohol compared with another. Do I understand you to say that the public opinion was at fault when it fastened upon fusel oil as the pernicious element in ether? Yes.
4210. I also understood you to say that the fusel oil underwent a kind of process—that the substance itself did not disappear, but was altered? Yes, transformed, 4211. And that the fusel oil became some ether? Yes, amylic ether.
4212. And then became a flavouring factor in the spirit? Yes.
4213. Is that the opinion of scientific men? Yes, it is.
4214. It is the latest opinion? Yes.
4215. It is not mere opinion, but the proved and accepted opinion? Yes.
4216. Then it would follow that if by any chemical means you took away the fusel oil—if by any chemical means you deprived the spirit absolutely of fusel oil—you would take away the flavouring matter? You would take away the flavouring matter very largely.
4217. With regard to this amylic and iso-butylic ether—what is their character? They are very volatile oils. When heated they give off an irritating vapour, in some instances so irritating as to cause tears to flow from the eyes. They are all inflammable, and in use undergo various changes until they finally become acids.
4218. Do they contribute anything to the flavour of the spirit? Yes, for instance, rum contains formic acid. Formic acid of itself is found in red ants, and gives them their stinging properties.
4219. Is not chloroform the same? Chloroform is derived from alcohol direct by chemical treatment. I may say that this formic acid gives off such irritating vapours in the laboratory that it has sent me away home on one or two occasions. Of course I am speaking of the acid in its concentrated form.
4220. Those samples (produced) are, I suppose, fair samples, only in very small quantities? Yes, one I have obtained from rum has a sort of disgusting odour. It is, I think, butylic alcohol, mixed with some flavouring matter from oil of cloves.
4221. In making your analysis, Mr. Hamlet, of those samples of spirits given you by Mr. Lenthall you found none of those acids I imagine? The quantity was so small that it was a matter of very great difficulty—in fact almost impossible in the examination to be able to recognize them. The quantity I received from Mr. Lenthall was not more than 6 or 8 oz. at the most.
4222. I do not think that any of us are astonished to hear you say that as to this proportion of one in a thousand it would be hard to say that it was pernicious? Yes.
4223. But in themselves they are pernicious? Yes.
4225. So then, given a man who is habituated to drink, it does not matter whether he takes liquor manufactured out of essences, or the best liquor? No.
4226. You are speaking in a medical sense, and not as a chemist? Yes; I say this because the products of decomposition found in the spirits made in the ordinary way are closely imitated by those essences.
4227. I suppose everyone has heard it over and over again from people who have been in the habit of taking the same class of liquor, that while the spirit they get from one place agrees with them, that which they get from another gives them a violent headache, or makes them ill, perhaps. How do you account for that? I should say that in the case in which it made the consumer ill it would be because the fusel oil had not properly matured or decomposed. From what I see of the action on men of ordinary whisky and artificial whisky is that in the end they are identically the same. Of course if you take artificial whisky in a raw state, that is, soon after mixing and before the component parts have time to mature, it is almost certain that it will produce a headache.
4228. Is there anything in these essences likely to produce a craving—that kind of irritation of the throat and palate and indeed of the whole system—which ends in dipsomania? No.
4229. Would pure wholesome spirit produce as much craving? Yes.
4230. How do you account for this craving;—what is it? It is part of the physiological action of alcoholic mixtures. The first effect of alcohol upon the system is to cause an increased circulation of the blood in all parts of the body, and to increase the excitement of the motor nerves. Of course this is accompanied by hot flushing of the face and extremities. By and by that is followed by decreased temperature of the body. One of the properties of alcohol is that it will unite with water. In passing through the blood it absorbs the water, and then there is a certain dryness—a common experience with the drunkard, or the man who takes spirits to excess.
4231. You attribute this dryness to robbing the blood of water? Yes. Later on the successive dryness pervades the whole system and the alcohol makes itself felt on the membrane of the mouth, throat, and stomach. In my experience, and I have had stomachs to analyse for Government purposes, I could invariably tell the rate at which the man had been drinking alcohol. The end of the stomach, where the liquor first fell, would bear the marks of the action of the alcohol, the membrane being burnt away by the spirit which, as it went towards the other end of the stomach, continued the same action graduated from one end to the other. The effects would be greatest at the end where the liquor entered the stomach and less at the other. That I think is infallible evidence of the pernicious effects of alcohol.
4232. I suppose it is a question of quantity, that is to say that the effects you describe would only be found in persons who are habitual drunkards? Hardly that.
4233. I mean persons constantly taking alcohol? Yes. In the case of a woman, boy, or child, the administration of alcohol is followed by such an amount of inflammation that the membrane is quite reddened, and to a person not in the habit of taking alcohol the effect of suddenly having it administered

Mr.
W. Hamlet,
F.C.S.

9 July, 1886.

- tered is very bad indeed. In the case of an old toper the effect is simple destruction of the mucous membrane.
4234. Does the effect you describe take place equally in the case of the dram drinker and the beer drinker? No; not in the case of the beer drinker.
4235. Then you do not note similar results from alcohol in beer? I note far greater results upon other organs—especially the liver and kidneys of the beer drinker.
4236. Then, in your opinion, the intemperate use of beer has evils perhaps as great as those resulting from spirit drinking? No, not so great as with spirits. The action of spirits is more immediate and more disastrous to the organs.
4238. Is it not a fact that drinking a glass of ordinary port obtained in public-houses is equal to drinking a glass of diluted spirits? In my opinion it is.
4239. Now referring to a subject about which I have already asked you some questions: You say it is not impossible to get a test for measuring spirits. I asked you whether it was outside the reach of analysis to obtain a test for spirits made out of grain in which the fusel oil had not been properly converted, or which had not been kept long enough to lose the raw and crude taste. You say it is not outside the reach of analysis? Yes.
4241. Of course for fusel oil, but you would not find fusel oil in some of these? If I found fusel oil I should say the drink was of recent manufacture.
4242. As you have said that the pernicious element in these liquors is alcohol, whether ordinary alcohol or fusel oil, I presume you think it very little use having these tests, because one form of spirit is just as bad as the other? On the contrary I do think it of use.
4243. I mean on this ground: Suppose the State tried to prevent any liquor getting into consumption which is pernicious, do you consider that a test would have any value in preventing its consumption? I do.
4244. Wherein are these spirits noxious? In the transforming of the fusel oil.
4245. Although it may be there in very small quantities? Yes.
4246. If your analysis showed that fusel oil was present in a crude state even in small quantities you would consider that deleterious? I would. If I were called upon to report for anyone on two samples of whisky, and if I found one contained very distinct traces of fusel oil, I should recommend my friend not to take the sample containing the fusel oil.
4247. On this question now of proportion I think you told us on a former occasion that after a few years the fusel oil in the spirit is wholly converted? Yes.
4248. What time does it take to convert fusel oil? Three or four years.
4249. Then if the spirit were kept in the cask for five years that time should be sufficient to convert the whole of the fusel oil? Yes.
4250. Then you are distinctly of opinion that the presence of fusel oil even in small quantities is harmful? I am.
4251. And you are also of opinion that it can be detected? Yes.
4252. And that it cannot be detected even in small quantities in spirit which has been kept for five years? I should not like to say that. That is a question more for a connoisseur in whisky.
4253. But I understood you to say that all traces of the fusel oil should have disappeared in five years? Yes.
4254. Then if you found traces of fusel oil is not that a proof that the liquor was not five years old? I should not like to say that because I could not undertake to limit the exact period.
4255. Much would depend upon the character of the spirit? Yes.
4256. And the temperature in which it was kept? Yes.
4257. And the amount of shaking about it received I suppose? I do not know that that would have anything to do with it.
4258. Then why do some manufacturers send whiskey about to various parts of the world to be shaken about? I suppose they do it for some sufficiently good reason, but I could not say why.
4259. Perhaps it is because in the shaking about the whisky presented a greater surface to atmospheric influence? Yes; perhaps so. Of course the time required for a gradual change depends upon the amount of fusel oil used in the manufacture of the liquor.
4260. Are you a total abstainer? I occasionally take a glass of wine.
4262. Suppose the Government goes on granting quasi monopolies for selling these liquors, it would only be natural that the Government should see that these liquors were, at all events, wholesome? Certainly.
4263. It would only seem natural that the Government should say not only that the spirits should pay duty, but that they should not go into consumption without a certificate as to their quality? I think that would only be reasonable.
4264. Do you think it practicable? I do.
4265. You say it is reasonable, and you think it practicable. Now suppose fifty hogsheads of whisky were imported bearing the same brand, and you took, at haphazard, a sample for the purpose of analysis, what do you think it would cost to analyse those spirits so as to enable a certificate to be given? It would depend upon the number of samples to be analysed.
4266. Would it cost three guineas for one sample? For 50 casks you would probably take five or six samples, although the same brand, and that would probably cost between £2 and £3.
4267. Mr. Hutchison.] What is meant by the addition of this spirit in small quantities;—does it enable them to put a larger quantity of water in the liquor? It enables them to make brandy or whisky from any given essence.

- Mr. W. Hamlet, F.C.S.
9 July, 1886.
4268. Then we might have from these essences a thing called brandy, without an atom of brandy in it? Exactly.
4269. Could you, as a chemist, from the essences of which you have control, make a port wine that would almost defy the detection of the drinker? I could.
4270. Or whiskey, or sherry, or rum, or gin? Yes.
4271. Could these be made very much cheaper than in the natural way? Yes.
4272. About how much? I cannot say; I have not gone into the question.
4273. What could you produce a gallon for? Two shillings and sixpence, presuming I had the raw spirit given me.
4274. But are there not chemicals which would enable you to find a base for the manufacture of these liquors—a base having all the properties of alcohol? I should not like to say what was the origin of the spirit in any given sample. There are spirits sent from Germany in a raw state to England and Ireland, and again exported to these colonies, and by the time they come here it would be impossible to say what was the origin of those liquors.
4275. I do not think I made myself clear. Could you not, from various ingredients, make (say) port wine without any silent spirit? You must have spirit as a basis.
4276. But the spirit would pay duty? Of course it must pay duty. I could not get any silent spirit except through the Customs.
4277. You say that fusel oil is used in the preparation of liquor for the purpose of flavouring? Yes.
4278. In the case of liquor drunk before the oil has evaporated or changed it will lack the flavour of the oil? It is flavoured in all stages of its history, from the time it leaves the still until it is twenty years old, if you like. It always has the flavour.
4279. Does the character change when it ceases to be fusel oil? Yes, it becomes matured.
4280. Suppose a case in which a person became downright ill from the drinking of only one glass—and the police have given evidence of that sort—would it be the result of the consumption of liquors such as you describe? Yes.
4281. You have never yourself examined liquor, one glass of which would produce such an effect as that? I do not think I have, although I believe such liquor is sold, and in this connection I may mention an experience I had at a place on the Richmond River, between Casino and Lismore. There is a public-house at this place called the "Half-way House," and if ever there was a place where bad liquor would be sold it would be such a place as that. They are a very bad class of people there, and right out of the way of the police. A short time ago some samples were given me from this very place, and instead of finding it the worst possible liquor, I was surprised to find it genuine rum and brandy. Evidently the police inspectors had been supplied with the genuine article, so you will see the difficulty of getting hold of the deleterious article whenever it may be sold.
4282. You think, after all said and done, that the bulk of the doctoring of liquor does not materially increase its injurious effects, that as a matter of fact the great injury arises from the alcohol itself? It is the alcoholic appetite and drinking creates an appetite for itself.
4283. With regard to the effect of alcohol on the system, in addition to the taking of the water out of the blood, there is another effect, I think created by this spirit, and that is an artificial stimulus which when it dies out can only be renewed by repeating the dose of spirit? Yes; but I may say that after the system has thus been excited the effect soon passes away and the organs then remain passive until again excited. For instance take the case of a man who in his sober senses is not in the habit of talking much. The effect of the alcohol on the muscles and ligament affecting the tongue is to let that organ have extraordinary play. Similarly any other organ highly developed in the man may be called into activity and made to do more than is usual by this alcoholic action on the nerves.
4284. I suppose the effect would be to create an unusual activity in the system, followed by a corresponding reaction? Yes.
4285. A reaction almost unendurable in some cases and thus tempting the sufferer to resort to the same cause to bring about the same feeling as before? Yes.
4286. With reference to the action of alcohol upon the heart, I have been told or have read that from 4oz. to 5oz. of alcohol taken by a healthy man would increase the heart-beat in 24 hours to such an extent as to create an expenditure of vital force equivalent to lifting 19 tons 1 inch from the ground. Is there anything like solid fact in that? Yes, certainly there is.
4287. I have also read that in addition to this stimulus to the blood it causes a rush of blood to the head, that the blood vessels are dilated; that the vision and the reason are disturbed; that when the stimulus dies away the blood vessels do not altogether go back to their normal position; that the man then wants drink to bring back the former feeling, and this goes on until the blood vessels will not go back to their natural condition, and delirium tremens sets in: is not that the case? Yes.
4288. I have also read some other astounding facts, if they are facts. Do you think that a man might give himself so up to drink that he loses all moral perception? Well the answer to that question involves the moral effect of the long continued action of alcohol. I have no doubt it would be very likely.
4289. And that as a matter of fact his will power is destroyed? Yes.
4290. And that it is hardly possible for a man to give up the drink? Well, as alcohol has a deleterious action on the brain and the brain is the seat of thought and action, I think it would naturally follow.
4291. All that may be produced by pure alcohol without adulteration? Yes.
4292. In bottled alcohol—I mean bottled spirit in which fusel oil has been used—would not the fusel oil be found more readily at the top; would not the first glass be the most dangerous? I could not express a definite opinion as to that.
4293. President.] Is ethylic alcohol heavier than amylic? Yes, especially on dilution with water. Possibly in the bottled spirits the amylic alcohol would be nearer the top.
4294. Mr. Roseby.] Is it not a fact that a large portion of the spirits sold in the Colony consists largely of crude white spirit, coloured with various essences? I have no doubt it is. It is not generally what it professes to be.
4295. I have heard it stated that these deleterious elements can be introduced in these compounds in such a subtle form as to defy analytical detection: Is that so? I have already said that it is very difficult for the analyst to discover in a small sample an element that has been mixed up in hundreds of gallons.
4296. Have you observed any marked distinction between Colonial beer and imported beer? Yes.

Mr.
W. Hamlet,
F.C.S.

9 July, 1886.

4297. Would the beer manufactured here, from the elements it contains, be more injurious in its influence than the imported beer? Yes.
4298. Why? I believe it is the fault of the manufacture more than the elements used in the manufacture; that is to say, that an eminent firm, such as some of the English firms, know how to make good beer, and the people in Sydney do not know how to make good beer. That is generally the reason of the difference in quality, and not the mere use of noxious substances.
4299. Has it not come under your notice that a large portion of the beer sold in this Colony, and labelled English, is simply Colonial? Yes.
4300. It is a matter of notoriety that English labels are forged, is it not? I do not know.
4301. Have you not heard that large quantities of labels are imported out here? I have heard it so stated, but I have no ground for believing it to be true.
4302. Have you not heard that Colonial beer, sold as Tennant's ale and Boar's Head stout, and so on, simply bears forged labels? I have no direct knowledge.
4303. Those essences that you analysed have some elements of a highly poisonous character? Mainly amylic alcohol, fusel oil.
4304. And oil of cloves, is not that poisonous? Yes; poisonous in itself, but not in the quantities in which it is used in the preparation of these liquors.
4305. And this volatile ether, which is so highly inflammable, is not that poisonous? Yes.
4307. That is not my question. When a man asks for a glass of brandy he does not expect to get a decoction of this vile compound that you have described, and if he does get it of course it is a fraud that he should be supplied with these things. Do you not think you should protect the public against such deception? You cannot protect the public. The demand for brandy is so great—a hundred times, at least, in excess of the natural supply—that there is not enough of the genuine article in the world to supply those who want that particular kind of spirit. Real brandy is very difficult to obtain.
4308. The same may be said, I suppose, of port and sherry? Yes.
4309. Have you heard it said that there is more port wine consumed in London alone than is exported from Oporto altogether? I have no doubt of that.
4310. Of course alcohol is a poison? Of course it is, taken in certain quantities; but it would take 5 oz. or 6 oz. of pure alcohol to kill a man.
4311. In the stomachs you have analysed do not the portions where the alcohol has fallen bear strong evidences of the influence of the alcohol, like a vessel with the bottom burnt out? Yes.
4312. With regard to this fusel oil, which you say must have a very deleterious effect upon the system, do you not think that something should be done to prevent this raw immature spirit so strongly impregnated with fusel oil being vended to the public? So far as I have examined the spirits I do not think that the small quantities of fusel oil I have detected will have very deleterious results.
4313. But what about the samples you have analysed? They contain traces of fusel oil.
4314. Is it not a fact that those spirits profess to be brandy and whisky when the genuine brandy and whisky are more than twice the price? I think that the fault of that lies with the public.
4315. But the public generally are ignorant of what they are taking; they ask for bread, and they are given a stone. Did I understand you to say that the effect of spirits in any form taken in large quantities is to incite the brutal propensities of the man taking the liquor? That depends upon the nature of the particular man taking the liquor.
4316. Is it not a fact that various forms of crime, violence, and outrage are traceable to the indulgence in spirits? Yes, I have no doubt it is; a man cannot heat the blood in his veins with impunity.
4317. Mr. Withers.] You say that alcohol tends to excite people's propensities,—that it livens up dormant nerves or faculties; that even harmless faculties that hitherto were otherwise dormant have been brought into action? Yes.
4318. So that it would not altogether produce only the brutal passions? Certainly. In reply to the gentleman who last questioned me, I said that in particular men it aroused certain passions. In the case of a particular man alcohol would call into effect and exaggerate certain passions which would otherwise not be exercised. It acts very differently upon very different people, as all the world knows. One man is ambitious; another has a fighting disposition, and so on. The alcohol simply arouses and affects certain passions dependent upon the character of the man, and not only the character but the individuality of any particular man.
4319. In too many cases of course it lets loose passions which the man deems it necessary should, in the interests of society, be kept under control? Yes; it generally lets loose the besetting sin in each particular man.
4320. Mr. Hutchison.] Would you believe it possible that alcohol would destroy the amorous propensities in men? It will exaggerate and possibly eventually incapacitate him from the abuse.
4321. Mr. Withers.] It will make him impotent? Yes.
4322. I suppose with scientific knowledge you could make a tolerably accurate test as to whether noxious ingredients were used in any liquor furnished to you? Yes; I have done so.
4323. Did I understand you to say that certain wines—port wine for instance—was equally as injurious as spirits? Yes; in the case of the fortified wines. Old port wine of course is not necessarily fortified. If wine is fortified, that is generally a sign that it has been necessary to add spirit to keep it or to correct some defects in its making.
4324. You think the old pure wine more nourishing? Old wine would be comparatively harmless. It might contain alcohol, but still it would not be fortified wine.
4325. Is there not great danger from some of the many cordials manufactured for public use—such as ginger-ale and others? So far as I have gone I have found good genuine ginger-ale, made from good Jamaica ginger. We cannot call that bad. It simply excites the stomach when it enters, and produces the sense of warmth.
4326. With regard to cordials generally—soda, lemonade, sarsaparilla, &c.—have you any knowledge of any deleterious substance in them? Generally speaking they are free from poisonous substances, but occasionally they are found to contain metallic lead, and that of course is highly deleterious.
4327. Do you think there would be sufficient in an ordinary bottle to make it seriously injurious? Yes; cases have been known where one bottle has produced serious cases of lead-poisoning.

- Mr. W. Hamlet, F.C.S.
9 July, 1886.
4328. Soda or lemonade? Both. This was caused by carelessness in manufacture, such as the use of lead pipes, in which case these aerated waters would take up a quantity of the lead. Manufacturers who are careful use pure tin pipes.
4329. Mr. Rosby.] If these aerated drinks are made with vessels where only tin pipes are used, these poisonous elements are not contained? Certainly not.
4330. But the analysis shows slight traces of lead in some cases? Yes; that is generally the result of using some vessel in which there is lead. People get poisoned by lead in a variety of ways. We know, for instance, that it has occurred from drinking wine from bottles that have been washed with shot, and in which a stray shot has been left.
4331. Even water sometimes is the medium of lead-poisoning? Yes.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Charles Watt, Esq., Government Analyst, called in, sworn, and examined:—

- C. Watt, Esq.
5 July, 1886.
4332. President.] You are and have been, for some years, the Government Analyst? Yes.
4333. The analyses of the liquors taken by the Licensing Inspector, are prepared under your direction? Under my observation.
4334. You are responsible for their accuracy? Yes; but I may mention that when I am not in town the analyses are made by Mr. Hamlet. But it is very seldom that I am away.
4335. You sign the analyses? Yes.
4336. Then you are responsible for all that you sign? Yes.
4337. Did you analyse the specimens produced here by Mr. Lenthall, with the results in the Schedules A and B, or were they analysed by Mr. Hamlet? They are in his charge; but when the analyses are going on I keep my eye upon them, and see to each result. He would call my attention to any particular thing in connection with any of them.
4338. Having regard to the results shown by the analyses of the spirits and beers, were you surprised at their singular freedom from noxious ingredients? Not at all; I have been accustomed to such analyses for the past fifteen or sixteen years.
4339. When you say that you are not surprised at the results, I take you to mean that you are of opinion that in the vast majority of cases the liquors which go into consumption are free from adulteration? It depends entirely upon the sense in which you use the word "adulteration." It is a word the meaning of which it is very difficult to define; it is a very wide term.
4340. I will ask, if noxious substances were added in the samples which you analysed? They were not.
4341. You found in the cheapest and presumably the worst liquors traces of fusel oil; but in a large number you found none? That is so.
4342. And with respect to your analyses of beers? I searched for everything mentioned in the Act, and in addition to that, for anything which we might have had reason to suspect from appearances.
4343. You would not search for cocculus indicus in spirits? Oh, yes.
4344. I thought that was generally put into beer? Well, we do not always search for it, but I have done so in special cases.
4345. I thought it was especially an adulterant for beer? There is an active principle which we call picrotoxin. At one time I examined everything for it, but not having found it, I gave up searching for it.
4346. Do you search for strychnine. That is one of the things mentioned in the Act? We search for alkaloids; and if we discover an alkaloid then we have to determine specifically what alkaloid.
4347. Do you test every sample of spirits or beer for all the substances mentioned in the Act? Yes; unless a sample is brought to us for a particular purpose.
4348. Then you examine also for methylated spirit? We were told that in one or two cases they were mixing a certain proportion of methylated spirits with whisky; therefore we made it a rule afterwards to test all spirits to see whether they showed any evidence of methyl.
4349. Methyl, I presume, is like naphtha;—could it not be detected by the scent? It depends upon the refinement of the methyl; it may be highly refined or it may be crude. At the Customs House I often object that the methyl is not crude enough, and make them put in more of a cruder kind. Some refined methyl might pass in such a spirit as whisky—I do not mean large quantities—but say 10 per cent. or 20 per cent.
4350. In addition to the analyses contained in schedules A and B, you frequently analyse samples taken by Mr. Lenthall for the Department of Justice? Not only those samples, but many others.
4351. With what result? There have been no cases which I have been able to recommend for prosecution.
4352. That is to say you have given a clean bill of health? I had only one doubtful case some years ago, and that was referred to the Medical Officer. There was a doubt in the case, and no action was taken.
4353. If you discover traces of fusel oil in the spirit, do you not consider that the liquor has been adulterated within the meaning of the Act? No; because it may be naturally in the spirit, and has not been added to it. I think you will find that, according to the Act, the injurious ingredient must be "mixed." Of course if I found a considerable quantity of fusel oil I might recommend a prosecution; or rather I should state the case to the Government, and allow them to use their discretion as to whether they prosecuted or not. Sometimes you find minute traces of copper or lead from the apparatus. Distillation is sometimes carried on in copper vessels with tin worms, and I think it arises in that way. We generally call attention to those traces, although there is nothing that can by any possibility be stretched to adulteration. We merely show that the traces are there.
4354. How does that lead come to be in the still? It is in the make of them. Some of them have worms of an alloy of lead and tin. All spirits contain a minute quantity of acetic acid, and the trace of metal is dissolved.

4355. Mr. Davies.] Have there been no cases in which, as the result of your analyses, you have recommended a prosecution? No.
4356. President.] To how many years does that apply? I should not like to say how many years. I do not remember any cases for prosecution under the Licensing Act. There may have been cases of poisoning in which there have been prosecutions. Some time ago a gentleman from England, who had been working for an English analyst, arrived in the colony. I applied to the Government for his assistance. I thought that having just come out from Home he might have some new ideas. I had his assistance for months, but he did not find a single case of adulteration. He did nothing else but examine samples of liquor under my inspection. I said to him, "If there is anything else that you have sought for at Home, tell me and we will examine the liquor for it." But we did not find one case. Mr. Hamlet has also recently arrived in the colony. He has been in the laboratory for a year and a-half, and has gone through liquors for different substances; but he has not found one case of adulteration. I mention these matters so that you may see that the results are not those of my analysis alone. Others who have been quite competent to make analyses have made them with the same result.
4357. The 89th section of the Act clearly refers to adulterants and not to any ingredients natural to the liquor? It in no way touches those ingredients.
4358. Now, as to fusel oil, it is an alcohol, I believe; is it deleterious in the raw spirit? That would depend upon the quantity of spirit taken.
4359. Is it deleterious in itself? It is; I had to work four years in a manufactory in England where it is used for making valeric acid; it is used in pine-apple essence and other things. I became so nervous and unwell that I was obliged to give up the occupation.
4360. I suppose the fumes of it affected you? It is the last thing in the world I would touch.
4361. Then, in your opinion, it is deleterious? Yes; I should not care to take any tangible quantity of it.
4362. So that it has as good a right to be considered a poison as the things which are mentioned in the 89th section, beginning with cocculus indicus and ending with alum? Well, as regards fusel oil, so much depends upon the quantity of spirit which is drunk.
4363. That would apply to some of the other things named in the section;—do you not think that fusel oil ought to be included? I do. In the "Analysis of Food," by Blyth, I find it stated that a dose of 3 grains has been proved to have a serious action. If any person were to take at one sitting a quantity of spirit containing 1 grain I should consider that he had taken sufficient to be injurious.
4364. What is a fairly large quantity of spirits for a man to take—how many ounces? That depends on the nature of the individual. I should think 2 oz. a large quantity myself.
4365. Suppose it were raw spirit, how much fusel oil would there be in 2 oz. of spirit? That is a very wide question.
4366. Supposing it were whisky only a month old? Then it would depend upon what the spirit has been made from.
4367. Suppose, then, that it is potato or rye spirit? There might be one part in a thousand—that would be in rather more than 2 oz.
4368. How much would have a distinctly deleterious effect? Three grains would be distinctly injurious, as I have already pointed out; but the injurious effect would commence before you could point to a distinctly marked action.
4369. The habitual dram-drinker, after drinking daily such liquor as I have described, would very soon discover the effects of fusel oil upon his system? I do not know what would be the effect of the alcohol and what would be the effect of the fusel oil. It would be hard to make a distinction.
4370. Mr. Abigail.] Does the alcohol nullify the effects of the fusel oil? No. But I would point out that this is in reality a question for a medical man. I am not an authority upon this question. All that I endeavour to ascertain is whether there is a tangible detectable quantity of fusel oil in the spirit.
4371. President.] Do you search for turpentine? No; but I should know of its existence in a minute.
4372. You would probably search for it in gin? Yes; I have heard it stated that it is contained in gin, but I have never known it to be the case.
4373. What are grains of Paradise? A pepper.
4374. It is put into beer and spirits? I do not think it is put into spirits. I think it is pretty well confined to beer; but I am not quite sure upon the point. I do not think there is very much used. I know of one firm who were in the habit of using it.
4375. What is the effect of using it? I think it is used to impart a feeling of warmth.
4376. Quassia is an adulterant; but it is not deleterious, is it? No. But I have been assured by a brewer that if he were to make beer bitter with quassia people would not drink it. I think a very little is put in. I know of one case, which I took some pains to investigate, where the beer got a little pricked—a little acid—and in which a little quassia was put in to cover the tartness of the beer; but they could not afterwards do anything with the beer. It made the beer too bitter.
4377. There is another adulterant—sulphate of iron? That is not put into beer, I believe. It was supposed to be put into porter.
4378. You do not think it is put in? We test for all metals and acids; and it would come under that head.
4379. Have cases come under your notice in which stramonium has been put into beer? It may be; but I have never known it to be put in.
4380. Some time ago some stramonium was found in the stomach of a man who had died from the effects of drinking beer? I have no doubt that it is used in certain cases of "hoccussing"; but I do not believe it will be found in the barrel. Indeed I know that it is not so. These things may be used occasionally for the hoccussing of a particular person, but that is a question of adulterating a pint or a bottle.
4381. The case to which I referred was one in which a sailor had been hoccussed? I can quite understand its use in such a case as that.
4382. How is glucose made? There are various kinds of these sugars. It is generally made by boiling starch with sulphuric acid; but there are a variety of other ways which are unobjectionable. The only objection I know of to its use is that it merely produces alcohol and excludes certain other nutritious things which would exist in the beer if malt were used.
4383. You say that it is made largely with sulphuric acid? Not much of it is used now. They use what is called "saccharum," an artificial sugar which is made by heating maize, and things of that kind, up to a certain temperature.

- C. Watt, Esq. 4384. The general impression is, that all the glucose which is made on the Continent is made of potato-starch, and sulphuric acid. Now, sulphuric acid is a most corrosive poison. Under those circumstances would glucose be a wholesome thing for brewers to use? I would rather not speak as to its wholesomeness; but I may say that there would be scarcely a trace of the sulphuric acid left in the beer. The quantity of sulphuric acid required is very small, and that is carefully removed by lime. It is only by the trace of sulphate of lime that we know that it has been used.
4385. The process takes away all that can be noxious? Yes; all the acid. I do not wish to convey the idea that I approve in any way of the use of sugars in beer.
4386. There is a notion that glucose has been made with ingredients which are in themselves deleterious? Doctors I know have that theory; but as far as I can understand, little of that kind of sugar is used. They use chiefly what is called "saccharum."
4387. You do not think that diastase is used? A great number of patents have been issued for the manufacture of the thing in different ways. There is a patent process in which maize and things of that kind are used. The article is made largely in America, and it is made entirely without acid.
4388. This substance is largely imported and used by the Colonial brewers? Yes.
4390. You have been told very often that it is? I have heard persons say so. I know that some sugars are used in English breweries; but I understand that the best English breweries are giving up the use of artificial sugars. My chief objection to them, as I have explained, is, that they are a poor substitute for malt, because malt contains nutritive substances, which are of more value to the system.
4391. What is the reason for the use of glucose;—is it cheapness? Partly that; but the brewers find that there is no after fermentation if they use a certain quantity of glucose. There is a manufacturing difficulty connected with the temperature of the Colony.
4392. In comparison with beer brewed with malt and hops, beer brewed with glucose has not such good properties, but you know of nothing deleterious in it? I do not; but I have heard medical men say that they have observed symptoms which they thought were due to the consumption of beer made with glucose. I might mention a proposal which I placed some time ago before the authorities with regard to the manufacture of beer. It was to this effect: that all brewers should furnish the Government with a list of articles they use, and that the Health Officer should have the right to veto any article he chooses. The brewers should be confined to the use of certain articles.
4393. That would require a stringent Brewers' Act? I dare say. I simply desired to mention the idea to you.
4394. Your proposal is that there should be some Government supervision of the material used in all breweries? I want to save the public more from the ignorance than from the viciousness of persons who undertake to brew beer. I think the Government ought to know, not necessarily for publication, what every brewer uses.
4395. How do you propose to do that except by having the brewery open day and night for inspection? They could be open for inspection; but I would have a brewer make a declaration that he would not use or allow to be used any other than certain things.
4397. I always thought that soft water was the best for brewing? For porter, not for ale. The Burton water is very hard.
4398. Now, in regard to the ordinary beverages, I should like to know the percentage of alcohol, beginning with the liquors which have the least quantity, and going up to those which have the most alcohol; what is the percentage of alcohol for instance in the very lightest beer. Is Colonial beer considered a light beer? Not very. The percentage of alcohol would be about 6 per cent.
4399. Schedule B of the analyses shows that they contain from 5 to 7 per cent. of absolute alcohol? Yes.
4400. Stout is not brewed here? No.
4401. But porter is? Yes. Porter is a little weaker, but there is not much difference.
4402. What about Colonial wine? That varies very much. I have some at my house which has about 17 per cent., and I have had it containing from 32 to 34 per cent.
4403. Is it ever lower than 17? I think it is very likely to be. I could not say definitely, from memory, but I think some have been lower.
4404. And how high does it go? Over 30.
4405. Imported wine varies also, I suppose? Oh, yes.
4406. What is the spirit which contains most alcohol? Rum, I think.
4407. What does that contain? It varies very much. Some is 30 overproof, and some is 30 or 40 underproof.
4408. Proof means that it is about one-half absolute alcohol and one-half water? Yes.
4409. Then you would have some rum with 80 per cent.? Not as much as that. We have had some at about 60 per cent. In one sample which I analysed there was 86.75 of proof spirit.
4410. That would be 36 per cent. over-proof? Yes. Another, I see, contained 52 per cent. of absolute alcohol. You will find these in Schedule A of the analyses.
4411. So that a man takes about 6 per cent. of alcohol in a gallon of beer, and about 50 per cent. in a gallon of liquor which is sold to him as rum? Yes.
4412. There would be ten times as much mischief from the same quantity of liquor? Yes.
4413. Do you consider alcohol injurious? I would not like to say. I know that in some cases it is not, and that in other cases it is. My medical man tells me to take a little.
4414. You think it is a question of quantity and age? Yes; and the age of the person.
4415. Coming back to the question of fusel oil, age means the absence of fusel oil? Yes; in most cases fusel oil becomes converted into other substances and thus disappears notably, I believe, when kept in wood.
4416. Is it not converted? If it is converted to something else it is no longer fusel oil. Sometimes it is converted to some of the ethers. There is no absolute proof. We only know that it is not to be found as fusel oil.

4417. You cannot tell us, then, what becomes of the fusel oil? It may be a dozen things; it may be twenty. In wines there is no question but that the changes are completed. C. Watt, Esq.
5 July, 1886.
4418. It becomes ananthic ether in wine? Yes, it is supposed to; but it is not absolutely known. Authorities say so, however, and it is accepted. We look on many of these things as hypothetical. Perhaps an analyses has not been made before the fusel oil is missed, and the quantity of fusel oil is not accurately determined, in the first instance. Besides, in many of these organic things the changes are very complicated.
4419. You tell us then that analytical science cannot say whether fusel oil is converted or whether it disappears? You must bear in mind that fusel oil is not one thing; fusel oil itself is a compound, and the question of its disappearance or conversion is a very complicated one.
4420. It is a carbohydrate? Several carbohydrates. It is a complicated thing itself.
4421. How does it vary from ordinary alcohol; is the oxygen the same? No; it is not exactly the same. I want to find some means by which we could prevent white spirit containing fusel oil from being made up into drink of any kind.
4422. Why do you say that? I consider fusel oil to be deleterious.
4423. And speaking from your knowledge as a chemist, you consider that its sale should be discouraged or prohibited as much as possible? Yes.
4424. As it is a poison you want to get rid of it? Yes; I want to make sure that whatever articles are made up in the colony for consumption shall be made up as they are made up in France and Germany—made up of what you may call clean white spirit, that is white spirit, containing no perceptible quantity of fusel oil.
4425. Do you mean that it shall be good or rectified spirit? I do not care how the fusel oil is taken out so long as it is out.
4427. How about brandies, whiskies, and other spirits? It is all white spirit first. There is one thing connected with the trade that I do not want to interfere with. I do not want to interfere with the methylated spirit trade, therefore any spirit found not to be sufficiently free from fusel oil to be safe for making up into articles of drink, should be allowed to be methylated in the ordinary way, and sold as ordinary methylated spirit.
4428. That having undergone that process cannot be used as an article of drink? No; I think we could do it in two ways; what comes through the Custom-house we are pretty well acquainted with. We should have also to deal with what is manufactured in the colony. I do not know whether the Sugar Company are manufacturing it but I suppose they do. It should be examined before it goes out, and is sold for the purpose of manufacturing any article of drink. No white spirit should be sold with fusel oil in it.
4429. Then you would have an excise duty on spirit manufactured here? I have been thinking the matter over for years—I may say for half my life—and I do not believe we can reach the question of fusel oil by the analysis of the publicans' liquors.
4430. You think that the system of getting samples for analysis is no good? No; it is desired that a more wholesome class of liquors should be sold; and the only thing I could recommend is, that white spirit, which will always be made into articles of drink, shall be here as it is in England, Germany, and other European countries, clean white spirit, fit for consumption. The difficulty of detecting fusel oil in white spirit becomes much greater after it is made up into whisky, brandy, and gin.
4431. Do you think that much manufacturing goes on in the colony? I think there must be a great deal. If not, why are these essences imported?
4432. Well, you are aware that they can be used with the spirit manufactured here? That is the spirit I mean, the spirit manufactured here.
4433. You may imagine that there is a very large importation of white spirit, but there is not? I would meet it in two ways; I would deal with that which is imported at the Custom-house, and with that manufactured here in some other way.
4434. White spirit used to come in in large quantities, but it does not now? It comes in under the names of brandy, whisky, rum, and gin.
4435. It does not come in to be made up here. It can be made up cheaper and better elsewhere; so your system would have to be double-barrelled. You will have to seek the fusel oil not only in the shape of white spirit, but also in the liquor itself? I have heard a great deal about white spirit being sold and made up here, and certain flavouring essences being used. I want to devise some means to prevent any drink from being manufactured here, except from pure alcoholic spirit.
4436. Your first proposal has reference to that? Yes, whether it is imported or manufactured here I want to get at the white spirit in bond.
4437. And for that you would propose a system for the inspection of white spirit before it goes out? Yes; a certificate should be issued by the vendor to the purchaser, stating that it is pure white spirit, and that it does not contain more than so much fusel oil.
4438. What quantity do you consider to be a deleterious proportion? I have not quite decided upon that. I should say not more than one part in two thousand, or I might say even less than that; practically they can take it all out.
4439. Can you tell us at what age the fusel oil vanishes entirely? No, I am sure that new whisky is not good. The fusel oil is taken out before it is aged.
4440. Are there not distilleries where they have acres of stored liquor maturing? It is mixed with others. I doubt whether much of that you speak of reaches us at all. I believe that a great deal of English whisky goes to Ireland and Scotland, and afterwards comes here as Irish and Scotch. I believe that the Germans can take out every trace of fusel oil.
4441. If it is robbed of the fusel oil then I suppose it is innocuous? Then it is simply alcohol.
4442. If the fusel oil converted makes the flavour, it may be a wrong thing to destroy the fusel oil, otherwise than by converting it? They take out the fusel oil, as much as they can, all over the world. Fusel oil has a value of its own. It is useful for certain purposes. Other people sell their white spirit practically free from fusel oil, and I think we could do the same.
4443. I presume that they do that because they can use the fusel oil for other purposes? Yes, you will find that all these essences have been made from the results of analysis of liquor. They have been made to represent what is found, and if they are put in small quantities into pure alcohol you will have as good a spirit as you can reasonably expect. 4444.

- C. Watt, Esq. 4444. Then chemists can make as good spirits or wine as anyone else? I would not say wine. There is no genuine brandy in the market; it is made from white spirit. There is very little genuine rum.
- 5 July, 1886. 4445. Mr. Davies.] Do not the sugar companies make genuine rum? It is made from white spirit. In the West Indies it is run off the fag ends of the sugar refining.
4446. President.] What should rum be made from? Sugar refuse. At one time it was kept for eight or ten years before it was sent out. It was kept as long as there was any fusel oil in it.
4447. Mr. Davies.] There is no white spirit in the rum which the Sugar Company have at 2s. a gallon, is there? It is white spirit. Alcohol is white spirit. It runs over with a slight flavour of its sources. When rum is first made it contains a great deal of fusel oil. When the rums gets old that disappears. A chemist would take out that fusel oil, put into the liquor the pine-apple essence which they use and put in the suitable flavouring.
4448. President.] Would he manufacture the pine-apple essence too? I do not know. These are the things you are getting.
4449. You have told us about getting the fusel oil out of silent spirit, but how are you going to treat the immense quantities of fusel oil in the spirits—gin, rum, whisky, and brandy—meant for consumption? In any way that the Government recommend. If liquor at the Custom-house contains a certain quantity of fusel oil it need not be passed.
4450. If you find any trace of fusel oil in brandy, that shows that it is made of or contains immature spirit? Yes.
4451. And whisky? Whisky has always been considered a crude spirit. They make whisky from potatoes.
4452. It might be, gin I suppose? Yes, you would have to take out the fusel oil and put in the flavouring.
4453. Given a gallon of white spirit, you can make it into gin, rum, brandy, or anything else? Yes. It is all white spirit, coloured and flavoured.
4454. Then the fusel oil comes in two ways—first in silent spirit, and secondly in made up spirit; and you propose that there should be some method of prohibiting the consumption of spirituous liquors containing fusel oil? As far as I know, and I have made a great many analyses, I have not found a serious quantity of fusel oil; but I have heard of some raw spirits which were said to have been made here, and which were considered to be unwholesome. My proposal is intended to meet the complaint that such raw spirits are made up here.
4455. You make no proposal with regard to the spirits which are sent here for consumption? That could be the subject of any recommendation you might make; I have seen no large quantity of fusel oil in those spirits.
4456. But you say in your analysis that fusel oil has been found in these liquors? I say there were traces of fusel oil. A trace means sufficient to detect fusel oil, nothing more.
4457. Would you not expect to find more fusel oil in whisky at 3s. a gallon than in brandy at 8s. a gallon? We have found that inferior liquors contained more fusel oil than others, sufficient to enable us to well identify it, but not sufficient to at once produce injurious effects if you took a nobbler; but it is an article which you would not like to drink. We have been obliged to vary our forms of description, using such words as "good," "very good," and so on, where we cannot get absolute quantities. With reference to the use of pepper I may state that the liquor is first distilled weak and peppers are added to give them a false strength. In England they will not allow any spirits to be sold under a certain strength, because there is no desire then to give it a fictitious strength.
4458. Mr. Roseby.] With reference to the spirits which you have analysed, do you say that they were made from the articles from which they are supposed to be made? Say brandy from wine, rum from molasses, and whisky from malt, or are they simply white spirit doctored up? I do not think any one on earth can tell you absolutely what is the source of alcohol if it is decently prepared and cleaned. It is a specific compound. Take it from whatever source you will it has all been derived from sugar of some kind, and after it has been fermented and run into clean white spirit no one can be positively certain as to the source from which it was obtained.
4459. You are clearly of opinion that the low-priced spirit you have spoken of must be deleterious to the people? I should not like to speak positively about that. I would not take them because they do not suit my taste.
4460. But apart from your taste, would you not be afraid to take them for fear of their having an injurious effect? No; not any more than any other alcohol.
4461. That is to say you would no more fear to take liquor at 3s. a gallon than to take liquor which was 12s. a gallon? I should not take it because it contains fusel oil. I dislike the spirit, but I should not be afraid to take it.
4462. Is not alcohol from whatever source deleterious? I have made up my mind to be very cautious in reference to alcohol. I have seen it do very much harm, and I have seen it do some good. I have seen brandy administered with advantage in cases of erysipelas, and I have heard of patients dying one after another when it was not administered.
4463. You know that these things are extensively used as a beverage by people in social life. I ask whether you do not think that they have a very injurious effect on the physical system? I do not like to interfere with that question. I think that every man possessed of sense must be a law to himself. There are people who take too much food. I think you would find that quite as much sickness arises from over-eating as from excessive drinking.
4464. Mr. Hutchison.] Is there no way of easily getting rid of the fusel oil? Yes; by proper rectification of the spirit.
4465. Would a determined attempt to get rid of the fusel oil interfere with the quantity of alcohol produced? No; it merely requires the most efficient kind of distilling apparatus.
4466. Can you suggest anything to be added to the distilling process to secure this result? No; the proper machinery must be used, and the work must be done by a competent man.
4467. The fusel oil can be taken out? It can all be taken out.

Present:—

J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.,	T. COLLS, Esq., J.P.,
G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P..

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. W. Noble called in, sworn, and examined:—

4468. President.] I understand that you are a lecturer? I am; and I am known in England as the Mr. W. Noble. originator of the Blue Ribbon movement there.
4469. Will you state what that movement is? It originated in America as a purely moral suasion effort, 7 July, 1886. to reach the masses of the people on the temperance question.
4470. Temperance I suppose as regards the use of strong drink? Total abstinence.
4471. It has reference to drink only? Yes. The pledge in America runs: "From beer, wine, and cider."
4472. You are on a visit here in connection with that movement? Yes, and to learn all I can about the Colonies.
4473. Is this your first visit? Yes.
4474. Have you been long engaged in your present calling? I have been a total abstinence lecturer fourteen years.
4475. I think you were once in Her Majesty's service? Yes, in H.M.'s navy as a sailor.
4476. At that time there was no total abstinence or any abstinence at all? The matter was never broached. Since then there has been a great change.
4477. Have you always been a total abstainer? No.
4478. You converted yourself I presume? The temperance party converted me. I was brought under their influence; one of the leading members of the body, James Rae, was the instrument.
4479. Since then you have devoted yourself to this task exclusively? Yes.
4480. Have you seen much of this Colony? No.
4481. From what you have seen do you think intemperance is rife in this Colony? I should say there is a great deal of hard drinking here from what I have seen.
4482. You think this Colony a very promising field for your exertions then? Yes, I should look upon this as a large field.
4483. Of course you know little about the Colony but what you have read and heard? Yes.
4484. You think the temperance man has a large province before him here? I notice that among the young colonists there is a disposition to help temperance enterprise; I gather that from conversation.
4485. Has this community a reputation abroad for being much given to the consumption of intoxicating drink? It has been said in England—I have heard it on the platform from the lips of your colonists—that you drink more per head than the population of England.
4486. Do you mean of spirits? No; I mean taking the drink bill as a whole. I think that per head it exceeds the consumption in England.
4487. Do you mean in value or in quantity? In quantity; your liquor costs more.
4488. That is the point? Yes, and in speaking on the subject I make that qualification.
4490. I understand that it is your opinion that legislation as compared with other agencies is a weak factor in the temperance cause? At the present time.
4491. In other words you do not believe in the regulation of the trade by licenses? If you ask me for my personal opinion I do not believe in licensing the liquor traffic, because I believe it to be wrong. As a citizen I should vote upon any question which would in any way cripple the liquor traffic, and so lessen the drunkenness of the community.
4492. You must have read and thought a great deal before you came to so bold a conclusion as that? Yes, I did.
4493. Has it ever occurred to you that to drink is almost an instinct in human nature? Would you pardon me if I ask when that instinct arose?
4494. That is what I want to ask you. I want to ask how it came to pass that you arrived at this conclusion. Do you think that drinking is an acquired habit which can be thrown off at any time? In some cases it is never thrown off.
4495. Do you know that ever since the dawn of history human beings have been drinking? Of course we date from the time of Noah; I have never been able to get further than that.
4496. Savage races who know nothing of strong liquor take to it readily as soon as they smell it? I think that would go to prove that this agency is an unnatural product, or else it would not act in this way upon men.
4497. If you destroyed the drink traffic what would you put in its place? I would put in its place the very thing which you put in your gaols, water or other beverages. I have come to this conclusion from a long course of reading and practical experience.
4498. That is to say, you take a practical and not a theoretical, view? Just so.
4499. You do not care whether the craving is instinctive, acquired, or racial? No; I am for crippling the drink traffic, whatever its origin may be.
4500. A bishop has described drinking as a sort of incentive to joyfulness. That remark was made in this Colony. What are you going to substitute for it? Suppose half a dozen people come together to celebrate some little event, are you going to give them cold water? I became a total abstainer when the craving for drink was upon me. I was a commercial man, and it was a great question with me as to whether I should ever lose the desire for drink. I found that tea, coffee, and cold water were quite sufficient when I brought my will-power to bear. I came to the conclusion that what has helped me will help another man.
- 4500½. Having found your will sufficiently strong for the purpose, you came to the conclusion that all other men's wills might be made equally strong? Not all.

Mr. W. Noble. 4501. But many? Yes.

7 July, 1886. 4502. You thought that all you would have to do would be to tell them your own story? No; that would not do, because some men are intellectual giants, and require to be convinced through their intellects.

4503. In some cases then you would appeal to the volitions, higher convictions, and consciences of men, and in other cases you would appeal to their intellects? Yes; I would appeal to the intellect in some cases. I should give some the "Foundation of Death" to read; it is one of the most valuable books published upon this question. The title has been objected to by some literary men, but the contents of the book are very valuable.

4504. I suppose it traces the effects of drink right through the system? Yes; it deals with all phases of the question.

4505. Coming into a Colony like this, where the habit of drinking, if not inveterate, is at all events very strong, you would rely more upon persuading the people not to drink than by legislating to the effect that they should drink only within certain hours? Primarily that is my work; but if I were a citizen of Sydney I should work shoulder to shoulder with other citizens to bring about a reform which would have the effect of reducing the number of public-houses, or which would get rid of them altogether.

4506. Have you travelled in America? Yes; twice; I was there during my recent visit eight months.

4507. And in Canada? Yes; I was in Canada in 1877. I have not been there since.

4508. Do you consider the Canadians and the Americans sober people as compared with other people? I considered that the Canadian people were a long way ahead of the people of the old country.

4509. And the Americans, what did you think of them? In giving views upon the drink question in America you need to be very careful, because each State differs from the other so much as regards the nationality and commercial habits of the people. If you go to the New England States you meet with what you would call the old stock; there is more of the English element in the people; but the further west you go the greater the mixture.

4510. Did you travel in the west? Yes, a great deal.

4511. And you found the people more given to drink than were the people in the Eastern States? In California there was a great deal of drinking. At the present time they are organizing what they call a Third Party, the object being to return to power an executive who will deal with these questions from a constitutional stand-point; that is to say, that every State should be brought under the one law, and that men should be appointed to administer the law.

4512. Is that a temperance party? Strongly; but there are some men associated with it who are not abstainers.

4513. I suppose you have been in the State of Maine? I have been in the principal cities of Maine.

4514. There they have prohibition? Yes.

4515. What did you find to be the result? I should like to say that I went through the State of Maine incognito, in order that I might obtain an unbiassed opinion. I travelled through the city of Portland, a seaport town, and the largest town in Maine. I was some four or five hours in the city by myself, and I was unable to discover a liquor-shop.

4516. Were you satisfied with that investigation? I was satisfied that the sale of liquor was suppressed.

4517. The open sale? The open sale.

4518. How long did you stay in Portland? Three days.

4519. And did you come away with the same impression, that the sale of liquor had been wholly suppressed? No; because I happened to obtain an interview with Judge Simon, one of the leading Judges of the State, who was at that time trying two liquor-sellers for breaking the law. A Mr. Plunkett, if my memory serves me right, admitted that he had violated the law in one case but not in another; he was thereupon bound over in heavy bonds to appear and take his trial. I thought that was clear evidence that there was a disposition on the part of the people and the Executive to enforce the law.

4520. The prohibitive law is still in operation in Maine? Not only that, but the people are agitating for a more stringent law. There is this trouble, that the law does not prevent importation. Judge Simon frankly admitted that the Baggage Company brought into the State liquor for private consumption. If they discover that you have brought liquor into the State for the purpose of selling it they will not only confiscate the liquor but they will bring you to the bar of justice.

4521. You know that a great deal has been written on this subject by people on the other side? The law is violated; there is no doubt about that.

4522. Would you be surprised to hear that a gentleman went to the town of Portland specially for the purpose of ascertaining whether there was any difficulty in obtaining drink; he afterwards wrote an article on the subject in the Fortnightly Review. In this article he said that he found no more difficulty in getting drink when he wanted it than in any other part of America. Within a stone's throw of a street corner there were a number of places to which he was taken in which liquor could be obtained. The name of the gentleman is Mr. Justin M'Carthy, and he wrote in 1871. Of course there was a great outcry, because the article gave the impression that the whole thing was a farce? If it is a farce, why did not the people repeal the law—why is it that to-day there is a disposition on the part of the million people living in the State to make the law more stringent than ever?

4523. I do not think Mr. M'Carthy denies that the residents stick to and believe in the law. Portland is a seaport town; there are a number of strangers coming and going; they will have the liquor, and they find someone to supply it to them? I have no doubt that I could have found a man in Portland who would have taken me round, and who would have obtained liquor for me if I had wanted it. In the same manner in England, if I wished to witness a cock-fight, which is contrary to law, I could get a rooster and some men to go with me down a flight of stairs into a back basement, where I could enjoy a cock-fight, and so break the law. Mr. M'Carthy may have been right.

4524. Remembering that here we rely a great deal on English legislation, I should like you to say whether you consider that legislation which is beyond belief or conviction of the people is not always evaded; it becomes in fact a dead letter when it is beyond the peoples needs or wants. You say that you are an anti-legislationist: you rely on other things? I rely on moral suasion.

4525. Think for a moment of legislation. Do you consider that legislation can ever be effective if it is far above the requirements of the people. What I mean by that is not what we think of their requirements but what they think of their requirements? I think that wherever a law has been passed in America in advance of the public sentiment there has always been a difficulty in enforcing it; hence the existence of this new party.

4526. You know that they have a local option system in Canada. We have had evidence to the effect that very largely that law is beyond what the people can endure and therefore in many places it has become a dead letter? How came the people to pass it? Mr. W. Noble.

4527. You see that it is passed by a Legislature representing the people and then it is fastened on to this and that municipality on their taking certain steps to admit of its introduction. Of course it presses heavily on some people who may be a large dissentient minority? Speaking of legislating in advance of public sentiment is it necessary that we should spend 136,000,000 in drink and only 70,000,000 for bread? Is drink twice as necessary as bread? Should there be more public-houses than bakeries?

4528. The answer of economists to that would be that there may not be the same demand for bread as there is for drink? Well, first of all we seek to reduce that demand by teaching the people true temperance principles. On the other hand the electors, or ratepayers, as we call them in England, surely have a right to some voice in the matter. If these places are set up to supply a supposed want is it not natural to ask the people, or the representatives of the people, whether they are needed so that you can have some legislation which would tend to limit the number of public-houses. That is considered an interference by those who manufacture and sell the liquor.

4529. There is a party which believes in absolute free trade in liquor. That principle has never been adopted here. We have always had some State interference or regulation? In the State of Ohio they have no licenses for the sale of liquor. Any one can sell liquor which is taxed by the Government.

4530. Have you ever been in a State in which a high license fee is charged? In Illinois they have what is called the high license law. I have here an article written by Dr. Lyman Abbott, of New York, a prominent man in that country, which covers the whole ground of the licensing laws of America. I should be only too happy to allow the Commission to peruse it. In Illinois the license fee is 500 dollars, and heavy penalties are imposed for breaches of the law. Whilst a great many have the idea that this high license law has reformed the public-house, it has made it more respectable because a man must put more capital in it; the law has not diminished drunkenness among the people. Dr. Abbott has collected valuable information on both sides of this particular question.

4531. Then the high license fee has not reduced drunkenness? I cannot vouch for that myself. I am only stating what I have read.

4532. Suppose we had a high license fee of £100 our opinion is that in six months we should reduce the number of public-houses by at least 200. If the law was thoroughly enforced the small shops could not exist? They have a high license in Auckland.

4533. Has it not led to a very obvious reduction in intemperance? I know that they have very elaborate bars in connection with the hotels there. I saw apparently respectable young men standing at these bars and drinking. It seems to me, from what I saw and heard from citizens there, that the public-houses had been improved but the consumption of liquor had not been diminished.

4534. Our experience is that the more the houses the more the drunkenness for the reason that there are many men who cannot pass a public-house without going in for a nip, and then there being more houses within a given area than are required the publicans must necessarily bid for intemperance, and hence they break the law by selling on prohibited days and during prohibited hours? That is a very sound basis to go upon.

4535. I think that the Commission has made up its mind on one point: that a decrease in the number of public-houses would be a distinct gain. That is the opinion of all the witnesses we have examined? What you said puts me in mind of what the woman said to the magistrate. He said, "My good woman, can't you get your husband past a public-house?" She replied, "Yes, but I can't get him past twenty."

4536. Mr. Hutchison.] Then we understand you to say that provided the law administrators are faithful and the people in anything like a majority where prohibition was demanded by vote it would be a good thing? I think so in Maine, but a similar answer in regard to many other States would require some qualification. For instance, take the State of Connecticut, where they have local option question and prohibition. A circular which I received in January last, asking me to attend a Convention in that State, refers to the terrible drunkenness and calls upon Christian churches to unite in adopting measures for its suppression. In Maine, previous to the enactment of the law, there was a strong temperance sentiment; a temperance revival had been going on for years; and by the circulation of temperance literature the people were prepared for the law.

4537. Then provided the temperance sentiment is sufficiently strong to carry a vote in favour of prohibition within a given area you believe that such a law ought to be put in force? I do.

4538. You are to all intents and purposes a local optionist then? As a citizen, but not as a teetotaler. Prohibition is based on total abstinence. Prohibition means the stoppage of the importation of liquor; but the minority must have their drink if they want it. I am referring to the closing of the saloons.

4539. Let us take that point then. Suppose a majority of the people in a certain district declared by a vote at the ballot-box that no public-houses should be licensed for three years in that district, would you say that it would be fair legislation which would give effect to that vote? I should.

4540. You are aware that one of the objections raised in America to prohibition, as you understand it, is that it is in opposition to international law. If the Americans decided to stop the importation of liquor, the Canadians would complain of the American ports being closed against them. International law provides against that? Your statement just goes to prove that absolute prohibition is impossible until the people all become total abstainers.

4541. We do not advocate total prohibition here. Are you familiar with the provisions of McClellan's Act in Scotland? I am not.

4542. That Act makes provision for taking a vote on three points:—First,—shall there be any increase of public-houses for three years? Second,—shall there be a decrease, and by how many? Third,—shall there be prohibition? Any district is allowed to vote on these three points. Do you think that is fair voting? Do you mean direct voting by the people?

4543. Yes, in any locality. It becomes a question whether it would be wise to have a vote direct from the people or by returning a popular board. Is not that local option? No. Let the people have a direct vote, and every year you would have a fresh election, as in America. That is what local option means there. It is so at any rate in Massachusetts. They have just recently voted against new licenses in the city where Gough lived.

4544. Do you not think that three years are better than one? Certainly.

Mr.
W. Noble.
7 July, 1866.

4545. Now as to the State of Maine. Although the law is evaded do you not think it is better that the drinking should be carried on clandestinely than that there should be public-houses inviting people at every corner? That is the impression made on every unbiassed mind. Anyone who passes through the state of Maine incog., and without becoming the tool of anyone, must be impressed with this thought, "Oh, that it were thus in my own country." But there is this very important feature to be considered. As I remarked before, in the State of Maine you find the old stock—the Puritans, if I may so speak—but when you travel west you find a strong foreign population, who come teeming into the country with their habits unchanged. All the time the morality of the country is arrayed against the majority, and hence the difficulty in passing or enforcing a restrictive law.

4546. When the President asked you what you would do to fill up the gap which would be caused by the removal of intoxicating drink, did it not occur to you that in all historical times more than half the human race have eschewed drink. You are aware for example that the Mahomedans and the Hindoos do not drink? They did not until they were contaminated.

4547. Exactly; but as a race, and they are more than half the population of the world? That is a fact—a majority I suppose of the world.

4548. It is not the case then that all the races of the world have always drunk intoxicants; as a matter of fact it is the Christian races who drink? That is, the nominally Christian races.

4549. I am glad to hear that you think Young Australia is disposed to work in the temperance cause? Yes, that opinion was forced upon me in New Zealand by mixing with families.

4550. But is there not a danger of your having made a mistake. First of all you would like it to be so, though I do not mean to say that you are not observant; secondly, you may have come more into contact with that class than with the other class? No; I have been the guest of one or two families, and I have been taken into circles where there was no temperance basis. I think that the young colonist sees the terrible evil of drink, and that, with the force of education, has brought him to this conclusion: that though we cannot do much for those who are given up to drink we may be able to do something for posterity. That is the kind of feeling which prevails as I have gathered from conversations. Of course I know that it is difficult at all times to get an unbiassed opinion, but that is my feeling.

4551. I suppose you have noticed the large number of public-houses we have in Sydney? Yes, and I have noticed the bottles displayed in the windows.

4552. I gather from what you have said that notwithstanding you are what I may call a moral suasionist, you think it would be fair that the people themselves should have a voice in deciding as to whether the number of public-houses shall be reduced, or, if the public sentiment be strong enough, to abolish them altogether? Yes, altogether.

4553. But while the public-houses exist do you not think that they ought to be brought under some very rigid restrictive law. You do not believe in the principle of licensing at all? I would not license a man or a house.

4554. I agree with you, but nevertheless if public-houses are licensed do you not think that they should be subject to very restrictive legislation? Yes, and I would have the right men to enforce the law.

4555. And when legislation of a restrictive character were passed you would see that it was rigorously carried out? Yes.

4556. For instance, our law provides that public-houses shall be closed absolutely on Sundays, except to travellers. As a matter of fact this law is flagrantly outraged, and we are told that there are very few hotel-keepers who obey the law. Do you believe in absolute Sunday-closing? I should say close the public-house on Sunday as you close every other place of business.

4557. And that being the law you would wish to see it rigorously enforced? Yes.

4558. I believe that restrictive legislation in Canada and some of the States of America where licenses exist is very rigorously carried out? In Toronto the liquor saloons are closed from Saturday night until Monday morning.

4559. At what time on Saturday night? 7 o'clock; and it is a perfect Paradise there. I was never in a quieter city than Toronto; that was in 1877.

4561. Mr Roschy. I suppose there has been even an improvement since then? The people are more than ever satisfied.

4562. You know that this prohibitory law is being adopted by a large number of the Canadian provinces? Yes, and it is most effective in the outlying districts; but there is some diversity of opinion about it. Not having been there since the introduction of the new law I cannot give any personal testimony on that point.

4563. Where you have been have not the people been able to enjoy the convivialities of life as heartily and joyously as where the wine-cup is freely indulged in? At Newton, Mass., about 8 miles from the city of Boston, I was the guest of one of the leading merchants; there is not a liquor-saloon in the place, and I should say that the people are about as happy as most people I have met with.

4564. A large proportion of our people here have an impression that there is no social enjoyment, no real ecstacy to be revelled in, unless they have the social glass. Your observation has led you to the conclusion that people can obtain all the social joys of life without liquor? Yes, and turn their glasses upside-down.

4565. As you say, that if licenses were granted, you would put them under rigidly restrictive legislation; would you for instance permit the employment of bar-maids? Certainly not.

4566. Would you allow the liquor-seller to supply young people with drink. Under our present law liquor cannot be sold to persons under sixteen years of age; would you make the age greater than sixteen? I would take it a long way up. If I had my way I should make the age seventy. But with regard to children there is a Bill before the English Parliament now to prevent the liquor-seller from supplying persons under a certain age. I should use all the power I have to bring about a law to this effect. The great difficulty in dealing with regulations is this. It is the law in England that you must not supply a drunken man with liquor; but I could take you to places in London where you could bring men out by the scores helplessly drunk. When a publican is brought before the Court charged with this offence there is a lawyer there who says, "How do you know that my client knew that this man was drunk; can you swear that when that man got the last glass of liquor my client knew he was drunk?" Of course the witness says, "No; I would not like to swear that; I only saw the man drunk," and the whole thing falls through.

4567. Or the publican may declare that the man was drunk before he came into his house? Yes; the number of convictions is consequently very small. I think there ought to be a very stringent law to protect the young, and that embodies the principle of prohibition. Mr. W. Noble.

4568. Mr. Withers.] You say that in Toronto and in some cities in America where Sunday closing is enforced, the place is a perfect Paradise and perfectly quiet;—how is this effected? It is simply because the people of the Executive are strong, and consequently the officers of the law are bound to see that the law is carried out. I am told that in Sydney the back door is very often open. It is just possible that the back door may be open in Toronto; but whenever the law is known to be violated the culprit is brought to the bar of justice. 7 July, 1886.

4569. President.] That is to say, there is a sympathy with the law? Yes; of course there is a section of the community opposed to the law.

4570. Mr. Withers.] That is exactly our position. We have the police, from the head of the department downwards, irritated and goaded every Sunday, by being set at defiance and insulted when they attempt to enforce the law, and they have failed to suggest any means, consistent with the liberty of the subject, by which we can enforce the absolute closing of public-houses on Sunday? I think I can suggest the cause of that. There ought to be some healthy agitation amongst the people in the churches and outside the churches to bring the motive power to bear—to get the steam into the engine, if I may use the expression.

4571. Would it be a good thing to impound the keys in the nearest police office from the time of closing on Saturday night until 7 o'clock on Monday morning? In New York the Sunday closing and liquor saloons is a dead failure. There the law is on the statute-book, but you can go in and out of the saloons on Sunday and get all the liquor you want. The fact is that the whole of New York State is very much behind on this question, but if the Executive of Sydney fail to enforce the law upon the statute-book the people should demand a new Executive.

4572. Mr. Hutchison.] Is it not a fact that everywhere the trade has incessantly or always defied the law? They oppose all legislation.

4573. And defy it? I think so.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Dr. Maclaurin called in, sworn, and examined:—

4574. President.] What is your official title? President of Board of Health and Medical Adviser to the Government. Dr. Maclaurin.

4575. To which offices you have been recently appointed? Since last September. 12 July, 1886.

4576. I presume you have been for a long while a member of the Board of Health? Almost since it was first instituted.

4577. You have had a large practice in the Colony extending over many years? Nearly fifteen years.

4578. And before that you were a surgeon in Her Majesty's navy? For some thirteen years I was in the navy.

4579. Are you of opinion that the consumption of liquor is larger in this country, pro rata to the population, than in any other city with which you are acquainted? I do not think so. In order to decide the point it would be first necessary to discover from the Custom-house and other authorities the quantity of liquor actually consumed in the country; but judging from the effects on the population I do not think the amount consumed here is more than in other countries.

4580. Do you think the consumption of liquor is greater in this country than in any other country of a similar population? No, I do not think the population here are very drunken.

4581. And this is your opinion formed not only on what you have read but also on what you have seen in the course of practice? Yes; I would not say that the population here are as sober as they might be, but I do not think they are at all exceptional for drunkenness.

4582. Perhaps you do think that too much liquor is partaken of? I do think that more is drunk than there should be.

4583. Are you of opinion that the means of distributing liquor through the public-houses are too numerous—taking for example the city and the suburbs? I think they are too numerous.

4584. You think there are too many public-houses within the metropolitan police district for the reasonable requirements of the people? Yes.

4585. Do you belong to that class of the profession which believes that alcohol is a food? I think that alcohol may be very fairly called a food.

4585½. You have no doubt it is a valuable medicine? Not the slightest. I will tell you why I call it a food. By the taking of a certain proportion of alcohol into the body you provide for a certain proportion of the heat protection of the body, and therefore you set free the fats. Up to a certain point alcohol will do the same kind of work that the fatty constituents of the body will do, and therefore we are justified in calling it a food. It is digested, burned, and turned to the service of the body; it does not go to the building up of the body, but it sets free other constituents which do that work.

4586. The body requires, and must have certain hydrocarbonates? Yes.

4587. The question arises whether the hydrocarbonates cannot be taken in some form other than alcohol; Which is the best way to provide them? There is no doubt that they may be perfectly well provided in other ways, but alcohol to a certain point is very easily digested and therefore it is often possible for a man to take a little alcohol when he would not be able to take a sufficient quantity of other forms of hydrocarbonates.

4588. Are you speaking of a man in health? Of a man in health who is fatigued. But alcohol is much more than a food; if it is taken in proper moderation it is also very valuable stimulant to the nervous system of the jaded and fatigued man.

Dr.
Maclaurin.
12 July, 1886.

4589. Do you consider that what you have stated might be translated into these words: The human system has a natural affinity for alcohol? That is a somewhat wide statement, and I don't know that I should quite agree with you. The human system varies at different stages of growth of development. The adult man has a natural tendency to take a little alcohol.

4590. What is your theory of the dreadful craving for liquor which comes on the habitual drunkard—dipsomania? There are two conditions of craving; the craving which comes every day upon the habitual drunkard, for so certain as the time comes round he feels that he must begin to drink and he goes on drinking; there is another craving which is a different thing altogether. A man will be perhaps for weeks, possibly for months, absolutely sober and then he suddenly finds that he must give way to a craving for drink. The latter crave I look upon as what in medicine we call neurotic phenomenon—nerve phenomenon,—and to be distinctly allied to insanity; I do not mean to say it is insanity; it is of the same nature as insanity, and various forms of criminality. The daily crave for drink on the other hand is a phenomenon which I believe is produced by organic change in the system caused by the habitual consumption of an undue amount of alcohol. It is of a very complicated character; undoubtedly there is to a certain amount an alteration of the blood, although it is not very easily to ascertain, but we are very much more certain that the development of the fibrous tissue has unduly increased. For example, the liver becomes larger and afterwards harder, and that enlargement and hardening depends on the development of the fibrous material of the liver. The kidney also becomes more hard and that hardening arises from the development of the fibrous tissue of the organ. There are almost similar changes which occur within the brain; then there is a tendency to degeneration of the arterial system; the arteries of the body lose their tone, and altogether the whole system is gravely affected by the habitual consumption of an undue quantity of alcohol. It is not easy to explain why the habitual drunkard gets his daily crave; it is very much the same as a healthy person gets a daily crave for food. As the system has become so physically altered with the alcohol it is felt by these men to be pretty much as necessary as food is by healthy persons. I do not mean to say it is as necessary as food but it is so felt.

4591. If alcohol is a food it seems to follow that it is an expensive and a very dangerous food? Very dangerous: it is only to be looked on as a food when taken within strict limits of moderation.

4592. Among the forms of food by which men sustain their lives is there any food as dangerous as alcohol either in degree or kind. We can all understand that the glutton has got his own dangers, but is the mere taking of any food of which you know accompanied by such obvious danger as alcohol? The taking of excess of any food will always produce evil. It must be remembered there is no article which we call food which can be so specifically separated from all other kinds of food, there is no article the use of which a man is so tempted to exceed as in the case of alcohol, and it is only to the excessive use of alcohol that one can trace these evils of which I have spoken. And besides, these are evils which also occur in persons in whom there is no suspicion of an excessive use of alcohol. It is quite possible it might arise from other kinds of food too. It is conceivable that an undue use of nitrogenous foods in certain constitutions might lead to a similar degeneration of the kidneys; it is a theory which is quite conceivable but it is so difficult to isolate these in the way you can isolate alcoholic phenomenon. You can get a sufficient number of persons who are characterised similarly by the common fact that they all over indulge in alcohol but it is very difficult to get people who are similarly characterised by common over indulgence in any other article of food to the exclusion of alcohol.

4593. Are you aware there are hospitals in which no alcohol is used? There are some.

4594. In London or on the Continent, or in America? I really forget the exact situation; I know there are too or three hospitals which are conducted on the teetotal principle as it is called.

4595. Are you aware whether or not they are successful? I believe they are fairly successful. We must raise two distinct questions. Is it possible for a person to keep alive, in health, without it; and is it possible for a man to indulge reasonably in great moderation, in alcohol, without doing himself an injury; and on the whole is the result of alcohol beneficial to him? These are quite different questions. No one will deny that men may live the full three score years and ten without ever taking alcohol at all and yet may lead a fairly healthy life, but quite a different question is whether the use of a small moderate quantity of alcohol is likely in a healthy person to shorten life.

4596. I suppose such a thing as salt can be taken to excess? It can be a poison. When we speak of the hygienic qualities of alcohol we must remember that it is presented to us in a great number of different forms—some very wholesome and some very unwholesome.

4598. There are spirits the use of which will be found to be pernicious? Undoubtedly; the moderate use of which will be found to be pernicious.

4599. Are you referring to spirits made of grain which will contain amylic alcohol? I think the only kind of alcohol the use of which ought to be encouraged is alcohol which comes from the juice of the grape. The safest form of alcohol is good wine which has not been unduly fortified, or brandy made really from wine not fortified by other forms of spirit. When we come to other forms of spirit we are never perfectly certain how much of amylic alcohol may be present. In good old whiskey, very carefully made from malt and kept for a length of time, I believe the amount of amylic alcohol comes almost to a minimum. In new raw whiskey there is often a great deal of it. I believe in respect of potato spirit, which is the source of the white spirit which comes here, the proportion of amylic alcohol is very great; it is hardly possible by any amount of distillation to get rid of it.

4600. You think it may be destroyed or converted by age? I question whether it ever does in potato spirit, in which the quantity is so large.

4601. You think that in silent spirit it is never converted? I believe potato spirit is never sold in the condition in which it should be used.

4602. It will not combine with oxygen? I doubt it very much, for the quantity is great and strong. If potato spirit be brought to the country very highly rectified it is likely to prevent changes; but these are questions mainly for a chemist.

4603. Then that obviously accounts for your statement—that a great deal in taking alcohol will depend on the alcohol you take? Quite so.

4604. You say that alcohol in the form of wine or brandy is the most innocuous form of taking alcohol? Provided it is really wine and brandy. There are various kinds of wine fortified with potato spirit. Many kinds of wine are not strong and are very unstable, and unless they are carefully looked after they will ferment and turn sour. If you add a little potato spirit—which is not expensive—you may save yourself the trouble of looking after them. Wine which is made strong with potato spirit will do a man a great deal of harm, whereas wine only moderately fortified with spirit made from wine I believe would be quite wholesome.

4605. Do you find any other bad point than amylic alcohol in raw brandy when young? I think brandy is fairly safe if distilled from wine.

4606. So you would consider our Colonial wines more innocent beverage than such things as whiskey and water or imported brandy and water? Most decidedly, if they are properly made.

4607. You would also admit that some of these Colonial wines are not to be taken by gouty people? Undoubtedly; I am speaking of the effect of wine, not so much in producing gout as in producing, first of all, intoxication, and secondly, various degradations of human beings, which are described as chronic alcoholism. You know the swollen belly, watery eye, attenuated legs, loss of nervous power, loss of resolution, trembling hands, and so forth, which one sees in a chronic drunkard, but not in the gouty fellow, who gets inflammation in the big toe. I say of all the forms of alcohol the least likely to produce mad violent intoxication or these miserable conditions which we see in the chronic drunkard is alcohol contained in wine or prepared from wine.

4608. Can you tell us whether apart from amylic alcohol in spirit there is any test for discovering whether the spirit is raw, crude, young, immature? I really cannot say; I have no doubt the spirit merchants or the chemists would be able to tell.

4609. The human palate is a very good test? There is a great difference between young wine and wine kept for years; wine improves in flavour and wholesomeness by keeping.

4611. For the offence of drunkenness or habitual drunkenness the punishment is either a fine or an imprisonment for a certain time; the man pays the fine or undergoes the imprisonment, and in the course of a few days he finds his way probably to the Stipendiary Magistrate, who punished him before, and so on he continues during the year, his detention in gaol being really only a sort of detention in a sanatorium;—can such punishment have any effect? I do not think, as a rule, it has any beneficial effect.

4613. A blot on his escutcheon? Quite so; he did abstain from drinking afterwards; however he was too far gone to be of any great use. I do not think it has any beneficial effect at all; I should not myself punish a man criminally for being drunk; I would only punish him for offending the peace of the public when he was drunk. If he were merely drunk in the street I think it would be a very fair thing to take him away and put him in his own house; but if he were disorderly then he should be put in the police station.

4614. Many asylums have been established in various parts of the world, some to reclaim and some to punish the drunkard; they exist in America, South Australia, Victoria, and England;—do you think they are effective? I think they do good; I do not think they are quite so successful as was expected at first.

4615. Don't you think, instead of being punished, the drunkard should be sent into an institution of that kind? He would be infinitely better off, if it could be done, but the law does not allow us to do it. The difficulty in answering such a question is that there are two distinct classes of persons who come under the eye of the police for drunkenness. One is the habitual drunkard, with whom you will do no good, unless you put him into such an institution; you may or may not succeed if you do so; you may succeed, not perfectly, but to a considerable extent. The other one is the man who gets on the spree, who never had the slightest idea of getting drunk when he began the amusement with his friends, but who gets led away, and for fighting and behaving riotously in the street he is arrested; next day this man will be very much ashamed of himself, and will resolve never to get drunk again; but it would not be necessary to send such a man to a reformatory. There is another class of persons for whom the existence of a sanatorium would be exceedingly valuable. The man who knows his weakness, and feels it coming on—the man who has periodical outbreaks of a craze for liquor—to such a man it would be a very great advantage, when he knows the craze is coming on, to retire into such an institution, without feeling the stigma of going to an lunatic asylum.

4616. Do you think a few weeks detention would be sufficient to cure him of the craze? If he were detained for two or three, perhaps for six, weeks, it would go off in all likelihood.

4617. There is a mode of treatment which would satisfy the craze, without administering much or any alcohol? I do not know that it is a very judicious mode of treatment.

4618. The treatment in American institutions is chloral? I do not think that is desirable; I think good food and the support of the will are much more important than drugs and narcotics. The man who feels an invincible craze coming on should be put in the position of one under tutelage, and protected against any lack of self control. He does not necessarily require any medicine; it is a case of good food and protection every hour of the day. It is really a lack of self control, and all this comes of neurotic weakness, and he wants some outside power to support him. He does not want to be rendered stupid by narcotics until he no longer feels the craze, but rather to be protected against himself for a short time in order that the will again may become sufficiently powerful to keep the passion under control.

4620. We should be very glad to see our way to suggest to the Government some more efficacious mode than the present of treating these drunkards. We have agreed on a kind of mixed reformatory and penitentiary, but we are not quite sure that the penitentiary should be in the same establishment as the reformatory;—do you think that a man should be punished first of all for so much of the drunkenness as is in the nature of a crime to the public, and then, out of regard for the man, the State should do its best to reclaim him? I understand that when a man is taken up for drunkenness to the police station, if he has been guilty of any crime in addition to the drunkenness, he would be dealt with first for that crime, and subsequently for drunkenness, in a measure of a remedial not of a punishment kind at all. I believe it would do a great deal of good; we must not expect too much, for very often we should be disappointed; if it succeeded in restoring one-third of the people to something like decent lives it would be well worth the money, and would be no greater expense than is now incurred; but we must be prepared for disappointment.

ment. If you did not cure you would improve them very much, and, moreover, the knowledge a man would have, that he might be sent to such a place again, would tend greatly to prevent him from exceeding in the way he did before.

4621. Take a typical case of a man of forty who has been in gaol, under the present régime, twenty times for drunkenness in the street, and who is on the right side of his prime; when he has exhibited himself as an habitual drunkard, and gets himself within the range of the law, why should he not be at once sent for one year to this asylum, where, after he has been brought back again to something like a healthy frame of body, he should do fair average work; would not that be detention in the first place, and after nine months' work would it not occur to him that he must not give any one a chance to send him there again? It would not simply be detention; the enforced absence from drink for nine months might strengthen his will so much that, unless he has some organic disease from which he is not likely to get better, he would be not nearly so likely to fall into drinking as before; at the same time we must not expect too much. I remember a case in which that system was tried, but there was no work attached to it; when I was in Greenwich Hospital a number of years ago I attended a man in delirium tremens; that man was about seventy years of age; I looked up his medical history and I found this was his thirty-second attack of delirium tremens; he had been a pensioner in the hospital sixteen or seventeen years. When he had his first attack they called him a helpless man, they put the letter H on his arm and he was not allowed to go outside the gates for six months; then he went out, had a terrible debauch, and came back with a second attack. This man had two attacks a year for sixteen years; he had thirty-two attacks before he was seventy years of age, and his life was spent in this way: Six months in enforced sobriety, a week in excessive drinking, a week in the hospital, and so on; his first known attack happened when he was about fifty years of age.

4622. You would think that an exceptional case? I think it was a very exceptional case to see a man of seventy recovering from delirium tremens after the thirty-second attack; it struck me that he had a very good constitution.

4623. Without being sanguine of the immediate effects of such an institution you think it would be preferable to the existing system? I am sure the institution you propose would be beneficial; whether it would be so completely beneficial as, perhaps, sanguine people might expect, is another question, but what effects did come would be for the benefit of all parties.

4624. Could there not be a mode of detaining a person in this institution similar to that which is gone through in order to get a person sent to a lunatic asylum; without the commission by him of any offence, should his friends not be able, on satisfying (say) two medical men that he was ruining his system by habitual intoxication, to confine him in some place in the asylum? I have always looked on that as a thing which is absolutely necessary for the protection of these people. Take the case of a man or woman, the father or mother of a family, who for some reason or other gives way altogether and becomes a grovelling drunkard; we know in many cases it has come on acutely, and we know that, in all likelihood, if he or she were put under restraint, a very great improvement, and possibly permanent cure, might result; as the law now exists it is quite impossible to do it; you have no means whatever of doing it unless you choose to swear that such a person is insane. I think such an institution would be exceedingly beneficial, and in fact should be established without any delay.

4625. I suppose this matter has frequently attracted your attention? Times and ways without number.

4626. Has it occurred to you—I am speaking in connection with your practice—that the native-born of the Colony are given to excessive drinking;—are they what you might call intemperate? No; I should not say so, particularly; they take more than is good for them all round, as many people do in all countries; and I think, compared with people in Europe, they are on the whole, not abstemious, but fairly temperate; some do drink excessively, but as a race I should not say they are a drunken people.

4627. Are they as sober as the native-born American? I have no great acquaintance with the Americans.

4628. With regard to drunkenness amongst females, is the habit of drinking at all on the increase? I should scarcely think it is. As we get older in life we see more of it, we get more into the confidence of families, and more accustomed to observe, but there has never been a time in which there was not a certain amount of it. It is a thing which is, generally speaking, kept very quiet; I do not think it is more than it was, and certainly the diseases which result from drunkenness in females do not seem to be increasing.

4629. There has been some difference of opinion with regard to the effect of alcohol in producing lunacy;—do you think a large proportion of the permanent inmates of asylums are there because of drunkenness? I should hardly think so; there are certain forms of alcoholic drunkenness which do tend to produce what is called dementia and paralysis—notably the absinthe drunkenness that produces epilepsy, loss of sense, paralysis, and dementia. A man goes on drinking absinthe, he becomes a hopeless imbecile; but this kind of drunkenness is not known in this country.

4631. Do you think that moderate drinking does harm to the system? By moderate drinking I suppose you mean taking wine with one's meals. Provided a man takes really good liquor, as I have already defined it, I do not think it does him any harm. I do not think it does the average man any harm. I do not think it is good for women or for children. There are some men who ought never to take alcohol—the neurotic man, for instance. But the average man, with sufficient self-control, and who is fairly strong physically, is perfectly safe in taking a moderate quantity of good wine with his meals.

4632. Do you think it harms the female system? I think it is extremely dangerous. Some women can stand it, but very few. It is a most undesirable thing for women to take anything of the kind.

Dr.
Maclaurin.
12 July, 1886.

4633. I mean to take wine or beer in moderate quantities at meals;—do you think that is pernicious for the female system? I do not think it is necessary or desirable for a healthy woman. Of course there are exceptions. When a woman is under medical treatment it may be necessary; but it is a thing which ought to be done with the greatest possible caution, for it is very dangerous.

4634. Mr. Davies.] I understand from the answers you have given that you are in favour of punishing the drunkard? On the contrary, I am in favour of reclaiming the drunkard. I would punish him for offences committed while he was drunk, but the mere act of drunkenness I should consider rather as a condition from which he ought to be reclaimed, if possible.

4635. I was under a misapprehension as to your evidence on that point. I was going to ask you what you would do to those who made him drunk? What I think ought to be done to them is first of all to compel them to sell good liquor. Compel them to sell good liquor—have a strict supervision over the supply of alcohol to the community; that is the first thing to do.

4636. President.] Do you think that would stop drunkenness? It would go a long way towards it. There is nothing that produces that furious drunkenness—that absolute loss of self-control—so much as the admixture of amylic alcohol with the ordinary spirit. It produces quite a different effect to that which results from the use of alcohol not so adulterated. A man becomes a perfect madman, and the craving for a renewal of the dose comes on with greater rapidity and strength.

4637. Mr. Davies.] Are you of opinion that a large portion of the drink retailed at the various public-houses is of an inferior character? I am very much afraid it is. That is a matter, of course, about which an analyst would be much better able to speak, though I should say, from what I can see and hear, and from what I read of the imports into the country, that a very great deal of the liquor which is drunk here is simply very bad.

4638. In your professional practice do many cases come under your notice which arise from drinking bad liquor? Yes, there is no doubt there are many cases. I do not think, however, that it is so bad as when I came here first.

4640. President.] Does any method occur to you by which such bad drink as you describe could be prevented from going into consumption? That is a matter which would require a great deal of thought, and I am not prepared at once to give a practical plan. The reason why these vile spirits come into consumption is because they are cheaper than the better spirits. That is the real reason, and I should impose a strong differential duty in favour of pure wine and pure brandy. I should make them the cheapest spirits and then they would be drunk. And adulteration of wine or brandy should be punished with the utmost severity, because it is simply a mode of poisoning people. The potato spirit ought never to be allowed to be introduced at all into the country as a beverage. It is not fit for use as spirit; it is only fit to burn.

4641. For the arts? Yes, but it should never be used for human consumption.

4642. And yet it is used? Yes.

4643. We have had on this table ten different essences, 1 lb. of which is sufficient to make spirits of any variety you choose—with the same facility as that of the Wizard of the North—and to the extent of 100 gallons, and all from the same base. I presume the base will generally be the cheapest—the potato? They generally distil the potato spirit until they get it “rectified,” as they call it.

4644. You will be surprised to hear that one of these essences was for the manufacture of ginger-wine? I thought that was a drink above suspicion. The importation of this spirit ought to be prevented; or, if it is allowed to be imported, it ought to be tracked like dynamite; that is to say, the disposal of every gallon of it should be known, so as to make perfectly certain that it should not go into the mouths of the public, for it is poison.

4645. Mr. Colls.] Have many cases of lunacy come under your notice caused by the excessive use of new Colonial wine? I cannot say that I have observed that very much. I have not practised much in the wine districts.

4646. Have you ever seen the white spirit that is distilled at the vineyards? Yes; what I have seen is perfectly good. That is a spirit which is made for the purpose of fortifying the wine. You can make it very strong; but in vineyards in other countries—I do not know whether it is so here—it is sometimes cheaper to buy the potato spirit from Germany than to make the spirit from the grape.

4647. You are aware that it is generally made from the husk of the grape after the wine has been extracted? What I referred to just now was wine made from the juice of the grape; spirit made by distilling the fermented juice of the grape. But beyond that I do not know. I am not acquainted with these details.

4648. Are you under the impression that there is a quantity of alcohol in the white spirit? I have it on the very best authority that the white spirit which is obtained from the potato does contain a great proportion of amylic alcohol; that is to say, by no amount of distillation can you materially reduce the proportion of amylic alcohol which is in the potato spirit.

4649. It is as intimately bound up with it as in the case of the white spirit from the grape? I do not know.

4650. I mean the white spirit from the husk of the grape? I am not acquainted with that, but I remember seeing large quantities of the white spirit from the juice of the grape in Spain, and it is a spirit which may very fairly be used in moderation to fortify the wine, a purpose for which it is intended.

4651. It is difficult to cure the habitual drunkard with whom drunkenness has become a disease? Exceedingly difficult.

4652. Do you think that long confinement would have any beneficial effect? Long restraint would; not confinement as in a prison, but long subjection to the will of another. That is the most essential element in most of the cures. These habitual drunkards have lost all self-control.

4653. Do many young persons under the age of twenty-one years come under your notice as habitual drunkards? No; the age is generally from thirty-five or forty upwards. It gradually creeps on a man. Young people are generally strong and vigorous, and are not so likely to give way to the feelings of depression which drive men into drinking. They have excesses of course.

4654. Mr. Withers.] Have the faculty ever sought for an antidote for this habitual craving for drink. I suppose it brings about a complete transformation of the human system? It does; it acts on the whole system.

Dr.
Maclaurin.
12 July, 1886.

4655. And is not confined to any particular organ in the stomach? There are none of the vital organs it does not act upon. It acts upon the stomach, the liver, the kidneys, the brain, and the heart, or at all events the arteries, and the fatty constituents of the tissue that lies under the skin.

4656. Seeing that such a transformation of all the principal organs is produced, I suppose it would be almost impossible to find an antidote? I do not think there is any antidote. What I described just now is a picture of the system when the disease has gone to the full extent, when the man is going to die. Well, of course, you can see that he is very ill, and that is a gradual process. There are different stages in that process, and if the man were to cease using alcohol altogether, the process would often be arrested. But when the man reaches the stage I have spoken of it does not matter what he does; he may give up taking alcohol altogether but he will be in his coffin in a very short time. The process is gradual, leading in that direction.

4657. Supposing I were a patient of yours, and I came to you and said, "Doctor, I have been in the habit of taking wine and spirits all my life, and I am afraid it is possible that I may give way to drink"—could you suggest anything at that stage? The only thing to do I suppose would be to leave it alone—the best thing is to leave it alone.

4659. Sometimes we take a dislike to a thing and are never able to touch it. For instance, a long time ago, through smelling a bad egg, I conceived a strong objection to eggs for many years;—don't you think that something could be introduced into the liquor which, taken voluntarily, would produce nausea and a repugnance to drink? That has been tried over and over again; tartar emetic has been given often, but without any beneficial result.

4660. It has been reported to me by gentlemen who are able to judge, and who move in certain circles that intemperance is on the increase amongst young ladies who are supposed to be well brought up, on account of their getting choice wines and spirits at public and other entertainments, such as the Mayor's ball. This is a class who perhaps has not been much in our minds in dealing with this question of excessive drinking;—do you think these young ladies are being led into excessive drinking and into becoming drunkards, as many persons in high society have become. Do you think that the present custom of society which facilitates the drinking of high-class wines at public entertainments is having a bad effect;—has it come under your notice? I do not think there is much drunkenness among young ladies. One does from time to time meet with very exceptional and very sad cases, but as a rule I do not think there is anything of that sort—that drunkenness prevails among that class to any great extent. I am not much in the habit of going to balls and public entertainments of that kind, but as far as my observation goes, I think young ladies are generally very abstemious.

4661. You think that class of drunkenness is not on the increase? I do not think it is. On the whole I think the better class of society are more sober than they used to be. I think so distinctly. People used to drink much more wine at dinner than they do now.

4662. Mr. Roseby.] Did I understand you to say that alcohol is a food that is easily digested? I said so—in moderation.

4663. Has it not a tendency to arrest digestion? I said that up to a certain point alcohol acts as a food, inasmuch as it provides the material required for combustion—for keeping up the animal heat of the body; and that it afforded a convenient way of doing this because it was easily digested; perhaps if I had said it was easily absorbed it would have been more accurately intelligible. There is no doubt whatever that alcohol, as food of that kind, is very easily digested.

4664. There is no fibre-making or muscle-making material in it, is there? I distinctly said so—that it is a food which acts the part of providing combustible material for the body.

4665. Could not the hydrocarbon necessary for the sustenance of life be obtained in a very much better form by taking other material into the stomach? I understood you to say it was a very dangerous food; it has that element at all events? I say it is a dangerous food because there is a tendency to excess—the risk of excess; but taken properly it is a very useful food—taken properly and in proper cases—and the experience of many generations of the human race is with me in this opinion. Take for instance another food which contains hydrocarbon, and which would provide this material in a concentrated shape—cod-liver oil; you could take a sufficient quantity of cod-liver oil to produce the same effect as the limited quantity of alcohol I mentioned; but the cod-liver oil would not be nearly as easily digested; you would probably feel sick and unable to eat anything; whereas if you took a little alcohol your appetite would probably be improved.

4666. You say that if alcohol is put into the stomach with food it renders the latter easy of digestion; but do you not know that when anything is put into spirit the tendency is to preserve it? But you must not allow yourself to be carried away altogether by a priori notions. You see the human body is not a glass bottle. If you wished to preserve anything in a glass bottle you would pour in about a pint of spirit and then put the specimen in; but if you were to put a pint of spirit in your stomach you would probably be a specimen yourself very soon.

4667. Mr. Hutchison.] A much smaller quantity than a pint is sufficient to preserve a specimen? I will explain what I mean: When alcohol is taken in a proper form it ought to be so diluted as not to produce that caustic action on the stomach which it might if taken very strong. If you take alcohol of proper quality, properly diluted, and not in too great a quantity, it is, I believe, very beneficial to many people; but if you take it of inferior quality, in excessive quantities and too strong, it is certainly injurious. Those three elements account for its injuriousness—the lack of dilution, the excess of quantity, and the badness of quality.

4668. Mr. Roseby.] I suppose you know that high medical authorities have given a very opposite view to that which you have now presented? I do not think so. There is no doubt whatever that there are differences of opinion as to the value of alcohol. I do not say that I consider alcohol as an indispensable food, but I do say this, that alcohol, within certain limits—that is to say, being of a proper quality, properly diluted, and taken in proper quantities—is a safe and beneficial food for many people.

4669. You say that the adult man has a natural tendency to take alcohol? So he has. Can you mention any nation in the world where the adult man does not take alcohol?

4670. Mr. Hutchison.] The Chinese do not take it, nor the Indians, nor the Persians? The Arabs do not usually take it because their religion forbids them to do so; but I have travelled among them and I know that they are very ready to take it when they can get a chance. 4671.

4671. My experience is quite contrary to that, and I have travelled with them. But is it a fact that in any of the books included in your curriculum of study as a medical student you were taught that alcohol is a food? Yes, I can show it to you in dozens and dozens of places. I will tell you who says so: Bantz, who wrote a very elaborate article on the subject the other day. In one of the latest books out he distinctly lays it down as a fact. Of course it is not like a joint of beef, but it must be considered as to a certain extent an article of food, inasmuch as it assists in a certain process which goes on in the human body. In the same way water is an article of food.

Dr.
Maclaurin.

4672. I have read Thompson, Gull, Richardson, Carpenter, and ever so many others, and they all declare that the system cannot and does not use alcohol? We must acknowledge that doctors differ. I could give you a string of authorities who, on the other hand, declare that the system can and does use alcohol up to a certain point, and that in consequence of the use of that alcohol other materials in the body are set free.

4673. The authorities I have mentioned further declare that alcohol does not burn or increase the heat, but positively lowers the heat? In certain conditions the ingestion of alcohol lowers the temperature of the body for a short time. But that is quite a different thing. The question is not whether, for a very short time after the ingestion of a considerable dose of alcohol, the temperature of the body is temporarily diminished, but whether the alcohol which goes into the body is decomposed in part before it goes away; and there is no doubt that it is in part decomposed before it goes away, and that this decomposition is associated with the development of heat—it must be.

4674. I think you will say this: That through the pores of the skin, and in the urine discharges, a larger quantity of alcohol goes out of the body as it went into it than is the case with any other substance taken into the system? That is a general statement, and I must be cautious before answering. It depends to a great extent upon the amount of alcohol you take.

FRIDAY, 16 JULY, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,	A. HUTCHISON, Esq.,
J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.,	T. COLLS, Esq., J.P.,
G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Dr. Maclaurin further examined:—

4675. President.] I wish to ask you a question with reference to your last evidence as to alcohol being a food. Will you explain to the Commission what you mean when you say food. You no doubt attach some sense to the word which, perhaps, we do not? By food I imply everything which being taken into the system either goes to the building up of the system or to assist the system in the discharge of its different functions. That is not a very good definition—in fact it is not easy to give a definition.

Dr.
Maclaurin.
16 July, 1886.

4676. I imagine that it is a voxata questio among physiologists? It is more a question of words than anything else.

4677. Do you consider that it makes tissue? No; but I believe that within certain limits it takes the part of other substances in the heat-forming power of the body.

4678. Suppose it to be true, as I understand it is, that the process of combustion throws off water and carbonic acid, that is waste of the system? Practically with other things.

4679. And alcohol, inasmuch as it contains carbon to a large extent, gives to the system which has been suffering waste one of its necessary constituents? Precisely so in this way: Suppose, for example, a person takes into the system a sufficient quantity of the ordinary carbonaceous foods to maintain the waste of the body to maintain the heat-giving power of the body without any alcohol at all, that the amount of carbonaceous food which he takes is just sufficient to keep the body going, then if he takes a little alcohol within certain limits, that alcohol has the power of taking the place of part of the carbonaceous food that otherwise he would have taken, so that he can do with a smaller quantity of carbonaceous elements.

4680. Am I right in saying that what we popularly call medicine may sometimes in reality be food? There are certain medicines which in reality are foods.

4681. For example: We often hear of persons being kept alive by small doses of brandy. Now that is given under the advice of a medical man. Is that given as a medicine or as a food? I believe that it is given more as a food than as a medicine in those cases.

4682. Is it given in fever cases as a food by medical men? I believe that it acts more as a food than as a medicine in fever cases, but it is very difficult to separate the two actions, because while alcohol acts somewhat like food in diminishing the waste of the body—that is in the character of a food—it also acts to a certain extent as a medicine in stimulating the action of the heart. The action is complex, but it is impossible, as far as I can see, to distinguish the action of alcohol within certain limits from the action of food. At the same time it does not go to build up muscular tissue; there is no doubt about that.

4683. Other things, such as albumens and fats, are wanted for that? You want nitrogenous elements.

4684. And there are none in alcohol? None.

4685. Mr. Roseby.] Do you consider alcohol at all necessary for a person in health? Do you think that a man can maintain continuous vigorous health without the use of alcohol? I believe that most men could maintain continuous vigorous health without the use of alcohol.

4687. If people were to judge by their feelings would that not be deceptive? You understand the physiological effect of alcohol when taken into the system, and can you say whether or not alcohol might have an injurious effect, although there might be nothing in the person's feelings to indicate it. There is a large portion of our community who believe that alcohol in ever so small quantities is injurious—deleterious? I do not agree with that, because I have known repeated instances where persons of exceedingly temperate habits have made the experiment on themselves of discontinuing the use of alcohol for several months, and in many of these cases I have noticed that the people felt better and were able to do more work when they returned to the very moderate use of alcohol.

4688. You probably know that persons who have been accustomed to the immoderate use of alcohol—who have really been soaked in it—are sent to gaol in a very emaciated condition. While there they are not allowed to taste alcoholic drinks except in extreme cases where the doctor orders it; and after they have been kept from it for a few months they come out quite new men and women, from a physical point of view. Would that not indicate that although these people had been accustomed to the use of alcohol for years the abstinence from it has had a very beneficial tendency? You are speaking of cases in which the use of alcohol has been excessive. The question, as far as I understood it, is this: Whether we are justified in maintaining that the moderate use of alcohol is injurious to any person. Taking the average man, I have never seen any evidence which could prove that to me. I believe that with the average grown-up man, who lives as we live, who has to work pretty hard, and has many cares and anxieties, the very moderate use of alcohol is beneficial rather than otherwise. I have never seen any proof that it was injurious to a healthy man who leads the kind of life that most of us lead.
4689. I understood you to say last week that in your opinion alcohol could only be taken safely in the form of wine; did you not say that beer was injurious? I was speaking mostly with reference to wines and spirits. I say that the most absolutely safe way of taking alcohol is when we can be perfectly certain that we are taking the pure fermented juice of the grape, or spirit properly distilled from the pure juice of the grape. There are certain forms of beer which are also very wholesome, I think, if taken in great moderation.
4690. Mr. Roseby.] You are aware that a large quantity of Colonial beer is consumed in this country. From your knowledge of the effects of Colonial beer, acquired during your extensive practice, do you think it is injurious to those who take it? I think it is.
4691. A very popular spirit now used by people in social life is whiskey. Do you think that whiskey, a large proportion of which is made in the way described when you were here last, has a deleterious effect upon those who take it? I think that old whiskey made from malt approaches most nearly to the true wine spirit in its wholesomeness; but I am informed and believe that a great deal of the spirit which is introduced into this country under the name of whiskey, brandy, and so forth, is not in reality what it pretends to be, but that it is a potato spirit or some other kind of spirit modified so as to assume the character of whiskey or brandy—in fact that a great deal of adulteration takes place before it comes to this country. Spirit of that sort I look upon as being exceedingly injurious; nothing could be worse.
4692. Referring to what the President just said with reference to alcohol as a food, I notice on the table here an article on The Physiology of Digestion. It says, "Digestion may be defined as an assemblage of processes mechanical and chemical whereby the constituents of food are rendered soluble and converted into the substances which are capable of being absorbed and afterwards assimilated." Do you think that is a correct definition of the process of digestion? No, that is not an exact definition; because water would be excluded from that, and I suppose everybody will admit that water is a food. You see that presumes that all articles of food are first of all insoluble or not in a state of solution. Well water would not come under that definition. There would be no digestion of water; water would be indigestible if that definition were accurate. It is exceedingly difficult to give a definition; in fact it is hardly possible.
4693. The definition I have read can be elaborated. It seemed to me to give in a condensed form a very fair idea of the process of digestion? It is very fair so far as it goes, but it is not a definition, because a definition ought to be absolutely exact—ought to leave out nothing which is required and include nothing which is not required.
4694. We understand food to be something that is absorbed and afterwards assimilated; alcohol does not contain elements that have that effect? I do not admit your premise. It is not necessarily something which should be assimilated. Food may be something which is absorbed, but which, although not assimilated—that is to say, if you mean by assimilation converted into tissue which lasts for some time—although not assimilated it may be decomposed and assist in the furtherance of the functions of the body. For instance, tea and coffee, I suppose, are articles of food, although I am not aware that anyone has ever imagined that the active principle of tea or coffee goes to build up the structure of the body. They act in a different way; they assist the functions of the body without necessarily being precipitated, so as to increase or support the weight of the body.
4695. Did I understand you to say that you considered that a man could do with less food—less muscle and fibre building material—with the use of alcohol than he could without its use? No, I did not say that. I said that supposing a man carried on the functions of his body with the consumption, among other things, of a certain proportion of carbonaceous food but without any alcohol at all, then if he took a small quantity of alcohol within very strict limits of moderation, part of that carbonaceous food would not be required for the heat-producing functions of the body, and therefore could either be stored up in the shape of fat under the skin, or the man might do without it. This is not an absolutely exclusive statement with respect to a particular human being; it is merely a general opinion with respect to the average man.
4696. Mr. Hutchison.] Then I understand you to say that alcohol really gives heat? That is what is generally believed.
4697. I could name a large number of eminent men who declare that alcohol lowers the temperature of the body? That is a very well known fact. If a person takes in a certain quantity of alcohol the temperature of the body may be found to be slightly lowered for a short time afterwards. But that is a very different thing from part of the alcohol being afterwards decomposed in the body, and of course in the process of decomposition giving off heat. These are two distinct effects which are not inconsistent with each other.
4698. Could you give us an explanation of how alcohol warms the body—I have had an explanation offered to me of how it cools the body. What is its action on the body whereby heat is created? I do not pretend to be a chemist, and it would be very unwise for me to offer anything as an authoritative explanation of a chemical process. If alcohol is decomposed within the body that decomposition and the oxidation of the carbon that is in the alcohol would, I imagine, as in every other case, be attended with the development of heat. But I cannot speak authoritatively because I am not a chemist. I merely state the two effects, so far as I understand them, which are not inconsistent with each other, namely, that frequently it is observed that the taking in of a small quantity of alcohol produces a temporary lowering of the temperature of the body. This does not last long, and is not inconsistent with the possibility or probability that a part of the alcohol may afterwards be decomposed within the system, and in the process of decomposition and the oxidation of carbon develop a certain amount of heat.
4699. You say "may"—you do not assert it? I say it is not inconsistent. I am showing now that the two things are not inconsistent with each other.

Dr.
Maclaurin.

4700. Would there be any inconsistency in this description of the process—I am only giving it as I read it; the blood taking possession of the alcohol, disliking it as an enemy, proceeds at a rapid rate to get rid of it, throwing it out of the pores of the skin, and in every way trying to banish it. A certain amount of surplus heat is thus created by the agitation of the heart caused by this extra labour given to the blood, but that heat is false, and has really been a stirring up of heat from the centre to the circumference, and therefore a cooling process. Is there anything inconsistent in that? I do not think there can be any proof of a statement of that kind. I do not believe it is quite true.

4701. Dr. Richardson describes it in that fashion? It is a theory I should have great hesitation in accepting, for after all one very important way in which alcohol if taken in excess is got rid of from the body, is by means of the kidneys and the lungs. Well, both of these are internal organs, and any extra development of heat in those organs would of course increase the heat of the whole body. I do not say that the temperature of the body is increased by taking alcohol. I maintain that part of the alcohol which is taken is decomposed in the body if it is not an excessive quantity, and that it thereby assists in producing heat. The temperature of a healthy body is very uniform. If alcohol increased the heat of the body it would produce a certain amount of fever.

4702. Is there any given quantity of alcohol that is sufficient for a healthy man? Those who have investigated the matter say that about 2 oz. in twenty-four hours is the amount.

4703. Does alcohol increase the action of the heart? In some cases no doubt stimulants render the action of the heart stronger.

4704. Then too much would overstimulate the action of the heart? On the other hand too much might act as a depressing poison. So much depends upon the way in which you take it. If a man drank off a tumblerful of raw whiskey, a most dangerous thing, it might kill him. Many a one has been killed in that way. That would not stimulate the action of the heart; it would depress it. It would cause a great shock to the system.

4705. I have been given to understand that a true stimulant is something that the body has taken and used up, and that it must have been used up before stimulation can ensue;—is that the case? I do not think so. I think that is a mistaken view of the action of stimulants. That would not explain one of the most powerful of stimulants, carbonate of ammonia.

4706. You said before that strong liquor was a useful stimulant to a jaded man? I used the word in a popular way. If you give a jaded man a stimulant it may sustain him. Many a jaded man is unable to sleep unless he takes a little stimulant. I am speaking of a man with a large amount of harassing work and who is in a nervous and exhausted condition.

4707. Would it be well for a jaded man to take stimulants and then go and work on it? It depends entirely on his position. If he has work that he is obliged to do I think he does much better to take a little stimulant than to continue working in that jaded condition without anything to sustain him.

4708. Would it not be better for him to have a real rest? Of course, but I am speaking of the case of a man who cannot take rest on account of some urgent temporary pressure.

4709. Is it wise for men when they are jaded to stimulate themselves to fresh efforts by the use of stimulants? Certainly not.

4710. Seeing the enormous evils arising from drink, is it not incumbent on every one to be very careful as to how they speak about and use such things? I think we cannot be too careful in the use of anything containing alcohol. But I think that if we could ensure that none but the purest forms of alcohol should be used there would be very much less harm done.

4711. It seems that it creates an appetite for itself? The impure forms of alcohol do much more harm than the pure forms, and they are much more likely to produce that horrible craving.

4712. How do you think it is created? It is not very easy to explain. The best thing is to take it as an ultimate fact. We cannot explain why a man feels hungry or thirsty. We know that when we are hungry we want food, and we know that when we are thirsty we want water.

4713. Do you think that the appetite for drink is in any way hereditary? I am sure it is. That is to say, an appetite for drink is one phase of an hereditary nervous constitution, which may show itself in some members of a family by crime, in some by insanity, in some by a desire for drink.

4714. But you believe that a man can acquire an appetite for drink? Yes.

4715. And you think that is the more common? I think it is. The appetite for strong liquors is wonderfully widespread. You will find scarcely a savage nation where it does not exist. If you deprive men of it for a while they will return to it on the first opportunity.

4716. Do you think that a man may injure himself permanently by what is called moderate drinking? There is no doubt that a man may permanently injure his health without getting into that state in which he would be said to be drunk.

4717. Mr. Roseby] Do you know that the ordinary moderate use of strong drink is a cause of disease? I do not think that is proved, so long as the use is moderate.

4718. I ask whether the use of the liquors ordinarily sold in our public-houses is not a prolific source of disease? I do not know that the moderate use of good liquor can be a prolific source of disease. In the cases in which I have been able to trace drink as being the cause of disease an examination of the previous conduct of the persons has shown that they had not been moderate in their drinking. They were persons who drank what most people would allow to be a great deal too much.

MONDAY, 12 JULY, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,	J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.,
T. COLLS, Esq., J.P.,	A. HUTCHISON, Esq.,
G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.,	J. DAVIES, Esq., C.M.G., J.P., M.P.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

The Hon. C. K. Mackellar, M.B.C.M., M.L.C., called in, sworn, and examined:—

- The Hon. C. K. Mackellar, M.B.C.M., M.L.C., called in, sworn, and examined:—
4719. President.] What is your name? Charles Kinnaird Mackellar.
4720. You were for some time President of the Board of Health and Medical Adviser to the Government? I was.
4722. Is it your opinion that alcohol is a food? To a certain extent it is—when administered in disease.
4723. But I mean in a healthy system. Does it partake of the nature of a food when taken by a healthy adult. Do you class it as a food? No; I question very much whether it could be rightly denominated a food in that sense.
4724. Alcohol, we are told, provides constituents that are very readily taken up in the system, repairs the waste, permits the combustion to go on, in fact gives fuel to it as hydrocarbon; do you consider that in that light it is not a food? I question very much whether when taken by an ordinary healthy man it can be regarded in any measure, appreciably at any rate, as a food.
4725. You consider, I presume, that a food is something which builds up the system, and puts on fibre and tissue? Precisely.
4726. And that inasmuch as it does not do that it is not a food? No; I think that in cases of febrile disease it is not simply a stimulant but that it has another action; it supplies material for the rapid combustion that goes on in the wasting of febrile diseases, and therefore it cannot be regarded simply as a stimulant when administered in those diseases.
4727. But as a medicine you think the case is otherwise, perhaps? I think it is an admirable medicine in febrile diseases, because it partakes, as I said before, somewhat of the nature of a food as well.
4728. Do you consider that it aids or impairs digestion? I would answer that question in this way:—I think it is useful in those cases of disease in which digestion is impaired, or, perhaps, for any food less easily assimilated than alcohol, totally destroyed. I think in those cases it is easily digested, and may be said to aid digestion to a certain extent. In the case of an ordinary healthy man, also, if taken in very small quantities, it may at times slightly aid digestion, but taken in larger quantities it certainly has no such effect.
4729. Have you noticed any increase in intemperance during the time you have been in practice; I do not mean as between now and the time when you began practice, but any continuous increase of intemperance, in any classes of the community? I cannot say that I have.
4730. Have you noticed any increase of intemperance amongst the females, or amongst young people of the other sex? No; I do not believe that there is any increase of intemperance amongst females, although intemperance among females is quite common.
4731. Do you mean among the artizan and working classes, or among all classes? I mean among all classes.
4732. Then it is your opinion that the habit of intemperance is common among all classes of females? I wish it to be understood that when I say intemperance is quite common among females I do not mean that intemperance is general among females by any means; but it is a thing that is frequently observed.
4733. Do you mean by intemperance, drunkenness? Not absolute drunkenness, but a too liberal use of alcoholic stimulants.
4734. Which may or may not be accompanied with drunkenness? Yes.
4735. Has your attention ever been drawn to the effect of our present method of punishing drunkenness; that is by fine or imprisonment? Yes.
4736. It is found that persons so fined or imprisoned come back again in a very short time, and the proceedings are repeated. Some individuals are punished as many as fifty or sixty times in the year. What is your opinion of punishment of that nature? I think that the punishment meted out to drunkards is not calculated to produce any beneficial effect whatever. It is not in the slightest degree deterrent.
4737. Would you treat the drunkard for punishment, or would you treat him for reclamation? I would treat him for reclamation.
4738. Then in that case do you think the State should take him in charge? I think so. I think the State should take him in charge, and that there should be an institution into which he should be compelled to go, on proof being given that his incarceration is necessary—that is to say, proof of habitual drunkenness.
4739. I presume then that you would not have him brought up before a Magistrate as having committed a crime? No.
4740. That you would have him introduced into an asylum in the same way as a lunatic is? Precisely.
4741. Would you have hopes of reclaiming a man provided he was not past the prime of life. Would you have hopes of reclaiming men under 50? Yes, a large number.
4742. Do you think that apart from the benefit to the individual it would be in the end cheaper for the State? I am perfectly convinced it would.
4743. There are as you know thousands of apprehensions for drunkenness every year. Most of these persons go sometimes to prison, sometimes to the reception-house, and sometimes to the lunatic asylum, and they keep up this circuit all the year round, going more or less frequently to these places. This necessitates the maintenance of a large number of policemen, the appointment of additional Magistrates, and provision for these drunkards in the gaols and asylums, and with no other result than putting the man into a sort of treadmill and bringing him back again to the same place over and over again without any beneficial alteration in him whatever? I am familiar with that fact.
4744. Have you been in any inebriate asylums? No.

4745. Would you also have a voluntary system in connection with these asylums so that persons could go in when they felt the craving for drink coming upon them? Yes, I think that would be desirable. My experience leads me to know that many persons would avail themselves of such an institution if they could do so in a voluntary way.

4746. Do you think that drunkenness leads to much lunacy? I do not think so.

4747. I do not mean delirium tremens, but permanent dementia? I do not think it leads to lunacy to anything like an appreciable extent.

4748. It does in many cases I apprehend affect the tissue of the brain; that is to say, it has a tendency to thicken the covering sac of the brain? That is not very clearly established. I do not regard drunkenness as by any means a potent cause of lunacy. But I think that large numbers of people become drunkards at the onset of insanity; that is to say, drunkenness is one of the very early symptoms of insanity, precisely as other excesses are frequently early symptoms observed before the question of insanity arises.

4749. In that case it would be simply symptomatic? Yes, and indicative of an excited state of the nervous system. I am perfectly convinced that the commonly accepted idea that drunkenness is a cause of insanity is quite fallacious, that is the idea that it is a potent cause of insanity.

4750. Do you think that the liquors sold in this country are remarkable for their impurity and noxious qualities, in consequence of their containing fusel oils? I think they are remarkable for the fact that they contain the various fusel oils in large quantities.

4751. Do you think that the drinking of liquor containing fusel oil has any deleterious results? I have no doubt that the impure alcohols, that is to say, the fusel oils contained in the pure alcohol, are very deleterious, and the chief causes of the disease.

4752. Of course pure alcohol itself will promote intoxication? Yes, but it is not so deleterious.

4753. Do you think that the fusel oil tends to intensify the craving for drink? It may; but I cannot say from my own observation that such is the case.

4754. However, you are of opinion that the impure spirit sold here is very pernicious? Very pernicious. It is manufactured in a coarse way, the basis of most of the spirit used here being some sort of grain which is acted upon by dilute sulphuric acid.

4755. Do you think that spirit is injurious though it may not contain fusel oil, but is crude and young? I have no doubt that it is.

4756. It may or may not be a grain spirit;—do you think that brandy when it is young is pernicious? I cannot say of my own knowledge that it is; I think that pure brandy is very much less likely to be injurious than any kind of grain spirit, that is if it were possible to get pure brandy. I have no doubt that most of the brandy sold here is a grain spirit.

4757. Do you think that Colonial beer is injurious? I think it is.

4758. Owing to what ingredients? That I could not say, but the drinking of Colonial beer is associated with a great deal that is vile and worthless in the community.

4759. In the course of your practice have you found people suffering from drunkenness attributable to Colonial beer? Yes, frequently.

4760. Is there as great a craving for Colonial beer as there is for alcoholic spirits? I think there is quite as great a craving.

4761. Perhaps amongst a different class in the community? Yes, an entirely different class.

4762. The artizan class? Yes.

4763. Mr. Withers.] Have the Medical Faculty ever considered whether an antidote could be found to the craving for drink? I have no idea on what lines you could go to find an antidote.

4764. Is there no drug or compound which could be put into a drunkard's liquor so as to create in him an aversion to it? I think the moral treatment is more likely to be followed by good results. I think the idea of finding an antidote is absurd, and it emanates from those who have certain nostrums to sell which they call antidotes. A person who is an habitual drunkard may be restrained by proper influences and treatment, but not by the administration of any drug.

4765. We have heard of persons conceiving an unconquerable aversion to certain kinds of food because of something unpleasant associated with it at one time, as for instance, eating a bad egg or tainted fish,—might not some preparation be made which, if given with intoxicating liquor, would produce a similar aversion? I think that to search for anything of the kind would be like the search for the philosopher's stone, or the attempt to discover perpetual motion. Such a potent influence for good has been exerted in those institutions established in other countries, and which might also be established here; that I think is the proper line to go upon. It should be possible to place an habitual drunkard in an institution where he would be placed under strict discipline and under the control of those who understood what was best for him. It might be necessary that he should have treatment in the shape of medicine, but that would not be by any means essential in all cases.

4766. You are in favour of establishing some kind of reformatory in which drunkards could be treated and made to work for the benefit of their wives and families? I would not call such an institution a reformatory, but I would call it an hospital. I should object even to its being called an asylum, as I object to the term "lunatic asylum." If we are right in regarding lunacy as a form of disease we have no right to call the institution in which lunatics are confined an asylum. We do not wish them to be stowed away in an asylum, but that they should be placed in an institution where they can receive treatment that will contribute towards their recovery; and I would have drunkards treated in precisely the same way.

4767. Do you not think that the present practice of punishing drunkards by fining them or sending them to prison is only a further infliction upon their unfortunate wives and families? I have no doubt that the custom of sending those who are apprehended for drunkenness to associate with persons who are actually criminal is very harmful to the unfortunate drunkards themselves, while it cannot do any good to those with whom they are associated.

4768. I have heard it stated by persons able to form an opinion from their own observation, that excessive drinking is becoming rather common among young ladies in the upper and middle classes, owing to the facilities for obtaining choice wine and other kinds of intoxicants at balls and other entertainments;—do you think, from your own professional experience, that such is the case? I do not think so. Habits of immoderate drinking are not uncommon among the classes of society to which you allude, and I think that they may be attributable to the practice adopted by mothers, not only among those classes but among all classes, of giving young girls some kind of alcoholic stimulant to relieve the pain incident to the menstrual menstrual periods. That is a very common practice. It no doubt does a great deal of good at times, but as the periods of distress recur at regular intervals, so does the taking of alcoholic stimulants, and thus a habit may be created, because a stimulant which may be absolutely abhorrent when taken in the first instance becomes by no means unpleasant after a time. Furthermore, I have no doubt that habits of intemperance have been generated by the taking of stimulants ordered by physicians. I have heard of the case of a lady who was in a very low state in which the administration of alcoholic stimulant was necessary, and her doctor ordered her to take a certain quantity at night, before going to bed. She got well, and the doctor ceased his attendance, but meeting her three or four years afterwards, she told him that she still continued to take his medicine.

4769. Was there any evidence of its having affected her? Oh, no.

4770. Mr. Roseby.] Do you think that the drunkenness here is greater than in other countries you may have visited? I do not think it is.

4771. You know that there is a large amount of intemperance in the community? Yes.

4772. Do you think that it is induced by the numerous facilities afforded for obtaining drink? I have no doubt that it is—among the poorer classes especially.

4773. Of course you believe that we have too many public-houses? I am sure of that.

4774. I understood you to say that you did not regard alcohol as food to a person in health, although you said that it was beneficial in certain cases of disease? It may seem difficult to reconcile the two statements that alcohol is a food in sickness and not in health, but nevertheless such is my opinion. My observation has not led me to know that alcohol is food to a person in health, though it may be so; but in febrile diseases, such as typhoid, I have no doubt whatever that it acts as food as well as a stimulant.

4775. President.] Will you define what you mean by "food"? Something which goes to build up the tissues of the body. In the course of acute febrile diseases there is a great waste of tissue going on in consequence of the extraordinary combustion generated by the fever, and alcohol acts as a food in this way, that it supplies the material for this active combustion; that is to say, the waste of tissue does not go on to anything like the same extent when alcohol is administered as it does when alcohol is not administered. In the present state of our knowledge of medicine I think that ninety-nine out of 100 medical men would recommend the use of alcohol—of course under their own directions—in most acute febrile diseases of the typhoid type.

4776. Is it not necessary, when alcohol is ordered medicinally, that it should be pure? It is very desirable.

4777. Are you aware that there is very little genuine brandy obtainable? I am aware of that.

4778. And that a large quantity of the port wine sold, and which is frequently ordered for invalids, is not what it purports to be? Yes, I am quite aware of that.

4779. Do you not think that a great amount of harm is done to people in a delicate state of health through their not being able to obtain alcoholic stimulants in a form in which they might be comparatively harmless? There cannot be a doubt that it is extremely desirable, if it is possible, to obtain alcohol with little or no fusel oil which is the deleterious quality existent in alcohol.

4780. Are you aware that in some countries there are medical institutions which are conducted on absolutely temperance principles? Yes.

4781. Are they fairly successful in the treatment of disease? It is very difficult to compare various modes of treatment. I know that I have had numberless cases in which alcohol has been administered, and which, so far as my judgment goes, would certainly have terminated fatally if alcohol had not been administered. If the patients in those cases had been treated in the hospitals to which you refer they would so far as my lights enable me to judge, have died, no matter what the treatment might have been if no alcoholic stimulant had been administered.

4782. Is there any other agent amongst us which is so fruitful a cause of disease as alcohol? None with which I am familiar.

4783. It is the root of a large number of diseases? Of an enormous number.

4784. Do you not think that some stringent measures should be taken to prevent the importation of vile spirit into the country. For instance, we have had produced before us a number of essences, 1 lb. of which it was said could be made into 100 gallons of brandy, rum, and so on. Do you not think that the importation of such essences, composed as they are of all kinds of deleterious compounds, should be prevented? I am not aware that they are composed of deleterious compounds.

4785. President.] This is the list of them according to the analysis:—Ethylic alcohol, amylic alcohol, amylic acetate, butylic acetate, and iso-butylic ether? All those are very deleterious. Ethylic alcohol is the pure alcohol; propylic, butylic, and amylic alcohols are deleterious; they are contained to a greater or less extent in the spirits manufactured in the way to which I have referred, namely, with sulphuric acid and potatoes, and the glucose made from the potatoes which is said to be the most deleterious of all; that is to say, it contains more of these bad spirits than any other similar article.

4786. Mr. Roseby.] Do you not think that a law ought to be passed to compel the vendors of drink to supply the ordinary citizen who does not know the elements of what he drinks with the article for which he asks and pays? There can be no doubt that if he sells an adulterated article, as he certainly does, he should be amenable to the law.

4787. President.] But these deleterious elements are not added to something which is pure, as in adulteration? I think the law ought to be so framed as to reach these deleterious liquors.

4788. Mr. Roseby.] You do not think that a large amount of lunacy is caused by intemperance? I think very little.

4789. I presume you refer to permanent lunacy? Yes.

4790. I suppose you know that those who are temporarily treated in the Reception-house are demented almost solely by drink? They are suffering from delirium tremens.

4791. Not only that but also other forms of dementia. Are you aware that a large proportion of those who are admitted there owe their demented condition to intemperance? I have no doubt that a large number of the persons treated there are suffering from the effects of alcoholism.

4793. Mr. Hutchison.] If I understood you aright you rather think that incipient drunkenness is incipient insanity? Not at all; I did not wish you to gather any such idea. I said that many persons who were becoming insane exhibited a tendency to drunkenness as one of the early symptoms of insanity—of mental disturbance.

The Hon. C.
K. Mackellar,
M.B.C.M.,
M.L.C.

4794. Do you think that drink is a factor in hereditary insanity? I may answer that in this way:—In the first place I do not believe that drunkenness is hereditary. If a child of the vilest drunken parents be taken from his immoral surroundings and placed in a respectable and sober family he will probably grow up as virtuous and as free from drunkenness as any member of that family, and on the other hand take a child of the most sober and virtuous parents and place him in a haunt of drunkenness and he will probably grow up as drunken and worthless as any of his associates.

4795. President.] You think then that drunkenness depends on one's environments? Almost entirely.

4798. Several suggestions have been made as to the possibility of curing drunkenness by some nostrum. Are you aware of a practice, said to prevail in Russia, according to which a drunkard is put into prison and everything eaten by him is saturated with alcohol so that he acquires a horrible distaste for it? I have not heard of such a practice, and I question its existence. The Russians are essentially a drunken people and if such a practice as you speak of existed I do not think it can have been followed by any beneficial results.

4799. You spoke of alcohol being beneficial in cases of fever. I suppose the action is like that of the meeting of two poisons in the system? No; the alcohol goes to supply the waste of tissue caused by the fever, forming a sort of fuel for the combustion.

4800. President.] What I understand you to mean is that the fever works upon the alcohol in the manner in which it would otherwise work upon the tissues? Exactly; that the waste would be a great deal more. It is stated in medical works of the highest authority, though I cannot give it as my own experience, that the effect of alcohol is to lower a high temperature in fevers.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

The Right Reverend Alfred Barry, D.D., Anglican Bishop of Sydney, called in, sworn, and examined:—

4801. President.] During the time that you have been in the colony you must have seen a great deal of the habits of the community. Do you think from your observation that the first allegation contained in our Commission, viz., that there is excessive use of drink, is sustained? I should think that on that point there can be little doubt, either from our own observation, or from the study of the statistics which are presented to us from time to time.

The Right
Rev. A. Barry,

19 July, 1886.

4802. That is your opinion when considering the consumption of drink in other countries—for example, in England, which you must know very well? So far as I understand, the consumption per head here is considerably in excess, in point of money value, of the consumption in England. I have not yet so studied the relative standard of prices, as to be able to say whether that means relative excess of consumption in point of quantity. But I do not think that a comparison of the relative propensity for intoxicating liquor in the two countries is essential; for I feel sure that absolutely we drink here much more than we can afford to drink; much more than is good for us either morally or physically. Perhaps I may be allowed, before entering on any other question, to express my regret that from shortness of notice, and want of thorough acquaintance with previous legislation, I am less prepared to answer than I should have desired to be. Still I am at the service of the Commission, and if at any later period they should think fit to summon me again I shall be only too glad to attend to give any further information.

4804. But there is a deterioration of public morality which is not evidenced by criminal statistics; it is rather in that respect that we should like to have your opinion; you may not have noticed yourself much of the worst forms in which the morale of the community is deteriorated, but through your clergy you must have had abundant opportunity to become aware of the effects of drink, apart from crime? I take the statistics of crime simply as an extreme evidence of the general condition of public morality, and it was in that view that I mentioned them. Of course it must stand to reason that, if there is an excessive use of intoxicating drinks, it tends to strengthen appetite by, in the first place, self-indulgence, and, in the next place, to enfeeble the proper supremacy of the moral element in men's nature—it makes them, to use a common phrase, no longer masters of themselves. Therefore, it seems almost unnecessary to inquire whether it injures public morality.

The Right
Rev. A. Barry,

19 July, 1886.

4805. That may be taken for granted, you think? Certainly. I may perhaps be allowed to state one thing which has come under my observation. I think that intemperance in drink shows itself here in classes of somewhat superior social standing as compared with the old country. I have been told—I speak at second-hand—that intemperance among the working classes is certainly not greater here, possibly it is less, than in England. But the intemperance in classes supposed to be socially above the working classes has certainly struck me very forcibly. I have noticed, for instance, on board of steamers excessive drinking in bars by men, whose education and standing are such that they ought to know better. I have walked down George-street in the afternoon, and I have seen men dressed in the garb of gentlemen reeling along the pavement—a sight which I never saw in Regent-street or Oxford-street at home. Therefore I am inclined to think, as far as my observation goes (and this is confirmed by the evidence of those who know more of the matter than I do), that there is more intemperance in the class above the working class here than there is in the old country.

4806. I presume you mean the middle class? Not exclusively; I must include the upper class also.

4807. Do you notice it in what are called social gatherings, such as dinner-parties and balls? My observation in those respects is limited, and my acquaintance lies mainly with sober people. If ever I go to a ball it is not to the supper-room.

4808. I ask the question, because we have been told that we compare favourably with the old country in respect of our habits at these social gatherings? I can only say that I have been a good deal in society in London, and I never by any chance, in the society which I frequented, saw a single case of intemperance. I have attended banquets here; and I have not noticed any signs of excessive indulgence in liquor. But here again my experience is somewhat limited. I do not go to many of these gatherings.

4809. If it is a habit that we have unfortunately got into in this colony of exceeding the due limit in taking alcoholic drinks at these social gatherings, I should imagine that it must have come within your lordship's knowledge, either directly or second-hand? I have never seen any example of it, that I can call to mind.

4810. Can you say that you are not aware of it? One hears scandalous rumours—I think that they find their way into the public press, now and then—but I know no more about these things than you do, or perhaps less. In a matter of this kind I prefer to speak from my own observation rather than of what I gather from hearsay. But one thing has struck me, that is, that we ought to be more temperate here than the people are in England, owing to the difference of climate. Of course I need not say to you that, speaking generally, the colder the climate the larger the consumption of alcoholic liquor.

4811. Ought to be or is? Is, as a rule. If you take Sweden, Norway, Scotland, England, and the like and then pass down to France, Germany, and Italy, you will find, speaking broadly, that there is a diminished amount of drunkenness, if not a diminution in the consumption of alcoholic liquor. Therefore, considering that Sydney has a climate comparable with the south of France or Italy, it seems to me that there is less excuse for intemperance here than there is in the old country. So far as climatic influences have to do with the matter, we ought to be more sober than they are at home.

4812. But if you look at another continent America, you will find that in the more northern portion the people are the most temperate. Canada is an exceedingly temperate country; its climate is rather colder than Scotland, and the Southern States are exceedingly given to the use of intoxicating liquor? That shows, that influences, other than those of climate, are at work. But still climate has much influence. Thus in this respect I have often been very much struck with the comparison of Scotland and England. The general education, and in some senses the morale of Scotland are certainly not lower, perhaps higher than in England, yet the Scotch people drink a great deal more than the English people.

4813. Per head, I presume? Yes.

4814. Of what kind of drink? Mainly whiskey. Physically I believe that people can take more alcohol in colder climates; they can indulge in it with less danger to health than in hot climates. Hence I repeat that here the consumption ought to be less than in England.

4815. Have you any knowledge of the licensing system of this colony? I have endeavoured, as far as I can, to make myself acquainted with it, from the documents which you were so good as to supply.

4816. You are aware that we have made an attempt, such as it is, to introduce the principle of local option;—have you considered, or do you know anything of the efficacy of our system? I approve of the principle, and believe that it can work efficiently. So far as I can judge, it has tended to check the growth of the number of public-houses, which I consider highly desirable. How far that may have resulted from the combination of two interests—the temperance advocates on the one side, and the existing licensed victuallers, who wish to protect their present monopoly, on the other—I am not prepared to say; but I should say that the former was the predominant influence.

4817. The foundation of any kind of local option—that is to say, the embodiment of the popular vote in the legislation of the colony;—must not that be the interest of every mature human being in the question of the liquor traffic—that is to say, every intelligent person capable of giving a vote. At present, with regard to local option only the ratepayers or property owners are entitled to vote. Do you think that the vote might be extended to Parliamentary electors who need not own property? If people are fit to exercise the Parliamentary franchise, I should certainly think that they are fit to vote on such a question as this.

4819. Then I understand you to say that you would extend the vote on the licensing question to women, married or unmarried, as well as to men? That is a subject which I have not carefully considered. But I should be inclined to think that the question of female voting ought to be treated as a whole. If women are ratepayers, and as such are allowed to vote, they might do so; if not, I think that it is better to take the electoral rolls, and, until women are placed on them, to leave them out of the local option vote.

4820. Would not the criterion of voting for a Parliamentary candidate be rather, whether the voter had a proper appreciation of the requirements for a Parliamentary candidate. When a person is asked to vote for a candidate for Parliament it is assumed that he or she knows something about what is required for a representative in Parliament, and can judge of the merits of rival candidates. On the other hand is not the only criterion in local-option voting whether for the family of that particular person the presence of a public-house in the immediate neighbourhood is pernicious or not? I am not at all prepared to say that in either case women are not under certain circumstances as well qualified to vote as men.

men. But I still think that it would be better to treat the question of female voting as a whole. I should hesitate to bring women in on this matter when it was not the policy of the country to bring them in on general matters.

The Right
Rev. A. Barry,

19 July, 1886.

4821. With regard to the subject matters of the local option vote at present it has no effect on the renewal of licenses, the number of houses now in existence might go on for ever according to our present system. Would you extend the subject matter of the vote. In other words are you in favour of the principle of what is commonly called full local option which would enable the voters at any time to say that there should be no public-houses at all in the district? I am in a position, as probably you know, of some peculiar difficulty on this matter; because I am on principle in favour of full local option, but on the condition that there shall be an equitable amount of compensation. I cannot myself consent to what appears to me to be confiscation, even for the purpose of carrying out what I deem to be a desirable measure of public policy. Hence I am obliged to qualify my answer, as I have done publicly already, by this condition. I observe, I may say in passing, that the Victorian Act, which does not involve full local option, but which enables the ratepayers to protest against the renewal of licenses, and to diminish the number of them, contains a provision for compensation which is left to be worked out by the Licensing Court.

4822. But do you observe that in the Victorian Act local option is limited to an arbitrary standard? A statutory standard.

4823. However that does not affect the principle? Not at all; I am most strongly of opinion, where property has been taken, whether held by a landlord or occupied by a tenant, upon an understanding that under certain conditions of good behaviour the license is practically to be renewed from year to year, and where in consequence the value of that property depends upon this condition of things, that, if that condition of things be altered, then, as in all cases where the right of the individual is sacrificed for the benefit of the community, there should be in some way—I am not concerned to say how—proper compensation.

4824. If the local option principle were to be introduced to its full extent in the statute book do you think that it would be right to limit its effect simply to the retail sale of liquor; in other words, do you think it matters whether the person carrying on the trade sells the liquor in small quantities or in quantities of 2 gallons and upwards; the latter class represents the spirit merchants; if it is right to limit the retail sale is it not right to limit the wholesale sale? The two things do not stand on the same footing; it may be right to do both; but you cannot properly argue from one to the other. I hold it to be simply a matter of public policy how far you should extend what is called the local option principle. The one immediate cause of drunkenness is no doubt the excessive multiplication of public-houses, and it is with that that local option now proposes to deal. Whether you ought to introduce a Maine liquor law is a matter for further consideration. We have an immediate evil to meet, and we propose to meet it; there may be another evil behind, and that may be dealt with afterwards.

4825. That is to say that you prefer to deal with the evil which is so obvious in our streets, in the first instance without going to the full logical extent of applying the rule to every form of sale of liquor? As you know, all political measures have to be guided by other considerations than those of abstract logic "Generalities are always the delight of shallow minds, but those who have to deal with human nature distrust nothing so much." I would therefore deal at present solely with the question which local option proposes to deal with, as I understand it—the question of publicans' licenses.

4826. Has it concerned you to consider the question whence the fund for compensation should be obtained? I have not considered that. In the Victorian Act, so I understand, it is provided that the license fees and the fines shall form a fund, out of which the claims for compensation shall be met. This at the first blush seems to me to be a reasonable thing to do; but I must confess that I have not considered the question with care. I think that there is also a provision, that, if this fund is inadequate it is to be supplemented from some other quarter.

4827. Do you think that there are more persons than one interested in the subject of compensation? It is obvious that there must be.

4828. There is the holder of the license and there is probably someone else, is there not? Yes; the owner of the property.

4829. Do you think that there ought to be compensation all round? Certainly.

4830. Do you think that the brewer ought to be compensated. We will take a case which constantly arises: A man is in a house for which he pays £300 a year; he owes £2,000 to the brewer; he pays £30 a year to the State; he gets his living from the house; the brewer has an interest in him, and in the house; the landlord has an interest in the continuance of the business. Thus may there not be three people to claim compensation? Let me ask, what security has the brewer?

4831. He ordinarily holds a bill of sale over everything in the man's house? He must avail himself of his security; I do not see why he should be compensated.

4832. You think that the landlord might require compensation? I think so. I suppose that, if you pass a law which provides that a certain house shall not continue to be a public-house, the value of the property must be deteriorated; very often it would be considerably deteriorated; hence, by taking away the license you injure not only the occupier but also the owner. But a creditor, whether a brewer or otherwise, holding a lien over the licensee's property can avail himself of his security. He ought not to have separate compensation.

4833. Suppose the State, by some amended legislation, were to give all, and everybody to understand that on a given date—say, five years or three years hence—the system of local option would be put into operation, with the possibility that it would destroy a number of licenses, and that in the meantime the trade could be exercised without any other restraint, would such an interval as that be equivalent to compensation? It would mitigate the hardship to the licensee, without removing it; but, as far as the owner of the property is concerned, I do not see how it would affect him at all.

4834. Having been recently in England, have you any knowledge respecting the asylums for drunkenness there? I have not; but I know that such institutions exist. There is an Act, called Dalrymple's Act, which enables people to be incarcerated in an asylum by their own consent, which consent once given cannot be withdrawn. I think that I am right in saying that the original draft of the Bill did not contain the condition of consent; but it was inserted in the passage of the Bill through Parliament. Of the working of the Act I know nothing.

4835. Have you any knowledge of the working of similar institutions in other countries? No. Before we leave the licensing question, I should like to point out that there are other modes than that of local option of dealing with the question. In Victoria, for example, they have a statutory limitation of the number of public-houses. This is a provision which might be worthy of the consideration of the Commission. Then there is what is known as the Gothenburg system. Members of the Commission are probably aware generally what that system is. Gothenburg was one of the most drunken towns in the universe, I believe, and the system which was introduced there has had the effect of checking the amount of drunkenness to a very remarkable degree, bringing the town, I am told, into a comparatively high position as regards sobriety. The system is this: At Gothenberg, under the sanction of the Government, a private Company bought up all the public-houses, and reduced their number to what was considered adequate for the population. They next made all such houses what licensed victualling establishments ought to be—places for the supply of other requisites than liquor. Then they put at the head of them managers who had no interest whatever in the amount of liquor sold; and if I remember rightly, by a refinement of ingenuity, the manager had an interest in the sale of all other commodities, but not of liquor. Then, directly and indirectly, they very carefully supervised the nature of the liquor sold, so as to prevent that adulteration, which is a very great cause of drunkenness. The effect of this regulation of liquor traffic was, as I have said, to change what had been a very drunken town into a comparatively sober one. It may be interesting to the Commission to be informed—if they are not already aware of the fact—that the Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain introduced, some years ago, into the British House of Commons, a Bill to give power to apply the system to Birmingham, with this difference—that the purchasing body was to be the municipality, and not a private company, authorised by the State. That Bill, which would have initiated one of the grandest experiments in social legislation, which we have seen for a long time, was unfortunately rejected. Mr. Chamberlain informed me that he had such a high opinion of the system that, had the Bill been passed, he would have been prepared to retire from Parliament for five years, and to devote the unequalled influence which he exercises in Birmingham to working the system, and that alone. The advantages of the system are: 1st. That the number of public-houses can be limited in proportion to the population. 2nd. That there can be a proper supervision over the quality of the article sold. And—3rd. That those who have the management of the public-houses have no interest in stimulating excessive drinking.

4836. Are you aware what becomes of the profits in Gothenburg? I am not quite sure; but I think that they go the State or to the municipality.

4837. I am told that they go towards the reduction of the taxes; hence, to a large extent, the popularity of the system? Mr. Chamberlain did not expect that any money would be made out of the system in Birmingham. He thought that, in the first instance, the municipality would have to make an enormous sacrifice; but they might recoup themselves afterwards.

4838. Do you think that the system would work in a community like ours? I am afraid that my knowledge is not sufficient to enable me to give an answer to that question.

4839. I presume that Mr. Chamberlain's idea was that the system could only be applied to large areas or districts? It could only be in large areas. I am not much acquainted with municipalities here, but I imagine that if the system were to be applied here it would have to be worked through them. The system requires great wisdom, firmness, and disinterestedness in its working; and I have not such knowledge of municipal institutions here as would justify me in saying whether it could, or could not, be worked efficiently through them.

4840. Should I be right in supposing that if this system were introduced in the City of Sydney, the practical working of it would be that the State would sell to the City Council the monopoly of the liquor traffic within the boundaries of the city; that there would be a certain statutory number of licensed houses, beyond which the number could not go; and that there would be ample provision made for the inspection of the liquor, so that only the best should be sold, and that the profits would be appropriated in some proportionate way between the Consolidated Revenue and the Civic fund? Why should the State sell the monopoly? Might it not give the monopoly?

4841. Of course if there were only one bidder it would be difficult to sell it. It would be possible, even in that case, to require a certain payment for it.

4842. Any company might exercise the right? I doubt whether here the power could be placed in the hands of a voluntary company. If the system is established at all, it must be worked through the municipalities. Perhaps it would be impossible to work it through small municipalities. If so, where the municipalities are small I imagine that several would have to be grouped for the purpose. I do not see why the State should require from the municipality any payment for the privilege; although it might insist on having a certain portion of the profit.

4843. Have you any knowledge of any other licensing system? I have not, except of the ordinary English system. It struck me that the new idea sketched out in the Victorian system, has in it something worthy of consideration. As far as I understand the Victorian system from a rapid survey of the Act, it is that a certain statutory limit is fixed; there is to be one house for every 250 persons, up to a population of 1,000, and beyond that one for every 500 persons. For instance a district containing 1,000 persons would have four public-houses, a district of 1,500 people, five; and a district of 2,000, six; and so on. Then the ratepayers of a district are called upon by local option to decide, whether, if in any district the number of public-houses is in excess of that limit, the number shall be reduced to that limit or towards it, but not below it, and if the number of public-houses is below that limit, they have the power to say whether it shall be raised to the limit. I observe that the Act says that, in case they vote in favor of the number being raised, the number may be raised, apparently leaving some discretion to the Licensing Court. On the other hand, if the people vote for the diminution of the houses then the phrase is "shall" be reduced. Thus there is a greater power for the diminution than for the increase of the number of public-houses. Local option pure and simple is a rough and ready way of dealing with this question; for, of course, under local option an electorate might have ten times the present number of public-houses if people chose so to vote. According to this plan the State says, "We will not let you have more than a certain number of public-houses; but we will leave it with you to say whether you will reduce the number to the statutory limit, or whether you will increase the number up to that limit." Therefore it takes it out of the power of any locality to have an excessive number of those temptations to drink. I do not know how the Act works; or whether it has had time to work yet. I believe it was so far modified in passing through Parliament that some of its original advocates think very little of it; but surely anything that tends to reduce the excessive number of public-houses is worthy of consideration.

Whether

Whether you take local option, the Gothenburg system, or the system that has been initiated in Victoria, they all aim at one object though in very different ways.

4844. In many parts of America there is a system called the high licensing system, the idea being that by imposing a high license fee the number of public-houses is reduced;—have you any knowledge of that system? I have none whatever.

The Right
Rev. A. Barry,

4845. We are anxious to know your Lordship's views on another subject, and that is whether for habitual drunkenness there should be punishment or an attempt at reclamation. At present the drunkard is fined, or, in default of payment, sent to prison, and he goes through that process pretty regularly so long as he lives? I think the system must be necessarily bad. When I was in Darlington Gaol a little while ago, I saw men there who had been undergoing these temporary imprisonments for drunkenness, I am afraid to say how many times; evidently it produced no deterrent nor disciplinary effect upon them. The punishment for habitual drunkenness ought to be something heavier, more deterrent than it is now, and undoubtedly it should aim at the reformation of the offender. That would point, I presume, to the establishment of some of those inebriate asylums at which you have already glanced.

4847. Have you known of the reclamation of any habitual drunkard? I have.

4848. Therefore you would not think that a State system of reclamation ought to be considered hopeless? Certainly not. I have the strongest conviction, that there are hundreds and thousands of cases, in which if men were put under restraint for a year, they would in all human probability recover. I think it might also be the case with women; but experience shows that habitual drunkenness in women is harder of reclamation than in men.

4849. Mr. Rosaby.] If houses are to be licensed for the sale of drink, do you think they ought to be put under very stringent regulations? Of that there can be no question; I believe that the Licensing Act does put them under certain regulations, as to structural arrangement, sanitary conditions, and supervision.

4850. You know that those in the trade chafe under the regulations, and are asking for them to be mitigated? Yes.

4851. The law requires the publicans to have a certain number of rooms, but it turns out that they afford very little accommodation to the public; the houses are in fact mere drinking shops; ought the houses to be mere drinking shops? If the houses are regulated by law, it is quite clear that the regulations ought to be enforced. Whether the regulations are likely to produce the results originally intended, I cannot tell. But I cannot see why a house with twenty rooms should be exempt from all these licensing regulations.

4852. You think the local option vote should apply to all houses? All regulations, whatever they may be, should apply to every house. I do not see why a large house should be exempt.

4853. The law says that the houses shall be closed on the Sabbath, yet we find a number of people brought up on Monday mornings for getting drunk on the Sunday;—would you not make the law so strong that it could not be outraged as it is at present? This is demanded by public morality independently of all other things. A law on the Statute Book which is systematically broken is an injury to public morals. Of course two arguments can be deduced from this condition of things. Those who object to the principle of Sunday closing will argue that the Act ought to be abolished. Those who approve of it will conclude with me that the law ought to be enforced.

4855. You do not think that the interests of society require that the houses should be open at any time on Sundays? I do not think so. No doubt Sunday closing imposes a certain amount of hardship, but we have to consider what is the balance of advantage, and the hardship is very small in proportion to the general good done. One thing, however, is certain, viz., that the law ought not to be systematically evaded.

4856. There are various opinions as to how the law ought to be made operative. Persons must be seen in the act of drinking before they can be convicted;—would you not make the fact of their being found on the premises sufficient evidence of their being there for an unlawful purpose? I am afraid that my opinion on that subject would be of very little value. I should be inclined to leave this matter very much to the recommendations of those who have to administer the law.

4857. Do you think the law should permit young women to sell drink behind bars? No; I think it should not allow the employment of barmaids.

4858. It is said that there is an increase of intemperance among the young people in this Colony;—would not you prohibit persons from being supplied with drink until they were advanced in years? To what age? Sixteen years.

4859. The present law says sixteen years; but that does not seem to check the evil? But is the law enforced?

4860. I can hardly answer that; I am only aware of the fact? No doubt selling drink to the young ought to be absolutely prohibited; where the limit should be I am not prepared to say. But before altering the law we ought to make it certain that as it stands it is enforced. I am told that it is not.

4861. I presume that you would be in favour of preventing as far as possible anything like secret drinking. Many of the public-houses have bars up-stairs presided over by young women, would you be in favour of abolishing them? Certainly. The word public-house implies publicity.

4862. I suppose that in your travels on the coast you have observed a considerable amount of drinking on board the steamers? Yes.

4863. Do you not think people are supplied sufficiently on land without being permitted to drink on steamers? Certainly, for short voyages; but my observation applied also to ocean-going steamers. I think the bar on those steamers requires very stringent regulations. You are aware that in the immigrant ships no spirits are allowed to be sold. They are only supplied under a doctor's order. I am told, however, that on the large ships coming out from England there is no regulation, and that, as regards the third-class passengers, at any rate, great demoralisation is the result.

4864. You would favour their abolition on the coasting steamers? I think so; but if the bars are not abolished they ought to be very strictly regulated.
4865. With regard to compensation have you not observed that in many instances where the public well-being requires it, individuals have to suffer loss for the general good. We have condemned houses in the city as unfit to live in, and the owners have had to pull them down? My answer to that is that the owner ought not to have let the houses get into that condition. He brought the penalty on himself.
4866. Years ago we compelled the owners of several tanneries to remove out of the city without giving them any compensation? Then, speaking broadly, I should say that injustice was done.
4867. The public good has been dominant? My impression is that the public good always must be dominant; but, if individual interests are over-riden, there must be compensation. I parallel the matter with the taking of private property for a railway. You force a man to give up his land; but you compensate him with a little above the market value of the property. The case is as with Mr. Gladstone's scheme of Home Rule for Ireland; even at the risk of damage to his proposed measure, he made an honest endeavour to compensate the landlords.
4868. You are emphatically of opinion that we have far too many public-houses? I have not the slightest doubt about it.
4869. Mr. Abigail.] The English law is that if persons are found in public-houses during prohibited hours the presumption is that they are there for an unlawful purpose the onus being thrown upon them to prove the contrary;—would you favour such a proviso being enacted here? It seems reasonable, that, when there has been an apparent infraction of the law, those who have apparently been the breakers of the law should have to prove that they have not done so. I never like, however, to give an opinion about matters, respecting which I have not had any practical experience.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

The Right Rev. Bishop Barry, D.D., called in and further examined:—

4870. President.] My Lord, you said the other day that legislation is one of several factors in what one might call drink reformation;—to what other factors did you allude? I think there are two chief classes of influence over and above legislation. The first is the improvement of what I might call the conditions and outward surroundings of life; and the other is the power of what may be in the largest sense called spiritual influence; that is to say, argument producing conviction, addressed to the understanding, appeal to the moral sense, and to the religious principle. All these bear upon the spirit rather than upon the outward conditions of life.
4871. As a matter of fact, legislation, in your opinion, will not be effective in itself? Not completely effective. I imagine all these influences must, in all cases, go hand-in-hand. There is always a function for law, a function for what we may call motive, and a function for principle; law, motive, and principle must actually work together to produce all the highest human action, and certainly, all human progress.
4872. Still I gather from your evidence that you consider there is a large field for legislation? Of this there can be no question whatever.
4873. Have you read the Queensland Licensing Act? I have glanced at part VI, which refers to local option, and which I presumed was the one that was particularly before the Commission. I have not looked at the rest with any care; but it is the most stringent Act I have ever seen.
4874. I have no doubt you have compared the principle of legislation in dealing with the question of the possible destruction of licensed victuallers business, as displayed in the Queensland Act and the Victorian Act? In the former Act there is no provision for compensation whatever; and moreover, as far as I can see, local option extends to the prohibition not merely of public-houses but also of the sale of intoxicating liquors; which is a much larger thing; and what is commonly called the Maine liquor law.
4875. What do you think of the provisions of this local option principle and the Queensland Act compared with those in the Victorian Act and our own, having regard to the practical character of legislation? That is a question on which I hesitate to give an opinion. I should hold, as you know, if prohibition was adopted, that compensation of vested interests ought to be given; and I do not see why this Act insists that there shall be no vote against public-house licenses, unless it extends to the prohibition of the sale of liquor in all forms. I should have thought myself that the better plan would have been to have allowed for—first, the prohibition of liquor altogether; secondly, the refusal of licenses; thirdly, the diminution of licenses; and fourthly, the stopping of new licenses. I should imagine—I cannot tell how it may be—that the first section was a little too stringent for practical utility.
4876. Did you notice in the Victorian Act, section 25, that where a vote is taken reducing the number below the existing limit to the statutory limit and thereby destroying some licenses, the principle of compensation applies not only to the occupier of the premises—who, I presume, will be the licensee as a rule—but also to the owner? I did.
4877. As between the two systems, am I right in supposing that you would prefer the Victorian to the Queensland system in respect to the way in which it deals with compensation? Certainly.
4878. I think you stated at the last meeting that with regard to the fund that was to produce the compensation money, you had not thoroughly considered that question? I have not studied the subject; but it appeared to me, on thinking it over, that the fund ought to be supplied partly from the local rates and partly, in all probability, from the general fund of the Colony. I think partly by local rates, because after all it is local influence which is originally brought to bear; on the other hand it may be considered by the State to be a matter of general policy, and therefore to have claims on the General or Consolidated Revenue.

Revenue. But it would seem unfair, in the case of local option, to throw all the burden of what is done by one locality on the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

4879. If the license fees went to the various licensing districts or areas, which we may say might be co-extensive with the local option districts, don't you think on the principle qui sentit commodum, sentire debet et onus that they would have a fund from which to provide the compensation money? If that fund was likely to be at all sufficient, this would be an admirable principle; but an opinion was expressed by a gentleman on the Commission, who seemed to speak with authority, that such a fund would be found absolutely insufficient.

4880. Mr. Roseby.] Has it struck your Lordship that compensation might be given to those who now hold licenses in the shape of a monopoly for a certain time—that is to say, if a vote was taken that no further licenses shall be granted for the space of three years, or even for a longer time, persons now in business would practically have a monopoly, and would reap a substantial advantage therefrom. Would not compensation in that form be a large factor in giving an equivalent for the abolition of their business? I fancy that this monopoly, so called, seeing how very largely most of our districts are supplied with public-houses, would not be of any great substantial value. If, as I believe, each district now has pretty well as many public-houses as it can support, the refusal to add public-houses would not be such a valuable privilege of monopoly as would amount to compensation. But I am bound to tell you here again that I have so very little knowledge of the practical conduct of the liquor trade that I can only look at it in the abstract rather than through the light of experience.

4881. You suggest that a local rate should be made one of the sources from which compensation might be obtained, but why should I and my family, who are all total abstainers, who have personally no interest whether or not the houses exist, and who are ratepayers, contribute towards compensating men for the loss of their business when it is only affecting those to whom these places prove a temptation and a snare? I imagine that you would have public spirit enough to care for what you consider the good of your locality; and, if you persuaded the locality to adopt a certain course, you would put your hand in your pocket and help to pay for it.

4882. In your high position, my lord—which you have filled worthily—you consider the moral well-being of the community is above every consideration? Yes; but the moral welfare of the community implies honesty as well as sobriety, and to my mind a community that confiscates without compensation is demoralized thereby.

4883. Are you aware that in our community if my business is considered a nuisance by my neighbours the law compels me to remove that nuisance without in any way recognising the spirit of compensation? To make the parallel complete it ought to have been licensed, in face of the fact that it might be considered a nuisance.

4884. Surely the removal of the greatest public nuisance which causes a large proportion of the crime, lunacy, squalid wretchedness and degradation of the community ought to be in the hands of the people, without making compensation a very important factor in the matter? I cannot hold in this with you. We have gone over this ground before. Let me say once more that I am with you absolutely both as to the evil which is produced by intemperance, and as to putting into the hands of any locality the power to cut up the traffic root and branch. But I cannot see why that should be done, when this traffic has been licensed, recognised, and as far as may be sanctioned in all kinds of ways, without paying for the privilege of carrying out so great an improvement. In the prosecution of a great public work we sweep away private property, but we never dream of sweeping it away without compensating the owners.

4885. But private property has done no injury to the neighbours? I fear that we are as far as the poles asunder on that particular point. The reason why I venture to urge this point so strongly is because I am in favour of local option, and because I am thoroughly in earnest in the desire to remove the causes of intemperance.

4886. You are aware, my lord, that moral suasion—much good as it has accomplished—has utterly failed to substantially arrest the ravages of drink? It has failed to do it completely; but, if the records of the total abstinence societies tell any truth at all, it is quite clear that it has rescued an immense number from degradation.

4887. But notwithstanding that this evil is growing? Certainly; this proves that moral suasion is insufficient—not that it has not had a substantial result.

4888. You approve of the general principles of the Queensland Act as far as you have read it, but you take strong exception to the question of compensation? I have so little evidence as to the working of an absolutely prohibitory Act, as distinguished from one for taking away licenses that I hesitate to say whether I could express approval of that absolutely prohibitory clause or not. My doubt is whether it will practically work; but this I know is a matter of experience and study which I have not had leisure to give.

4889. Have you any knowledge of the prohibition laws in Canada? No.

4890. Have you not heard of an Act called the Scott Act, which is brought now largely into operation in many of the provinces? No; as you will remember, in the first instance, I stated that what evidence I should have to give would have to be considered as based not on any large amount of practical experience but on general ideas of policy.

4891. Is the provision of our law an injurious or a beneficial one which compels a publican to provide a large number of rooms as well as a bar for the accommodation of people? This again is a matter of experience and of the knowledge which comes from experience. I should think the thing would cut both ways. If his great object was to sell liquor he would subordinate the hotel part of his establishment to the furtherance of the sale of that liquor; in other words, he would get inmates for the very purpose of making those inmates drink. On the other hand, the design was to give him other interests than the sale of liquor—the ordinary interest of an hotelkeeper.

4892. In your opinion the abolition to a large extent of these liquor bars would be a great advantage to the moral social well-being of the community? I have said that already.

4893. Mr. Withers.] I gather from your remarks, my lord, that you regard the liquor traffic properly conducted as a thoroughly legitimate and lawful business, and the respectable hotelkeepers as reputable citizens? The business, I presume, has always been treated as holding an exceptional position by the very fact of requiring licenses, and those licenses carrying regulations. Accordingly I look on it as a business, which by the very issue of licenses has been recognised as a legitimate business, but as a business which requires unusual vigilance over it on the part of the State.

26 July, 1886.

4894. President.] You are aware that an auctioneer requires to be licensed before he can carry on his business? I was not aware of that; but the cases are hardly parallel.

4895. Mr. Withers.] Do you think that the keeping of a properly conducted hotel, including the sale of liquor, is a legitimate business? Yes, I do.

4896. Do you think that a citizen conducting such a business is entitled to as much respect as any other tradesman or merchant? In the eye of the law, undoubtedly. But if I were asked whether I would get my own living in that way, I should answer that it is about the last occupation I should adopt.

4897. Do you think that the time from 6 in the morning until 11 at night is sufficiently long for hotels to remain open? Certainly; I should say more than sufficient. I should be in favour of closing the houses at 10 o'clock at night.

4898. In some parts of America hotels are closed from 7 o'clock on Saturday evening until 7 o'clock on Monday morning? As far as my knowledge goes.

4899. You think there should be no extension of the time beyond 11 o'clock? Certainly not.

4900. Do you think that the temptations to which young women are understood to be subjected to in well conducted hotels are more demoralizing and dangerous than the condition of things in factories and workshops where the sexes are mixed? I do not know whether one is more demoralizing than the other, but from such observation as I have made, I think the position of the young women serving liquor, even in what are called respectable establishments, is a very undesirable one.

4901. According to our law at present, liquor is not allowed to be supplied to persons under sixteen years of age;—do you think that age should be extended or reduced? I should be inclined to extend it.

4902. And would you fix a higher age in the case of females? I should like to see the limit as to age increased for both young men and young women; possibly young women need a little more protection.

4903. Do you think, from your observation of the rising generation in this Colony—that is to say, persons from twenty years of age upwards—that there is greater evidence of habits of intemperance among them than among persons of the same age in other parts of the world where you have been? I do not know that I have seen any great difference. The point that has struck me is (as I have said) that the drinking habits here appear to touch injuriously a much higher social level than in the mother country.

4904. Mr. Colls.] It is well known that some licensed houses are occupied by persons who are agents for merchants—would you compensate those parties as the owners of the property? I suppose that if a man is simply an agent he cannot claim compensation. You must go to the owner at once.

4905. Mr. Davies.] I gathered from the answer you gave to Mr. Roseby that you had not given the subject of compensation any great consideration? I have thought a good deal about compensation; and have a strong opinion upon it.

4906. But I think you said that you had not come to any decided conclusion as to the form which compensation should take in connection with the local option principle? I mentioned, when I was here before, that, in my opinion where a local option vote abolished a public-house, then, as under the Victorian Act, the Licensing Court should decide, if any, and if so, what compensation should be given; that such compensation should come partly out of local funds, supplemented if necessary by contributions from the Consolidated Fund, and that it should extend to those who are beneficially interested either as occupiers or owners.

4907. Are you aware that the license is only issued for one year? I am; but I am also aware, that there is a tacit understanding, that, if the house is properly conducted, the renewal of the license will not be opposed.

4908. I understood you to say that you are of opinion that the business of a publican is a legitimate business? Yes.

4909. But a very exceptional one? Certainly.

4910. In what manner would you think that compensation should be applied to the widows and orphans, who are made widows and orphans by drink? It would be impossible to do this. The widow and orphans suffer from the voluntary intemperance of the husband or father; and you can no more compensate the widow and orphans in the case of an injury inflicted upon them by the intemperance of the head of the family, than in cases where similar injury results from idleness, neglect, or disobedience, or any of the causes which throw a man out of employment.

4913. Not in that case, because it does not take such a wide range. Those who commit suicide are very small in number? But, if there were only half-a-dozen victims, surely they would have just as much claim to be considered as six thousand.

4914. The principle of compensation is not applied in the case of noxious trades, which, when they become a nuisance to the surrounding inhabitants, have to be removed, and those establishments, so far as their moral effect is concerned, are much less injurious than public-houses? The difference is this: A noxious trade affects everybody who is within range of its influence, whether he consents or not, but the public-house injures only those who choose to resort to it. If the liquor traffic were so far like a noxious trade, that everybody who came within a certain range of the public-house was made drunk, your argument would be applicable but not otherwise.

4915. But although people may not go to the public-house its existence has a demoralizing influence upon the neighbourhood, and the bad language and the objectionable scenes to be witnessed come under the cognizance of a man's family? They can be kept out of the way.

4916. It is impossible to pass one of these grog-shops without hearing bad language, and surely in a moral point of view that must be injurious? Could not people walk on the other side of the road? If I were to meet a man dressed in dirty clothes, I should give him a wide berth; and I would do the same with a man who had a contagious disease. If there is moral contamination it is equally my business to keep out of the way of it. You may meet the case further by a local option vote; only you must pay for your privilege.

4917. You are strongly in favour of the principle of local option? I have always said so.

4918. Mr. Withers.] You consider that the principle of local option is consistent with the fact of the business being a public nuisance? Yes.

4919. A nuisance is created, and the people have a right to say whether it should be continued or not? Yes.

4920. You are in favour of local option as being the voice of the public? Certainly.

4921. Mr. Davies.] Of course you had no experience of the working of the old Licensing Act? I have had very little experience either in this or in the old country of the working of licensing laws.

4922. I presume that the clergy in your diocese report to you the terrible ravages caused by drink? I hear of them from time to time. One can hardly take up a newspaper without reading of the evil effects of drink, and I hear of them at our temperance meetings. I do not receive formal reports on the subject from the clergy.

4924. I ask you the question for this reason: The object of local option is to prevent the retail sale of liquor. Do you not think that so far as the Legislature is concerned the adoption of such a law should be founded on the general principle that the consumption of liquor is pernicious. If the consumption of liquor is pernicious and wrong, should it not follow that it is wrong to be a temperate drinker? I dispute your premiss. It is not the consumption of liquor, but the immoderate consumption of liquor, that is pernicious.

4925. But the consumption of liquor within a given area might be prohibited altogether under the local option system? Certainly.

4926. Then the Legislature would not be able to go upon a general principle, but upon a partial one, namely, that it may be good for A, B, and C to drink temperately, but that C, D, and E shall not drink at all? You mean that they would be sacrificing the minority to the majority. I do not quite catch the drift of your question.

4927. I am anxious to know whether you see no inconsistency in the State passing a local option law for the purpose of preventing a certain class from drinking in a certain way, and not passing a law to prevent another class from drinking at their own houses? I can understand that local option may prevent public retail sale where it leads to the immoderate consumption of liquor, while at the same time liquor is allowed to be sold under other circumstances, and that this system may result in excessive drinking being largely checked. I can also understand total prohibition. I do not say which is the better course.

4928. I am only propounding the question because it has been a stumbling block to many people—the apparent inconsistency of preventing one class from having that which another class is allowed to have? I presume you mean that, while the poor will not be allowed liquor, the rich will obtain it.

4929. Yes; I mean that if the vote is favorable to local option, the poor people will be prevented from getting what the rich are allowed to obtain? Why should the poor be prevented from getting it? They can buy it as well as the rich.

4930. But they look to the public-house for it? Why do they do that?

4932. Where? At the spirit merchant's, or the beer merchant's.

4933. The spirit merchants are not allowed to sell less than 2 gallons, and there are no grocers' licenses in this colony? This is, I suppose, matter of regulation. But if I were in a local option district, where the sale of liquor was prohibited, I should not complain even if I did not need this protection. If it were decided, for the sake of the whole locality, that it was better to close the public-houses, I should simply acquiesce.

4934. That has been the logical conclusion in such places as the State of Maine? As I said the other day, logic is sometimes a very bad guide. Human nature being as it is, you very often have to deal with a pressing necessity, without drawing it out to its full logical conclusion; and I think you will find that most practical Statesmen hold that view. I hold it, as far as I am at present advised, with regard to the sale of liquor. I should deal with what is the important step before us, and leave all further considerations to be dealt with hereafter.

4935. Those who object to local option seem to me to have this fair argument: Why not purify the public-houses, or rather, why not raise the character of the public-houses themselves; why not do away with all grog-shops; why not, at all events, strive to do that rather than resort to total abolition. Can you not reform these places, so that they shall no longer be grog-shops, and provide for our moderate wants without abolishing them? That is a question of experience and policy. Those who have studied the question of local option say that the great cause of drunkenness is the facility afforded by the retail trade for obtaining liquor. They think that the only method of dealing with this is the rough and ready method of clearing away these facilities altogether. We do now attempt to diminish them, and diminution may possibly lead to an improvement in their character. They say, however, "We find that this reform has proved impossible, and therefore we go in for abolition." That is their view.

4936. There is a very good reason—if you look one stage further—why it should have been ineffective; because of the vested interests that were concerned in the matter—that is to say, the Legislature has never had a fair field? On this matter I cannot pronounce. But local option has the power in any case of doing either one thing or the other. It has the power of limiting the number of public-houses, or it has the power of abolishing them.

4937. That is true; but we know that in practice the local option principle if carried out would always result in a negative vote? That is a matter as to which I do not prophesy because I do not know.

4938. We know it to be a fact that where there is a vote, in 90 per cent. of the cases it is a negative vote? That is against the increase of public-houses; as yet you have had no experience in regard to abolition.

4939. Before your Lordship leaves we should be glad if you would favour the Commission with your views on the question generally? I can only amplify what I have already said. I believe there is an important function for legislation, but that with it there ought to be joined the application of those other two classes of influence of which I have spoken. First, in some cases the desire for drink is largely due to the unwholesome physical conditions under which many classes in this community live; and, accordingly, I believe that the carrying out of proper sanitary regulations, and especially the supply of pure water, would be one very important aid to the cause of temperance, by removing that morbid physical condition condition which results in a craving for drink. Then, again, I think this craving for drink is very largely a craving for excitement in what seems a dull and uninteresting kind of life; and I am therefore of opinion that the supply of legitimate excitement would do a great deal towards removing the craving for this unhealthy excitement. Everything that tends towards providing the people with wholesome and right amusement, and the interest that comes from amusement, would aid in removing another unhealthy condition which results in drink. I think also that the spread of education—the enlarging of a man's sphere of interests, and the raising him above mere animal desires and appetites—is another influence that ought to be brought to bear. And, again, everything that creates for the people the opportunity and the taste for higher objects—everything that provides them with opportunities of entering the enjoyment of works of art and good popular music—everything in fact that enlarges the sphere of wholesome amusement and interest—all these things will tend to supply the place of the unhealthy excitement created by liquor. I have often felt that there is some excuse for those whose life is within a very dull narrow round and who have not those opportunities of larger interests which are given to persons of education and competence—that there is at least a greater excuse for indulging in the unfading excitement of drink. I should define these influences of which I have spoken as improving the conditions and the surroundings and the interests of life. Then beyond that, and in the highest class of all, I should rely upon what I have called in the largest sense of the word, spiritual influences. There is first of all the power of dealing with the mind and the understanding, the bringing home to people the unthrifty waste of all kinds of resources upon drink and the showing them that this is the parent—as has been truly said—not merely of pauperism but of nine-tenths of the poverty, that does not become pauperism, and the parent also of crime. I think the reason of the people must be appealed to by arguments of this kind. But I am not so ignorant of human nature as to suppose that Man is pre-eminently reasonable, or that an appeal to reason is likely to be the most powerful appeal that can be made; and accordingly I should rely still more upon moral influences. It is obvious to any one who considers human nature that the higher and spiritual nature in man ought to rule, and that the appetite and passions ought to be kept under control—that, as Scripture says, “The flesh should be subdued to the spirit.” Even of our own sakes, the moral nature of man should be educated to that true harmony of its various parts. Then there is the moral influence which comes from the inculcation of duty, bringing home to men a consciousness not only of the ruin caused to himself by indulgence in drink, but of the way in which it ruins the power of a man to fulfil his moral obligations. Every moral influence of duty—duty to his family, his class and neighbourhood, and to the whole community—must be brought to bear. But, to my mind, practical experience has shown that all other influences put together of a moral and intellectual kind, are as nothing compared with religious influence. Almost all great temperance movements, so far as I know, have had some religious character. They have not dealt with the evil of drunkenness as a vice, which is, I take it, a sin against one's self, or as a crime, which is a sin against our fellow men, but as a sin properly so called, which is a sin against God; and I believe that the union of these spiritual influences, under this religious conviction, is probably the most powerful factor in the struggle against intemperance. I should wish it therefore to be distinctly understood that my idea is to fight against this evil any way and every way—by law in its proper sphere—by improving the physical conditions and surroundings and interests of life—and above all by appealing to that which is above law and above physical surroundings, and which in the largest sense of the word I have called spiritual influence. That has always been my guiding principle in this matter. I have endeavoured to carry it out as best I could, and I should like to be allowed to put this on record before the Commission, although I suppose its chief duty is with the legislative side of the question.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Dr. George Alfred Tucker called in, sworn, and examined:—

- Dr. G. A. Tucker. 4940. President.] You are Superintendent of Asylums? I have been.
4941. Both private and public? Yes, patients.
4942. How long have you held the position? 26 years.
4943. In this Colony? In the Colonies.
4944. Then your experience of insanity covers a period of 26 years? Yes.
4945. The Commission is anxious to know how far habitual drunkenness may be considered the cause of permanent insanity. Can you throw any light on the subject? Nothing more than statistics will show so far as my superintendence of asylums is concerned; of course I had many cases of delirium tremens, and I had many cases of insanity supposed to have been caused by drink, but we know perfectly well that very often insanity causes a strong desire for intoxicants as well as that intoxicants cause insanity; it is an effect and a cause.
4946. With regard to insanity as an effect of a cause has your experience allowed you to come to any particular opinion with respect to the proportion of cases at any given time under your charge caused by drunkenness? No; I have not made such a classification as you suggest; I may inform you that during my tour I visited between 500 and 600 asylums, and I have been supplied by the superintendents with returns showing the causes or the supposed causes of insanity and they vary exceedingly all over the world; in fact most ridiculously so in some instances; one would scarcely credit the number of suggested causes of insanity until they were grouped together. I should say from memory that from at least 80 per cent. of the asylums which I visited they return the largest number of cases of insanity as produced by by drink. I supplied each asylum throughout the world with a printed form in various languages in which I put thirty-six questions, the causes of insanity being one of them, and speaking from memory I think that in 80 per cent. of the answers intemperance is stated to be a large cause of insanity.

Dr.
G. A. Tucker,
23 July, 1886.

4947. I presume that in the cases referred to the insanity was not delirium tremens? Oh no, not generally.

4948. They would not consider that insanity in any place? They do in most places because a person may be committed to an insane asylum on a certificate of insanity purely from delirium tremens and to all intents and purposes he would be insane at the time.

4949. What we want to ascertain is the proportion of permanent cases of insanity which are the result of intemperance? It would be very difficult to get that information.

4950. Then delirium tremens cases come in in the proportion which you have stated? I should not like to assert that that is so; it may be so, or the patients may have been introduced into the asylums in a chronic state. I may also state that the last annual report of the English Commissioners of Lunacy give the largest number of persons as being insane from drink.

4951. I suppose that you could not eliminate the temporary cases from the permanent cases included in the returns? No; what I have stated are bald facts.

4952. Mr. Hutchison.] But are they not supposed to be confirmed cases before they are confined in lunatic asylums? Not in all cases.

4953. President.] You do not think that you could separate the permanent cases from the temporary cases? I do not think that is possible. I could supply you with a statement of the number of asylums which give the largest percentage of insanity from drink.

4954. It is probable that in some of the countries which you visited they have no receiving-house similar to ours? In no other country, that I am aware of, have they a receiving-house. That is a distinct feature of New South Wales to its advantage. I have advocated the adoption of our system in many parts of the world.

4955. Then, as in other countries, all cases go direct to the asylums—temporary, as well as permanent cases—the value of their statistics must be nil, as far as the point on which we wish to get information is concerned? Yes.

4956. Mr. Hutchison.] But would not the percentage of cures be a guide? Where would be the difference if insanity was caused by delirium tremens, and was relieved by after treatment, or whether it showed a permanent state of insanity; intoxicants would be the cause all the same.

4957. Mr. Roseby.] Would it not be dementia? Dementia is one of the last stages of insanity.

4958. President.] It is permanent insanity? There is acute and sub-acute dementia—one is more curable than the other.

4960. Do I understand you to say that if an habitual drunkard has an attack of delirium tremens he will always be subject to attacks of delirium tremens from the same cause? Yes.

4961. And do I understand you to say that a repetition of attacks of delirium tremens will or may end in permanent insanity? Yes, or epileptiform attacks.

4962. Is that your experience gathered in this country? Yes.

4963. I presume that in your capacity of superintendent of public asylums and private asylums you have had a good many people coming to you insane from habitual drunkenness? Yes; I should explain that there are two conditions—one delirium tremens and the other dysomania. The two are very different. A man suffering from delirium tremens may be sufficiently well in a week to be discharged, but where there is dysomania, in my opinion not less than 12 months' treatment can possibly do any good. I have seen many men recover, but I never saw a woman do so.

4964. You have never seen a woman recover? Never from dysomania.

4965. That is what you call permanent alcoholism? Yes.

4966. And a person who suffers from delirium tremens may be a dysomaniac or not? Yes; you very seldom find a person suffering from delirium tremens where there is a sufficiency of food taken as well as drink.

4967. Have you known many dysomaniacs to recover in your experience? No.

4968. Then practically you look upon them as incurables? Yes.

4969. Though they may not be insane within the meaning of the Lunacy Act? They have weakened intellects, and are very liable to epileptiform attacks, and generally die in this condition.

4970. Do you consider that drunkenness is in any way hereditary? I think so.

4971. Take an habitual drunkard; do you think it is likely that his offspring or her offspring may become habitual drunkards too? It may skip one generation the same as insanity or phthisis.

4972. Do you think it is hereditary in the same way as insanity is said to be? No; that would depend, I imagine, on the extent of the intemperance and of the evil created.

4973. I suppose you consider insanity to be exceedingly hereditary? Yes; that is one of the primary causes; in fact the primary cause.

4974. Of insanity? Yes.

4975. Transmitted insanity, then, you think the commonest of all forms—It goes through generations? I think so. In many countries we find the largest proportion of insanity to arise from insufficient and improper food and overwork. But if you take the statistics of any given asylum you will probably find hereditary put down as the second and in many cases the primary cause, and then the next cause is intemperance.

4976. Intemperance comes next, does it? Yes.

4977. And is that the impression of experts throughout the world? I may say that that is generally the impression throughout the world.

4978. And what you are telling us now is the most recent knowledge on the subject? That is the most recent. I told you just now that I issued circulars to every institution. Those circulars are filled in, and go to my secretary, and are copied and a duplicate sent back to the institution for verification, and those so verified I retain, so that I may not be charged hereafter with having made statements that are not shown on the verified form containing the returned answers.

Dr.
G. A. Tucker.

4979. Have you found any difference in the insanity in countries where the community consume light wines and beer as compared with the insanity exhibited in countries where the liquor consumed is mainly ardent spirits? I may say that I have found no difference in insanity itself, per se, in any country.

4982. Other countries do not know their proportion? They do not. Next, perhaps, would be the United States, and the percentage could be ascertained there very fairly. But in the case of Russia, Spain, Portugal, and many other countries, the records would be doubtful, because they only give a record of those persons in asylums and under cognizance. They cannot give anything at all as to the masses.

4983. Are the private asylums there under Government inspection and control? The private asylums throughout the world are more or less under Government control. Of course they differ as to the mode of regulation; but take the private asylums as a whole, I think their percentage of cures is more than equal to that in the case of public asylums; but that may arise from the fact of a smaller number being under treatment. I should also say that my returns show that no asylum for the insane should contain more than 300 patients for individual care and treatment, as showing the largest percentages of recoveries. One gentleman just now referred to the recoveries; that, again, is a difficult matter, which I think the Irish Commissioners are now grappling with. In most countries the percentages of cures are given on the annual admissions. In some other countries the percentages of cures are given on the average number under treatment during the year, which is the proper mode. And, again, in other countries—in Ireland, for instance, they are given on both. You will observe that in this country the annual returns show an average of 42 per cent. of recoveries. But that 42 per cent. is on the number admitted during the year, and the general public may not be aware that the facts point to this: that none of those discharged during the year may form a portion of those admitted during the year, and that on the other hand, that 42 per cent. on the number admitted during the year may in fact only be 8 per cent.—and I think that is about correct—on the average number treated during the year. The average number treated during the year is the proper and most honest way of placing before the public the returns of cures.

4984. Is that the system here? Our system follows that of Great Britain, where the annual returns of cured are based on the number admitted, which is misleading. The Irish Commissioners now insist on both being shown.

4985. Do you consider that a patient in an asylum whose insanity has been caused by habitual drunkenness suffers an alteration of the brain? We must first of all decide the question of whether the brain in all cases is the cause of insanity—whether the insanity arises from changes of the brain.

4987. I was under the impression that there was a structural change in the brain of every permanently insane person? Yes. I can only say this for your information:—There are at the present time two special pathologists in American institutions and only one in Great Britain. I had a long conversation with the pathologist of one of the leading New York State hospitals—Dr. Grey's Institution—the whole of whose time is devoted to pathological and microscopical investigations of the brain, and he is of opinion that there is no permanent insanity without inflammatory thickening of the membranes, thus creating pressure. This may also arise from sunstroke or external injuries to the head; also from a change in the constituents of the blood.

4988. You think then that in the case of a drunkard a change in the constituents of the blood would be the cause? Yes. Then, again, this pathologist is of opinion that solar-plexus has a considerable effect on the mind which would be, perhaps, sympathetic, and in this form the disease would perhaps be curable. This gentleman is one of the highest authorities, and examination of the brain is his constant occupation; he is a special pathologist engaged by the institution for that purpose.

4989. Is your opinion the same as his? I would scarcely like to express it as my opinion after such a great authority.

4990. Then he satisfies you? He satisfies me, of course so far, that he has gone into the pathological part of the argument more thoroughly perhaps than any other man. Very little is being done in asylums with regard to pathology and the future treatment of insanity, even in great Britain; the continental and American asylums are far before Great Britain in research.

4991. Are not all patients who die in lunatic asylums subject to dissection? No; in many countries, and here for instance, the friends object.

4992. I mean if there is no claim? If there is no claim it is sometimes done, but not always; in Catholic countries it is objected to; and it is not done so often as might be expected on account of the small number of medical officers.

4993. You have travelled a great deal, and probably had your eyes open to the habits of the people of the various countries you have visited;—do you think this Colony is remarkable, as compared with others, for the amount of drunkenness among its people? I think that English-speaking people are the most given to the abuse of intoxicating liquors.

4994. Are they worse than the French? Yes. In travelling as I have done out of the ordinary routes of travellers, I have rarely, in those countries, met with an intoxicated person.

4995. Do you think you would find the largest amount of drunkenness in Sydney or in the older cities at Home? In the older cities.

4996. Have you noticed any increase in intemperance since you have been here? No; I am not in the way to meet with it.

4997. When you were away did you visit any inebriate asylums? Yes, one in San Francisco, and a place in New York State which had been an asylum for inebriates.
4998. It was not an inebriate asylum then? No; it had been a perfect failure, and it was taken over by the Government for a lunatic asylum.
4999. What views did you form from your visit to the San Francisco asylum? As I said before, there can be no satisfactory cure of dipsomania shown under twelve months' abstinence from intoxicants.
5000. Did this institution not compel that abstinence? I should think not, judging from what I was told in the town, that the patients were allowed to indulge as much as they liked. I am speaking of the one in New York State.
5001. When they were there? They were in the institution nominally and were allowed out.
5002. Then there was no compulsion? I have not yet found any clause in any of the States Acts in reference to compulsion. They were voluntary institutions, I believe.
5003. We have been informed that there are asylums in America and other parts of the world to which drunkards could be sent instead of to gaol? I have not met with them.
5004. We have been told that there were institutions to which a drunkard might be sent by his friends for a period of six or eighteen months? It may be so, but they have not come under my observation.
5005. Have you been in those States in which the sale of intoxicating liquors is prohibited? Yes. In those States you can get as much liquor as you like.
5006. Is that your experience? Yes.
5007. Have you been in Augusta in the State of Maine? Yes.
5008. And is it a fact that you can get as much liquor as you like? If you found the money I would undertake to get as much as you liked.
5009. In public-houses? There are hotels but not for the sale of intoxicants. That is where the difficulty arises. If you ask for a drink in your hotel it cannot be obtained, but if you know your way about you can get it. You may have to go a few doors up the street and perhaps to pass through a hairdresser's shop. You walk through and get what you want. In other instances you buy a cigar or some other trifling thing and you get your liquor.
5010. How long is it since you were in the State of Maine? Less than three years. I spent about twelve months in the States, and I travelled in every State.
5011. Mr. Hutchison.] There is only one State in which the Maine Liquor Law is in force? There are several States in which the sale of strong liquor is prohibited.
5012. You say that in those States you can get whatever liquor you want? Yes; you may always obtain the best of brandies at the chemist's shop.
5013. He is not allowed to sell it except under a doctor's prescription, I suppose? That is easily obtained.
5014. I presume that you never saw a drunken man in those States? In going right across the States from San Francisco to Chicago I only met with one intoxicated person, and that was in Salt Lake City.
5015. Yet, although drink can be got, the traffic has to hide its head? Yes; there is no open drunkenness.
5016. Mr. Hyam.] It is a mere evasion of the law? Yes.
5017. The law cannot cope with it? I should think not; I should presume that a prohibitory law would be conducive to secret drinking.
5018. Mr. Hutchison.] Although the drink can be got there is not the same amount of drunkenness in those countries that there is where drink is openly sold? Not the open drunkenness. In the United States, both in hotels and private houses, you scarcely ever see intoxicants on the dinner-table.
5019. We know that any law is violated; but which is likely to be most dangerous to young people—the open, flaunting sale of liquor, or the clandestine sale that is said to occur under a prohibitory law? I am inclined to think the prohibitory conditions.
5020. Yet it does not appear so? I am giving my opinion; where there are restrictions people seem to strive to defeat the restrictions.
5021. Are you aware that they are punished for this clandestine selling? I am aware of it, and I am also aware that the vendors have a fund to protect themselves, and that they engage the best available counsel.
5022. But they are punished? If they are convicted.
5023. Mr. Roschy.] You have visited a large number of asylums? Between 500 and 600.
5024. And you have endeavoured to ascertain the causes of insanity? That has been one of my objects.
5025. And I think I understood you to say that about 80 per cent. of the inmates of those asylums were there in consequence of intemperate habits? That is so.
5026. Your experience of the insane extends over many years? Yes; twenty-six years.
5027. Is it not a fact that a large proportion of the insanity that exists here is the result of intemperance? I think so. My opinion on this matter coincides with that of Dr. Wilkins, of San Francisco, who, fourteen or fifteen years ago, was employed by his Government to visit lunatic asylums; in his work he says that one-half of the insanity, and probably more, is caused by intemperance.
5028. A very large proportion of the cases treated in the receiving-house are due to intemperance? I suppose so. I may state that a large proportion of the cases of the London District asylums are through drink.
5029. In the countries you visited did you see any receiving-houses for the treatment of the temporary insane similar to ours? No.
5030. Have you observed that persons demented through drink recover after months, or perhaps years, of treatment more readily than persons insane from any other cause? I do not think you can distinguish anything between the two. If you take after some years two given persons, one's insanity being caused by intemperance and the other's by some other cause, I do not think any one could describe one from the other—certainly not from their conduct and general manners.
5031. I presume that in some cases a disease which arises from intemperate habits would very seriously affect the brain? Undoubtedly.
5032. The brain of a person is very largely impregnated with alcohol after a fit of intemperance? Of course there is inflammation. I think possibly the liver is the first organ which becomes deranged and that interferes of course with the other functions in time.
5033. In a case of hereditary insanity is it not dangerous for that person to take any drink at all;—

would it not tend to develop a natural weakness which might otherwise be overcome? I should like to answer the question in a broader sense than you have put it. A person so afflicted, I think, would be much more liable to break down under any exciting causes.

5034. In the treatment of the insane I presume that you use very little alcohol? Not necessarily any; in fact many modern asylums are finding it beneficial to do without even beer for their patients.

5035. That is the mildest form of alcohol? Yes.

5036. Wine is done away with now? Unless it is ordered medicinally. I do not think it is necessary in any sense.

5037. President.] Are you speaking of insanity from alcohol or generally? Generally. In some asylums I have seen hot wine served round to ordinary patients. It is a common thing in many asylums to serve round beer, but that has been thought injurious and has been given up largely. If the question is asked in regard only to cases of alcohol, then I deny that it is necessary to continue the alcohol.

5038. Mr. Roseby.] In regard to the treatment of imbeciles in the asylum at Newcastle, the cases are hopeless when they are sent there? I might say, so far as I know of that institution, that the educational treatment is not carried out there which I have found in many institutions of a similar character. There is a difference between the weak-minded child and the idiot. The idiot is congenital and the weak-minded child suffers from an abnormal condition, perhaps, from the brain-power being suspended for the time, but most of them are capable of advanced education to enable them to obtain their own living, which, I am sorry to say, is not the case here. I have gone largely into this question in my report.

5040. Dr. Campbell, the former Superintendent of ————, states in his book that a large amount of insanity is caused by smoking? Not smoking simply, but in excess with other excesses it may produce insanity. I have smoked for forty-five years, and I do not know that I am a bit the worse, and I manage something like fourteen or fifteen cigars a day, perhaps, but that is without the other excesses.

5041. Now, I suppose you know that in America and Canada the law to prohibit the public sale of drink has been brought about by the voice of the people? I should judge so; they are the best individuals to judge of what they want.

5042. We are told that in a large number of the States and provinces in which this law is enforced drink can only be obtained surreptitiously? I have visited every portion of Canada, but I have not ascertained anything with reference to this matter. In two or three of the States in the United States I have found the prohibition law in force, but as I said just now, on no occasion have I ever failed to obtain what I wanted.

5043. In any of these States where this law has been in force for any considerable time did you notice that there was a proportionate diminution in the insanity of the place? My experience was, of course, a very limited one in passing through the various towns and cities—I was flying as it were—but if you would give me a list of the States to which you refer, I can answer the question by reference to the answers I received from the superintendents of the asylums in those States. I think, speaking from memory, that the replies with reference to the causes, even in prohibition States, show that the largest cause is drink.

5044. Is much insanity caused by indulgence in bad drink—will ordinary alcohol produce these results? That is beyond any opinion I could assert at all. I do not think it matters much with dipsomaniacs what drink they have. I have known them to drink anything—even kerosene and medical tinctures.

5045. Has each State in America an asylum of its own? There are several in each State, particularly in the New England States, where the asylums are very many and very large.

5047. In other parts of the world a person who is insane temporarily or permanently is not arrested and taken to a reception-house just as a prisoner would be taken to the lock-up? Generally speaking that is not done.

5048. It is a great outrage on public sentiment to do so? A very great outrage.

5049. They are put in like vagrants—locked up until they are dealt with? Yes.

5050. Mr. Hyam.] They are treated in the same way in this country are they not? They are taken from the police office to the receiving-house. I have no doubt that in some of the up-country places they are kept in gaol simply because there is no receiving-house.

5051. But they are not treated as criminals? They are brought into open court, I believe, and that I hold to be wrong.

5052. Mr. Hutchison.] Not in cases of delirium tremens? I used to sit on the bench at Newtown, and I always set my face against the practice of bringing demented persons into the open court. I always went to them in the lock-up.

5053. Mr. Withers.] Do you think that young persons of sixteen are too young to have drink supplied to them? That is a difficult question to answer.

5054. Do you think that intoxicating liquor has a hurtful effect on the brains of such young persons? I think that intoxicating drinks are unnecessary altogether as a matter of fact. I take a very little—less of late years than formerly—perhaps never more than two glasses in the day of anything, at any time; but looking at the matter in a social point of view I think that if parents use intoxicants at table their children should partake of them too, and for this reason: that if the children are deprived of them they are more likely to become drinkers in after years than if liquor had been supplied to them simply as a beverage. As for supplying liquor to young persons in licensed houses I think the age might be made even higher than sixteen.

5055. You think it ought to be made eighteen at least? I think so.

5056. Have you observed that insanity is caused to a greater extent among young persons than among persons of mature age, through drink? I dare say that you will find more cases of insanity through intemperance among persons up to the age of 30 than among older persons.

5057. Do you think that intoxicants are more injurious to the brains of young persons than to the brains of persons of middle age? I should think that anything deleterious would have more effect upon the young than upon older persons.

5058. Do you think that moderate drinking is likely to have such an effect upon the brain as to bring on insanity? That depends upon what you consider to be moderate drinking.
5059. You say it is acknowledged by the faculty that insanity itself is hereditary? There is no question about that.
5060. Have you observed that a large number of people in ordinary every-day life have a tendency to insanity on some particular point? I should not like to say that, but I might put it in this way: Give me any individual in an asylum and I would make it appear that he was insane. I am now speaking against asylums generally on that score.
5061. Then, I understand that insanity would be one of the easiest offences that could be set up for any man? Undoubtedly.
5062. Do you think that there are many persons confined in our asylums who might well be at liberty? Speaking generally, and not of our own asylums particularly, I would say that there are large numbers of persons in asylums who have no right to be there; not that I think any superintendent of an asylum would keep a person there longer than was proper, but numbers have no friends to receive them in case they were discharged; but I am convinced from my experience in visiting asylums that there are large numbers of persons in them who would be better out of them, and that the asylum is entirely a last resource.
5063. Mr. Hyam.] I should like to ask you if you think that brandy contains any of the elements of food? Brandy, as I understand it, is simply a stimulant.
5064. Does it contain none of the elements of food? I should not give it with that understanding. Brandy or whisky given as a stimulant is necessary in very many cases, and beneficial too.
5065. Have you ever known persons to become insane through total abstinence? Total abstainers may undoubtedly become insane, because of a hereditary predisposition to insanity.
5066. Mr. Hutchison.] But is it possible that total abstinence itself may be a factor in producing insanity? I do not think so.
5067. President.] Would it have a predisposition to cause insanity? Certainly not.
5068. Do you see any reason why an habitual drunkard should not be treated as a lunatic? Quite the contrary; I think he should be.
5070. Are many young persons brought to your care in consequence of intemperance? Oh no; there are other causes to produce insanity in young people without drink.
5071. Have you ever formed any idea as to what is the worst description of drink to take? I have heard many people say cold water, but I am not of that opinion. I have been in some places where I was obliged to take coffee and brandy. That is not at all palatable, but still it is preferable to many other drinks.

FRIDAY, 30 JULY, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,
A. HUTCHISON, Esq.,

J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.,
G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Rev. F. B. Boyce called in, sworn, and examined:—

5072. President.] I believe you are the honorary secretary of the Local Option League? I was honorary Secretary up to about October, 1884.
5073. In what way are you connected now with the League? I am one of the Central Committee.
5074. You are then still connected with the League officially? Yes, and have been ever since the League was established.
5076. Do you mean in the Parliamentary contest? Yes. A great number of leading citizens have from time to time associated themselves with the League, and we believe we unite the various Temperance Societies on one common platform, while we also have with us the churches, and many other of the best social forces in the country.
5077. Are you affiliated with any other League or Society of similar purport? We are not affiliated with any other League in the Colonies, but several Temperance Societies send representatives to our Committee, and by the term Temperance Society I do not mean simply lodges connected with Temperance Societies, but I mean the Central Committees of those Societies send representatives to the Central Committee of the Local Option League in this Colony.
5078. Have you any connection with anything extra-colonial as a body? We communicate with the United Kingdom Alliance, the National Temperance Society of New York, and with the Alliance in Victoria.
5079. That is, you keep up a corresponding communication only? Yes.
5080. What are the objects of the League? To bring about by Act of Parliament a law which will extend the present limited local option to the whole Colony, by which I mean a law to give the people in every locality the right to prohibit the sale of drink if they choose.
5081. Then, as I understand you, the Local Option League in this Colony confines itself entirely to extending extending in this Colony the principles of local option, as they are at present imperfectly embodied in the licensing law. The one sole object you have in view in that is the revision of the law dealing with the liquor traffic? The main object of the League is certainly to defend the clauses in the existing Act which favor the principles of local option, and to promote to the utmost of its power the adoption of other clauses which may be hereafter proposed in furtherance of the same object.

Rev.
F. B. Boyce.

5082. But radically the basis of your constitution is to provide a substitute by means of some form of plébiscite for what would otherwise be legislation in the ordinary sense by the representatives of the people? Yes.

5083. Your idea, in short, is to delegate to a certain section of the community the legislative function which is performed by the representatives of the people? Our idea is to give people the same power which they have in England under the Boroughs Funds Act, by which all matters of taxation are directly placed before the people.

5084. I suppose generally your object is to promote a Permissive Bill, as it is in England? Yes.

5086. I understand that you propose to work local option on the basis of municipal communities? That is a matter of detail.

5087. But you must work upon some unit of the community, some locality? Yes, we propose that a vote should be taken from the roll of the Parliamentary electors rather than from that of the ratepayers, but a great number of members of the League think that the vote should be extended to women.

5088. Will you only take the vote in places that are incorporated? No.

5089. How would you take the vote in unincorporated places. You would take, I presume, so many of the inhabitants who happened to be on the Parliamentary roll? Yes.

5090. Your local option scheme is co-extensive with the whole of the Colony is it not? Yes.

5091. Not only the cities and townships, but every part of the Colony? Yes.

5092. In any given area of the Colony would you work upon the Parliamentary roll so far as it went? Yes, but these are rather matters of detail; in applying local option to the Colony outside municipalities it would be necessary for the Government to mark off the electors into certain wards.

5093. You mean in order to deal with the drunkenness of the whole Colony, not any particular part of it? Yes, but the electors must be marked off into smaller wards than at present, because we want to get at the ideas of the locality.

5094. Smaller than the wards in Sydney I presume? No, they would be large enough for the purpose.

5095. It is sometimes said that local option is advocated as a sort of pis aller for legislation. If Parliament does not seem to take a proper grip of the subject you propose to redelegate the function of Parliament to the people? No, Parliament would be permitting the people to exercise a sort of local voice. It would be a method of local self-government. You may call it redelegation on the same ground, as we call municipal Government a redelegation of the function of Parliament; but this would be simply a matter of local self-government.

5096. In a permissive way, that is to say, you may or may not have drink retailed in a given area? Yes, you would leave it to the people to say whether they would forbid or permit the retail sale of liquor in their particular locality? I would leave out the word retail.

5097. Does the League propose by local option to give the people the right to prevent the sale of liquor over 2 gallons? That is a matter that we have not really considered yet.

5098. Then why leave out the word retail? I do not commit myself to retail only.

5099. As a matter of fact there are two forms of local option, are there not; there are those who would extend the principle to the spirit merchants and brewers, and those who would be contented to close the public-houses;—is that not so? No.

5100. Is it limited to public-houses then? That is a matter of detail upon which I am not prepared to speak. I usually understand when people say that no liquor shall be sold within their locality that they mean no liquor of any sort.

5101. In any form, retail or wholesale? Yes, I mean that as a rule.

5102. Do you represent now the opinions of the Local Option League? I am not here officially. I am present on my own behalf. I have not been delegated by the League to come here. There are two ways, however, in which I can express the views of the League. One is by saying that we should be perfectly satisfied if the Government gave us local option as they have it in Canada.

5103. Do you refer to the Scott Act? Yes, and as further improved by the Canadian Act of 1883.

5105. Then with regard to the extension of the principle of local option to the wholesale sale of liquor, your own opinion, I understand—you may not now be speaking on behalf of the League—is that the spirit merchants and brewers within the local option areas would be liable to the vote just as much as the retail sellers of liquor? My answer, broadly speaking, is yes; but I can quite see that there may have to be one or two clauses inserted in the Act which would not affect the vote of the people, but which would not quite put the spirit merchants and brewers in the same category as the publicans; but as to what these details would be I am not now prepared to say.

5106. I suppose you would be willing to meet the difficulty in this way: To put the question of retail sale before the people, together with the question of wholesale sale, by the local option paper, which, I presume, would be the formal mode of voting? I do not think we would do that, because it would involve too many points to be placed on the local option paper at once, and so complicate the matter with the electors? It is a great thing to have the ballot-paper as simple as possible.

5107. You perceive that the principle of local option, if it is meant to be of general application to the whole community, and not to any class of it, would be rather mutilated if it were only applied to the people who purchase in the public-houses? Yes, certainly. I may mention that the Canadian Act is a wholesale Act, and doubtless contains clauses dealing with the question from a wholesale point of view.

5108. Your principles are contained, you say, in the existing Canadian law? Yes; we would be perfectly satisfied with the adoption of a similar law.

Rev.
F. B. Boyce.
30 July, 1886.

5109. How would you take the local option vote in the various wards of a city like Sydney? Ninety per cent. of the people who are interested in these wards live outside the city, and the people who happen to live on the premises are, as a rule, mere caretakers, and really not in any sense the owners. How would you get over that difficulty? If the roll of Parliamentary electors is taken, instead of the municipal roll, that gets over the difficulty at once, because every holder of property has a vote and the caretakers have votes as well.

5110. The resident would have a vote? Yes.

5111. As well as the owner of the property? Yes.

5112. A city like Sydney belongs to the whole country as well as to its inhabitants, and there is an immense traffic in the city of people who are neither residents nor owners of property, yet it may be urged that these people have a right to what one might call the institution of licensed victuallers—there are plenty of people who come in and out every day on business; they use the city in all its thoroughfares;—have you considered their interests in the matter? I do not think that they have any special rights at all. If they come into any locality they must understand that when they are in Rome they must do as Rome does.

5113. Then you have considered all these matters? Yes.

5115. You have fully recognized the difficulty, I presume, which travellers and wayfarers would introduce in any settlement of the question? Yes; but my experience is that the accommodation of travellers would be very much better if it were disassociated with the sale of intoxicating drinks. I find that in the Melbourne Coffee Palace everything is done in the most happy way without the sale of intoxicating drinks. In a large number of cases the tea-rooms in Sydney—I mean the most frequented ones—are conducted without any intoxicating drinks being sold.

5116. But suppose a man who has come 15 or 20 miles with a load of wood and feels disposed to have a glass of beer, and is traversing a street in which no beer is sold, he begins to think that the liberty of the subject is rather disregarded, and although he may be exceedingly temperate, yet perhaps he has to go out of his road into another ward to get the beer;—does not this seem rather hard? Medical men would say that the best thing for a man would be not to take anything intoxicating, but rather to take something which would give food to the stomach, something to help to support the system.

5117. You do not think that the fact that his business taking him into a street which heretofore had public-houses gives him a certain right? No, I do not think so. If my drink were coffee, and if I went to Newtown and could not find a coffee-stall between Redfern and that suburb I do not think I would say that my rights were interfered with in any way. I do not acknowledge the right. A great many things are involved in this question of right. I would put it in this way. First of all I would say that a man has no such right. What right can he have to force upon a community the sale of an intoxicant which is conducive to lunacy, pauperism, immorality, and crime?

5118. You mean, what right has that individual who has travelled a long way to expect to obtain a refreshment in any part of the city. He says, let us have the status quo, or at all events some condition of things in which I may get what I wish, without going a long way out of my road for it? The status quo means his supposed right to force the sale of a very dangerous intoxicant upon the community.

5119. I am speaking of the moderate man—not one of us will champion the drunkard? Although he is a moderate man—there are thousands and thousands here who are thoroughly moderate, and generally very temperate in their use of intoxicants—yet at the same time I hold that he has no right to force on any community the sale of that which is conducive to so much harm. In considering this question of right you cannot separate the abuses of the traffic from the general question.

5120. As a matter of fact, do these people force anything whatever—are they not simply acquiescing in the existing state of things, and would they not think that to prohibit them from obtaining the refreshment they have been accustomed to would be a violent interference with their rights? I look upon them as forcing drink on the community so long as the community has no right to prevent the sale of drink in their midst if they wish to. The Government have forced the public-houses on the community.

5121. But an individual member of the community has nothing to do with the matter? No, except by his vote. The Parliament has.

5122. But he is also a man for whom you must have a considerable regard. It is by his vote and not by that of the extremist that you will succeed. It is always the voice of the moderate people which turns the scale one way or the other? We expect to succeed by the aid of those among the community who are patriotic, and who sincerely desire the social and moral welfare of the people, and there are a great number of moderate drinkers among that class.

5123. Can you tell us of any other place besides Canada where there is local option legislation distinct from prohibitive legislation? Yes, Georgia, Maryland, South Carolina, Kentucky, and Texas, have all adopted it, and there are other places which have local option apart from State prohibition, although I cannot remember their names just now.

5124. Do you know of any other community outside America which has local option legislation? No, except Queensland; but we can hardly cite the Queensland Act as it has only been in force a few months.

5125. I presume that the other places which you have cited have had permissive Acts in force for some years, three or four or five, and not like Queensland only a few months? Yes.

5126. I presume that the character of the local option laws in the States you have cited is something akin to that of the Canadian Act? Some of these Acts were passed before, and others since the Canadian Act was passed; but I think the general lines of all these Acts are much the same as those of the Canadian measure.

5127. You think generally that the local option laws should permit a section of the people to declare whether or not they will have drink retailed within their boundaries? Yes. I believe that in Maryland the vote is taken by counties, the areas there being very large.

5128. Corresponding to our big parishes, I suppose? Yes.

5129. Do you know how they deal in countries where they have established local option legislation with the question of compensation for interests that may be destroyed? Compensation has never been allowed so far as I am aware in any place where local option prevails.

5130. Does the League propose to follow in this path, and dispense with compensation? The League does not propose any compensation because it does not think it necessary at all.

- Rev.
F. B. Boyce.
30 July, 1886.
5131. By compensation what do you mean. Money paid down to the licensed victuallers whose license shall be refused by the popular vote? Yes.
5132. You do not mean time or anything like that? No, I maintain that the publicans have already received notice to quit because no publican can read the signs of the times in Canada, the United States, England, Queensland, and Victoria without seeing that he holds his license on a precarious tenure.
5133. You think that the present agitation is sufficient notice to quit? Yes, so much is this the case that the publicans in this Colony have organized themselves into an association for the protection of their interests, and especially to oppose local option; therefore they are cognisant of the fact that local option is proposed.
5134. I presume you are the mouthpiece of the League in this matter? I think I am expressing their views on the question.
5135. Is there any difference of opinion among its members in regard to this question of compensation? There is a very small minority favourable to some form of compensation, but what form they have never specified.
5136. Has the League expressed any opinion as to the statutory number of public-houses for a given area? No, the League has not expressed its views on that point as yet.
5137. Is the League entirely adverse to the retailing of liquor in any form? The whole idea of the Local Option League is to obtain for the people the right to say whether they will or will not have liquor sold in their neighbourhood.
5138. Independent of any statutory or proportionate number? Yes.
5139. In the legislation you have cited is there always that uniform principle of absolute prohibition on the one hand, or permission on the other, independent of any statutory number? There is a statutory number in Canada. The law of 1878 limited the number of public-houses in that country to one for every 250 persons up to 1,000, and then one house for every 400 or 500 persons after that number. When the houses were closed no compensation was given. In the province of Ontario alone 1,947 public-houses were closed when that statutory number was fixed, that is, they were closed after the term of their licenses had expired; but no compensation was allowed.
5140. The governing idea in local option is to abolish the use of intoxicants absolutely in a given area, is it not? The governing idea of local option is that the people should have their wishes respected, and be allowed to please themselves in the matter.
5141. Speaking for the League now, would local optionists be pleased or disappointed if the people in a given area voted for the continuance of the liquor traffic in their midst? A great deal would depend on the state of public opinion. There are some localities now where it would not do to have prohibition, because public opinion would not be sufficiently ripe for it; local optionists feel this, that if a majority of the people—if three-fifths or a simple majority of the community, as in Canada—vote for the discontinuance of the traffic that is quite sufficient evidence of the state of public opinion to justify the closing of the houses.
5142. Then, if I understand you rightly, local option is rather a political principle to let the residents settle the question than an agitation for the reform of the drinking habits of the people;—do you take it for granted that if local option were given to the people they would always or generally vote for the doing away with the traffic? I do not think they would always vote for its discontinuance.
5143. Then you are content to allow the people in any case to express their opinions? Yes, I am quite willing to trust the people with the settlement of the question.
5144. If, by some misadventure, the whole of the inhabitants of a large city like Sydney voted in favour of the continuance of the public-houses, would it not be an enormous disappointment to the local optionists? Not to all, because there are a great number of persons who are local optionists and yet do not want to close up all the public-houses. A large number of people believe that no public-houses should be forced on the people, and we are content to trust the people with the settlement of the question, although occasionally they themselves might vote "yes" instead of "no."
5145. But as a matter of fact local optionists do not apprehend that there is a chance of any general acquiescence of the voters in the existing state of things;—is that not so? I think your idea of local option is that it is always against public-houses.
5146. I must confess it is, but how do you local optionists propose to bring a Local Option Act into force? The way I would personally wish to see it brought into force is as in Canada, by a certain number of petitioners.
5147. Are we to suppose that the petitioners would not attempt to bring the Act into force prematurely, that is before they knew how the votes were going? I think as a rule they would not bring it into force prematurely. They would try to gauge public opinion as far as possible, then get up their petition, and, provided that there was a fair chance of success, go to the poll.
5148. Then, clearly local option depends on a greater or less amount of preliminary persuasion and education? Yes.
5149. You are not going to allow the people to express an opinion until you are sure of the result? We could not be sure of the result.
5150. Well, until you have ascertained what are your chances of success? We should not like to ask a community to go to the poll unless there was a probability of success, and I think we would be wise not to do so.
5152. And in the meantime do you propose that the present licensing system should remain? While on the subject of the Canadian Act I should like to say that there is one clause in the Queensland Act which will be very useful. I refer to the clause in the ballot-paper, by which a vote can be given in favour of the reduction in the number of public-houses without going all the way to prohibition. A poll may be demanded upon certain resolutions, and sub-clause 2 of clause 115 provides in the ballot paper that "the number of licenses shall be reduced to a certain number specified in the notice, not being less than two-thirds of the existing number." The Canadian Government have met that question by reducing the number to about one for every 250 persons, and 6 for about 2,000 persons. In Queensland, however, they have not reduced the number at all, they have allowed the people to do that. If the Government were not prepared to reduce the number of public-houses in this Colony a clause of that character would be very useful, for it would enable the people to do for themselves that which the Government of Canada did for its citizens.

5153. It is one of your axioms, is it not, that compensation is unnecessary? Yes, we think that people have no equitable right to it. I do not think that a publican has any right at the end of the year for which his license has been granted.

5154. In that respect you do not tread on the same ground as the Bishop of Sydney? I know that, and I should like to give my reasons for saying that no compensation should be paid if the people by a local option vote closed public-house bars. They are as follows:—

Compensation to publicans is without precedent. Thousands of bars have been shut in different parts of the world but not a penny paid in compensation. Temperance legislation in the Dominion of Canada has already given to inhabitants of districts power of withholding licenses, and compensation has not even been asked, nor, if asked, would it be conceded. In the province of Ontario alone 1,947 licenses expired and were unrenewed without compensation. If compensation for withholding a license be right, it must be right to award compensation for any restriction of the license as it was when granted. If so there should have been compensation when the hours of sale were shortened and when the Sunday sale of liquors was suppressed. But no compensation has ever been granted in such cases. The whole of past and existing legislation in the Empire has proceeded on the principle that the license is granted for the public good, and is liable to be withdrawn for the same reason, the interest of the holder being strictly subordinate to the interests of the community. I am aware that compensation has been conceded in Victoria, but the law is so framed that publicans will almost wholly have to compensate themselves.

A notable example is in this colony. Two or three hundred bars were closed by the new Licensing Act because the houses had insufficient accommodation. The Act required extra rooms which had to be built or the licenses were lost. Not a penny compensation was paid, nor was any demanded. The Act shut the bars just as effectually as a Local Option vote. If the cry for compensation were genuine it surely would have been raised in this case. The fact is that the claim was so hollow that it was never entertained or even mentioned by the deprived publicans.

Other occupations have been interfered with and even abolished by the State without compensation. Witness the inconvenience to those who plied noxious trades. They have had to move to some specially selected part, and at much loss. Denominational school buildings by the withdrawal of State aid were lessened in value to the holders. Most now stand idle six days out of the seven. Cobb and Co. have run their coaches from Bathurst to Bourke. To do this they needed a large plant, stables had to be specially erected at several points of the road, and great expense had to be incurred. The State made a railway and ran Cobb and Co. off the line. Their business for over 400 miles was virtually as much destroyed by the State as though a special Act had been passed to suppress it. Further, on most of the lines of road on which railways have been made there have been numbers of public-houses. The Government through these railways have destroyed their business, and they have nearly all had to close. In these and many other cases which could be named, no compensation has been given. Why then compensate the existing publicans, especially when they have enjoyed a monopoly for so long at a very moderate fee? Why single them out for compensation?

The license to carry on traffic in intoxicating liquors is a privilege granted to the holder, and not a right to which he can lay legal claim. If it can be regarded as property at all, it is the property of the State, and not that of any private individual. It is a privilege also distinctly limited in the document itself, which says that it is for one year and no longer. It is never intended to interfere with a license during its currency. The claim for compensation where the continuance of a license is refused is not a whit more reasonable than the claim of a tenant under a yearly lease to be compensated when the lease expires and the owner declines to renew it.

If free trade in liquor were enacted, or a large number of additional licenses granted, the sales of the existing publicans would be seriously affected. Their position would be undermined. A large portion of their business would go elsewhere, and many would have to close. Who then would argue that the people should compensate them for their loss? If there would be no moral claim in such a case how can there be one when the State takes another method to restrict their business or close their bars?

A local option vote could only affect the sale of intoxicants. The business in accommodating travellers, providing meals, stabling, and the sale of the numerous non-alcoholic beverages would remain. The more true and legitimate business of public victuallers would still be open. How successfully and profitably this may be carried on can be amply proved.

If the power of refusing renewals of licenses be given to the localities affected it will clearly be a restraint on public liberty to render the action of the locality dependent on compensation to former holders. This would be tantamount to saying, "You shall have liberty to say 'No,' but you shall not say it unless you pay a heavy fine for saying it." A condition of this kind is a shackle inconsistent with public liberty in any proper sense.

The cost to the people arising through the sale of intoxicants has already been enormous. It is acknowledged that about three fourths of the crime is traceable to intemperance. Thirteen principal gaols have to be maintained and in every town a small gaol or lock-up. An army of magistrates and police has been necessary. The small fee of £30 a year from each publican has but met a fraction of the cost.

No "Civil Damage Law" has been enforced here against the publicans as elsewhere. Husbands have died when, had publicans refused liquor, they might have lived. Did the poor widows receive any compensation from the publican? Again, have publicans been asked to pay to maintain the gaols? There is already a big balance to the debit of the publican. Have they been required to compensate for the thousand and one ills, the bruised bodies, the silent tears, following on the sale of intoxicants? Even those who have conducted their houses well, and have been thoroughly law-abiding, will know with pain of scars on a fair humanity caused by their traffic. The claim for compensation is certainly not on the side of the publican.

The whole local option movement is a notice to the publicans to quit.

5155. I understand that you have given a great deal of pains in constructing what is called a drink bill? Yes.

5156. What do you estimate the drink bill of this Colony was for 1885? £4,586,167.

5157. Will you give us the sources from which you have made that calculation? I have deducted from the Collector's returns of imports the amount of the exports.

5158. That is to say, for the purpose of getting at the consumption of liquor you have taken the Customs returns in spirits, wines, and beers—you have deducted the exports, and then what have you done? I have also taken the return laid on the table of the Legislative Assembly showing the wines, spirits, and beers manufactured in the Colony. I am including all these, because they are subject to excise law, if not to duty.

5159. And then what do you do? I try to average the retail value. I put down spirits, including Colonial spirits at 35s. per gallon; wines, imported, including champagne, at 25s. per gallon; wines, Colonial, at 10s. per gallon; beers, English, in wood, at 4s. per gallon, and in bottle, 7s. per gallon; beers, Colonial, at 2s. per gallon; and here I think I am at least 6d. under the mark.

5160. Have you any idea how much Colonial beer is consumed here? Last year, 14,542,319 gallons, and it is increasing out of proportion to the population.

5161. Where do you get those figures? From a return laid on the Table of the Legislative Assembly and which was moved for by Mr. W. A. Hutchison, about eighteen months or two years ago, or at the same time as the return of convictions for drunkenness was prepared.

5163. Is your calculation of the drink bill of 1885 above that for 1884? Yes, by 1s. 8d. per head of the population.

5164. Have you the figures for 1884? The drink bill for that year was £4,229,587. I might mention that in the year 1884, or between 1884 and 1883, there was a decrease of 6s. 2d. per head.

- Rev. F. B. Boyce.
5165. May I gather from your figures in round numbers that there was an increase in the drink bill in 1885, as against that for the preceding year, of £300,000? Yes; we have to take into consideration, of course, the increase of population, which is considerable.
5166. The last figures of the Collector of Customs rather puzzled me in connection with your figures. In the matter of imported spirits, which is a very large item, we have a diminution between 1884 and 1885 of no less than 35,000 gallons; in Colonial distilled spirits we have a difference of 6,000 gallons as between those years; in sparkling wines the quantities remained, within a fraction, exactly the same; in ales and beers we have an increase of only 110,000 gallons; in bottled beer we have an increase of 170,000 gallons; and now returning to the drink bill, a considerable reduction is shown in the principal factor—spirits—for which the increase in the other factors does not make up, and yet the drink bill for 1885 is £300,000 over that for 1884. I do not think that the estimated increase—yours is only an estimate—is justified by the figures of the Collector of Customs, and you have not told me that the price of things had risen between 1884 and 1885? I have taken the same price for both years.
5167. The Collector of Customs has told us generally that the consumption of liquors all round, except in bottled beer, has advanced? It has scarcely advanced in comparison with the increase in the population.
5168. If I were to consider the question of population I could make the case still more favourable than it appears, because the population has increased very rapidly; but putting that matter aside, what I wish to direct your attention to is that the drink bill for 1885 shows an increase of £300,000, as against that for 1884, and in the face of a very large decline in the importation in almost every line, except bottled beer, which hardly makes up for the rest? I do not think that the Colonial spirits are altogether included in the estimate of the Collector of Customs. I had to deduct them from the exports.
5169. I do not apprehend that there has been such a difference in the export trade as to account for this difficulty, unless you can show that there has been a very large falling off in the quantity of exports? I think that the exports have rather increased.
5170. That would be all the better for us; the drink bill ought to show less than it is? I cannot answer the question until I look at the return which was furnished by Mr. Barney, because I have not understood that the whole of the distilled spirits consumed came before the Collector of Customs.
5171. But you cannot have any other figures than we have on that head? The figures of Colonial spirits, supplied by Mr. Barney, are very much greater than those you have just quoted—14,749, as the number of gallons of the Colonial manufactured spirits distilled in 1885, on which duty had been paid; for the same year what appeared to be the whole quantity of spirits manufactured was 197,981 gallons. And now comes the question, did the balance go into Colonial wine, or has it been bonded? It is fair to assume that what has been bonded does not go into consumption until the duty has been paid, and if you have taken the figures of bonded spirits into your calculation it is a mistake? For purposes of comparison we did it on precisely the same principle for the previous year. The 197,981 gallons of spirits must be accounted for.
5172. To get at the true amount of liquor consumed you have to take that on which excise and import duty have been paid, have you not? Yes.
5173. For the purpose of comparison it does not make a difference of about 30,000 gallons? I do not suppose it does.

G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

The Rev. F. B. Boyce, being recalled, was further examined:—

- Rev. F. B. Boyce.
9 Aug., 1886.
5174. President.] Do you give us to-day any authority from the League showing that you are their representative? I have no written authority, but last Friday afternoon a meeting of the Central Committee was held, at which I was appointed to represent the League before the Commission this afternoon.
5175. Then you give us verbally the statement with which of course we shall be content that you represent the League, and that representation, I presume, is to stand good not only for what you are going to say but for what you have said? I think so. I would not be quite sure on that point. I do not exactly remember what I said, but I think I expressed the views of the League generally.
5176. Reverting to your examination on the last occasion, you may remember that you gave the figures for the drink bill for the current year, as I think, £300,000 higher than for last year, that is to say, that the drink bill for 1885 would be higher by that amount than the drink bill for 1884. You remember, perhaps, that I pointed out to you that the consumption almost through the line of intoxicating liquors had diminished? Yes.
5177. Yet the drink bill had increased. Taking spirits alone there had been a decrease, but there had been an increase in the consumption of beer. You said you would look further into the matter? I have done so to some extent, but I have not been able to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion. I added on the total quantity of spirits manufactured in the Colony to that which had been passing through the Customs; then I deducted the exports. The exports are more by 100,000 gallons than the quantity of spirits manufactured in the Colony, and therefore that does not make on the whole any material difference as regards the the amount per head, but I am unable to arrive at any satisfactory conclusion upon this point specially, that is as to where all the Colonial spirits go to. We made them out to be 197,000 gallons last year.

5178. These were bonded figures were they not? They were the figures of the Inspector of Distilleries.

5179. Do you not think you took your figures from the wrong column? If I am wrong at all it must be in taking in the Colonial spirits, and having nothing to do with the export of spirits. There are 50,000 or 60,000 gallons missing after allowing for exports.

5180. Do you think that if you conferred with the Inspector of Distilleries, you could account for that? I have conferred with him on the items.

5181. If it is a fact that the drink bill has not increased I think the community is entitled to all credit for that fact, and not to the discredit of a presumable increase in the drink bill? I quite agree with you; we love to be fair. It is a complicated matter. In my computation I only made the drink bill increase 1s. 8d. per head on the whole. Of course the increase of population has to be allowed for. In the previous year I made it 6s. 2d. per head less, and what I understand generally is that the consumption of spirits is decreasing, and that the consumption of beer is increasing.

5182. When you made out your list for 1884, could you ascertain from what figures of the Collector of Customs with regard to Colonial spirits you made it? I took the figures from the Parliamentary return.

5183. Mr. Hutchison.] At the last meeting I gave it as my opinion that the Local Option League would accept the three points contained in the Queensland Act; what are those points? The Local Option League have authorized me to say that they would like to see those three points contained in any ballot-paper. The first is, that the sale of intoxicating liquors should be prohibited; the second, that the number of licenses should be reduced to a certain number, to be specified on the paper, and not to be less than two-thirds of the existing number; and the third, that no new licenses shall be granted; of course we have the last at the present time.

5184. President.] We shall be much obliged if Mr. Boyce will clear up these statistics for us? There is a calculation made by Mr. Abigail which I should like to bring before the Commission. In 1882, the first year of the new Act, the consumption of liquor was less per head of the population than in 1881, the last year of the old Act: spirits, 8 gallons; wine, 1½ gallon; and beer, 9 gallons. This shows the effect of the new Licensing Act.

5185. Do the local optionists, as a body, propose to embody in any Bill which comes before Parliament the alternatives in the Queensland Act? Yes.

5186. Exactly the same? As nearly as possible; they are those which I have just mentioned.

5187. You are prepared to accept the three which you have stated? Yes.

5188. With the results mentioned in the Queensland Act respectively? Yes, on the ballot-paper.

5189. I suppose that intoxicating liquors include beer as regards prohibition? Yes.

5190. Without any question as to alcoholic strength? None, as far as I know.

5191. No compensation is provided for in the Queensland Act? No.

5192. It is said that in Queensland there are more spirits consumed than in any other British Colony? I cannot tell; the Act only came into force at the beginning of this year.

5193. Nothing has been done under that Act? A vote has been taken at Rockhampton in favour of the liquor traffic; that is, to allow the public-houses to remain without any increase.

5194. With regard to the remedies for the liquor traffic, do you recognize any other remedy than legislation? I recognize moral suasion as well as legislation, but I look upon legislation as the most important factor. There is one great historical case to which I would refer, and that is the cause of Irish temperance reformation. Between the years 1838 and 1845 Father Matthew was the means of inducing 4,000,000 of people to take the pledge in Ireland, and the number of public-houses was considerably reduced; but for two reasons that wonderful reformation, which also reduced the crime of the country most materially, had not any permanent effect. One reason of this was the Irish famine; the most important reason was that the Irish people had not the right to shut up the public-houses; therefore the temptation was ever present with them; the consequence was that the people in very large numbers relapsed into their drinking habits. If the people had had local option in those days it is quite possible that Ireland to-day would be one of the most prosperous countries in the world, if not the most prosperous, because there is very little doubt, from the feeling prevalent at that time, that had local option been in force every public-house would have been closed. Father Matthew, towards the end of his life, became very strongly in favour of absolute prohibition.

5195. You do not attribute the Irish question in its present development to drink? No, very partially.

5196. You say that Ireland would have been prosperous? Ireland spends about £10,000,000 a year in strong drink; she would be prosperous if so large an amount of money was not wasted.

5197. What is the drink bill of the United Kingdom according to your revised statistics? Last year it was about £3 7s. 6d. per head. In the United States, 1884, about £1 13s. 3d.

5198. How much in round numbers? About 123,000,000 in the United Kingdom.

5199. I think Sir Wilfred Lawson fixed it at 120,000,000? Yes. The Rev. Dr. Dawson Burns makes it 123,000,000.

5200. How does that drink bill compare with the drink bill of this Colony? The amount per head for this Colony is £4 13s. 6d. against £3 7s. 6d. for the United Kingdom.

5201. Would you not consider that that would be accounted for to a considerable extent by the difference in price? The difference in price has something to do with it.

5202. Then these figures give us no idea as to the quantities for the respective countries; it only means that so much more went out of the pockets of the consumers? Yes.

5203. In spite of these figures we may be a more temperate nation? Yes, but we always have to remember that there are a very large number of people in New South Wales who live a considerable distance away from public-houses, the population being so much scattered. Most of the farmers live too far away from a public-house to be able to go for their dinner beer. They drink in town once a week or once a fortnight, but not at home at their work. The drink bill of New South Wales is made up chiefly from the consumption of the people in the metropolis and the other towns.

5204. You are willing to admit that there may be a less quantity of strong liquor consumed in this Colony than in the United Kingdom? It is a matter I have not gone into, but I think it quite possible.

5205. Don't you think it worth going into so as to be perfectly fair, inasmuch as a comparison by figures is not a good criterion; it may only show comparative wealth? I think it is a matter of some interest, but you can never overlook the fact that our population is so widely scattered, and in many instances is so far away from any place where intoxicating liquors can be got. I believe that a great number of our population in the interior are amongst the most sober in the world in their own homes.

5206. You do not think they would be if they were near a public-house? If they were near the temptation I am sure they would drink far more than they do now. Many would fall away. I have noticed the difference between the people where there is a public-house and where there is no public-house in farming localities.

5207. You know there are a large number of parishes in England where no drink is sold at all? Yes.

5208. In those parishes the temptation is removed is it not? Yes, but the distance which people have to travel in England to obtain drink is so very small. Take a farming district in this country like Orange; I dare say that the majority of the farmers in that district live on an average 3 or 4 miles from a public-house.

5209. Did you find the shearers a temperate class? They are a travelling class; they do not belong to the ordinary population. Shepherds are dying out, the squatters go in for fencing.

5210. Do you think the people in the towns and townships in this Colony are ready for local option. Do you think they would vote upon it? I think they would in many parts; not in all. Opinion is much more advanced in some parts than in others. It is the beauty of local option that it goes with public opinion; it cannot go beyond it. There are a great number of towns where they would be very glad to have in force the second proposal in the Queensland Act, viz., to reduce the number of houses to one-third, and I think there are many country towns where the people would like to have prohibition. I am quite certain there are many farming districts where the people would like to have prohibition.

5211. Local option or prohibition through local option? I mean prohibition through local option.

5212. The League repudiates the idea of compensation: Do you think the people of this country are at one with the League in that respect? I think the people of this country are divided on that point.

5213. You must have conversed with many people who hold the same views on the subject as our Bishop? Yes.

5214. Of course you respect a man who says, "I must say that compensation ought to be the law; it seems unjust to destroy any trade without it." What is your experience? My experience is this: I have met many persons who have believed in what is termed compensation, but directly they have been asked to discuss the matter they have had to content themselves with a bare assertion, and they have never really thought the matter out. I think the majority of persons who are in favour of compensation are persons so thoughtless as regards the matter at issue that they have never considered it. I must say that I think the majority of those I have consulted are against compensation.

5215. Is it not likely that the difficulty of obtaining a compensation fund strikes some people? It is quite possible. That is a serious difficulty.

5216. Is it not the difficulty which perhaps induces the League to abandon the idea of compensation? No.

5218. Do you not think that in that matter you are taking a very strict view of the law. Do you not think that although the hotel-keeper has only an annual license, the intention of the Legislature practically is that the man is to be licensed as long as he behaves himself? Whatever the license may be on the face of it yet practically it is an understood thing that he gets his renewal at the end of the year as a matter of course, unless there is some objection to the conduct of his house; the magistrates both in England and here have acted upon that principle continuously, so that some people have been half a century in the same house, and some of course for a very much less period, but every man when he gets his license considers it to be one that is as continuous as his good conduct. I do not mean to say it is a vested right in the sense in which some people say it is, but I say to my apprehension it is much more than a mere annual privilege. As regards his supposed legal right, I take it that there are two points in the present Act in which his license might be refused every year. One is, if it interferes with the good order of the neighbourhood, and the other is the erection of a public school or a church near to the house. For instance at Pymont a large public school has been built by the State at a cost of £20,000 on a site near to two public-houses; the magistrates have full power to close up those houses, on the ground that they are close to that school, and the landlords would have no compensation at all. It only requires an agitation on the part of the residents to cause the Magistrates to enforce the law. Then as regards the compensation of the man who thinks he has a continuous right to a license because it has always been granted. I maintain that the publicans now are fully aware of the agitation for the reduction of the number of public-houses, and as public servants they should take the agitation into account, and recognize the precarious nature of their tenure. They cannot shut their eyes to what is taking place in Victoria, Queensland, Canada, and other portions of the British Empire; if they do they are certainly most unwise, for they have practically notice to quit.

5220. I suppose it is similar to the Trade Defence League in England? Yes.

5221. Which is also a kind of retaliation against the agitation there for a similar purpose? I think so. With regard to the legal right of a man who might be owner of a public-house, it is a matter of fact that the magistrates in Sydney refused, a short time ago, the license of a house belonging to Judge Josephson. His Honor applied through power-of-attorney, intending to transfer, of course, directly the license was granted; the magistrates refused, and he received no compensation.

5222. I suppose there was no fund from which he could receive compensation? He did not ask for it.

5223. It would have been futile to do so in the present state of the law? I only refer to the matter as to the legal right of owners of property.

5224. Mr. Hutchison. Had the house been licensed long? Yes, for years; it was situated at the corner of Cleveland-street and George-street, Redfern. When I gave evidence on the first occasion before the Commission I did not on behalf of the League as I told you; but I am now prepared to speak on their behalf. I was requested to put in the paper read by Mr. Taylor, and I should be very glad if the Commission could receive it.

5225. It was and is published under their authority? Yes. It deals with the whole question of compensation.

5226. President.] Will you please to epitomize your nine reasons against compensation? First, compensation is without precedent in any part of the world, including the United States of America, Canada, Queensland, and Great Britain

Rev.
F. B. Boyce.
9 Aug., 1886.

5227. How about Victoria? The only exception is that of Victoria, and there the publicans almost pay compensation themselves out of funds raised for fines and increase of license fees.

5228. Buttressed by the Consolidated Revenue if they prove insufficient? Yes. My second reason is, that in this Colony many public-houses have been closed without any compensation. The new Act required larger accommodation, and if landlords had not these extra rooms, and did not care to build up to the requirements of the law, they had simply to go, and they went without compensation. And again, there was no compensation paid when the hours of sale were restricted at night during week days, and for two hours on Sunday. Then many occupations have been interfered with, but there has been no compensation. Witness one notable instance: Cobb & Co. had been running their coaches from Bathurst to Bourke for a great many years; the Government made a railway and ran the firm off the line; their business for over 400 miles was destroyed; they had erected stables at several points at considerable expense, yet they received no compensation. Again, there was a large number of public-houses along that road; the Government built a railway, destroyed their business, and gave no compensation to the publicans. Of course they knew that the Government were going to build the line. I might take another line; some four years ago no one expected that a railway would be built so soon between Blayney and Murrumburrah, but it will be an accomplished fact in a short time, and consequently many more public-houses will be closed, and without compensation their business will be taken from them. My fourth reason is, the license to carry on traffic in intoxicating liquors is a privilege granted to the holder, and not a right to which he can any legal claim.

5229. What do you mean? If it be regarded as property at all it is the property of the State and not that of any private individual.

5230. But that is not consistent with fact; he can transfer it, and the State allows him? He transfers his own property.

5231. Quite so, it is not the property of the State, for if it were so he could not assign it? I could admit that it is his property within the year, but I cannot admit it is his property directly the year is up. Then if free trade in liquor were enacted, and a large number of additional licenses granted, the sales of the existing publicans would be seriously affected. Now suppose the licensing laws were done away with to-morrow and free trade in liquor were enacted, I presume that nearly every grocer would at once sell liquor. Many other trades would take it up, and the business of the publican would practically be destroyed, but what compensation would existing publicans expect then?

5232. That, again, is the question of the destruction of a business by competition? As we are dealing simply with the moral right of the publican to compensation, I maintain that the competition which the State might subject him to might be taken into account. Then suppose a local option vote was against the publicans, it would only affect the bars; it would not affect the accommodation of travellers, the stabling, the providing of dinners, breakfasts, and teas and various things, which are the proper and legitimate work of a public-house.

5233. Would not the effect be to prohibit the consumption in public-houses of liquor, even by the inmates—is it only aimed at the bars? It is aimed at the suppression of the sale of liquor, but I maintain the house could still be largely used for the accommodation of travellers.

5234. It only destroys a portion of his trade? Yes.

5235. But I think his place is—I am sorry to say so—merely a drinking shop; of course he has no other trade but drink? If he has perverted the true business of a licensed victualler that is his own look out.

5236. It is questionable whether he has perverted it; he is not compelled to keep beef-steaks and onions always ready; he must have by law so many certain sized rooms, and no more? He is expected to keep provisions. One of the reasons, I believe, why accommodation for travellers is so poor in Sydney is because the business of intoxicants is overdone, and men will carry it on and neglect the main portion; if the bars were closed I believe that the accommodation for travellers would be very much superior to what it is at the present time.

5237. You know by the strict letter of the law he is not compelled to keep refreshments? I forget whether he is compelled to supply beef-steaks, and so on, but I merely want to show that the business of the true licensed victualler will not be destroyed.

5238. The business of the licensed victualler who keeps the hotel properly so-called? Yes.

5239. What are your other reasons against compensation? That it would be something contrary to public liberty if the vote were dependent upon paying a certain sum, that is, if the persons who voted against the publicans were fined for so doing by having to pay compensation. Then again, the cost to the people arising through the sale of intoxicants has already been enormous. It is acknowledged that about three-fourths of the crime is traceable to intemperance. Thirteen principal gaols have to be maintained, and in every town a small gaol or lock-up. An army of magistrates and police has been necessary. The small fee of £30 a year from each publican has but met a fraction of the cost.

5240. You mean to say that publicans have not supported the police and other legal administrations they have made necessary? Yes; my last reason is that no "Civil Damage Law" has been enforced here against the publicans—that is, that they have often sold drink where, if they had refused it, the lives of individuals might have been saved.

5241. Where is there such a law? In various parts of the United States.

5242. That is, if some person's representative can prove that he came to a bad end—broke his leg or was drowned whilst being drunk—having received the liquor in A's house, he would have an action against A? Yes.

5243. What State has that law? I think there are several States. Iowa, I think, was one State, but it is now under prohibition.

5244. It is a sort of Publicans' Liability Act? Yes.

5245. Mr. Roseby.] Can you name any places in the United Kingdom where there are no public-houses, and what the reports are as to the moral and physical condition of the people? I cannot at present name any single case, but there are over 1,300 such places. A full list of them is to be found in the Convocation Report of the province of Canterbury for 1869.

5246. The reports respecting these places show that they contrast very favourably indeed in a moral and social point of view with places where public-houses exist? Yes; I will give you the exact words of the Report.

Rev.
F. B. Boyce.
9 Aug., 1836.

Report. The Convocation of Canterbury recommended local option, and I may mention that the claim was afterwards backed up by the signatures of 13,000 clergymen of the Established Church who advocated local option as to the issue and renewal of licenses. The report says:—

Your Committee, in conclusion, are of opinion that as the ancient and avowed object of licensing the sale of intoxicating liquors is to supply a supposed public want without detriment to the public welfare, a legal power of restraining the issue or renewal of licenses should be placed in the hands of the persons most deeply interested and affected, namely, the inhabitants themselves, who are entitled to protection from the injurious consequences of the present system. Such a power would, in effect, secure to the districts willing to exercise it, the advantages now enjoyed by the numerous parishes in the Province of Canterbury, where, according to reports furnished to your Committee, owing to the influence of the landowner, no sale of intoxicating liquors is licensed. . . . In consequence of the absence of these inducements to crime and pauperism, according to evidence before the Committee, the intelligence, morality, and comfort of the people are such as the friends of temperance would have anticipated.

5247. You have some knowledge also of places in the United States and Canada where prohibition obtains? Yes; in the States there is prohibition, chiefly through local option, in Vineland, New Jersey; Dorchester County, Kent County, Maryland; Rockwell County, Texas; Owenton, Trumble County, Kentucky; Milville, New Jersey; Carolton, Georgia; Olathe, Kansas; Pullman, near Chicago; Potter County, Pennsylvania. The results are excellent. Also through the land-owner in Bessbrook, Ireland. A correspondent of the London Daily Telegraph speaks in glowing terms of the effects. The only places in Canada which I remember especially are Georgetown, and the City of Fredericton, and Guelph. There is a large number of places in Canada where they are under prohibition through local option; in fact it is estimated that there are more than a million persons residing in those places.

5248. Under the provisions of the Scott Act? Yes; in many cases second polls have been taken, and in most cases they have affirmed what was previously agreed to by the people.

5249. Are you aware, from your reading, that the feeling in favour of local option is growing very much in the United Kingdom? I am certain it is.

5250. The champion of the principle in England is Sir Wilfred Lawson? Yes.

5252. Was Sir Wilfred Lawson not defeated at the general election before the last? He was defeated by a gentleman who wore the blue ribbon—I believe a thorough prohibitionist—but he was only defeated by ten votes.

5253. His defeat was not at all attributable to his advocacy of local option? Not at all. Indeed a high compliment was paid to his principles in a gentleman holding similar views being brought out against him. He was absent during the whole of the election. Last month, when he was present during the election, he was returned by a good majority.

5254. The abolition of drink bars at hotels would not by any means do away with the comfortable hotel accommodation in other respects? Not in the least. I think it would rather improve it, because the publican would be enabled to give more attention to his legitimate business, which I understand to be the accommodation of travellers.

5255. You state, with reference to the comparative cost of liquor in this Colony and other colonies there appears to be slight discrepancy, yet the consumption is enormous? Yes.

5256. We know that large quantities of cider are made by farmers in England. Is any return made showing the quantity? I think it most likely that it would be.

5257. Is there an excise duty on beer in England? I think so.

5258. At any rate the State gets a return of the quantity of beer and porter brewed? Yes.

5259. Do you think that the sentiment in favour of local option is a growing one in this Colony? I think so, most decidedly.

5260. You have had extensive experience in the Colony as a clergyman? Yes.

5261. How long? Seventeen years.

5262. During that time you have had charge of some country parishes? I had charge of the parishes of George's Plains, Orange, Molong, and Wellington, including the Bogan River, and for a time I was on the River Darling. For four years I have been in Sydney.

5263. Do you regard the rural population among whom you have lived as generally a sober class? Yes.

5264. Do you think that many of the farming districts, such as Orange, would gladly avail themselves, if they had the opportunity, of the principle of local option? Most decidedly.

5265. The drinking power holds a firmer grasp in the large centres of population than in the scattered population of the country? I am quite sure of that. There is one very important point which I think the Commission ought to take notice of, and that is that two-thirds of the arrests for drunkenness occur in the Metropolitan districts, although in that district there is only one-third of the population of the Colony.

5266. You know, as a clergyman, that drink is the cause of nearly all the pauperism and misery with which you come in contact in some form or other? Nearly all; two-thirds at least.

5267. And that is the experience of all who follow the same important avocation as yourself? As a rule, I think it is.

5268. Are you aware that temperance organizations here are growing in numerical strength and power? I think they are.

5269. And yet, side by side with that fact there is an increased consumption of drink? We want to settle the point about the consumption. There is no doubt, to my mind, that since the new Act has been in force the consumption of drink per head of the population has lessened.

5270. You think that if public-houses are allowed to exist they ought to be brought under very stringent regulations? The law ought to be thoroughly enforced, and wherever power was required to enforce it, Parliament ought to step in and give that power.

5271-2. You are aware that the Sunday closing law is very generally and flagrantly violated? I know that that is the case. I know that it is very much violated. The Local Option League requested me to ask the Commission to consider the desirableness of recommending the insertion in our Licensing Act of a clause similar to that in the English Act. While on the question of the breaking of the law there is one important fact which I wish to bring under the notice of the Commission, that is, that the old law was broken more than the new one is; at all events that is my opinion. It is often argued that if we were to reopen the public-houses on Sundays the law would be broken less. I remember many years since going into the town of Canonbar on a Sunday evening about 6 o'clock, and I found that the three public-houses were doing a roaring trade. Of course they were supposed to be closed at that time. I remember that when I lived at Orange there were lights in almost all the bars all through the Sunday evening. It was a well known fact that the law was broken in the majority of houses. I want to point out to the Commission also that the convictions of publicans for Sunday selling during prohibited hours on Sunday in 1881, under the old Act were 527, or 43 per month, and in 1882, under the new Act, 238, or only 19 per month. This fact is very significant in my opinion.

Rev.
F. B. Boyce.
9 Aug., 1896.

5273. You are in favor of that clause of the Act being similar to that of the English Act? The Local Option League is in favor of that.

5274. You are strongly in favor of keeping the public-houses closed on Sundays? Yes.

5275. Do you believe that there is any general desire on the part of the community to open the places at all? The general opinion on the part of the community, I believe, is to see the law properly enforced.

5276. You believe that the clamour for the opening of the houses is principally on the part of a small minority of law-breakers. I would not say altogether law-breakers. I think that there are some men who do not keep public-houses who are in favor of their being opened on Sundays, but I think that they are a small minority out of the whole community.

5277. Do you believe that there are respectable people in the trade who desire to have the advantage of rest on Sunday the same as other tradesmen? Yes.

5278. And they are often forced to keep their houses open because others do so? Yes, I think it a great shame that the law-abiding publican should suffer from the competition of the law-breaking publican.

5279. Are you in favor of barmaids being employed? No. The Local Option League asked me to bring that matter, among lesser points, before the Commission, and ask that the employment of barmaids might be prohibited. The League was the means of having a Bill introduced in Parliament 2½ years ago for the abolition of barmaids, and it was defeated in the Upper House by a majority of one only.

5280. You think that the avocation is a degrading and an injurious one for women? Yes, and many thousands of women have petitioned Parliament against the employment of barmaids.

5281. Has it come under your notice of late years that a number of young men have given way to drink? Yes, a large number.

5282. Do you know that in some hotels there are several bars what are called upper bars? I have heard that there are.

5283. And that these places are presided over by females? Yes. They are very bad places indeed.

5284. You believe that if a house is licensed it should have only one bar? Yes.

5285. And that the business should be conducted as publicly as possible? Yes.

5286. Would you raise the age at which a publican may supply a youth with drink? The League desired me to recommend that the age should be raised to 18, and further, that part of the Canadian law should be adopted, which would prevent children under the age of 18 going to public-houses as messengers for others.

5287. That is that publicans should not be permitted to supply children with liquor for adults? Yes. It is believed that a large number of children receive harm when perhaps they are 10, 12, or 13 years of age through going to public-house bars, and standing there while they are being attended to, when probably they have to listen to improper language, and see a great deal that they ought not to see. It is thought that the State ought to prevent children being served.

5289. You are strongly in favour of allowing the people to say whether public-houses should exist or not? I look on that as the people's right; they ought not to have public-houses forced on them, as at present. In nearly every case the communities have not asked for the public-houses which exist; they have simply been forced on them, and they are compelled to allow them to remain.

5290. Are you aware that the present local option law has to some extent been neutralized by magistrates licensing larger houses? Yes; the Local Option League are very particular in desiring the Commission to understand that they are against all houses in the matter of voting; that no class of houses should be excluded from the vote of the people.

5291. Mr. Hutchison.] In other words, they would take discretionary power from the magistrates after a vote was taken? Yes.

5292. Mr. Roseby.] I suppose you see that there is ultimate danger in having a number of people in these large houses, with the attraction of drink always present with them? Very great danger. We all know what human nature is, and how liable it is to fall into temptation; and the ever present drink is a most formidable danger, especially to the weak.

5293. You remarked that the noble efforts of the late Father Mathew in Ireland were to a large extent nullified through the extensive facilities given to the people to obtain drink? Yes.

5294. Do you consider that a large amount of the violence which we read of in that land is incited by the use of intoxicants? Yes.

5295. Mr. Hutchison.] Can you name any instance where liquor-making and the sale of liquor have been prohibited in Ireland with good results, and without compensation; are you aware that during the famine brewing was prohibited? I do not remember that.

5296. It has twice been prohibited in Ireland, and in no case was compensation given; it was done with a most beneficial result; it kept the people from starving, and they were better off even during famine time by virtue of prohibition than they had been before;—are you not aware of that? I am not.

5297. The President asked you whether as a League you had ever recognized compensation? The League never has recognized compensation.

5298. Does the League work on the same lines as the United Kingdom Alliance on this question? Yes.

5299. The United Kingdom Alliance has never recognized compensation? Never.

5300. The League never will recognize it on principle? As far as I know and believe, it will not.

- Rev. F. B. Boyce.
9 Aug., 1886.
5302. You believe that in many places here the people are prepared for local option, although not everywhere? Yes.
5303. You would not make local option an Imperial Act, compelling people to vote immediately it was passed, and then every three years as at present? That is a point which the League desired me to mention; they would like to have a vote taken in any district whenever one-sixth of the electors demanded it.
5304. And not until then? Not until then.
5305. They are not to be forced to vote until a vote is demanded? Precisely.
5306. Therefore you would have an option law just waiting until the people are ready to put it into operation? Yes; that is the Canadian system.
5307. You said that you were prepared on behalf of the League to accept the Queensland Act;—is there no difference between the Queensland Act and your claims? I only said that we were ready to accept the Queensland Act as regards particular points; for instance, the three questions on the ballot-paper.
5308. Is there anything material in the Act that you object to? I cannot say just at present.
5309. Does the Local Option League desire the voting to take place by Parliamentary or Municipal voters? That is another point which I was requested to mention to the Commission. The League has always asked for Parliamentary electors; but it is believed, although no vote has ever been taken in the League on the point, that a majority is in favour of extending the franchise, not only to Parliamentary electors but also to women.
5310. Is there any appreciable number on your Central Committee who are in favour of giving compensation to publicans? No, I know only one person on the committee who would favour the principle of compensation.
5311. Has he said that he would allow compensation? I am not prepared to state exactly what his views are. Like most other persons who favor compensation he never seems to have any sound arguments to support his view.
5312. You know that sometimes the Magistrates will grant a license to a new house which the law gives them a right to do, even where the vote has been against it, and do you know that the marketable value of that license is computed to be from £1,000 to £1,500 immediately it is granted? I have heard that that is the case.
5313. This is an enormous gift direct from the Government, and perhaps two years afterwards the owner of the place comes forward with a claim for compensation because the gift is not to be continued;—what would you think of such a claim? Looked at in that light I should think that the claim was one of the most unjust ever put forward.
5314. Inasmuch as these people have enjoyed the privilege for a long while, they have no claim to compensation when the people, who grant them the privilege, refuse to continue it? None whatever.
5315. Are you familiar with M'Laggin's Act for Scotland? I just know the general features of it.
5316. Is the Queensland Act very much like it? Yes, except with regard to voting.
5317. Have you any suggestion to give as to the division of the Colony beyond municipalities for the purpose of taking votes? The League believes that where there happens to be no municipality, as far as possible, the Parliamentary electorates should be followed; of course taking the Parliamentary roll as the basis of the voters.
5318. You do not purpose going into details yourselves, but when you are asked a question you are prepared to show a forcible way of carrying out the principle? Yes.
5319. The League do not purpose introducing a Bill or preparing one; they rather would urge the Government to bring in a Bill embodying the three points in the ballot-paper? Yes. The League has done what it could to bring the whole matter before the people with a view, of course, of influencing the Government and preparing the way for such a law as they propose. I would point out that the last Parliament had petitions presented to it containing the signatures, I dare say, of 50,000 people asking for this principle of full local option, and on the second day of the present Session Parliament had presented to it a petition containing 24,000 signatures, asking for the same right. I know that the secretary of the League has in his possession a supplementary petition containing many thousand signatures. There has been no other question on which Parliament has been so persistently petitioned during the last four or five years as this question of granting local option.
5320. I think that I have heard some local optionists say that they do not believe that the cry for compensation on the part of the publicans is an honest one, but rather one raised to shelve the whole question;—have you views in that direction? I think that many have raised the cry honestly, but I think that others have raised it in the hope that it would make local option impracticable.
5321. You think that the question of compensation to the trade is raised with the object of creating a sympathetic cry which will stand in the way of a local option measure being passed? In a large measure.
5322. They do not want compensation; they want to be allowed to continue their public-houses? I think that a great majority of them want to continue their businesses.
5323. Mr. Withers.] It has been stated here that the lower dens are really less objectionable and dangerous than the better class of hotels;—is that your opinion? I think that there is danger all round. The lower houses are a danger to the working classes, and the better houses are dangerous to the upper classes. I think, as a whole, the lower houses are the most dangerous, because the working man has not as good or attractive a home as his richer neighbour, and therefore he necessarily goes off to the public-house.
5324. A straightforward man, who is a retired publican, told me that the publicans had some idea of having a strict agreement among themselves to close rigidly on Sundays, and they hoped to raise such an outcry on the part of the public that the Government would be forced to accede to their demands;—do you think that there would be any general outcry on the part of the public? I disagree with him entirely.
5325. What class would it be do you think who would raise an outcry? I think that they would be persons who would have a pecuniary interest in the trade. It is a matter of fact that the opposition to local option and restriction generally comes from those who have a pecuniary interest in the trade. It is a very notable fact that when the last local option vote was taken in the Colony there was not a single public meeting in favour of more public-houses being established; all the meetings were against the increase of public-houses. I should like to make some reference to the arrests for drunkenness. I know that some persons are under the impression that in consequence of reconvictions the arrests for drunkenness are scarcely worthy of much notice, but as the arrests for drunkenness have steadily increased with the increase of population it appears to me that they deserve considerable notice. The increase or decrease in the number of arrests for drunkenness is usually looked upon as a test of the success or otherwise of the Licensing system. The convictions for drunkenness in Sydney in—
- increase

Sunday convictions are only about one-fourth of those on Saturdays. Probably much of the Sunday arrests are due to drink purchased on Saturdays; the difference is of great importance. About two-thirds of the arrests for drunkenness are made in and around Sydney, leaving one-third for the rest of the colony. I also desire to say on behalf of the League that it is their desire that public-houses should be closed on Parliamentary election days; the League regards this as an important thing, because a very large number of men appear to be bribed or predisposed towards a certain class of candidates by reason of the distribution of beer.

5326. Mr. Hutchison.] Do you know whether that is the law anywhere else? It is in Canada, and in Victoria I believe under the new Act. I might mention that in Canada the public-houses are closed at 7 o'clock on Saturday nights.

5327. Mr. Roseby.] Would you be in favour of closing the hotels here at 7 o'clock on Saturday nights? I am in favour of doing so, but as to the advisableness of doing so immediately in the city I am not prepared to express an opinion. The League is very anxious that whatever poll may be taken it should always be on a simple distinct issue, unmixed with any other question beyond that as to the existence or otherwise of public-houses, and as regards majority they are prepared to accept an eleven-twentieth majority which is the majority allowed by the present Licensing Act.

5328. Mr. Hutchison.] Would you require that majority for each of the votes? Yes.

5329. And if one vote failed to get that majority it would not pass? If the vote in favour of prohibition were carried by a majority of course it would govern the other votes.

5330. In other words if prohibition is carried the other two votes are nullified? Yes.

5331. Mr. Roseby.] In case a vote is taken how long would you have elapse before another vote was taken? Three years.

5332. Mr. Hutchison.] Would you have a fresh vote taken whether it was demanded or not? No, the vote would remain in force for three years. If at the end of that time one-sixth of the electors petitioned for a poll it would be taken.

5333. Suppose no poll were taken would the law which was in force during the previous three years remain in force? Decidedly.

WEDNESDAY, 4 AUGUST, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,	A. HUTCHISON, Esq.,
T. COLLS, Esq., J.P.,	J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.,
G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Richard Theodore Booth called in, sworn, and examined:—

5334. President.] What is your vocation? A temperance lecturer.

5335. In connection with what particular organization, if any? None; I have always gone on the broad basis simply of a reformer.

5336. But representing no other organization? No particular one.

5337. Are you not affiliated to any organization? I am a member of several temperance organizations.

5338. In what respect does your advocacy of the temperance movement differ from that of others. What particular principles do you advocate? I think that I cover the whole ground; I am considered an all-round reformer.

5339. Reform by legislation? Yes.

5340. By what is called moral suasion or any other factor—do you combine all forms of reformation? Yes, social, educational, prohibitional, legislative, and moral suasion. I think that I advocate every phase of the question.

5341. I presume you consider that the drink question can be best dealt with by a combination of influences or agencies? Well, I feel that we require every agency. I don't think there is a single one of the phases that I advocate which can be laid aside until our end is reached.

5342. You have been travelling all over the world as a temperance lecturer? Pretty much in my own country.

5343. What is your own country? America.

5344. You can speak, as a native of America, of all forms of American legislation? Yes, I think I can. Some new laws have come into vogue since I left, six years ago, but I am familiar with their workings.

Mr.
R. T. Booth.
4 Aug., 1886.

- Mr. R. T. Booth. 5345. You have not been in America for six years? No, except for a flying visit of three months.
- 4 Aug., 1886. 5346. But you are acquainted with recent legislation? I take the papers, and so am familiar with the working of new laws.
5347. In the United States? Yes.
5348. And Canada? Not so much in Canada, which we almost consider a foreign country. I am a New Yorker, but Liverpool is more familiar to us than any part of Canada.
5349. Are you well acquainted with this country? I have been in all the colonies except Western Australia.
5350. This is not your first visit to New South Wales? I have lived here for two years; I have built my home in Bowral.
5351. After a visit of two years to the Colony you must be pretty well acquainted with the habits of the people? Yes.
5352. Comparing their habits with those of people of other countries you have visited, and may know from long residence, do you consider that we as a community are very largely given to the abuse of intoxicants? Yes, I should think so.
5353. You don't think that we are as bad as the New Yorkers I hope? There are some phases of drinking here which are worse than you see in New York.
5354. What are they? There is far more drinking among women here than you would find in New York.
5355. But we have nothing in the city or the Colony comparable to the liquor saloons of New York in infamy? I don't know; they are about all the same you know.
5356. You never see, I imagine, in the Colony, barmaids half dressed? We have no barmaids at all there.
5357. Not in New York? If they have it is only recently.
5358. Have you been in San Francisco? Never.
5359. In Cincinnati? Yes.
5360. Does not the town of Cincinnati show you a much greater demoralization than you see here? Everything is far more open there than it is here; the Sabbath is made use of for beer gardens and so on, but I should not like to say that there is more crime attributable to drink there than here. I cannot give any figures; I am giving you simply the impressions of a passing stranger.
5361. You have only passed through it? I have been there as I have been in Sydney, for weeks at a time.
5362. And you have made it your study to see the worst which can be shown to you? Yes.
5363. Did you go as the temperance lecturer Mr. Booth? Yes, on each occasion I was there I was engaged in this work.
5364. I mean did you ever attempt to go incognito so to speak? Not in that city, but I have in Sydney.
5365. What is the worst you have seen here? I visited what is known as the slums of Sydney on a Saturday night. I have to confess that I found a very pleasing state of things on that particular occasion.
5366. You were agreeably surprised? I was, but if you want to compare Sydney with towns of the same size in Great Britain, then I say there is no comparison whatever. The slums of a town of this size in Great Britain is far darker and blacker than your imagination can picture it.
5367. I have been told and I have read that the worst dens in New York, Cincinnati, Chicago, and San Francisco, eclipse anything in Britain, and I am speaking entirely of dens in connection with the consumption of liquor? I think that the saloons in America are made use of by elements that have nothing to do with them either here or in Great Britain. For instance, it is a notorious fact that in the saloons of America jobs of all kinds are concocted in political rings.
5368. What was the worst you saw of our own iniquities in the way of liquor saloons? I have seen nothing but extensive drinking, and the squalor and evils that accompany it.
5369. You have not seen women made auxiliaries to the drinking vice here? Oh yes—barmaids.
5370. I do not mean barmaids—I mean in other ways, as decoys, by getting them to dance and exhibit themselves half naked? I have not seen anything of that sort. I ought to have said, in speaking of barmaids in America, that I speak with some little authority, because for ten years I was a drinking man myself, and during that time I was travelling constantly east of Mississippi.
5371. I suppose you mean that you were not a total abstainer. Were you a heavy drinker? I was all degrees—from the very beginning up to excess; it culminated in excess.
5372. And then I suppose the revelation came? Yes, ten years ago.
5373. Since then you have been a total abstainer? All the time; but before that period I never saw a woman behind a bar selling, nor did I ever see one before a bar drinking where men were drinking. I have seen low characters slip into a low saloon and get a drink when nobody else was present.
5374. What occupation did you follow during this drinking period? I was a manufacturer part of the time, and travelled about the States a good deal.
5375. You have been acquainted, I suppose, with the New England States as well as the Southern and Western States? I am not familiar with the Southern States; I was there for three years with the army during the war. I have lived three years in the State of Massachusetts.
5376. You have been then in States where the full prohibition law prevails, as well as in States where optional permissive law prevails? Yes.
5377. And what judgment have you formed as to the relative efficacy of the two systems of legislation—for instance, in the State of Maine? I have never lived there; I have spent several weeks there at a time.
5378. What impression did you form of the prohibition law of Maine? I was very much in favour of it, seeing the results with my own eyes.
5379. And being then a drinking man? No.
5380. But still, I suppose, as a man with the ordinary curiosity of seeing how far legislation was effective;—how was it effective? Very extensively.
5381. It prevails still? Yes.
5382. In how many States has the prohibition law been adopted? I believe that seven of the States now have a prohibitory enactment, but only in three States has it been made constitutional. There is a difference between a law on the statute book and a constitutional enactment; in three of the States we have now a constitutional enactment.

5383. What do you call a constitutional enactment;—is it constitutional law? It is a law which has been put there by a two-thirds majority of the people. It is a question which has been submitted to the people who had voted directly upon it; and it cannot be annulled without a two-thirds majority of all the voters of the State.

Mr.
R. T. Booth.
4 Aug., 1886.

5384. That is to say, this prohibitory law is made by a two-thirds majority and cannot be abrogated, except by a similar majority? Yes.

5385. It is still subsisting? Yes, and has never been interfered with.

5386. Over what States? Kansas, Iowa, and Maine.

5387. Not Massachusetts? No; that is a local option State.

5388. Not in Illinois or Pennsylvania? No; it is only within three States that they have local option law.

5389. Give us the names of the States that have prohibitory law? Maine, Iowa, Kansas, New Hampshire, and Vermont. I would not be positive that there are seven States, but these are all that I can remember at present.

5390. Are you sure that the prohibitory system does prevail in these States? Yes, and never has there been a backward step taken in any of them.

5391. Will you state briefly what the prohibitory system is? A statutory law simply prohibiting the sale of drink.

5392. So you can exchange a new hat for a gallon of liquor? I do not know whether that would work or not.

5393. Does it restrict the sale, the use, and the manufacture of drink in those States? Under the Constitution they prohibit the sale, the manufacture, and the importation.

5394. But is it not true that in spite of this prohibition liquor is sold by chemists, druggists, and shops of that kind? I know that in some prohibitory enactments there is a provision for the sale of drink by chemists for medicinal and mechanical purposes. I am not certain it is not the same in the Constitutional enactment—I think it must be the same.

5395. A person going to an hotel in the State of Maine is restricted to temperance drinks? Yes, unless he violate the law; the hotelkeeper would not do it unless he was bribed.

5396. The hotelkeeper would not make any overtures? No; there are hotels where you can get liquor if you ask, without very much difficulty, but there are also hotels in certain districts where you cannot get it.

5397. I presume that the hotels where you can get it are in the seaport towns? Yes, and also in the large towns.

5398. The State of Maine has a small population? I think it has 3,000,000 inhabitants.

5399. I suppose the law works easily in country places—but with more friction in the big towns? Yes; one great disadvantage of the law in all these places is that it is in the hands of local authorities; if it were in the hands of a State constabulary, my impression is that it would be more easily enforced, but it is given to local authorities—magistrates and judges and officers. You have lived long enough in the world to know how difficult it is to enforce a law of that nature. We have a law which says you shall not steal, but men will steal.

5400. Cannot an ordinary constable who sees the liquor purchased in violation of the law prosecute? Oh, yes, but he is not a State officer at all, as he is here.

5401. The policeman then is a municipal officer? Yes.

5402. But is it not his duty to prosecute in such case? Certainly it is.

5403. Have you any police there that belong to cities in the States;—are there two kinds of police? At one time there was a constabulary to enforce the prohibitory law in the State of Massachusetts, but I do not know whether it has ever been employed in any other State.

5404. Are policemen in the State of Maine employes of local authorities? Yes, entirely.

5405. Does your impression of the character of the people in this country lead you to think that they are ready for prohibition? I do not think there is a sufficient sentiment yet to invite the Legislature to pass such a measure.

5406. Are your own views generally in favour of local option or of prohibition? It all depends upon the state of things which are existing; I think myself that a local option law is and should be the first step taken.

5407. Are you a local optionist and not a prohibitionist, or are you vice versa? I am both.

5408. They do not seem to me to be consistent? I think so.

5409. In the one case I apprehend there is absolute prohibition emanating from legislation? Yes, but then I am sufficiently democratic not to want to go in advance of the sentiments of the people. I do not believe that we should, and I know that great injury has resulted from putting laws upon the Statute Book before the people were ready to be subject to them.

5410. Then in some places you think that prohibition and in others local option would suit the people? Yes.

5411. You have lectured here for two years and have had miscellaneous audiences, largely composed of sympathisers and non-sympathisers;—do you think that the community is ready for local option? I certainly do.

5412. That is to say, you think there is a sufficient sentiment pervading the masses to induce them to vote when they are empowered by the Legislature for the prohibition in their areas of public-houses? I certainly do.

5413. In both town and country? Yes, in the part of the country which I have visited; I have not visited the interior.

5414. Have you been to Newcastle or Goulburn or Bathurst? No.

5415. The city then is your hunting ground? Yes, I have done most of my work in the city. I had 5,000 or 6,000 people every night for three weeks at the Exhibition Building in the Prince Alfred Park, and I think I have a right to judge something of public sentiment on these matters from such audiences. I judge largely, too, from what I have seen in other Colonies. For instance, I have visited all the principal cities outside of Melbourne.

5416. You are not a subject of Her Majesty? Oh, no.

5417. You are a denizen at present of this Colony, with a desire to remain here for some little time? Yes.

5418. And that being so you say that you are a local optionist? Yes.

5419. Will you explain your view of local option? My view is that in every community there should be a law upon the Statute Book giving the people when they see fit the power to totally prohibit the liquor traffic. Suppose a majority of the people in Bathurst are worked up to that point, then I say they should have have the right of saying, "We do not want any more public-houses; we want them closed; we will get on without them." That is my view of local option for this Colony. It is justice itself; it is a law which is on the Statute Book, but is a dead letter until a majority of the community are ready for it.

Mr.
R. T. Booth.
4 Aug., 1886.

5420. Do you think then that the law ought to be there? I say that the Legislature ought to provide the law leaving the persons concerned to bring it into active operation.

5421. And what proportion of people in any given area do you think ought to have that privilege of bringing it into force? A majority simply.

5422. A majority of the people who have got some kind of interest in the question as being ratepayers or as voters for Parliament? Voters.

5423. Which class do you prefer? I do not know the difference between them.

5424. What sort of individual ought to have the right to vote to bring in a certain law? Anybody who has a right to vote on any question.

5425. By virtue of his manhood? Yes.

5426. And women too? Yes.

5427. In point of fact it would be a plébiscite in your view—the whole mass would vote? If they have come to a proper age and understanding; I would not want idiots to vote.

5428. Practically, persons who now have Parliamentary votes would be your voters? I presume so.

5429. And a majority of them should bring the law into force? Yes.

5430. And that law should be restricted to the area for which they voted? Yes.

5431. For how long would you make the vote effective? For all eternity if I could have my way.

5432. I am afraid that we do not legislate for eternity and perhaps you had better be contented with a certain period? Well, I should say three years.

5433. That is you would have a fresh vote every three years? Yes.

5434. I suppose you think it a possible contingency that a local option vote may be in affirmation of the trade, that is, that the majority might vote "Yes" to the question "should there be any public-houses in this district?" Oh, yes.

5435. You are prepared for that contingency? Certainly.

5436. Suppose they voted in that way and thus fastened the liquor traffic on the district for three years, would that be a disappointment to you? A most bitter disappointment.

5437. Then at the bottom of your local option there is a desire to reform the traffic; it is not merely a political reform? No.

5438. Your local option is not to give some kind of political method to the people but to try to eradicate the evil? Yes.

5439. You would be disappointed and discouraged if the people voted in the affirmative? I should not be discouraged.

5440. You would try to get the vote reversed at the end of the three years? Certainly I should; I should find out where we had failed and try to make a correction.

5441. From what you say I presume that you would not think it wise to put the Act into operation by force of a majority until the majority should be ready for it; until you were sure of the majority? You could not put into operation until there was a majority.

5442. Suppose the law were in force but to put it into operation required a majority you would be sure of your majority first? Oh, no.

5443. You would take your chance? Yes; I should take advantage of the first opportunity which the law would give me.

5444. Do you think that things are ripe for such a law to be put in our Statute Book? I certainly do.

5445. What do you think of the chances of carrying such a law into operation by a majority;—do you think that you could command majorities in various areas here? I think that in the first year there would be many towns and cities in the Colony which could be carried judging from what I know of the sentiment of the people.

5446. Have you advocated local option from your platform? Always.

5447. When you speak of local option you refer to it in a prohibitory sense? Yes.

5448. Prohibitory of public-houses? Yes. I commend the local option which you now have in force as a step in the right direction, but of course I have advocated the immediate use of the local veto direct; as soon as possible I should prohibit entirely.

5449. You mean veto on the public-houses and the sale of liquor by spirit merchants? Oh, yes.

5450. You would prohibit to the whole extent; when you had a majority you would prohibit the manufacture of spirits? Certainly, in the particular area where the vote applied.

5451. You would prohibit the manufacture, importation, and sale? Yes, and the people might use as much as they pleased then if they could get it. They generally accuse us prohibitionists of wanting to prohibit people from drinking, but we do not; we have nothing to do with that.

5452. You want them to drink as fast as they can when there is no liquor? Yes.

5453. When you have advocated local option has it been with compensation to the interests concerned? Never.

5454. You do not think that they deserve compensation? No; I should like to say that it is not a matter of deserving.

5455. How do you prefer to put it? I should say that as a matter of principle they are not entitled to it.

5456. You think that if compensation were given to them it would be wrong? Decidedly wrong.

5457. You are a local optionist in the fullest sense? I think so; I have no sympathy with a law which would close only part of the hotels except as a portion of the loaf. For instance, I have no sympathy with the law which they have in Victoria, except as an instalment, but a very poor one, because from my point of view they go to work at the wrong end. They are going to close up a few of the worst dens. I feel that if any class of hotels has any excuse or any right to exist it is that class because they do really supply a want in supplying the drunkards appetites, whereas first-class houses create it.

5458. You told us that you were once a moderate drinker? I said that I have gone through all degrees; I am sorry to say so.

5459. Do you not think that your views may be a little tintured by the harshness of a person who has been reformed? No.

5460. A reformed man always takes rather strong, in fact we may say violent, views; it is an old aphorism. Suppose you had always been a total abstainer do you think that your views would be so harsh with regard to this matter of compensation? Yes, I think so; I claim that the fact of my being a temperance reformer has not altered my conscience in regard to such matters; my views are just as broad now as they were before I became an abstainer. I may say that for several years before I signed the pledge, in fact whenever I had an opportunity to vote on this question, I always voted with the temperance party.

Mr.
R. T. Booth.
4 Aug., 1886.

5461. On that showing we might expect a good many drinking men to vote for local option? Yes. I can give you an instance which came within my knowledge where the success of the measure depended entirely upon that class. It was this influence which carried the measure in the city of Lockport, New York, a city which had a greater number of saloons in proportion to population than any other city in the United States. In New York we had a local option law which was put into force by three men who were elected one each year. This year we might elect a temperance man and next year the liquor interest might elect a man and so on, so that there would be two representing one class, and one the other. Of course it would be possible for the liquor interest or the temperance interest to elect all three. If the liquor party had two men elected that would give them their licenses. For the first time in the history of this city, two years in succession, the temperance men gained the day, and in each instance these men were elected by the votes of the drinking men, who paraded the streets and marched to the polls. What I mean is, that without their votes the temperance men would not have been elected. I know this for a fact.

5462. Let us suppose this case: I am the owner of the "Metropolitan Hotel"; I have let it to a tenant for seven or eight years; he has a good stand; he is a man of good character, and he conducts the house properly. Your local option principle would involve the tenant in the loss of his license and me in the loss of a tenant. I should probably have to turn the house into chambers for lawyers or something of that kind. I might lose hundreds a year. Do not you think that would be rather hard on me? It might on you as an individual; but what is your loss as one individual compared with the loss of many who suffer by drink.

5463. We can quite understand that, and we can also understand that the loss of the license can be compassed in a way which many people would think equitable, that is to say, without inflicting injury on anybody. What do you think about that? I do not think that there is any way out of it except that which I explained to the Bishop of Melbourne and several Members of the Victorian Parliament, including Sir Graham Berry and some of the Ministers, whom I had the pleasure of meeting some short time ago. We were talking with respect to the Bill which was then under consideration in Victoria, and they asked me what I would do in regard to the warning. I said that rabid as I was I was perfectly willing to give them a warning of a couple of years, or for that matter three years. I would say, "Here is a law on the Statute Book, at the end of three years we will put it into operation if we can. Now you have a fair field; there will be no favour as far as we are concerned. If you can convince the public that it is better for them to have these public-houses open well and good; I do not. If we reformers can convince the public that it would be better for them that the public-houses should be closed, so much in our favour." If you were to ask me the same question I should still say that.

5464. In fact you would give them a little time to put their affairs in order, to get ready for possible contingencies? Yes; in fact I should advocate it if I were called upon to give my opinion. I do not know how far my views on this point coincide with those of others; that has nothing to do with me. I stand alone on this question in many particulars, and "paddle my own canoe." The Victorian Ministry seemed to think that my idea should be adopted and they said that they would propose it, but they did not do so. They made an awful mess of the whole thing. Their Act is a most unsatisfactory one.

5465. You did not look upon it as a solution? I did not regard it as an honest attempt at a solution. I believe they made an honest attempt in Queensland.

5466. You know that Queensland consumes more liquor than any other colony, that is in proportion to population? It will be quite a revelation to see them act on the local option principle in November. I am going there to help them at any rate.

5467. Mr. Hutchison.] This question of compensation is one which has never come to the fore in America, has it? It has never once been mooted. The liquor traffic never made a demand of that kind.

5468. President.] You mean to say that when the legislation has been before the Parliament they have not petitioned for compensation? I never heard of it. There is only one case in which I have ever heard it mentioned, and that was recently in the State of Kansas where a brewer made a claim of the kind.

5469. Do they have licenses there as here? Certainly.

5470. You know that here a man pays £30 for a license which exists for twelve months. He gets that renewed almost as a matter of form from year to year, and he considers that this gives him a vested interest in his trade, and he thinks that if it is suddenly brought to a termination by legislation some one ought to provide compensation for him. He does not say whom; he does not care? We claim that he should not be compensated.

5471. Mr. Hutchison.] Speaking of compensation and the question of loss of rent do not you understand that they got fancy rents for hotels at the expense of surrounding tenants whose property is depreciated? That is quite true.

5472. You think that destroys their claim to any compensation? That is one thing which does.

5473. It is an artificial rent? Entirely; all the other tenants will tell you that.

5474. It has been your experience, and it is still your expectation, that when the Local Option Act is passed we will not carry it by teetotalism; that in fact teetotalism is out of the question? It is not a question of teetotalism.

5475. You believe that the drinking men will protect themselves by shutting up the public-houses? Many of them. Every man believes in having his rights, and it seems to me that this is a question of right.

5476. What you mean by the Permissive Bill, or the Local Option Bill, is one which does not come into force imperially, but is called into force by the people when they think it proper to bring it into force; you do not expect a Bill to be proposed by a simultaneous vote all over the entire Colony? No; they can vote on it in any community, at any time when they are ready for it; and after they have once voted on it every three years there will be a repetition of the vote.

5477. If called for—not necessarily? Oh, yes, necessarily.

5478. Suppose in Bathurst they voted the liquor trade out of that city, that vote would stand for three years, and would then remain in force until it was called into question by some one who wished to reverse the vote? No; at the end of three years another vote would be taken.

5479. In your lectures here, which were very largely attended, did you refer to local option? Yes, to prohibition.

- Mr. R. T. Booth.
4 Aug., 1886.
5480. How was it received compared with other phases of the question that you spoke on? It was always received more heartily, I think, than any other phase of the question.
5481. Did you devote one night specially to local option? Yes.
5482. How did that meeting compare as regards enthusiasm with your other meetings? In enthusiasm it was superior, and it was the largest, I think, in numbers.
5483. It is in this way that you gather that the people of this Colony are prepared for local option? Yes.
5484. You say, speaking of the State of Maine, that in the provinces the law is well enforced? Yes.
5485. Could you give us any statistics to show the prosperity of the people? I have everything of the sort at home in my scrap-book.
5486. You inquired when you were there into that phase of the question? Yes, I believe I have every information on the subject that is extant.
5487. Did you meet General Neil Dowd? Yes.
5488. You say there is a constitutional law and a prohibitory law in the State of Maine? A statutory law.
5489. They had prohibition in the State of Maine, and I understand you to say that last year or the year before they put it on the statute? They put it in the Constitution.
5490. Will you tell us what they have now that they did not have before? Before it was in this position, that it was simply the policy of party; it was at the mercy of either party; they could by a party vote rescind the whole thing, and put in place of it a Licensing Act.
5491. Does that mean that it was not on the Statute Book? It was on the Statute Book, but the Legislature could take it off the Statute book—the local Legislature.
5492. Could the local Legislature do that now? No. For about thirty years they have had a prohibitory law in the State of Maine. Two years ago they said, "Here we are, at the mercy of either party." As democrats or republicans they have every year put a plank in their platform recognising prohibition, and both parties have vied with each other in advancing and giving what the prohibitory party claims; but at the same time we are at the mercy of either party; they can come in and give a whiff and take it off the Statute Book. Now let us submit this to the people and put it in the Constitution, when it becomes no longer a political but a Constitutional question.
5493. President.] But there is a State legislature in Maine. Could not that Legislature now abolish the Maine liquor law root and branch? It would be utterly impossible for them to do so until the people, by a majority of two-thirds, gave them the power.
5494. But cannot they abolish the law which gives the people this power? No. We have a written Constitution, which emanates from the Central Government at Washington.
5495. It is a law of the Congress that governs the matter? Yes. The Act in Maine, Kansas, and Iowa is simply an amendment to the Constitution, the same as the freedom of the slaves is the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution. To continue the history of the matter, they said, "Oh, no; if you open up this question the liquor interest will come in and prevent it." As a matter of fact, when the question was submitted to the people, a majority of more than 40,000 declared in favour of putting the law in the rock bed of the Constitution, and it is clinched.
5496. Mr. Hutchison.] The entire State voted, and the result was a majority of 40,000? Yes. I ought to tell you that at this vote there was a larger poll than took place at the Presidential election, which was a most remarkable fact, and showed that all the forces came up, and this was in the State where prohibition had been tried for thirty years.
5497. And the people themselves were fixing their own law, having tried it? Yes. They have never, either in Maine or any of these States, receded from the position they have taken up. Their motto has always been "forward" on this question of prohibition; every succeeding enactment has been a stronger one.
5498. And you think that after thirty years' trial the liquor interests did their best to get the law reversed? Yes; they had a fair chance, and they failed by a majority of 40,000.
5499. You stated that there was a third party being formed in America;—you do not expect that that party will become very strong? I certainly do.
5500. In conjunction with that you stated that the democratic party were given to the liquor interest? Yes.
5501. But the Republican party is not largely given to that interest, is it? Oh, yes. As a party, they have dallied with the thing.
5502. But you consider them more friendly than the Democratic party? All we have in the Northern and Western States—all we have in the third party—are from the Republican party. They must either adopt our principle or go to the wall.
5503. It is the object of the third party to force the Republican party to take the question up and make it one of the planks in their platform? Yes.
5504. St. John came out in the third party? Yes.
5505. Do you think that if Blaine had taken up the temperance party he would have been elected? By all means.
5506. And St. John would have retired? Certainly; he would have had to do so.
5507. He was defeated because he did not take up the temperance question? The Republican party was defeated by the prohibitory vote.
5508. Mr. Roseby.] Apart from the legislative aspect of the liquor question you understand the effect of the liquor traffic generally to be injurious? Yes.
5509. You believe that a man is better in every way mentally and physically without the use of drink? Yes.
5510. You believe that a man is better fitted to do any kind of mental or physical work without drink than with it? Yes.
5511. You believe that a man can enjoy all the social convivialities of life without the use of drink? I do. There may not be so much fun in it, but for real enjoyment I think total abstinence is the better principle.
5512. You have sojourned and mingled in social society in places where drink was barred altogether, and the people there I suppose enjoyed themselves as heartily and as well without drink as with it? Yes.
5513. There is an impression in this community that drink is necessary for social enjoyment. It is at the banquet-table, at our balls, parties, and social gatherings, and forms one of the main attractions and sources of joy and social conviviality. You have seen in your travels that people can go into all these things—sports and amusements of that kind without the use of drink? Yes. 5514.

Mr.
R. T. Booth,
4 Aug., 1836.

5514. If we are to have a licensing system you believe that it ought to be kept under very restrictive legislation? The stricter the better.
5515. Where licenses are in existence in the States they are under very stringent legislation, are they not? Very—more so than here.
5516. Do they close absolutely on the Sunday? Yes, in the great majority of the States.
5517. There are some who open for a portion of the day? Yes.
5518. In those places where the Sunday-closing Act exists have you observed whether that law is flagrantly violated as is the case here? I never knew it to be so flagrantly violated.
5519. Had you opportunities of ascertaining whether that was the case or not? I had.
5520. You know that we have Sunday closing here? Yes.
5521. I suppose you know that the law is practically a dead letter? I do.
5522. Then it is your opinion that if this is the law it should be strictly carried out? Certainly.
5523. Then I suppose you believe that the law should be altered so that the facilities for obtaining convictions against offenders would be much greater than at present? Yes.
5524. I suppose you would make the presence of persons in a licensed house on Sunday prima facie evidence that they were there for an unlawful purpose? I should make the opening of bars to the vaults evidence that they were there for the purpose of selling, and if men entered I should of course consider they were there for the purpose of buying.
5525. People are seen going in streams in and out of public-houses, and unless they are seen drinking by the police officers a conviction cannot be obtained; that you think is a very unsatisfactory state of the law? I do.
5526. Did I understand you to say that barmaids are not employed in licensed houses in the States? I never knew of any.
5527. And hence I suppose you are strongly in favour of any law that would prevent the employment of females in public bars? I am.
5528. Do you think that such employment has a demoralising effect on females? I know it has.
5529. With reference to supplying young people with drink, according to our law it is not lawful to supply drink to any one under sixteen years of age, and evidence has been given before the Commission that there is a large increase in the custom of drinking among the young people of this community;—in view of this fact would you be in favour of raising the age above sixteen? I certainly should; not in view of that fact alone but in view of every consideration.
5530. In the States are bars permitted in any other part of the premises than the front? I could not say as to that; it is different in different States; there is a law in one State that specifies that the bar must be in the front room, and that the front window should have nothing in it that will prevent a view being obtained from outside of what is going on at the bar.
5531. Do you think that a desirable arrangement if bars are to exist? It is a grand success where there is a sentiment against drinking; but I do not see how it would avail you here, because your young men have no scruples, but go right in in broad day-light and stand at the bar, and people walking by can see them drinking.
5532. But do not you think that if the bar were exposed to the light, as you describe, a number of people would be prevented from entering them? No doubt a certain number would be.
5533. Are you opposed to the existence of a number of bars in a licensed house? Yes.
5534. As a man who has taken liquor and who has also abstained, you regard liquor as an unmitigated curse? Yes—nothing else.
5535. And you are now devoting your life to an endeavour to destroy its terrible influence in the community? Yes.
5536. Mr. Withers.] You say that in the majority of the States Sunday closing is enforced? Yes.
5537. How do those States compare with States in which Sunday closing does not exist, in regard to the condition and habits of the people? The comparison is all in favour of the States in which there is Sunday closing—in regard to quietness, and I should judge also the morals of the people. I know that as to quietness the comparison is in favor of the community where a Sunday closing law exists.
5538. Although you cannot say what the police sheet shows on the Monday morning, yet you think the result would be a favourable contrast as against places where the licensed houses do not close absolutely on Sunday? Most decidedly.
5539. In the States where the houses are closed on Sunday are many people to be seen drunk about the streets on Sunday—is it anything like what is supposed to be the case here on Sunday? Of course you could only compare with Sydney towns that are similar. In America, east of the Mississippi, north of Dixies line, I do not know of a city of the same size as Sydney where there is not an altogether different sentiment, a sentiment so strong that you can hardly understand, and drunkards are not seen in places of ordinary resort. For instance, I lived for three years in one of the suburbs of Boston. I have day after day for weeks visited the city and walked up Washington-street and Tremount-street, and I have yet to see my first drunken man in either of those streets; but I could step off either to the right or the left of those streets and find plenty of them. So that with this sentiment existing so strongly, although there might be drink and drunkenness on Sunday, it would not be so apparent as is the case here. You might go into the slums of the city or town and find plenty of drinking in private houses, low houses, dives, and such places, but you would not see any in the principal thoroughfares and in the commons and parks, as I have seen it here and in Melbourne.
5540. I think you said that you regard the higher class of hotels as more destructive in their effects from a national point of view than the low drinking dens? I certainly do, because the persons who frequent the latter houses have already acquired drinking habits, while the better class of houses have the effect of initiating young people into the evil—yes, as certainly as fate.
5541. Is that the opinion of yourself and others who have given this matter consideration? Yes. I think there is not the shadow of a doubt on the point. I do not think I have heard anybody else say this but myself; but I have given the matter great thought, and have studied it as deeply as I could.
5542. Do you think that the employment of barmaids in the better class of hotels has a more degrading effect than the employment of young women in shops and factories where the sexes are mixed? I certainly do.
5543. Mr. Colls.] Speaking of these dens in the city of Melbourne, is not every licensed house supposed to provide accommodation for lodgers? Yes.
5544. I suppose you would not go to one of these places for accommodation? That depends upon whether there was any other place to go to.

- Mr. 5545. But you know that there are many superior hotels in Melbourne? I should go to the best.
 R. T. Booth. 5546. You would never think of going to any of these dens? No.
 4 Aug., 1886. 5547. Then why should licenses be granted to such houses? I do not believe they should.
 5548. And you would wipe them away altogether? Yes, altogether; but if there was to be a choice between these dens and the better class of licensed houses I should say it would be a fatal mistake to do away with the dens in preference.
 5549. Leaving drinking out of the question altogether, you know that every hotel must have a certain amount of accommodation? Yes.
 5550. And therefore these places are for the accommodation of the public, including females? Yes.
 5551. Would they be fit places for females to go to? They would perhaps if the drink was out of them.
 5552. Mr. Withers.] If drink was dispensed from both I suppose if you wanted accommodation for yourself and your family you would prefer the higher class of house? Certainly.

FRIDAY, 16 AUGUST, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,	A. HUTCHISON, Esq.,
T. COLLS, Esq., J.P.,	G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.,
J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.,	S. H. HYAM, Esq., J.P., M.P.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

The Rev. J. D. Langley called in, sworn, and examined:—

- Rev. J. D. 5553. President.] You are incumbent of St. Philip's, Sydney? Yes.
 Langley. 5554. Have you been long resident in the Colony? For over thirty years.
 16 Aug., 1886. 5555. And in the same capacity as now? No, I have been in others; I have been a clergyman for the last thirteen years.
 5556. And in charge? Yes.
 5557. I believe you have formed some decided views on the subject of the drink traffic; are you a prohibitionist or a local optionist? I am a prohibitionist. There are difficulties in connection with this system, but I think it would be greatly to the interest of the country that we should get as near an approach to prohibition as can be obtained.
 5558. You look then to prohibition as the result of legislation, or of some agencies with legislation? I look to prohibition as only to be effected by legislation. You cannot have prohibition without legislation.
 5559. Do you think we are ready for prohibition? That is a matter upon which I am not prepared to speak; I believe it is the perfect thing, and if you get it I think you get everything in connection with this question which is to be obtained. I am speaking rather on theory than on anything else; and my ground for that is that the condition of things where prohibition exists is so exceedingly satisfactory in the moral and physical well-being of the community, in comparison with the condition of things where it does not exist. For instance, the State of Maine and other States in America, and the town of Bessbrook, in Ireland, prove that prohibition is the best thing, but I am not prepared to say that any attempt should be made towards prohibition in this country at present; I think it is necessary that the country should be ripe for the change, and I do not think that time is yet come.
 5560. Do you think that intemperance is at the root of most of the criminal troubles we are suffering from? As an ex-gaol-chaplain I should say that 90 per cent. of criminality is directly or indirectly the result of intemperance. For two years I was chaplain of the gaol at Berrima, and had to deal with the most abandoned criminals in the country; I have seen a great deal of prisoners from my connection with prisons and that is certainly my very decided opinion.
 5561. Was your experience as chaplain limited to Berrima? I had to do with prisoners who were drafted from Berrima to other gaols, and thus I came in contact with a very large proportion of the prison population of the Colony.
 5562. But you were resident at Berrima for two years? Yes, in 1873 and 1874.
 5563. Very shortly after you were ordained? I went there immediately after my ordination.
 5564. I suppose there can be no doubt, from your Berrima experience, that the most of the crimes treated there were the result of intemperance? Directly or indirectly.
 5565. Did you find that crimes of peculiar violence, such as highway robberies, were traceable to this cause? Indirectly, very frequently; but not always.
 5566. A bushranger is not, as a rule, a man who conducts his business in a state of intoxication. I am told that he is a man who has frequent sprees—that he goes on the spree perhaps after each effort, but you would consider that his criminality is in that case directly traceable to drink? Yes, indirectly.
 5567. Then you had burglars and murderers there? In nearly all instances the crime was so traceable either indirectly or directly. I had only "manslaughter" persons; we never had those who were convicted of murder, for they were not sent to Berrima.
 5568. Not when their sentences were commuted? Yes, they were then sent.
 5569. Then as to those who had committed rape and abominable crimes of that kind? I should say of some of them that the crime was either directly or indirectly traceable to drink. I have thought a good deal about this question. I should say that 90 per cent. would be the very least of the proportion of criminals with whom I have come in contact at Berrima and elsewhere whose criminality was associated with drink.
 5570. Did these men confess so much to you, or are you speaking from independent testimony? I had independent testimony, but my view was formed as the result of observation and conversation with the prisoners.
 5571. Ought not some allowance to be made for the disposition of prisoners to attribute their crime to drink as being a kind of mitigating circumstance in their guilt? They had no object in aiming at mitigation of their wickedness in my case, and if they had done so I should have seen through their subterfuge?
 5572. We have been told that it is not an uncommon phase of his character to attribute his fall, not to innate wickedness or turpitude but to the influence of drink. Lunatics do the same in respect to their lunacy, and in order to see, if you think it will be worth while to modify your answer in any way, I ask you whether you believed them when they said that? I have no doubt whatever in my mind that I formed a correct view of the case of their criminality, both from what they said to me and from independent sources. I studied the question there for two years, and gave much thought to it.

Rev.
J. D. Langloy.
16 Aug., 1886.

5573. With regard to the cause of demoralisation other than crime, do you attribute them to the same cause—intemperance? A very large amount of it unquestionably is so attributable, but I am not prepared to say what proportion.

5574. In your ministrations as a clergyman you are obliged to go from house to house, and see a great deal of the insides of houses. Does that experience incline you to attribute a good deal of immorality and crime to this cause? Very strongly; it has led me to take the view I have expressed in the matter of prohibition.

5575. Do you find that among all classes of the community? Among high and low—educated and uneducated—the artisan and the gentleman.

5576. Are you speaking now of your present parish or generally? I have had three parishes altogether,—one in the country at Berrima; the second at Surry Hills—a very large parish, containing I suppose 15,000 people; and my present one of the St. Philip's, which is of a rather peculiar character.

5577. I suppose in some parts of your parish you have as low a class as there is in Sydney? I think so.

5578. The old Rocks? Yes, and in that neighbourhood.

5579. Do you consider that intemperance has been visibly increasing during the last five years—since the passing of our Licensing Act? It is a difficult question to answer. I know that one comes in contact with a very great deal of intemperance. On the other hand I have no doubt there is a decided growth in the number of persons who are total abstainers in the community. As the result of my experience I should say that amongst the class of people with whom I have to deal there is a growth of persons who are total abstainers and in that way I would fear that amongst those who are not total abstainers a larger amount of stimulant is used.

5580. Pari passu, you see two influences in action, being an increase in the habit, in the one of temperance, and in the other of abstinence? There is a distinct increase in the habit of abstinence, but I am not prepared to say so much on the other subject, simply because the thing comes before one so constantly that without some statistics I could not give a positive answer as to the question of increase. I do not think there is any decrease in the amount of intemperance in the community. For the first few years after the passing of the Act there was a very remarkable decrease in the intemperance that one came in contact with in connection with Sunday and Monday drinking, but this sudden decrease appears to have been followed by a gradual growth of intemperance peculiarly akin to the old state of things.

5581. Are you going by police statistics? No, by my own observation.

5582. Do you ascribe the diminution to the Act? I do not give the reason; I simply give the fact.

5583. Are you not inclined to think that the growth of intemperance is associated in some way with the amending Act? One might be led so to think; I think there are elements in that Act that perhaps may bring about the state of things which I have described.

5584. For example: if under the Act of 1881 the publican who supplied drink was more certain to be convicted and punished than he is under the amending Act that followed, would you not think that might have something to do with Sunday drinking? I think the main cause of the growth in intemperance in that direction is the deliberate breach of the Act that is going on in my observation in every part of this city. I have stood beside a policeman and seen a crowd of people come out of a public-house, and the answer he gave me when I spoke to him was, "Well, sir, I have no power; I cannot do anything in the matter." It is going on continuously in the most barefaced open way, and I have attributed a good deal of intemperance to that cause. Working men have their Sunday; it is their holiday; they have no employment, and if they have an inclination in that direction, it is the one day of all others on which their temptation towards intemperance will be the greatest; and I think they have availed themselves of the opportunity to drink offered by the lower class of publican.

5585. When you spoke of an increase in intemperance in one line did you refer to drinking on Sunday and Monday, or to any particular days of the week? I think Sunday and Monday are very much associated with the habit, especially amongst the working classes, and it is in this direction that I have seen this decided growth in intemperance within the last three or four years. Amongst the more educated classes I do not know that there is any very great growth, although intemperance, even among them, is just as great and decided as it has ever been.

5586. If a moderately temperate man is seduced on a Sunday by some friend into one of these dens where the publican openly violates the law and gets drunk, don't you think the probabilities are highly in favour of his drinking more or less throughout that week? Certainly; there is a natural disposition on the following days to do the same; that is the case on any day a man gives way to drink.

5587. Is not that probably the reason why, amongst some classes, there may be an increase in the drinking habit, whereas amongst others none whatever? Yes; that may have a great deal to do with it.

5588. Have you noticed any considerable increase in the drinking habit among those under twenty-one of either sex? I am afraid there is amongst young men in my neighbourhood.

5589. Are they natives of the Colony? Yes, as a rule.

5590. Do they belong to the larrikin class? Yes. There is one point on which I should like to say a few words: If publicans are allowed to break the law as to Sunday observance it is grossly unfair to those who want to keep it. I had an instance in my own neighbourhood a little time ago. I had some conversation with a man on this subject. I am quite sure he was a very respectable person, and since then he has given up the business altogether, but when I spoke to him on this question of the Sunday observance he said, what I believe to be true, "I made an effort to keep the law, and because I did so I lost my week-day customers, who went to other places where they could get drink on Sunday."

5591. Mr. Hutchison.] Do you believe in Sunday closing? I do.

5592. Do you suggest anything to have the law effectually observed? I never could see any reason why the police should be prevented from using any means to obtain a conviction.

5593. Do you approve of the English law, which punishes the publican if he cannot prove that persons are in his premises for lawful purposes? I think that would be a solution of the difficulty. There is a strong feeling in the minds of some people against the police obtaining a verdict against a publican, who is breaking the law, by any means other than actually going and seeing it for himself; but I can see

Rev. J. D. Langley. no reason why, if a system of detection is allowable for other crimes, it should not be allowable for this crime, and without specifying any particular way I would say, in a general way, that every and any means for the detection of crime is justifiable if it is being committed.

16 Aug, 1886.

5594. You have no sympathy with the maudling sentiment, which objects to what is called informers or detectives? All I say is, without entering into that question, if a thing is allowable in one case it is allowable in another. If you allow it so as to save the Treasury being mulcted of its dues in smuggling it is equally justifiable in such circumstances as those to which I refer.

5595. How do you regard the early closing of public-houses at night? I have no doubt that it does help towards promoting temperance among the people.

5596. If Sunday closing could be carried out effectually it would be an immense boon to the community? I have no doubt; my view is based upon the facts to which I have just referred. When Sunday closing was effectually carried out the diminution in intemperance in the community and the comfort of the people under my own personal observation was very remarkable; it brought about a complete change in the condition of the people.

5597. Don't you think that drink has a great deal to do with a man becoming a bushranger or a garotter? My experience as a gaol-chaplain was that those men who were bushrangers or garotters were at certain periods guilty of intemperance, and that very intemperance I think it was which led into the position by means of which they became bushrangers or garotters. Not in every instance but in a considerable proportion of instances.

5598. You stated to the President that you are a prohibitionist? Yes.

5599. You are therefore a local optionist? Yes.

5600. Believing absolute prohibition to be impracticable, you are willing that it should obtain where the community by a majority vote in favor of it? That is exactly my view. The President asked me what view I held as to the most perfect system in connection with this question, and I was bound to answer prohibition. I do not think that the community in which we live is ripe for prohibition; I do not think that prohibition would be possible just now; therefore I think that the local option system is the very best system that can be adopted under the circumstances.

5601. That is the prohibitionist's compromise—prohibit where the people say they are ready by their voices? Exactly so.

5602. Provided this law was passed and put into force, and the public-houses were shut up, would you compensate the publicans? I do not consider that they would be entitled to compensation; but if it were necessary to compensate, rather than have the state of things as it is, I should rather do so than that the state of things should go on. But I cannot see any ground why they should be compensated. The trade is supposed to be for the convenience of the public, and if it is not proved to be for the convenience of the public and the public say so, why should a man be compensated for the taking away of his license; if so, then the publican ought to pay to the community something handsome for being allowed to carry on the trade, if the trade in itself is so profitable.

5603. He does pay something? Yes, £30 a year.

5604. And you think the Government meet him fairly when they simply say we will not take your money this year, and we will not give you the privilege? Certainly. I do not see any reason why you should compensate him. But I should be prepared to deal with the matter in this way: Regarding the trade as I do to be responsible for a great deal of mischief in the community—I do not say the publican himself—many publicans are most respectable and honorable men—but regarding the trade as responsible for a great deal of evil and mischief in the community, I should be disposed to give compensation to the publican provided that side by side with this there was an Act making the publican responsible for the consequences of the drink he sells.

5605. But being a strong local optionist, if a measure were introduced giving the traffic three years right as a compensation, and that publicans should have no claim to submit the matter to a vote, would you agree to that, not being able to get rid of compensation? I should be prepared to give them three years, or even longer, if it were regarded as necessary in order to get rid of the traffic. I should certainly consider that that would be a fair way of dealing with the matter.

5606. Even then it does not follow that they would lose their licenses? It does not.

5607. They might have another three years, because the people might not vote to do away with them; in fact, you as a local optionist believe that in large areas the Act would be inoperative for very many years? Quite so.

5608. Mr. Roseley. As a matter of principle I understand you to say that you thoroughly believe that the people themselves should have the right to say whether these houses should exist in their midst or not? Certainly.

5609. As a clergyman you meet with a large number of people who are total abstainers? I do.

5610. These men are pursuing all the various callings of our social life. Are they in your opinion able to perform their duties as satisfactorily and as happily as total abstainers as when moderately using stimulants? Very much better.

5611. If public-houses are licensed I presume you believe they ought to be under very restrictive legislation? Certainly.

5612. You believe that the business is unique and peculiar, and that you cannot put any other business on the same lines? Exactly.

5613. Would you make the license fee paid by publicans larger than it is? I do not know that I should. I do not think that is a point that is of so much importance. I think they ought to be rigidly compelled to keep the law.

5614. Would you permit these publicans to employ either the girls of their own family or any other girls to vend their liquors behind the bar? I do not think that women ought ever to be employed in the bar of a public-house.

5615. Have you observed that the traffic has a very injurious and demoralizing influence upon young women engaged in the business? I believe that some of the women engaged in this business have preserved not only their character but their respectability also—plenty of them; but as far as I can judge by observation I think the tendency is injurious in a marked degree.

5616. You do not think that a respectable female should be allowed to be brought into contact with the ordinary surroundings of a public-house bar? I do not think it is fair to the woman that she should.

5617. You remarked to the President that you believed there was a growth of intemperance or drinking habits on the part of the young—young men especially? I do; in my neighbourhood certainly.

5618. Have you noticed very young people occasionally the worse for drink? I have.

5620. Have you noticed whether the present law, which compels licensed publicans to provide increased accommodation in their houses, has had a beneficial or an injurious effect. Do they gather numbers of people within them, and bring them under their influence, who otherwise might keep away? I do not think it has had that effect; I would not say so. The main effect of this part of the Act in the city has been decidedly to reduce the number of public-houses, and I think that that has been beneficial to the community. I think there were too many public-houses. I will give a case in point: Some years ago a public-house was proposed to be opened in my old parish of Surry Hills, and I went to the Police Court and put the matter in this way before the Magistrates: that I knew there were one or two men in the locality who were endeavouring to carry on a respectable business, and that by opening this public-house they were simply forcing all the others to go into competition and do an illegitimate business, or else the men could not make a living. I believe that in that respect the reduction in the number of public-houses has had a beneficial effect throughout the whole city.

5621. Are there many houses in your parish that could supply respectable accommodation as hotels for a man with his wife and family? I should say there are more in my parish than perhaps in any other part of the city. There are "Petty's Hotel," "Pfahler's Hotel," and many others.

5623. Has it ever been remarked to you that there are comparatively very few respectable houses of accommodation? It has.

5624. Do you believe that the community would be supplied with all the comfortable hotel accommodation it needs if the bars were done away with? I can see no reason why it should not.

5625. You are aware from what you have read that where prohibition exists the people are provided with all the luxuries and comforts of hotels? Yes. I can see no reason whatever why it should not be so.

5626. Mr. Withers.] It has been stated by a witness before the Commission that the lower class of licensed houses are less injurious in their influence than the higher class hotels, such as "Petty's," the "Oxford," the "Metropolitan," and the "Royal." Has it ever occurred to you that it would be better to retain the low drinking shops than the first-class hotels. Have you ever viewed it in that light? No. I presume the only reason it could be so regarded would be because a different class, a more influential class in the community might get into drinking habits in the higher class hotels. But I should say that the higher class the hotel the less likelihood of its being injurious to the community. My experience does not lead me to believe that in these first-class establishments there is the same tendency to mischief that there is in the lower drinking places.

5627. You cannot conceive of anything more dangerous in the way of encouraging the drinking habits of the people than the existence of these lower class hotels? The better conducted hotels may open the way to a different class. They produce the same tendency in one class that the lower drinking houses do in another class. There are persons who drink in the superior hotels who would not go into these lower places, and they get into the way of it, and that is the only way in which I should think that the person who gave such evidence as you describe could have regarded the matter.

5628. He based his opinion on the ground that those who visited the low-drinking shops were men who had contracted the habit of intemperance and confirmed drunkards, while the higher class hotels initiated people into drinking habits;—do you think there is anything in that? There might be something in that point of view.

5629. With regard to the employment of barmaids, do you think this occupation is more demoralising to young women than their employment in shops and factories where the sexes are mixed together day after day? Yes, I do think so.

5630. Could you suggest any better mode of punishing drunkards—any more deterrent mode—than the present method which tends to further impoverish the family of the man? I think there ought to be some system by which confirmed drunkards could be placed for a time in some place where they could be made to work for the benefit of the community or for the benefit of their families; and that something should be done towards getting these people into a state in which they would recover their physical condition.

5631. A mode of punishment that would make them contribute something during their confinement? Yes; I think there should be some institution to which these men could be sent where they would be taught habits of self reliance, and where they could be made to work.

5632. An inebriate asylum? Yes, and I may say in justification of this opinion that in our Church Home for inebriate women we have had some instances of success in dealing with these inebriates that come to us. We have had a great many disappointments, but we have had some instances where these women who come in have so far apparently been reclaimed from intemperance.

5633. In conversation with a retired publican the other day he stated it as his opinion that if the publicans were alive to their interests and desired to have their houses open on Sunday, they would enter into a bond amongst themselves to close their houses absolutely for three or four months, his opinion being that there would be such an outcry from the public in consequence that the Government would be compelled to allow them to open on Sundays? I do not agree with him. I think there might be an outcry amongst the unhappy loafers you see about the public-houses on Sunday afternoon, but I do not think that would be at all likely to influence either the community or the Government.

5634. You believe that the right-thinking portion of the community, and even those who perhaps occasionally drink to excess, desire Sunday closing in the interests of their wives and children? That is my impression. I do not think that the Sunday drinking which takes place is indulged in to any large extent by respectable moderate drinking people. The only thing I think they do is perhaps to get in their glass of beer for the middle of the day, and in a great many instances that is done now by the respectable working people on the Saturday and kept until Sunday. As a rule the breach of the law in this matter is not by moderate drinking persons of a respectable kind, but principally by a crowd of men who are drunk at one time and sober at another.

5635. And who have no purpose whatever in life? No purpose whatever.

- Rev.
J. D. Langley.
16 Aug., 1886.
5636. You think that the little knots of people who hang round hotels on Sunday do not represent the public? Not at all.
5637. You must have observed a great relaxation during the last two or three years in the Sunday-closing law? Yes, and especially in my present parish.
5638. Would you advocate giving the police greater powers, to enable them to obtain convictions? If men are breaking the law, and the powers which the police have are not sufficient to enable them to deal with the offenders, I think they ought to have any power the law can give to save the law from being broken.
5639. And even resort to the practice, which has been denounced by some people, of sending men in private clothes to obtain evidence? If that is justifiable in the case of smuggling it is justifiable to protect a law of so much importance to the welfare of the community as the Sunday-closing law.
5640. You think that the hours of closing during the week-days are satisfactory? I think so; I have never heard any serious objection to them amongst people with whom I have come in contact.
5641. Mr. Colls.] Your parish takes in a portion of the northern division of the city, does it not? Yes.
5642. We have been told by the Inspector for that division that it contains over 300 licensed houses;—do you not think that a great many of these houses should be closed, on the ground that they are not fit for the accommodation of the public? I have not the slightest doubt about it. Anyone who walks down Lower George-street can see that many of the houses are nothing but low drinking saloons; they are not hotels at all.
5643. They are not the kind of houses where you would seek accommodation for a family? Not at all.
5644. Have you ever heard of any Clubs being started in your parish with the view of evading the law and obtaining drink on Sunday? No. There was a club in my neighbourhood, but I do not know that it was started with that object in view. I do not know very much about it.
5645. The existence in your parish of those upstairs bars which are so much complained of has I suppose been brought under your notice? Yes.
5646. I presume you would be in favour of abolishing these bars? Certainly.
5647. And of having bars only on the basement floor? I think so.
5648. Whether presided over by a man or a woman you would have them on the lower floor so as to be open to the inspection of the Police? I think that what are called the private bars in these hotels are a very mischievous element. To them might be applied the remark which some gentleman made to the Commission, and to which Mr. Withers referred just now. A private bar is simply a place where young fellows go in and begin to learn to drink, and when they get habituated they go into the public-bars.
5649. I suppose if there were many houses of ill-fame in your parish the fact would come under your notice? There are, I am sorry to say, a great many.
5650. And a great deal of drinking takes place in them? I should imagine so.
5651. It has never been reported to you? It has never come directly under my notice, but there is no doubt that drink and the social evil are so mixed up that one is almost a complement to the other. Excessive drinking encourages the social evil, and vice versa, and the two things are intimately associated with each other.
5652. Would you be in favour of interfering with the large hotels that carry on the business legitimately? I should be in favour of closing every hotel in Sydney if I had the opportunity—not closing all hotels for their legitimate business, but closing bars for the sale of liquor across the counter.
5653. Mr. Hyam.] You are in favour of closing all hotels and public-houses? I am in favour of doing away with the sale of intoxicating drink in the community.
5654. Suppose that I was staying at the "Royal Hotel," and I wanted a bottle of wine; if you had your way you would not allow me to have that bottle of wine? My theory is that the interests of the community are so enormously in favour of doing away with drink that I believe that would be the best solution of the whole thing if it could be carried out.
5655. Then you think that wine and spirits and malt liquor have no value at all? Oh, a very great value.
5656. You think they have a value to the community? Yes, and so has arsenic, strychnine, and many other ingredients.
5657. You think that malt liquor and wines and spirits are not valuable for invalids or sickly people? Unquestionably they are when given in that way.
5658. You do not entirely disagree with the use of alcohol? There are cases where it may be useful. I am not a medical man, therefore I am not prepared to give an opinion on the medical effect of alcohol. I speak as one who takes an interest in the moral well-being of the community and from what I have read of places where alcohol is not used at all, and places where it is used, I find the whole moral and physical condition of the community so enormously improved without it that I certainly am, theoretically, a prohibitionist.
5659. Have you any scientific knowledge of the nutritive or stimulating properties of the liquors which I have mentioned? I have a little knowledge, but not such as I would venture to put before you in evidence.
5660. How would you propose that poor people who could not afford to keep liquor in the house should be able to get it in case they required it as a medicine? I am afraid that I cannot very well answer that question. I would venture to submit to the Commission that they can find an admirable answer in knowing what is done in the United States where the prohibitory law exists.
5661. In the prohibited States? Yes; my answer in a general way is this: The condition of things in the States in America, and in Bessbrook in Ireland, where the use of alcohol is absolutely prohibited, is so enormously in advance of ours morally and physically that I am, in theory, a prohibitionist, but I do not think that we are prepared for that here, therefore I do not attempt to advocate it further than that.
5662. You say that you would not allow women to be engaged in the sale of liquor? I would not.
5663. Suppose there is a well-conducted roadside inn kept by a man and his wife, would you not allow the woman to serve refreshments to travellers? I do not think that it would be well, for the sake of such an exception, to permit to be broken a rule which I would regard as of very great importance to the well-being of the community. I have travelled in country districts—before I was a clergyman—and I have occupied a room not far from the bar, where I have been kept awake all night by the uproar of people to whom the woman of the house was furnishing liquor. I do not believe that it was to the benefit of the woman, or anyone else, for her to be there. Most strongly do I feel that it is injurious; it is putting a woman in an utterly false position; it is degrading the womanhood of our Colony.
5664. Don't you think that there is a good deal of drinking in private houses? I am afraid there is.

5665. A great deal of it? I am afraid that there is a good deal of it, but I am not prepared to make the positive assertion that there is a great deal.

5666. Don't you think that the young people of the country drink a great deal more than they used to? I think so. Thirty years ago it was a most uncommon thing to see a native of the Colony under the influence of alcohol; now it is not at all uncommon.

5667. I presume that you are a total abstainer? Yes.

5668. Have you been so all your lifetime? I have been so for a great many years—about twenty-five. In the early years of my life I was not a total abstainer. I became a total abstainer because I found that I was absolutely helpless with intemperate people when I was not a total abstainer. I became a total abstainer because I wanted to help others.

5669. As an example? Yes; in the first instance. I am now a total abstainer for many other reasons. I should be a total abstainer now as a matter of choice. I do not think that the use of alcoholic stimulants does me any good. I think that I am a great deal healthier and better man without it. I get on very well without it. I think that it is a mistake from that point of view.

5670. Mr. Roseby.] You know that there are licensed bars in the coasting and other steamers which come to the wharves at Darling Harbour, part of which is in your parish. Do you think that there is any necessity for these bars? I do not think that they ought to be open except when the steamers are on voyages.

5671. Do you not know that they are a source of annoyance and inconvenience to respectable sober passengers? An intense annoyance.

5672. Whatever the comfort of them to some people may be do not you think that evil preponderates? If they could be done away with altogether it would be greatly to the interest of the travelling community. The same remark applies to the refreshment bars along our railway lines. I travel a great deal by rail and I have had painful experience of the baneful effect of these bars.

5674. You think that if we had prohibition some provision ought to be made for the supply of alcoholic liquor to people for whom it is prescribed by medical men? Yes, but great care ought to be exercised.

5675. If people are to be supplied with alcoholic liquor they ought to be supplied with what they ask for? I presume you refer to the adulteration of liquor. I have come in contact with some shocking instances of the effect of adulterating liquor.

5676. President.] Were you able to verify the statements made to you that the liquor had been adulterated? I have not examined the liquor.

5677. Can you say whether the result was traceable to adulteration or to excessive use of alcohol? To the effect of adulteration unquestionably.

5678. You know that the effect of adulterants is not immediately distinguishable from the effect of a large dose of alcohol? It depends on the character of the adulterants. Some drugs have an immediate effect.

5679. You mean hoëussing? I am referring to drugging—to the adulteration of liquor generally.

5680. When you refer to adulteration you do not include immature liquor—that is to say, fusel oil, which is not an adulterant? There are some adulterants used which are very excellent; I wish that they would use more of them; for instance cold water. I have seen persons suffering from what seemed to be not only the result of alcohol but of some drug which was put in the alcohol.

5681. They were more poisoned than alcoholized? Yes.

5682. Mr. Hyam.] You talk about great care being exercised in the sale of liquor for medicinal purposes. Would you surround the sale of it with the same precautions as are adopted with regard to the sale of poison, as has been suggested in conversation by a member of the Commission? I have not thought about that. Of course there are other poisons which are more dangerous and more rapid in their effect, and I suppose the greater the danger the greater the care there must be. I think that the Commission might form an opinion on the question from what is done in places where prohibitory laws are in force.

5683. Suppose a doctor prescribed alcoholic liquor for a patient, ought it to be considered as a poison? It is a poison.

5684. We use many things which are poisonous—tobacco for example? There is such a great difference between the poison of tobacco and the poison of alcohol that the two do not stand in the same category. If my theory were possible I should have the same care used with regard to the sale of alcohol as of any other poison.

5685. President.] Do you include in the category of alcoholic liquors to which you refer those which have a small percentage of alcohol—table-beer and wines? I should include all.

5686. Mr. Hutchison.] Anything containing above 3 per cent of alcohol? Yes.

5687. Mr. Roseby.] You think that there is hope for the permanent reform of the drunkard? Yes.

5689. Both men and women? Yes.

5690. There are some people who think that the case of a woman is hopeless. That has not been your experience? Certainly not. I have had experience to the contrary. Although it is rather premature to speak about the matter, we have had instances in our Church Home for inebriate women, of persons who have for years been inebriate, and who, at present at any rate, appear to be reformed. I believe that women are far more difficult to reform than men.

5691. You think that there ought to be an asylum for the special treatment of inebriates? I think that that is the only way of dealing with the matter.

5692. Both voluntary and compulsory? Yes.

5693. President.] You think that the present system is ineffectual? Yes.

5694. Would you allow a Magistrate to commit to the reformatory or asylum? Certainly. I believe that private homes under Government inspection would be much more likely to do good than State institutions.

5695. Have you visited any asylums of the kind? No. I think that the moral training in private homes would be much more effectual than the treatment in State institutions. When I speak of private homes, I mean institutions supported by the general public, and founded on what I may term religious lines. The moral

Rev. J. D. Langley. moral element is the strongest with which you have to deal in the reclamation of the drunkard; if you cannot bring that element to bear on him the work of reformation is very much greater. I know some who now occupy very high positions in our community who for several years grovelled in the gutters as drunkards; I have seen them with my own eyes.

16 Aug., 1886.

5696. Mr. Hutchison.] You say that there is a desire for drink in the rising generation;—do you consider that the temptation to drink is the original cause of that, or do you think that it is inherent? I think that the growing inclination to drink among the young people is the result of the amount of temptation to which they are subjected; I do not believe that there is any inherent inclination. In the olden days the young people did not seem to care to go so much into the way of temptation as they now do.

5697. President.] Has not the temptation come to them? I think that it has.

5698. Mr. Hutchison.] Do you think that it is wholly confined to centres of population? I do.

5699. The young Australian in the bush is neither drunken nor disposed to drink? I believe that the young men of the Colony are peculiarly inclined towards temperance, except in instances where they are brought in the way of temptation, and the temptations in the centres of population are the whole secret of the growth of the habit. In country places you will not find that, as a rule the young men have any inclination for intemperance.

FRIDAY, 13 AUGUST, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,
J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.,

T. COLLS, Esq., J.P.,
G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.,

A. HUTCHISON, Esq.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

George Daniel Clark called in, sworn, and examined:—

Mr. G. D. Clark.

13 Aug., 1886.

5700. President.] I believe you have been for some time connected with temperance organisations? Yes; I am a member of three different organisations, the Independent Order of Good Templars, the Independent Order of Rechabites, and the Local Option League.

5701. I believe you are editor of or in some way connected with a temperance journal? I am editor of the New South Wales Good Templar.

5702. Have you been long resident in this Colony? For about 15 years.

5703. You have a general knowledge I presume of the country as well as of the city and suburbs? Yes.

5704. Is your acquaintance with the city and suburbs greater than your acquaintance with the country? Yes.

5705. I suppose you are resident in Sydney and do not travel much? I take a trip occasionally into the country but never for any length of time.

5706. You have devoted your attention for some time to our liquor laws? Yes, for a number of years I have been interested in temperance work.

5707. That implies that you have studied the liquor laws? Yes.

5708. Have you any knowledge of the liquor laws of other countries? Yes, from reading.

5709. Not from personal observation? No.

5710. But you are acquainted with the licensing laws of the Australian group generally? Yes.

5711. Have you any knowledge of the licensing laws of America? Yes.

5712. Also from reading? Yes, all from reading.

5713. Do you consider that the Licensing Act of 1881 was a step in advance or not? Undoubtedly it was an improvement on the then existing state of things.

5714. Your own experience I suppose is your guide in giving this opinion? Yes.

5715. You are guided mainly I presume by the relief it gave to the police and the appearance of the streets? Yes.

5716. Do you think the Act had any direct effect upon the consumption of intoxicating liquors? Judging from the reports it had not a very material effect.

5717. You know that that Act was amended? Yes.

5718. Was that amendment also progressive? I think not.

5719. Why? In the first place it affected the question of applications for licenses. One of the evils of the present law is that though an application for a license may be successfully opposed by the residents to day, in a week or two the people living in the locality may be surprised to find that another application has been made.

5720. Do you mean by the same applicant, or for the same house? For the same house. I know of one case that occurred recently in the suburbs. Five applications were made for the same house. Frequently people who are opposing these applications are worn out and the license is ultimately granted.

5721. In the case you refer to the license was refused in the first instance? Yes.

5722. And granted afterwards on a different application? Yes; a different application, but for the same house.

5723. The reason for the first refusal I presume was personal to the applicant? No. I will give you a case that happened quite recently within a quarter of a mile of where I live at Leichhardt: An application was made for a license for a house on the Parramatta Road—a house not at all suitable; but directly it was known the residents got up a petition which was signed I believe by almost every person living within a considerable distance of the place, and the application was refused.

5724. On what ground? That the house was not required. The police of course opposed as well as the residents. Three weeks ago a person came into my office and said, "Do you know that they are making an application application for that house on the Parramatta Road again?" I said, "I have not heard about it," and he said, "I saw so and so," mentioning a Member of Parliament who was in the Court. I went across, and I found that the case was then going on, and the application was again successfully opposed. But it may happen that in another week or so there will be another application.

Mr.
G. D. Clark.
13 Aug., 1886.

5725. Have you any reason for misgivings as to the result of the next application? Not if the people know of it; but you see that in this case although living close to the place I had come to the conclusion that the idea of getting a license had been abandoned, and I was not on the look out for the application. It was a mere accident that myself and one or two others found out that the case was on and went into the court and opposed it.

5726. It seems then that the mischief you complain of is that after an application for a house has been refused by the Licensing Bench the same house may be licensed behind your back in a few months afterwards and you will know nothing of it? Yes.

5727. What remedy do you suggest for this? I should suggest that no second application for the same house should be made within twelve months.

5728. Suppose the application is refused on account of the applicant and not the house, do you suggest that a second application by a man of unexceptionable character should be refused because that of his predecessor was refused? My experience in the police courts leads me to believe that very few applications are refused on the ground of the man's character. Generally the objection taken is that the requirements of the neighbourhood are not sufficient to justify the granting of a license. In the case to which I have referred the second application was made in the name of another person and not in the name of the first applicant. But it was stated by the owner of the house that the gentleman making the second application had agreed to take the house for five years at £100 a year conditionally on his obtaining the license.

5729. Is it not customary for the magistrates to give a reason for rejecting an application—whether it is on the ground of the man's character or because the house is not required? They very rarely do so.

5730. Do they simply say, "We refuse the license?" Yes.

5731. But I suppose that as a matter of fact the fatal ground is known? Generally.

5732. Have you frequently attended the Licensing Courts? Yes.

5733. Is it your experience that when applications are refused the reason is generally because the house is not required? I should think that in nine out of every ten cases the objection made to the granting of the license is on that ground.

5734. The objection made by the police? By the police and the residents—very frequently by the police alone.

5736. Then if they oppose in the sparsely populated parts it is generally supposed to be on the ground of the applicant's character? Yes; the character of the man is raised sometimes. I was present in the Court not long since when two objections were raised, the police objected to the man's character and the residents objected on the ground that the house was not required. The license was refused, but which objection weighed most with the magistrates was not stated.

5737. Taking the law as it stands, and apart from any question of local option or prohibition or any other form of legislation, what amendments do you consider most deserve the attention of the Legislature—what subjects are most urgent for amendment? I ask you this question because you say you are a frequent visitor to the police courts, and in your capacity as editor of a temperance journal you must know exactly whether the licensing machinery breaks down. I want to know your opinion as to where the defects are and what remedies should be applied? Well, taking Sunday closing first, I would adopt the provision in the English Act which makes it a breach of the law to be found on the premises.

5738. For the licensed victualler or the customer? For the licensed victualler.

5739. You will have to put your answer in a different way. The publican will always be found on the premises? I would make it a breach of the Act so far as the publican is concerned if any man not being a bonâ fide lodger is found on the premises during prohibited hours, the onus of proof should rest with the publican.

5740. Take a case: The police having the right of entry find John Smith in a public-house on Sunday. They prosecute the publican. The law being that he should disprove the breach of the law the publican is required to rebut the prima facie guilt. Is that what you mean? Yes.

5741. What about the customer—would you let him go scot free? I would in this case.

5742. I suppose you agree that there has been a breach of the law by two persons? There is a difficulty in the matter which has been forced upon my attention by my observations in the police courts. So long as a man is liable to be charged he will give evidence in favour of the publican and the police will fail to convict.

5743. He perjures himself? Yes, in his own protection as well as in the protection of the publican.

5744. Then you are afraid that if you made the customer liable he would escape by perjury? Yes.

5745. You said you would suggest the adoption of the provision in the English Act;—is it not a fact that the English Act throws the burden of proof upon the customer found drinking in prohibited hours? I am not certain about that. I am more anxious to get at the publican, because I believe he is the chief offender.

5746. You think that if you exempt the customer, who drinks unlawfully, from punishment, he will be sure to be called as witness against the publican? Yes, he might be.

5747. And having no criminality resting upon himself you think his evidence would be better on that account? He would be more likely to give truthful evidence. But I am not prepared to say that the customer should get off scot free.

5748. Do you think that the inmates of a public-house should be allowed to use the bar on Sunday? I see no reason why they should be, although they are in most Licensing Acts.

5749. Do you not think that some of the mischief rests upon the uncertainty in deciding as to who is an inmate, a traveller or a bonâ fide lodger;—don't you think there is some defect in the Act there? There is a good deal in that, and a good deal to be said in favour of the Victorian Act which requires the bars to be locked.

Mr. G. D. Clark. 5750. That would not wholly get rid of the trouble, because the drink could be taken into a private room? Yes; but I would make an addition to the clause by providing that any publican convicted of a second offence should have his license cancelled. I believe that the fear of a cancellation of his license would act as a greater deterrent than any fine.

13 Aug., 1886.

5751. The law now gives large privileges to houses containing a certain number of rooms over the prescribed number; would you be in favour of those houses being exempt from the local option provision? No.

5752. Are you aware to what purposes these extra rooms have been turned? I have been given to understand; I cannot speak of my own knowledge.

5753. You know nothing then of the boarding system? No.

5754. With regard to bars would you allow one or more in each public-house? I would not allow more than one bar.

5755. Where would you put that bar? As close as possible to the door from the street; I would not have upstairs bars.

5756. You are aware of the trouble we have with upstairs bars? I have heard about them, but of course I have not been in them.

5757. Do you consider that the present license fee, £30, is sufficient? Being opposed to licensing of public-houses generally, I have not given much attention to that subject, but I think that a higher fee might be paid; I think that it might be at least £50, and large houses should pay £100.

5758. Do you think that the number of public-houses in the city and suburbs is in excess of requirements? Undoubtedly; there are far too many now.

5759. Your way of reducing the number would be by local option? Yes.

5760. You would not have any auxiliary system? I am a prohibitionist. The order to which I belong, which numbers close on 18,000 adult members in the Colony, and which to some extent I may be said to represent just now, are in favour of prohibition.

5761. Are we to take what you have said hitherto as the views of the organization which you represent? No; on the questions of prohibition, local option, and compensation, I may speak on behalf of the order. Of course on matters of detail there is a diversity of opinion.

5762. You say you are a prohibitionist who accepts local option as a form of carrying out prohibition? As a method by which prohibition will be secured.

5763. Presumably because you think that the community is not ripe for a Maine liquor law? Our position is simply this: Recognising the evils which result from the liquor traffic we hold that it is an unwise policy to legalise it. Our order has two cardinal principles: Total abstinence for the individual and prohibition for the State. Although we do not bind ourselves as to the methods which we will use to bring about prohibition, we say that the traffic being morally wrong ought not to be legally right. At this point, however, we are met by our opponents, who argue that the country is not ripe for prohibition, and that for legislation to be effective it must carry with it the assent of at least a majority of the people. We meet our opponents on these grounds, and make a concession. We say, let the Colony be divided into districts or areas, and let the people vote, not upon each application for a license, but on the broad question as to whether licensing should or should not be maintained in their localities. Of course if the people vote in favour of licenses we will submit to it, but continue working with a view, and in the hope of educating a better public feeling. On the other hand we contend that if the people say no by a decisive majority, no licenses should be issued in that locality. Local option is a concession on the part of Good Templars.

5764. One would think that if the people are ripe for prohibition their representatives—the Legislature—would carry a prohibition law as easily as a local option law. Where is your difficulty then? At general elections a variety of questions is put before the electors, and it is difficult to get them to concentrate their attention on one issue. Seeing that this is a social question affecting so closely the interests of the people we prefer to let them deal with it distinct from everything else.

5765. You have never had the question of the drink traffic raised at any general election? It has never been the sole issue.

5766. But have you not selected candidates for their opinions on the subject? Frequently; Good Templars always make it a question. A majority of the Members returned to the present House have pledged themselves to the local option principle.

5767. What is the leading feature in your idea of local option? The absolute prohibition of the sale of drink, either retail or wholesale.

5768. Would you go further and prohibit the use of it? Oh no; the sale only.

5769. Would you prohibit the manufacture? No; the question which concerns us is the sale of liquor.

5770. What persons would you allow to vote? Parliamentary voters, and I should be in favour of women voting on this question.

5771. How long would you allow the vote to subsist after it is taken? Three years.

5772. Would you have a specific vote every three years? No; if the vote failed the people should have the right to demand another vote in less than three years.

5773. Every year? There is no reason why there should not be a vote every year.

5774. Then you would have the question always in a state of suspense if the local optionists failed? Practically; this is our view of the question. If a local option law were passed, it may be that no district would attempt to put it into operation for some time. It would be only after the law is passed by petition to the authorities to take a poll on the question that it would be granted; unless one-sixth of the people signed the petition there could be no poll.

5775. That means that you would not have a poll until you were pretty well sure of the result? Yes.

5776. You would not court an ignominious failure? Certainly not.

5777. To take a vote every year would involve some expense. Who do you think ought to bear it? It would not be very expensive. While the trade is licensed I do not see why the public should not bear the expense.

5778. The municipalities would not have to bear the expense? No; in some instances votes might have to be taken where there are no municipalities.

5779. Suppose the vote is against the liquor traffic how long would you allow it to remain in force? Three years.

5780. Would you allow a fresh vote to be taken on petition? Yes.

5781. On petition of one-sixth of the voters as in the other case? No; I would make it a majority of the voters.

5782.

Mr.
G. D. Clark.
13 Aug., 1886.

5782. Do you think that it would be fair to allow local optionists to claim a vote on a petition signed by one-sixth of the voters, and to compel the other side to produce a petition signed by an absolute majority of the voters? My ground is this: The people are now suffering from the privileged monopoly of public-houses in their midst, but once we get that out of the way everybody would stand on an equal footing, and it should require a majority of the people to bring back the monopoly.

5783. I believe that the good templars have decided against compensation? Yes.

5784. But a man may be a local optionist and not be a total abstainer? Yes; but all good templars are total abstainers.

5785. Then your reasons for not being in favour of granting compensation are the same I suppose as those given by Mr. Boyce? I daresay they are very much the same.

5786. Is there anything you would like to impress upon the Commission as sustaining the arguments against compensation? Although I have read almost everything that has appeared in the press on the subject I have never read a really good argument in favour of compensation. In most cases there are at least three persons who would have to be considered in any proposal to give compensation. There is the licensee, the owner of the premises, who obtains an enhanced income from the fact of his house being licensed, and there is the brewer, who has a ready market for his goods. The question arises which should we compensate, or should we compensate them all?

5787. Is that a reason of yours against compensation? Yes. The main reason is, that the publican gets all the contracts for. Local optionists do not want to interfere with him during the currency of his lease.

5788. You take the ground that his lease is limited to a year? Yes. The Court of Queen's Bench has decided that there could be no such thing as a legal claim to compensation.

5789. What the Court of Queen's Bench decided under the English Act is not the question. The question whether in the introduction of some measure to establish local option the Legislature will not require that some compensation shall be provided for? If compensation is allowed it should be distributed evenly, and should be based on the principle that those who have sustained a loss should have something to make up for that loss, and I have pointed out that at least three different persons may sustain a loss by the closing of a public-house.

5790. You have pointed out the difficulty, but it does not follow that the amount to be awarded should not be apportioned in the ratio of their respective claims, and that the Legislature might not deal with it in that way. You have pointed out that there are three persons involved? Yes, and there are a good many others; I myself might be thrown out of a billet if the drink traffic was done away with, but I should like to see it go nevertheless.

5791. The fact remains that your organisation is opposed to the granting of any compensation whatever? Yes, we know that it has been recognised by successive Parliaments that private interests must give way to the general welfare. I saw an instance of this in the country the other day. The Government are making a railway, and on the route of the line the traffic is now carried by teams and coaches, but when the line is opened their business will be stopped, but the teamsters will not be compensated.

5792. One obvious difference which prevents the analogy from being fair is this, that the teamsters can go on using the road, but you stop the publican? There is a public-house which will be closed when that railway opens. I may mention a case which came under my notice long before any local option vote was taken: There were two houses in a street almost exactly alike and worth about the same amount. The owner of one of those houses succeeded in getting a license which immediately raised the value of his property, whilst it depreciated the property close by. If after the man who had got the license had been making money for some years the public stepped in and said, "We will allow no more of this," and closed his house, I do not see that he would be entitled to compensation.

5793. I suppose you are of opinion that the votes taken have been unsatisfactory? Yes, for the reason that the voting has been confined to the ratepayers.

5794. Is that the reason? Not the whole reason, it is part of it.

5795. But even so the ratepayers have not voted? No, but that can be explained to some extent. What we have is not local option.

5796. I suppose you would call it an instalment? I may point out with regard to Gipps Ward, for instance, that it contains a very large number of working people who have no vote, whilst many who have a number of votes for properties in Sussex-street, Miller's Point, and other localities live out at Ashfield and Burwood.

5797. But if you take the case of Burwood itself, the ratepayers have not gone up to vote there? That is so. I never anticipated a very enthusiastic vote on the question, neither did many other temperance reformers.

5798. Why? Because it does not touch existing houses.

5799. Did you not also find that the publican was almost compelled to vote with the local optionists? Yes, he either does that or abstains from voting.

5800. You did not particularly want him on your side did you? We did not mind.

5801. However this is not the local option which you want? No.

5802. You want a local option which will destroy the trade? We want a local option which will place it in the power of the people to do away with the trade. Our order does not bind us to say that the vote shall be confined to the direct veto. We are prepared to agree to a bill which whilst it contains a direct veto will also give power to limit the trade.

5803. Do you expect ever to succeed in that portion of the city where the sailors are if they get the right to vote? It may be some time first, but I expect to see the traffic voted out of existence in time.

5804. Do you think there is any urgent demand for local option before the people are educated up to it? Yes, I believe that in some localities they are already educated up to it and that they ought to have the machinery.

5805. You would be content then with stopping it here and there so far as the people are prepared or willing to put their powers in force, although you might not get the traffic stopped in large towns? That is the essence of local option.

5806. You would not be surprised to find if the local option vote were in force to-morrow that it affected only the skirts of the population and did not make any difference in the town? I should not expect to see it carried in Sydney for some time.

5807. Whatever the result of local option may be, do you not think there will be still be intemperance? There may be some drinking, but not to the extent that there is at present. It is very clear that in Canada

Mr.
G. D. Clark.
13 Aug., 1886.

Canada and in some parts of the United States, in the counties of Ireland and some of the parishes of England where they have succeeded in putting down the traffic, there is little or no drinking.

5808. I am rather speaking of large cities at the present moment? Undoubtedly there would be some consumption of drink. People would smuggle drink just as they steal and embezzle.

5809. Whatever laws we make the propensity for taking drink will not be eradicated? No more than the propensity for taking other people's goods.

5810. Therefore there must be some permanent mode of treating intemperance? What do you think of our system of punishing men for drunkenness? I think it is not a good system. I think that the establishment of an inebriate asylum would be a good thing.

5811. And do you think that if local option laws were in force such an asylum would still be required? I think it would for some time after.

5812. Do you not think it is the duty of the State to establish or to help to establish such an asylum? Yes.

5813. Where people would be sent for medical treatment? Yes; they have worked fairly successfully, according to all accounts, in the Old Country.

5814. You would empower a Magistrate, I presume, to commit persons to these places? Yes.

5815. And you would also allow the friends of the inebriate to take him there? I would.

5816. In fact you would treat him as a lunatic until he is cured? Yes.

5817. Mr. Hutchison.] How many Members of the House of Commons were returned at the last election pledged to local option? According to the returns of the various temperance organizations 358 members were so returned; that is an absolute majority of the House.

5818. Was it made a burning question at those elections? It was recognized by both parties as a test question.

5819. Have the temperance bodies here made it a test question too? Yes.

5820. Your organizations will not take up a man unless he declares that he will vote for local option? My Grand Lodge has declared at two sessions that its machinery will not be brought into operation to secure the return of any man unless he has promised to vote for the direct veto.

5823. How many adult members does that represent? Our last annual returns were 16,488; I suppose we have now about 17,500.

5824. Is there any way to prove that these are not paper but financial members? Yes; each lodge with its quarterly returns sends in a tax of so much per head for all its members.

5825. Do they spend any money for mission purposes? Yes; our order has three lecturers constantly employed in different parts of the Colony; we are now conducting a six weeks' mission in the city and suburbs; we hold two meetings a night, and sometimes three.

5826. Are they supposed to advocate local option as well as total abstinence? Yes; the two principles of our order are abstinence for the individual and prohibition for the State; we advocate local option as a means to secure prohibition, and the lecturers do advocate it to some extent.

5827. You do not want a vote you are compelled to take—you want your vote to be voluntary? Local option is always supposed to be voluntary.

5828. You object to a period being fixed to take the vote? Yes.

5829. That is compulsory voting, and not local option, as far as the time is concerned? Local option means that the people of a locality shall be allowed to vote when they desire to do so, and it shall be people living in the locality, not persons at a distance, who shall so vote.

5830. President.] Do you mean that a person who holds property, but lives at a distance, shall not have a vote? No; I would give a vote to both landlord and tenant.

5831. Mr. Hutchison.] Local optionists decline to be enthusiastic over the present Act because the roll is not sufficient, because they have to work shoulder to shoulder with the publican, because it does not embrace the veto, and because they are compelled to vote at a given period whether they like it or not? Yes; mainly because it does not embrace the veto power.

5832. Your order objects to licenses entirely? Yes.

5833. Therefore you ask for power for the people, not to regulate but to veto the traffic? As an order, to quote the words of Sir Wilfred Lawson, we are license destroyers; we do not believe in regulation at all; we ask for the right for the people to veto or to limit if they feel so disposed; but the power to veto must be given to have our sanction and approval.

5834. Mr. Roseby.] Your order embraces all sections of the community, the labouring as well as the well-to-do class? Yes; we have a considerable number of wharf lumpers and sailors.

5835. Have the drinking habits of sailors been much reformed? Yes; there are lodges on board of each man-of-war; nearly 200 of the "Nelson's" crew are total abstainers; but I am afraid that 200 out of every 500 of our shore population are not total abstainers.

5836. The scenes of riot and disorder that were formerly created in our streets by sailors do not take place now? Certainly not. I was a sailor for nine years in my younger days, and I know of no organization, not even the Church itself, that has done so much for sailors as the Good Templar Order in various parts of the world.

5837. Is the uniform testimony of the people who belong to your order strongly in favour of total abstinence, as contrasted with their experience as drunkards? Yes; they are all real prohibitionists; they pledge themselves to work not only for abstinence but also for the complete suppression of the traffic.

5838. With regard to the frequent applications for a license for a house, do you know that one was made several times for a house at Randwick? Yes, and it was ultimately obtained.

5839. Each application was resisted by the inhabitants? Yes.

5840. And a license has been granted? Yes; because a Member of Parliament, I believe, signed the application.

5841. Since the prohibition law has been in operation in Canada has any retrograde movement been taken by communities in favour of establishing drinking shops again? In no place has the law been repealed after it has once been brought into operation.
5842. Is ample accommodation provided there without bars for the people? Travellers tell us that it is better than what is provided in places where drink is sold.
5843. At the last English elections a majority of Members were returned pledged to local option? Yes; Glasgow returned eight Members, of whom seven were direct veto men; Birmingham did the same; and every one of the twelve labour representatives was in favour of local option.
5844. A large number of Members of the Legislative Assembly of this Colony are in favour of local option? More than one-half are pledged to it.
- 5844½. Did the League send questions on the subject to candidates and obtain answers? Answers were received from about fifty-seven Members of the present House to say that they were in favour of the principle of local option.

G. D. Clark.

MONDAY, 16 AUGUST, 1886.

Present:—

J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.,	T. COLLS, Esq., J.P.,
G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.,	J. DAVIES, Esq., C.M.G., J.P., M.P.

A. HUTCHISON, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

The Rev. R. Sellors called in, sworn, and examined:—

5845. Mr. Hutchison.] You are President of the Wesleyan Methodist Church, and you have been in the Colony for many years? Yes, and I have been twenty-two years in this Colony, with the exception of three years which I spent in Queensland.
5846. Has the new Licensing Act led to any noticeable improvement in the habits of the people? So far as I have observed I think there is an improvement. The Act has conferred great benefit on the Colony in the closing of public-houses on the Sabbath-day.
5847. What suggestions do you offer to secure convictions for violations of the law? I should suggest that there be a larger number of officers appointed to inspect these public-houses on the Sunday, especially in districts in which you believe the law is evaded. The number of such officers at present is too small.
5848. With regard to the difficulty that is now experienced to secure a conviction would you approve of the incorporation into our law of the English system under which the publican has to prove that the persons are in his house for a lawful purpose? I think that would be a good clause to have in any Act.
5849. You think that early closing during the week is a benefit? Yes.
5850. Would it be fair to say that much of the poverty and squalor you meet with in your ministerial experience is the result of drink? I have had good opportunities to observe the country as well as the town. I think a large amount of the poverty is preventable and is to be attributed very largely to the immoderate use of intoxicating drink.
5851. Is the drinking habit greater among youths now than it used to be? Yes; I think they take to it at an earlier age now than they did some years ago. I was particularly struck in returning recently from a week-night appointment along Harris-street to notice a large number of young men, some in the bar and some just in front of the bar of the public-house. Some of them seemed to be under twenty years of age.
5852. Do you think there is much private drinking by virtue of Sunday closing? I have had no opportunity to judge of that. It has not come under my notice, but so far as I can give an opinion I do not think there is much force in the statement that the drink is bought on the Saturday night and consumed on the Sunday. I think that men who are addicted to the use of intoxicating drink have not the forethought to procure on the Saturday night a supply for the morrow. They would be too drunk on the Saturday night. So I attach no importance to the objection that Sunday closing has led to the purchase of the bottle on Saturday for use on Sunday.
5853. Do you know anything of the multiplicity of bars in connection with public-houses? No, I have not heard it referred to.
5854. Is one bar sufficient for each hotel? Yes.
5855. Would you object to bars upstairs attended to by ladies? Yes.
5856. Do you think that a bar should be open to the observation of the people instead of being obscured as it is now? Yes.
5857. Do you approve of the provisions which prohibit a publican from supplying drink to any one under the age of sixteen years? Yes. I think the age should be increased to eighteen or twenty years.
5858. Would you increase the license fee? In some cases I think I should.
5859. Do you suggest any general remedy to reform the drinking habits of the people? I would suggest a decrease in the number of public-houses. I think the facilities for intemperance are much too numerous at the present time. A multiplication of the number of public-houses has a tendency to increase drunkenness.
5860. Do you believe in local option? Yes. The Church which I represent has given a deliverance in favour of the principle. Not only the Methodist Church here but throughout the Colonies. The Australasian Methodist Church has expressed its approval of the principle of local option, and urged upon its people to exercise their right to vote on the question in municipal elections.
5862. Would you give the people if they asked for it the power to veto the traffic? Personally I should. The Wesleyan Church has given no deliverance on that question, but has expressed itself in favour of local option more as it now exists than in the direction you have suggested. I am in favour of local option in relation to the renewal of licenses as well as to new licenses.
5863. Would you grant compensation to an interest that may be affected by the local option vote? I have thought over the question, and am not fully of opinion that the landlord of a house from which a license might be withdrawn would not be entitled under some circumstances to an amount of compensation. I believe the benefit which local option would confer on the community is so great that I should prefer to have it with compensation than not to have it at all.

Rev.
R. Sellors.
16 Aug., 1886.

Rev.
R. Sellors.
16 Aug., 1886.

5864. Your compensation is an expedient? Yes rather than as a right. I take it that we have given compensation in other great questions where great interests have been at stake. Where we have thought the continuance of the existing state of things an evil we have granted compensation; as, for instance, in the abolition of slavery. However I do not think that the cases entitled to compensation would be very numerous.

5865. Why do you think so? I think that the property might be devoted to some other purpose.

5867. It would be equivalent to compensation to give a sufficient notice to appropriate their property to some other purpose? Yes.

5868. Are you familiar with local option or prohibition as it exists in other countries? No; but I have read on the subject. Some people say it is a great boon to the people, but I find that the reports are contradictory, that the friends of local option in those places where it exists, say one thing and the opponents of the principle give us another view of the question.

5869. It is possible that is more seeming than real? It may be.

5870. Mr. Withers.] Do you represent the Local Option League in any way? I am a member of the League.

5871. With regard to the election of persons to public bodies, or to important positions, it is the duty of the League to secure the return of a gentleman to carry out their views? Yes.

5872. It is stated that so long as a candidate is sound on the question of local option all other considerations sink almost into insignificance. It is regarded as a paramount question affecting the future welfare of the Colony? Only when that is the one question before the country. We elect representatives, not to carry out our views of the local option question alone, but to legislate for the country. I should not feel myself bound to a man who would just state himself to be in favour of local option if I thought that in all other respects he was unsuited to be a Member of Parliament.

5873. The Temperance Hall is regarded as the head quarters of the temperance movement? It is one of the oldest temperance institutions in the Colony. A large number of societies are not directly identified with the Temperance Hall. Its proprietors are our allies in the cause of temperance, we do not receive our authority from the Temperance Hall in any way. Certain temperance bodies meet there, but they are not under the control of the trustees of the hall.

5874. I presume that the trustees and other officers are understood to hold temperance views? I presume so.

5875. Which do you regard as the greatest danger to the community—the high-class hotel, such as the "Oxford" or the "Royal Hotel," or the low drinking house which is to be found in the back slums? I think that the houses that are carried on simply for the sale of drink and do not afford respectable accommodation are those which do the greater amount of mischief, and produce the largest amount of intemperance in the community.

5876. I think you said that you considered the employment of females in public-house bars objectionable? Yes, I think it very undesirable that females should be employed in the bar of any public-house.

5877. Do you think it is more objectionable than the system of females being employed in factories along with the other sex? I have not been in many factories in which large numbers are employed, so that I have not had an opportunity of judging; but I think it is very undesirable for a female to be employed for many hours during the day in the bar of a public-house. I think that the language frequently used by those under the influence of liquor is language which ought not to be used at any time, and certainly not within the hearing of a female. Of course I do not speak from having been in the bar of a public-house but from the language which at times I am compelled to hear as I pass along the street.

5878. I suppose you know that although during the first year of the operation of the present Act the Sunday-closing provision was strictly enforced during the last two years it has become almost a dead letter? I think I was in Queensland during the first year after the Act was passed. When I left Queensland I went to Goulburn, and my impression is that though the law is evaded by some persons who are licensed to sell intoxicating drink, yet after all the Sunday-closing law is a great benefit to the community. I should be very sorry indeed to see any alteration in the direction of opening the public-houses on the Sunday. I refer not merely to Sydney but also to some of the towns in the interior. A few years ago I visited Hay and spent a Sunday there, and I was very much pleased to observe the quietness and order which prevailed there owing to the closing of the public-houses on Sunday. I also spent a Sunday at Deniliquin, which some time ago was not regarded as one of the most sober townships in the Colony. I was there on the day after a general election, and I was pleased to observe that even on the Saturday there was very little drunkenness. That was the day on which the elections took place. I was in the principal streets several times during the day, and so far as I remember I did not notice more than one man who was under the influence of drink to any considerable extent. On the Sunday I was delighted with the quiet and order of the place, which was the result, I believe, of the closing of the public-houses; and there was also observable, I thought, a decrease in drunkenness on other days—a better tone.

5879. Then you think that, notwithstanding the known violation of the law with regard to Sunday closing, the present state of things is a great improvement on the old system when the houses were open all over the city? Yes, a very great improvement.

5880. There is not the same danger of persons who have not contracted the habit of drinking wandering into hotels whose doors are open? No.

5881. Do you think it would be a wise provision to close all hotels on the polling-day of a general election? I think it would. There could be provision for persons obtaining refreshment without the drink, which is after all an unnecessary luxury; and I do not see that there would be any interference with the voting. I should like to see the public-houses throughout the country closed on the polling-day of an election.

5882. I do not know whether you are as well able as a layman to judge of the convenience and comforts of an hotel, as provision is generally made for clergymen when they are travelling; but from your observation do you consider that a properly conducted hotel is an evil to the State? A properly conducted hotel, in which there is no drunkenness, I could not call a necessary evil in any community. As you say, I have not had to stay very frequently at hotels. When I was a minister in the interior of the colony, and especially in the Riverina district, I was sometimes obliged to stay at hotels. I have even preached in hotels—in

Rev.
R. Sellors.

in the entrance hall of the "Royal Hotel" at Narrandera, where, as a total abstainer, I have been hospitably entertained as a guest by the publican; and not only there but in other parts of the Riverina. At that time the proprietors of public-houses used to entertain ministers of all churches when travelling through the district.

5883. And you see no reason why a man who conducts a respectable hotel should not with his family be regarded as reputable and entitled to as much respect as any other tradesman? I think that any person who conducts his house properly is entitled to respect. He is engaged in a trade which is sanctioned by the law, and to reflect upon the man who conducts his trade properly is to reflect upon the law which permits him to carry on that trade; and I should be ashamed to look with disrespect upon the family of a publican because the father happened to be in the liquor trade. I should be ashamed of myself if I treated the children of any person engaged in the traffic who came to my church or school in any other way than I would treat the children of other families.

5884. I suppose that, in the exercise of your duties in the interim, you have often had to visit gaols and lunatic asylums to administer spiritual consolation to the inmates? Yes; I have visited the gaols in Armidale, Goulburn, Wagga Wagga, and also in Queensland.

5885. Have you ever formed any estimate of the proportion of cases of imprisonment brought about directly or indirectly by excessive drinking? I do not know that I have had a good opportunity of judging of the amount of crime attributable to intemperance.

5886. It has been stated in certain quarters that the custom of drinking intoxicating liquors at public and private festivities, and especially on the part of females, has of late years been increasing;—do you think there is a danger in that respect? I can scarcely form an opinion. So far as my own attendance at festivities is concerned, in visiting among the people of my own Church, I find that the use of intoxicants is quite the exception, even on festive occasions.

5887. Mr. Roseby. I understand that you have had twenty-three years' Colonial experience as a Minister of the Gospel? Yes.

5888. Did you ever contrast the drinking habits of the people of these Colonies with those of the people of the Old Country at the time when you left England? I did not spend very much time in the larger towns at Home. I was for a short time in Manchester and in London; but I was at Richmond for three years, and 5 or 6 miles from Manchester for some years. I think there is a greater amount of drinking at Home in the large towns and cities than in the country in proportion to population; and having had a larger experience of country towns at Home it struck me when I came out here that there was more intemperance here than I saw at Home.

5889. Have you contrasted Sydney with an English city of a similar size;—do you not think that we have here greater attractions to drink than is the case in the Old Country? I think so.

5890. Your avocation has brought you a good deal into contact with the social life of the community, and, as a Minister, you have travelled in different parts of the country; have you not concluded that intoxicating drink is a terrible curse to the community? That has been my opinion for years past—an opinion that I have given expression to on many occasions, in sermons, and also at public meetings.

5891. Have you not felt astonished that a more decided effort has not been made to suppress such a gigantic evil as this? Yes.

5892. Have you thought that the efforts used by the authorities to suppress this curse have been adequate to the enormity of the evil? I think they have been far from adequate.

5893. Although you cannot say the exact proportion of persons who are incarcerated in our gaols owing to drink, you conclude that a very large proportion of crime is attributable to intemperance? Yes, I have come to that conclusion, because I have been bound to accept the statements of those who are more familiar with the subject, and who give this as their opinion; I refer, for instance, to the opinion of Sir Alfred Stephen expressed some time ago. I think that here, as well as in the Old Country, and in fact throughout the world, a large proportion of crime must be attributed to intemperance.

5894. Have you not found in your experience that drink lies at the root of a great deal of the wretchedness and misery and the domestic unhappiness which exist? Yes; where poverty and home unhappiness exist I have generally found that intemperance has been the cause.

5895. I think you stated that, judging from your own personal observation, you were of opinion that there was a larger amount of drinking among young people at the present time than when you first arrived in the Colony? I think so.

5896. And I think you stated, in reply to the Chairman, that you were in favour of giving the people the power to say whether they would have these public-houses in their midst or not—you believe in that principle? Yes.

5897. And the church you represent has also spoken very decidedly in favour of the principle? Yes. For several years a resolution, which I myself have had the honor to move, has been passed almost every year in favour of local option as a principle.

5898. You have also expressed yourself as strongly in favour of closing public-houses absolutely on Sunday? Yes, closing them so far as the sale of intoxicating drink is concerned, but allowing them to furnish accommodation for travellers. I should say, let there be no intoxicating drink sold on the Sabbath day.

5899. Do you not think that people would find sufficient hotel accommodation if these bars were closed? I think so.

5900. You think there would still be respectable hotels without bars? I think some of them might be continued, and if not I think quite sufficient accommodation for persons who might wish to stay a few days could be obtained. I do not think that, so far as accommodation is concerned, the public would suffer from the closing of the public-houses; some of the latter might be converted into houses of accommodation.

5901. Have you read that in countries where prohibition exists there is ample hotel accommodation for all the requirements of the community? I have reason to believe so.

5902. Do you believe that people can enjoy all the social enjoyments of life just as well without drink as with it? Certainly I do.

5903. In our community drink is considered by some people as a necessary adjunct to social intercourse;—do you believe that is a mistake? Yes; I do not think it is a necessity.

5904. So far as your experience is concerned, all the joy of social life can be experienced without the use of intoxicants? Yes.

- Rev.
R. Sellors.
16 Aug., 1886.
5905. Are you aware that there is a growing feeling in favour of local option in the United Kingdom? I believe so.
5906. Do you know whether Sir Wilfred Lawson's resolutions were successful in the House of Commons? I think they were on the last occasion.
5907. Three times he has succeeded in passing them? I believe so.
5908. And do you know that a Sunday-closing law has been in Scotland for many years? Yes.
5909. Do you know that a similar law has recently been brought into operation in Ireland? Yes.
5910. Do you think there is any general desire on the part of the community here to have the public-houses open on Sunday? I do not think there is a general desire in that direction. The resolution of the Wesleyan Conference urges that steps be taken to secure the closing of public-houses entirely on the Sunday; and the resolution of the British Wesleyan Conference, which is in harmony with ours, refers to the benefit conferred upon the people of Scotland, Ireland, and Wales by the closing of public-houses on Sunday; and it also expresses the hope that the day is not far distant when a similar boon will be conferred on the people of England.
5911. Do you believe that the later opening and the earlier closing of the public-houses in our community has had a beneficial tendency? Yes.
5912. Have you heard that licensed houses in some of the States of America are compelled to close at 7 o'clock on Saturday evening? I was not aware of that.
5913. Do you believe that the closing of these bars earlier on Saturday would have a beneficial effect? I do.
5914. Do you think that owing to the late hour at which public-houses are open on Saturday night many of the working people are induced to spend a greater part of their wages in them than they ought to do? Yes.
5915. I think you said you thought it would be beneficial if public-houses were closed during the excitement of a general election day? Yes.
5916. Do you think the law ought to be very stringent in preventing candidates from supplying voters with drink? Yes.
5917. Do you believe that the practice I have referred to is a great source of political corruption at the present time? There is a great danger in that direction I think.
5918. Have you heard that many candidates have spent very large sums of money in intoxicating liquors; in fact that a whole electorate has sometimes been literally swamped with liquor? I have heard rumours to that effect; I am not able to prove that they are true.
5919. Your opinion is that the good order and well being of the community would be promoted if public-houses were closed altogether on days of election? Yes.
5920. In fact I conclude from your answers that you regard drink in itself as such an evil that all efforts to suppress, if not to annihilate it, will receive your hearty sympathy and support? Yes; all well directed efforts in that direction. I should be ashamed of myself if I did not identify myself fully with such a movement.
5921. There is no sin that you know of comparable with the evil of drink? In my judgment it is one of the greatest, if not the greatest evil of the present age, and especially amongst English-speaking people, although it is bad enough among some of the nations of Europe. In my judgment it is the very greatest evil, diverting from its proper channel a very large proportion of the income of the working classes with no adequate return.
5922. Do you know that the majority of the houses now licensed are not respectable hotels, but simply pot-houses? I think that a very large number of the houses in and around Sydney are of that character. They live for the bar trade only. I notice that some of them seem to take boarders and to have working men boarding with them, and perhaps—I won't say it confidently, but I have a fear that some of them are prepared to take boarders at a lower scale than the ordinary boarding-houses owing to the profit they may make from the drink. I have felt that there is a danger in that direction, although I do not give it as my opinion that this is done.
5923. Do you know that there are comparatively few houses to which a respectable man and his family sojourning in the city for a few days could be taken for accommodation? In proportion to the number of public-houses comparatively few.
5924. Mr. Davies.] You are an old resident in the Colony? Yes, this is my twenty-third year in the Colony; I was absent in Queensland for three years.
5925. You have been living in various parts of the Colony? Yes.
5926. Have you had opportunities of observing the operation of the old Act and comparing its results with those of the present law? Yes.
5927. What is your opinion with reference to the present law? My opinion is that the present law is a very great improvement on the law which preceded it in the directions I have indicated—the shortening of the hours and the closing of the public-houses on the Sundays.
5928. Have you observed any marked improvement in the general character of localities and the behaviour of those who were in the habit of frequenting public-houses on Sunday? I have observed that the country towns have been much quieter, and that the Sundays have been better observed since the closing of the houses entirely on the Sunday, and in that respect the present law is an improvement on the old one.
5929. And I presume the same remark would apply to the shortening of the hours on the week days? Yes.
5930. The city would be quieter and the towns also? Yes. I was away from Sydney when the new Act came into operation, and on spending a Sunday in Sydney on my return to the Colony I was particularly struck with the quietness of the streets.
5931. You have told the Commission that you are a total abstainer? Yes.
5932. And have no sympathy with drink itself? No.
5933. Do you favour the principle of local option or that of entire prohibition? I favour the principle of local option as a step in the direction of prohibition.
5934. Then I infer that you are in favour of delegating to the people the power of saying whether they will have public-houses or not? Yes.
5935. Have you paid much attention to the present system of granting licenses as compared with the old plan by which ordinary Justices granted licenses? No, I have not paid much attention to that. I have been

Rev.
R. Sellors.
16 Aug., 1886.

been in the Police Court on one or two occasions to try and prevent the granting of a license, but I do not think I ever attended the Licensing Court under the old Act. I believe that the present is an improvement on the old system; but I should prefer that the matter should be left to the people.

5936. You have already given the Commission your opinion with regard to compensation, which you think should be given as a matter of expediency? Yes, if there has been no notice extending over four years; if there has been such notice I should let that stand instead of compensation.

5937. But in cases where a local option vote is taken and a house is closed, I understand you to say that you would be in favour of compensating the holder of the license or the house where notice has not been given? I said I should compensate if the house could not be used for some other purpose so as to bring in a sufficient return for the outlay.

5938. As a matter of expediency? Yes. I should not think there would be many cases in which compensation would be required. I think the premises might be devoted to other purposes, which would bring in to the owner a fair income upon the outlay; perhaps not anything like the return obtained while the house was licensed for the sale of intoxicating drink, but, looking at the ordinary rate of interest on money invested in property, the house might be appropriated to some purpose which would bring in a fair rental.

5939. Would you make the compensation a charge upon the Consolidated Revenue or upon the persons who would benefit by the closing of the houses? I have not taken that into consideration. I do not think you would get the persons in the locality to pay the compensation—those in the immediate neighbourhood who might be supposed to benefit from the closing of the public-house.

5940. Then you think the compensation should be a charge upon the Consolidated Revenue? I think so, rather than on the locality. I take this view: That the continuance of the trade is after all a charge upon the State in that the effects of intemperance are so frequently seen in the commission of crime, and the support of criminals while serving their sentences, and that as the lessening of intemperance by the closing of public-houses reduces this charge upon the State the process by which this is brought about should be paid for out of the Consolidated Revenue.

5941. You believe one should counterbalance the other? Yes; that is the view I have taken.

5942. You look upon the trade as exceptional in regard to its consequences, and consider that it should be exceptionally treated? Yes.

5943. In answer to Mr. Withers you said that you regard a publican who conducts his house fairly within the law as a respectable and reputable citizen? Yes; still I should recommend him to take another trade as soon as convenient.

5944. Are you aware that publicans in England, and particularly in London, are under greater disabilities by reason of their calling than is the case in New South Wales? I have been away from England for more than twenty-two years, and I cannot say that I am aware of this.

5945. Would you extend the local option franchise to females? I should have no objection.

5946. Taking the electoral roll and adding females to it on the same basis? Yes. I think the females suffer more than the males from the drink traffic. The evil effects are felt more by those dependent upon the drunkard than by the drunkard himself.

5947. Would you be satisfied with a bare majority or a majority of two-thirds in deciding as to the closing of a public-house? Following the principle that obtains in deliberative assemblies, I think I ought to be satisfied with the vote of the majority, without requiring two-thirds.

5948. I gather from an answer you gave to Mr. Roseby that you are in favour of closing public-houses on election days? Yes.

5949. You believe it would conduce to good order? Yes; and I am also in favour of the removal of all benefit and friendly societies from public-houses if they hold their meetings there, and I should also prohibit the payment of wages in public-houses.

5950. You are absolutely in favour of Sunday closing? Yes.

5951. You would not permit public-houses to be open for the sale of liquor on the Sabbath-day under any circumstances? No; not the bar.

5952. Mr. Roseby.] Do you regard the present mode of treating drunkards as satisfactory. You are aware, of course, that habitual drunkards are continually going to and from Darlinghurst Gaol? No; I do not think that is a satisfactory mode of treatment. I think there ought to be an establishment to which persons addicted to drink, who have rendered themselves in any way amenable to the law, should be sent, and where they would receive different treatment from that to which they are subjected in Darlinghurst, where they are mixed up with criminals. I think it is a very great evil that the law should allow a man to sell drink to another until he becomes intoxicated, and that the only man punished should be the one to whom the drink was sold.

5953. You would make it a serious offence on the part of a publican to make a man drunk? Yes.

5954. You have heard of an institution called an Inebriate Asylum? Yes.

5955. Do you think that such establishments would be beneficial in this community? I think so; I signed a petition in favour of the establishment of an institution of the kind not long ago.

5956. Do you think they should be conducted on both the voluntary and the compulsory systems? Yes; I think there should be compulsion in some cases.

5957. You have known cases, I suppose, where confinement in such an institution would be a great boon, both to the victim and his family? Yes.

5958. You are aware that some people are so terribly under the over-mastering power of drink that they have no moral force to resist the temptation that assails them? It would seem so.

5959. In many cases have you not seen it assume the form of disease? Yes; I think it does.

5960. And notwithstanding the prospect of the wreck and ruin of himself and all belonging to him the drunkard is not able to resist its over-mastering power? No.

5962. The Wesleyans form a large proportion of the population of the Colony, do they not? I think that according to the last census they numbered nearer 60,000 than 50,000.

Rev.
E. Sellors.
16 Aug., 1886.

5964. Mr. Davies.] Is there anything you could suggest in the shape of reform in the direction of legislating for restricting the drink traffic other than that you have already indicated in regard to local option? I do not know that I could suggest anything. I should like to see the present Act better carried out in relation to Sunday closing, and a more thorough inspection of public-houses and of the liquor sold in them.

5965. Mr. Hutchison (Chairman).] Are you familiar with the new Licensing Act of Queensland? No, I can't say that I am familiar with it. I have read descriptions of it in the newspapers.

5966. It makes provision for three distinct votes being taken, and one of them would cover part of the ground Mr. Davis has now suggested. It makes provision for voting that there shall be no further increase; or, if the people wish to go a little further, to decrease the licensed houses to a given number, or if they wish to go further still, to veto them altogether in the district. Do you think that would be a fair way of getting at it? I think the people ought to have a voice in all those matters.

5967. With regard to compensation, do I understand that you would rather compensate the owners of the property rather than the holder of the license? Yes, I would compensate the owner of the property and not the occupant of the house for the time being.

5968. The holder of a license having been allowed to finish the year for which he was licensed, would you give him any compensation if the people stepped in and said you cannot have your license renewed? No, I would not give the publican himself compensation. But if the withholding of a license causes the property to be depreciated very much in value, and we cannot have the license withheld without some amount of compensation being given to the owner of the property, I should give him some compensation; but I would not give any to the publican. In speaking of compensation I have all along referred to the property.

5969. Suppose that a property is paying 15 per cent., by reason of its being a public-house, and that on the license being refused not more than 10 per cent. can be realized, would you think there was good ground for compensation? No.

5970. You would not compensate a fancy profit? No.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. District Court Judge Wilkinson called in, sworn, and examined:—

Judge
Wilkinson.
16 Aug., 1886.

5971. Mr. Hutchison.] Have you been a long time on the Bench? About twelve or thirteen years in Sydney, but before that I was in the country. It is nearly twenty-two years since I first acted as a Judge.
5972. Have you formed any opinion as to the proportion of crime which is due directly or indirectly to drink? I have not formed an opinion as to the exact arithmetical proportion, but I know that a very large proportion of crime is caused directly or indirectly by drink; that is to say, it either causes the crime or affords the opportunity for crime.

5973. But you have not formed an opinion as to the actual proportion? I should say that it was about three-quarters. I was reading lately that the Chief Justice of a more temperate Colony—South Australia—estimated the proportion there at three-quarters or 75 per cent.; and possibly that may have influenced my own opinion as to the proportion; otherwise I should have thought that the proportion here was larger.

5974. You would not think of reducing it? No, I think not.

5975. You have been familiar with Sydney both before and since the passing of the present Licensing Act;—do you think that Act has effected any improvement? I think it has caused very considerable improvement in some respects. I do not know how far it has affected drunkenness directly, but I think there can be no question as to the improvement in the character of the public-houses.

5976. Do you think it is a wise provision to cause public-houses to be closed on Sundays? Yes, if the law were made sufficiently stringent to be enforced. I do not know it from my own judicial experience, but I have gathered that the law is largely evaded, and of course when a law is continually evaded more injury is done to the community than if the law did not exist at all. The community is demoralized by the existence of a law which is continually evaded.

5977. We have evidence from the police that not only have they great difficulty in obtaining convictions, but that even when convictions have been obtained the case is reheard on appeal at the Quarter Sessions, new evidence is taken, and the conviction upset. Can you suggest any amendment in the law in that direction? Every rehearing of the same case is attended with a certain inconvenience, because each side knows to a certain extent what the other side's case is, and as they are not very scrupulous sometimes in obtaining evidence, they meet the difficulties that have presented themselves at the former trial in that way.

5979. President.] While an appeal is in the nature of a rehearing, it is impossible (unless we alter the law in respect to licensing cases) to avoid the danger of perjury in letting in new evidence. In the Criminal

Judge
Wilkinson.
16 Aug., 1886.

Criminal Law Amendment Act, section 413, there is this provision:—"Where any conviction is quashed on appeal the Clerk of the Peace or other proper officer shall forthwith indorse on the conviction a memorandum to that effect and whenever any certificate of such conviction is given a copy of such memorandum shall be added and in every case where such certificate would be evidence of the conviction it shall be sufficient evidence that such conviction has been quashed. Provided always that no conviction shall be quashed in any case where evidence not before the convicting Justices is given on behalf of the appellant unless it appears to the Court and is so stated in the judgment that such evidence was not at the time of the hearing accessible to or procurable by the appellant." That section has never been submitted to the criticism of the Supreme Court or to any other criticism. It is a most remarkable section and the effect of it appears to be this: that although the appeal court may be the most profound conviction from the evidence given before it that the conviction before the magistrates was wrong, still, if any of the evidence given on behalf of the appellant was procurable by him at the time of the hearing before the convicting magistrates the appellate Court which hears this evidence, and is thereby most thoroughly convinced that the conviction appealed against is altogether unjust and wrong, is unable to give effect to that opinion, but must uphold the conviction. That is a burden which has never yet been placed on any appellate Court so far as my knowledge of law goes, and I am waiting anxiously to hear what the Supreme Court has to say about it. The better way would be to say that no additional evidence should be given before the Court of Appeal.

5981. The testimony of the police is that they are discouraged in bringing prosecutions because of the numerous cases in which convictions are quashed on appeal, and they say that the amount of perjury committed upon second trials is extraordinary? The Commission should remember this, that any Judge sitting on appeal in Quarter Sessions takes care to have before him the depositions taken before the magistrates, and if there is any variance between the depositions and the subsequent evidence which indicates false swearing he has the means of knowing it. I always insist, so far as I can, on having the depositions before me and I watch them most carefully as each witness goes into the box.

5982. This is a sample of the cases as they are put before us: A is convicted of selling drink to B. On appeal fifteen witnesses are called who swear that they were present and that no liquor was supplied at all; there is no doubt as to what that is? I am afraid that they must be referring to other Judges than me; I have not done that; I remember one case in which I had not the slightest doubt about the impropriety of the conviction, and the case made such an impression on my mind that I can narrate the circumstances. A body of men on St. Patrick's Day had been walking about in procession wearing some insignia in their button-holes—I forget what it was, whether green, yellow, or blue—and one of them went into a public-house near the Haymarket, where he became extremely offensive, and at last the publican turned him out neck and crop; the publican was convicted, though it was proved that he was of very good character, that his wife was confined only two days before, and that the complainant was half drunk and was having a row in the house with another man. I never could understand how on earth the magistrate could have convicted that man unless it was under a feeling that publicans were to have scant justice. I set aside the conviction and I did so without any misgiving. The publican was perfectly justified in turning the man out. I do not remember any other case in which I upset a conviction. I know that there was a case before me with reference to Sunday selling in which I upheld the conviction although there was some hard swearing on behalf of the defendant.

5983. Now that you know what the complaint is, can you suggest any remedy? I cannot see any remedy very well. The leaning in my own mind is always to support the conviction inasmuch as the magistrates are probably more experienced in trying such cases than I am, and their opinion on that account is entitled to more weight than my own, and where it is only a question of fact I give that almost as a sufficient reason for supporting the conviction.

5984. It may be that what we find difficult to obtain by an amendment of the law with respect to appeals might be obtained by an amendment of the law in another direction. By the English law—Lord Aberdare's Act—if a man is found during prohibited hours or days in a public-house the burden of proof is cast upon him of rebutting the prima facie conclusion that he is there for an unlawful purpose; that is not in our law; do you think it would help the case? It must help the case. The burden of proof being thus shifted, it must influence the result. I do not think it would affect the result very much; but necessarily when there is a prima facie presumption, especially under an Act, it must help the side in whose favour the presumption is thus created.

5985. You do not think it would give rise to more perjury, because we do not want to increase the tendency in that direction by tightening the law in another? That I cannot tell. I think the greatest inducement to perjury is when you have any provision of an Act which can be evaded. It is a great point when you have provisions to make them stringent, and if perjury is committed, to introduce some summary method of dealing with such perjury. I do not know what the penalty for Sunday selling is, but I understand that the evasions of the provision are very frequent.

5986. The penalty for the consumer is up to 40s.; that for the publican is up to £20? The penalty is high enough for the publican, but it is very low for the consumer, and the temptation is probably greater to the consumer than to the publican on account of what I may call his diseased appetite. I do not know whether there are any provisions in the Act to enable the police to enter public-houses on Sunday, but as far as I can understand, if they did enter they would discover that most of them were full of people. In the case of Sunday selling which came before me there were a number of people in the house, and they told some rignarole story or other; I forget what it was.

5988. Mr. Hutchison.] Cases like this have happened: Men, to the number of 150, have been counted going into a public-house on one Sunday, and yet no conviction has been obtained. The police tell us that they cannot obtain convictions on evidence of that character; they must have proof of the supply and consumption of liquor? There is a well-known story of an English Judge, distinguished not only for his knowledge knowledge of law but for sound common sense, who said that if he saw a man go into a room perfectly sober, and come out 10 minutes or a quarter of an hour afterwards reeling drunk, he would consider that ample evidence to convict him of having taken intoxicating liquor on the premises. The points that are sometimes given effect to with regard to proof are simply absurd.

5989. President.] Some of our most experienced witnesses have said that 90 per cent. of the crime committed in this Colony is due to intemperance;—is that your experience? I should not like to say that it was not 90 per cent., I put it at three-fourths, but I daresay it is very much more.

5990. Do you think that simple drunkenness, without any aggravation either of place or circumstances, is a fit subject for punishment? I should like to know what you mean by punishment?

5991. Well, a man is fined or sent to gaol, or if delirious enough he is sent to the Receiving House; this is punishment, but it has no reformatory effect upon the habitual drunkard because he is brought up over and over again? If there is to be any amendment of the law it appears to me that it would be very desirable to introduce a provision under which any member of the community could bind himself not to take legal proceedings against those who would put him into an asylum for six or twelve months, or for such period as might be necessary to cure him of what I believe to be a disease, so that he could not afterwards bring an action against them. I believe such a law exists in some of the States of America.

5992. What we, as a Commission, or the majority of us, are inclined to believe is that the habitual drunkard is not a subject for punishment at all as such, but that he is a subject for reformatory treatment. We think that the Magistrates ought to be able to commit him when they know he is an habitual drunkard—say after the third or fourth offence—to a reformatory for treatment and for such a period as the nature of the case required; it might be six months or it might be two years? I should be inclined to agree with that if sufficient safeguards were provided against a person who was not a drunkard being treated as one in order to get him out of the way. All those processes by which a person's liberty is taken away, as in the case of lunatics, require the strictest and most careful safeguards. Of course there is not the same inducement to get a person out of the way for six months as there is to get him out of the way altogether. A case came to light recently in France in which the brother of a very celebrated writer was confined in a lunatic asylum for forty-seven years because he made a marriage of which his family did not approve. That case occurred simply through the law allowing a man's liberty to be taken from him without providing sufficient safeguards.

5993-4. Could not that difficulty be met by providing that the period of detention should only be for six months at a time with the power of remanding the person back? It could be done if you required certificates from properly qualified medical men; I think that would be the best safeguard. Judge Wilkinson here said: I should like the Commission to understand one thing with reference to the matter of appeals to Quarter Sessions which they may not know. There are two remedies provided by law against the decisions of magistrates. They are both in the nature of appeals. One is to a Judge of the Supreme Court; the other is to a Court of Quarter Sessions. The process of appeal to a Judge of the Supreme Court is really and truly upon the same materials as those which were before the Justices so far as those materials have been put in writing. In my opinion it is a very inefficient and absurd proceeding, because there are no sufficient provisions for securing that all the evidence given before the magistrates is properly recorded on the depositions, and the Supreme Court will not allow the evidence on the depositions to be supplemented, but for whatever it is worth it exists. An appeal to a Judge of the Supreme Court is simply on the evidence as it appears in the depositions, so that assuming that the evidence has been properly taken before the magistrates the Commission will see that an appeal on those materials is by this procedure to a Judge of the Supreme Court. At the same time the Licensing Act gives an appeal to the Quarter Sessions, and by a very well-known rule of law this appeal to the Quarter Sessions is in the nature of a rehearing de novo, and it is assumed that all the evidence is taken again, and the witnesses re-examined. It would almost seem to be implied, therefore, that the procedure before the Court of Quarter Sessions is something quite different from the procedure before a Judge of the Supreme Court; and if the procedure on prohibition before a Judge of the Supreme Court is sufficient there ought not to be any appeal to the Quarter Sessions at all. The fact that the Act does give an appeal to the Quarter Sessions would seem to show that the procedure by prohibition on the same materials as were before the magistrates is not considered sufficient, and one can understand that the Court of Quarter Sessions may possibly think that if additional evidence is given they ought to give effect to it. I simply say that it is a very curious circumstance with regard to the matter about which the Commission seems exercised, that there are two procedures on appeal co-existing at the same time, one of which assumes that the appeal is based on precisely the same materials, and if the Commission think that the appeal ought only to be on the same materials as were before the magistrates they may think that an appeal ought not to be to the Court of Quarter Sessions at all. What I should like the Commission to realize also is this: that while the procedure by prohibition is based on the depositions, yet curiously there has never been any distinct provision that all the evidence given before the Justices shall appear on the depositions, so that if the deposition clerk takes the depositions badly, and does not record all the evidence given, it is plain that the procedure before the Judge of the Supreme Court is unsatisfactory, because the magistrates may have convicted on evidence which does not appear on the depositions, and a prohibition may issue, on the assumption that evidence has not been given when it really has been given but has been omitted from the depositions. Of course a careful magistrate would see that the evidence on which he intended to act appeared on the depositions, but it is possible that he would not; an appeal to Quarter Sessions does not exist in all cases that come before magistrates, but only in those in which the right of appeal is given by statute. The Licensing Act gives an appeal to the Quarter Sessions, and it appears to me that it would be difficult to introduce provisions which would prevent appeals from magistrates in licensing cases being dealt with in any other way than appeals from magistrates in other cases where there is an appeal given by statute.

5995. Mr. Hutchison.] It really becomes a new trial? It is; if you read any of the text-books you will find that an appeal to Quarter Sessions is a rehearing de novo. I have looked into the matter for my own guidance, but I have never been able to find an authority which justifies me in saying, as a matter of law, that the decision of the Justices ought to be taken into consideration by the appellate Court as an element in coming to a conclusion, though I have always done it myself. I have said, "Here is a magistrate who has more experience in dealing with those matters than I have, and I ought to take into consideration that he has decided the case in a certain way." All the authorities, however, seem to say that a Court of Quarter Sessions, hearing a case on appeal, ought to deal with it as if it were entirely a rehearing rehearing de novo, and not allow their opinion to be influenced by the fact that the magistrates had already decided the case. That, no doubt, is based on the assumption that other evidence, not before the magistrates, may be before the Court of Quarter Sessions.

5996. Mr. Withers.] But as a matter of fact in some cases there is no fresh evidence? In the case to which I referred, as making a great impression on my mind, there was no fresh evidence, but I thought the magistrate committed a distinct and clear blunder.

5997. Mr. Roseby.] The police state that they are surprised at the number of witnesses who are called, and who swear falsely? I have not observed that in licensing cases more than others which have come before me, but I have heard of it; as a matter of fact I have not heard very many appeals since the new Act came into force.

FRIDAY, 20 AUGUST, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,
T. COLLS, Esq., J.P.,

A. HUTCHISON, Esq.,
J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.

G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

The Rev. James Jefferis, LL.D., called in, sworn, and examined:—

5998. President.] You are pastor of the Pitt-street Congregational Church? Yes.

5999. And you have occupied the position of chairman of the Congregational Union? Yes, several times, both here and in another Colony.

6000. Underlying the Commission by which we are appointed there is the idea that there has been a constantly increasing consumption of intoxicants in this county, in other words that drunkenness has been increasing. Do you assent to that? I do not think it has in proportion to the population. I judge by very general premises. I could not in any degree prove to you by statistics which I myself have thoroughly mastered that my opinion is a correct one. I judge from my work as a minister and from frequent contact which I have with people as well as from that wide general reading that one has necessarily to pass through in filling a public position. I do not think that there is any sensible decrease but I do not think that there has been an increase beyond the increase of the population.

6001. Are you speaking now from any particular period? Yes, especially for the last ten years, during which I have been in the colony.

6002. Speaking for the last ten years and having regard to the increase of the population you are unable to detect anything but a proportional increase of intemperance? I do not detect anything more than that.

6003. You are speaking generally for all classes? Yes.

6004. I suppose you agree that there is a great deal too much intoxicating liquor used? Most emphatically I do.

6005. We have not a right to increase the vice in proportion to the increase of population? Indeed not—the grave question is grappling with the evil which already exists.

6006. You think that the vice is a monster at the present time? I do.

6007. Do you think it is exaggerated? I think that by very many people it is exaggerated.

6008. Is it not a fact that those who belong to the Congregational Church are an exceedingly temperate body of men? I should be very sorry to express an opinion which might appear to make an invidious distinction. I think that in all things we are fairly temperate and I suppose that that would go among the rest.

6009. You have had experience in other Colonies as a pastor? Yes.

6010. Do you think that the habit of intemperance in the other Colonies is pretty much the same as it is here? The only other Colony with which I am specially acquainted from residence in it is South Australia, and I am inclined to think that less intoxicants are used in South Australia than there are in New South Wales.

6011. Were you in South Australia during any time of depression? I was there for eighteen years and there were many fluctuations during that time.

6012. Do you think that the consumption of intoxicants increases in direct proportion with the increase of wealth? I do, although I think that when depression first sets in on a community there is a liability to an excessive use of liquor more than has been customary, on account of the feelings of disappointment newly generated, but that speedily passes away because the means very soon get exhausted.

6013. Do you think the artisan class very prone to spend their money in drink? I do; most sadly I think so.

6014. Is that in obedience to an instinct that the troubles in the world require compensation in the form of drink, or as Bishop Barry has suggested, to get rid in some way of the joylessness of life? I think myself that the human constitution requires stimulant; I am not now separating alcoholic stimulants from others. I mean some sort of stimulant. It was a lesson taught me by my natural history science professor when I was a student, and it is one which has clung to me ever since. I have always held the opinion, I held it during a period of fifteen years when I was a total abstainer that wine is a good creature of God; that in olden times he gave it as one of the blessings of life to the children of Israel. Corn, wine, and oil, and that wine I believe to have been an intoxicant wine, an alcoholic wine. These views I propounded when a total abstainer before a large gathering at Regent's Park College in London of all total abstinence societies connected with the various colleges of London.

6015. In fact it was the wine that Noah used; the same kind of wine? I cannot say, but I believe that it was fermented juice of the grape.

6016. You have travelled a great deal I presume? Yes, the chief Country of importance which I have not visited is America.

6017. You have observed the different ways in which the habitual drunkard is treated? Yes.

6018. Have they Inebriate Asylums in South Australia? One.

6019. Are you aware whether the Magistrates have power to commit persons to that Asylum? I do not think so; I believe that it is on a voluntary basis.

6020. Do you know of any place where Magistrates have such power? No.

6021. What is your idea about the treatment of drunkenness; do you think that it is an offence for which the individual individual ought to be punished, or do you think that he is rather a subject for a reformatory. We have evidence before us that this State drunkard is a perpetually recurring trouble; he goes in and out of gaol perhaps forty or fifty times a year? I think that the present system is inefficacious. I think that a man who has been convicted a certain number of times should be treated as an habitual drunkard, and as such be sentenced to a long term of imprisonment if it were possible, not in the State prison but in an asylum specially established for the purpose.

6022. Do you think that such a person is rather a subject for curative than punitive treatment? He has outraged both human and Divine law, and I think that he ought to be subjected to both punitive and remedial treatment.

6023. You would allow a Magistrate to commit an habitual drunkard to a reformatory? Yes.

6024. From what you know of these people don't you think that there is a moderate or reasonable hope of reclaiming them if they are not too old? Up to a certain period I think there is.

6025. Up to fifty? I think that is rather a late date; I should say up to a man's prime. No doubt the question would be complicated a little by temperament. Many men would have indulged so terribly before that period, that their physical, mental, and spiritual powers would be so debased that there would be very little chance of their recovery.

6026. Can you tell us anything about the system in South Australia? We have not heard much about local option in that Colony.

6027. Do you consider that a sober Colony? I should say that the amount of drinking is something less than in New South Wales, but I would not call it a sober Colony.

6028. Although there are a great number of Germans in that Colony? They drink more than the English. They drink a light wine; much lighter than is sold in public-houses.

6029. Is that the favourite drink in South Australia? I can hardly say it is, the production of beer being so largely in excess of that of wine.

6030. Mr. Hutchison.] Has there been any agitation in favour of local option in South Australia? Yes, I think there has; it has been debated; I have spoken in favour of it myself at one of our Church meetings.

6031. Is there not a strong feeling in favour of it among the people? I think there would be, but I am not prepared to gauge public feeling there now.

6032. Are you familiar with Moonta? I have been there.

6033. That is a district in which no licenses are granted? I believe it is.

6034. Do the people there seem to be living in comfort? I should be inclined to say that the Moonta people are more under direct religious influences than the people of any other part of South Australia.

6035. Do you think that is attributable to the fact that they are not subject to the temptation to drink? I think that religion having taken a very great hold on them it has caused a very large amount of abstinence from intoxicating drink.

6036. You do not think that their abstinence is the cause of their being so religious? The two interact upon each other.

6037. Drink is prohibited at Moonta is it not? If it is it must have been since I left.

6038. I have been told that the sale of drink has always been prohibited among the miners? My visit to Moonta was only for a day.

6039. Generally speaking there is less drinking among church-going people than among those who do not go to church, is there not? Undoubtedly there is.

6040. The drinking is among the masses who are low down, and who pay no attention to religion, is it not? I would not use the word low down. Of course I think a large section of the people greatly degraded, but I would not say that those who are not under the influence of religion are low down, although from my standpoint I believe they are.

6042. You would give the people the right to veto the traffic in their own localities if they desired? I would.

6043. In the event of the people exercising that right would you compensate the licensee or the property owner? That is a very difficult and complex question. I think there are certain phases of it which would seem to require compensation, but not to the extent usually demanded—not half or a fourth of it.

6044. If an Act was passed to the effect that after the expiry of two or three years the matter should be submitted to a vote of the people, and if they voted for the closing of the houses that they should then be closed without compensation, would that meet the difficulty? I have not looked into it to estimate whether it would or not. Upon the whole I think it would be as much compensation as I should be inclined to grant.

6045. Do you think that the word wine, as it occurs in Scripture, refers every time it occurs to an intoxicating beverage? Undoubtedly not.

6046. Is there any way in which we can distinguish between the fermented and unfermented? Yes, I think so. There are three chief words which are used for wine, and when they are employed the signification attached to them by me is that they refer to wine which was alcoholic. I judge this from the roots of the Hebrew words, which signify to ferment, to bubble, or to boil.

6047. Take the following passage in Scripture:—"When it giveth his colour in the cup, when it moveth itself aright. At the last it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder." Does that mean fermented? That is not the interpretation I should put on it. I should rather ascribe it to effervescence, the immediate movement. I do not think that those words refer to a state of fermentation or ebullition. When I had been a total abstainer for fifteen years I delivered an address before a gathering of societies in London, in which I declared to them then what I believe now, that God granted to the children of Israel in the olden days wine as one of the three chief material blessings with which he endowed their life, and that wine was alcoholic.

6048. Have you had no reason to change that view? None.

6049. Chemists tell us that there is nothing in alcohol that will give strength? They do.

6050. And physiologists, that it cannot be taken into the system without an expenditure of force? Juice of the grape can be got in such a state that it will not stimulate or irritate the system. I think that what is largely sold as wine is so alcoholic as to be almost dangerous. The wine produced in vineyards on the Rhine is so light and so free from alcohol that it is a pleasant and refreshing, and, I think, a strengthening beverage.

Rev.
J. Joffers,
LL.D.

20 Aug., 1886.

6051. And the freer from alcohol the more so? I would not say that. I cannot say at what point the benefit ceases and the danger begins.
6052. Is it not a fact that attempts have always been made to prevent fermentation? No; I think not.
6053. Women were not allowed to drink wine in ancient times? No; it was forbidden, but I think they did drink it whilst that law prevailed.
6054. Mr. Roseby.] Would you place wine in the same category with corn and oil? That would be pushing my ideas rather to an excess.
6055. Are you aware that people impressed with your idea have made special laws for the encouragement of wine-shops? Yes.
6056. Do you know they have proved an unmitigated curse? I think they are.
6057. Do you know that the wine sold in these wine-shops is usually Australian wine made from juice of the grape? It is with an inordinate quantity of spirit added.
6058. I asked whether you put wine in the same category with those other two articles? Not the kind usually sold in the Colonies.
6059. Would you encourage the use of the wine that is sold here? I do not think it would be wise to encourage the use of it, the temptation is already sufficiently strong.
6060. Are you in favour of licensing houses for the sale of intoxicating liquors? I think some restrictions are needed.
6061. Are you in favour of the law which prohibits the sale of intoxicating liquors on Sundays? I am.
6062. Are you aware that that law is very generally and flagrantly violated? I am told that it is.
6063. Do you think there is any general desire among the order-loving portions of the community to have the public-houses open on Sundays? I think not.
6064. Then you would strongly support their entire closing on Sunday? I would.
6065. Are you aware that the earlier closing of the houses has had a beneficial effect? I think it has had some beneficial tendency.
6066. Do you think 11 o'clock at night early enough to close the houses? I should prefer 10 o'clock, but I do not think it would be carried.
6067. In some parts of Canada they close at 7 o'clock on Saturdays to prevent the working-men from spending their earnings;—are you in favour of that? No; I am not inclined to think that it would be advisable to close them before 10 o'clock.
6068. Do you think that young females ought to be employed as barmaids in public-houses? I do not.
6069. You think it an improper avocation for respectable girls? I do.
6070. I suppose that in your experience you have seen something of the disastrous effects morally upon those engaged in connection with that traffic? I have met with cases of that sort.
6071. Have you observed any increase of intemperance among young people since you have been in the Colony? No; I have not.
6072. Has it come under your observation that young people here are very much given to drink? No; it has not.
6073. At what age do you think the prohibition to supply young people with drink should be fixed? I do not think that drink should be supplied to any person under seventeen years of age.
6074. Would you favour a law that would prohibit a publican from selling liquor to a child who came to purchase it for others? I would.
6075. I understand you to say that you are in favour of the principle of local option? Yes.
6076. Giving the people the right to say what number of houses they will have or whether they will dispense with them altogether: you think that is a proper power to give into the hands of the people themselves? I think so.
6077. I presume that is part and parcel of the policy of the church to which you belong—giving the people the right to control their own affairs? It is somewhat in that direction.
6078. I understand that you were for fifteen years a total abstainer. Do you regard total abstinence from drink as compatible with health and the satisfactory performance of all the duties of life? I do.
6079. You do not consider intoxicants a necessity? Not an absolute necessity.
6080. President.] Would you expect a complete cure for drunkenness from legislation? No; I would not. I think that only moral and religious influences will conquer that mighty passion when it is in excess.
6081. Do you think the community is ripe for a measure of local option? That is a very difficult question to answer.
6082. People who believe in local option do not necessarily require that, because the Legislature passes a local option law in any given year, the system must be brought into existence within that year or the next. All they want is the machinery and then they say, "Leave the rest to us. Prepare the machinery, and leave the rest to us. That is to say: Let there be a skeleton law upon which we can put flesh and blood by getting the people within the various areas to bring it into force." They say, "Give us the engine and let us put the steam into the boiler"? Yes; but wise legislation depends so much upon the prevailing temper of the people that until there is a strong demand for legislation it would be unwise that legislation should be passed. A prohibitory process such as you have sketched out would, I think, be inadmissible. Unless the feeling of the people generally was strong upon the question of local option, it would be unwise for the Legislature to pass a prohibitory law.
6083. But what is your opinion about a permissive law, a law that would not come into force except upon the petition of a certain proportion of the residents of a given area; you see it would be an open law—that is the form which the most advanced and thoughtful local optionists advocate. They say, "Pass a law and permit a vote to be taken on it when the promoters of local option think it expedient." In point of fact it is a measure in expectation of the education of public opinion;—do you regard that as objectionable? No; I think it would be a very wise piece of legislation.
6084. From what you know of the temper of the people do you think legislation of that kind would be premature at the present time? I think there is a very large, an increasingly large, section of the population in favour of that, but whether there is a sufficient number to justify the Parliament in passing a law I am not quite sure; I think it must come, and will come.
6085. You state that you are a local optionist? Yes.
6086. Would you despair of local option if you found that after the machinery had been provided the voters, instead of voting prohibition within their area, voted liquor? No.

Rev.
J. Jefferis,
LL.D.
20 Aug., 1886.

6087. You would say, "Well, we have given them the chance; they may be better educated at another voting time;" but you would accept it? Yes.
6088. Then, as a matter of fact, there is a good deal of politics, so to speak, in your view of local option. You are not a protectionist pure and simple; you say, "Let the people say what they like"? That is my view.
6089. And if they wish to be intemperate, and have all the machinery of intemperance in the shape of public-houses, let them; is that your view? Yes.
6090. So far as legislation goes? Yes.
6091. In the meantime you would continue all your efforts for the spiritual and proper education of the people? Yes.
6092. Do you think the community would endure the prohibitory system—the Maine liquor law? No, I do not think they would.
6093. Then your favourite system is local option? Yes, permissive local option.
6094. It has often been said that local option is the pis aller, or the despair, of the Legislature; that is to say, that the legislative power delegated to them is redelegated to the people. What is your view about that? I do not think it really interferes with the just principles of Government.
6095. You do not think that local option means this:—We are tired of attempting to legislate for this system, either for licensing or for regulating or prohibiting the drink traffic; do it yourselves? I can easily conceive of some legislators adopting that view, but I do not think it is the just view. It seems to me that local option endorses a substantial and defensible principle in political philosophy.
6096. Has local option the same justification as the present system of municipal incorporation; is there any justification in the municipal system for the local option system? I think the cases are analogous.
6097. Mr. Withers.] Suppose a local option Bill was passed, and the people were not anxious to bring it into operation, would it be likely to have a deterrent effect as regards publicans? I think it would have that effect on their minds.
6098. Have you any reason to believe that in your circle the drinking habit is on the increase among young ladies who attend public balls and demonstrations of this nature? I do not very often attend public balls or demonstrations of that particular order; it is possible that it may exist in connection with such gatherings, but I have seen nothing whatever to justify a suspicion of that kind in respect of the young females that come in contact with the religious circles with which I am conversant.
6099. Do you know of any cases where drink is introduced into a family with the groceries? I have heard of but not come in contact with such cases; I fear they do exist.
6100. Have you heard of cases where a gentleman has taken every possible precaution to prevent his wife from obtaining drink and yet has found her drunk? I have heard of such cases.
6101. There are quite sufficient public-houses in Sydney? Yes, I think there are rather too many.
6102. Which is the greater danger to the State—an hotel like the "Oxford" or the "Metropolitan," or one of the class you find in Sussex-street? The low class public-house.
6103. It is said that youths are initiated into the habits of drinking in such hotels as the "Royal," the "Metropolitan," or the "Oxford," and eventually gravitate towards the low public-house? I have not looked at the matter in that light, I think wherever there are facilities for drinking there is the danger of drunkenness, and you are likely to get the sin of drunkenness exhibited in connection with all these places.
6104. Which of these classes of public-houses is the more dangerous to the State? I think there is one greatest source of danger with the lower class which would not exist to so great a degree in the upper; nearly all the liquors sold in these low class houses are strongly alcoholic and some of them poisonously so, and hence the effects on health and morality is far more deteriorating than is the case from liquors consumed at respectable hotels.
6105. You have no great dread of a limited number of well-conducted hotels? I think that while the habits of the people remain as they are now a certain number are a necessity; I mean the habit of taking alcoholic drinks; and I am not referring whatever to any excess or abuse.
6106. You think that a moderate amount of good wine is beneficial? I do.
6107. It is stated that the Local Option League, in selecting a candidate for Parliament, ignore to a very great extent all other considerations and principles so long as he is sound on the question of local option;—is that wise in the interest of the community? I think it would be a very shameful—a very disgraceful thing for any body of men to act in that way.
6108. Have you reason to believe that a number of bars in an hotel presided over by young women has a bad effect? A very bad effect I think.
6109. Is it likely to bring about the destruction of young men? Yes, one has opportunities when waiting at street corners and railway stations—I am thinking just now of England rather than of here—of seeing its terrible effects apparently upon the minds of young men who are lounging about. I was in England about five years ago.
6110. Is there any great difference between the drinking customs of this country and of other countries you have visited? In travelling, as I have done very frequently, long years since, and during the two years visit I paid to Europe since my residence in Australia, it is clear enough that in those parts of the continent where the simple wines of the country are used the amount of drunkenness is almost imperceptible; for example, I remember on a Sunday morning on the Rhine, at Drachenfels, seeing a guild of one of the trades from the city of Cologne, in two or three large steamers, coming up for their Sunday's holiday; I saw them embark again at night, after spending a day in the immediate neighbourhood of vineyards where any amount of wine, at very low prices, could be obtained, and I saw only one case in the whole of that number of holiday folk in which there was an evident excess, and this was only exhibited to the extent of kissing very ardently in the street an acquaintance—a male acquaintance—he was parting with; in England or Australia under similar conditions you would not have that amount of sobriety.
6111. What proportion of inmates does drink contribute to our gaols, and asylums, and benevolent institutions? A very large percentage.
6112. It has been stated at 99 and 93 per cent.? Oh, no; that is excessive; I could not give my opinion in so definite a form as that.
6113. Would 75 per cent. be an unreasonable estimate? I don't think it would.
6114. Mr. Hutchison.] Comparing Australia with England which is the more drunken? I think they drink more out here because they are more prosperous; they have more money to spend.

MONDAY, 23 AUGUST, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,	A. HUTCHISON, Esq.,
T. COLLS, Esq., J.P.,	J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.,
G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

James Matthew Toohey, Esq., M.P., called in, sworn, and examined:—

6115. President.] You are a Member of the Legislature, and were recently a member of this Commission? Yes. J. M. Toohey,
Esq., M.P.
6116. You have been connected with the brewing interest for some considerable time? Yes; I am a partner in the firm of "J. T. & J. Toohey," of the Standard Brewery, with which there is connected a large wine and spirit business. 23 Aug., 1886.
6117. I am right in saying that it is at your own wish that you appear here to-day? Yes; I requested you to call me as a witness.
6118. Your acquaintance with the liquor traffic in this Colony is extensive? Very extensive.
6119. How long have you been connected with the business? About eighteen years.
6120. During which time, I presume, you have been a resident of the Colony? Yes; for seven years I represented the firm as traveller in the city and suburbs, and thus I have had ample opportunity for procuring what I conceive to be some insight into the cause of intemperance.
6121. Although you have found it necessary to relinquish your place on this Commission, I may still suppose that your sympathies are with the object of the Commission? Undoubtedly. The fact of being engaged in a traffic of this kind does not remove any moral responsibility in the individual character of any man.
6122. Having sat for some time as you did on the Commission, I may also presume that you agreed with the general purport of the Commission—its scope and object? Yes.
6123. Do you think that there is an increasing tendency in this community to the abuse of intoxicants? Yes; I think that tendency exists not only here, but also in every part of the British dominions.
6124. Do you think that there is a larger consumption of liquor here than there ought to be? Yes.
6125. Do you think that that consumption is of ardent spirits, wine, or beer? Of ardent spirits principally. The injurious and intemperate tendency is brought about by the consumption of ardent spirits.
6126. This drunkenness, which is such a trouble to all of us, is mainly the result, you think, of the consumption of whiskeys, brandies, rums, and gins? Mainly, but not altogether. Of course rum or any other liquor which contains alcohol must have a tendency to be associated with what we are discussing.
6127. But if we are to discriminate as to drunkenness you think that most of it is due to the consumption of ardent spirits rather than of beer? Yes, for this reason: That if a man takes too much beer over night, from what I have heard and know, he has not that desire to return to it next morning that he would have if he had taken too much spirits. The latter tend to heaten the blood a great deal more than beer does, and keeps a man in a crapulous state, so that next morning he has a strong desire to return to the drinking of spirits, but beer not having so much alcohol—I speak of all beers—does not create that tendency. That is my conviction.
6128. You think that beer is the more innocent drink? The fact of that is apparent. A man may drink a glass of beer and it has little effect on him, but if he drinks a couple of nobblers of whiskey or other spirit it affects him at once, the difference in quantity at once making it apparent that the excessive alcohol in the spirit has a tendency not only to warp his mind, but also to injure his body. In German States, where lager beer is largely consumed, there is very rarely any necessity to consider the increase of intemperance; and in American States where lager beer is largely consumed the people are looked upon as being very temperate.
6129. It follows, from what you say, that if we could bring people round to drinking beer rather than spirits, it would be to their benefit? It is a question of degree. People who drink lemonade are better than people who drink beer, and people who drink beer are better in health and general capacity than those who drink ardent spirits. I am of opinion that temperance is a benefit to any human being.
6130. Absolute temperance? I don't mean teetotalism.
6131. You mean the temperate use of stimulants? I think that the moderate use of stimulants, to a mind which is able to control itself properly, is not seriously injurious; it is not a benefit I admit; in some cases it may be beneficial, because we know that many persons are advised by their doctors to partake even of strong spirits for the preservation of their health; but as a general rule it does not follow that the general use of it is at all beneficial to mankind. With regard to beer and spirits it is simply a matter of degree.
6132. When you say "of degree" you mean the quality which is taken? No; the character of the liquor.
6133. You mean the degree of alcohol in the fluids? Yes, and the degree of effect on the human system.
6134. A man may be an habitual drunkard from the consumption of beer as well as from rum? He would require a great deal more beer than rum.
6135. But the result would be much the same? Well just about the same.
6136. Do you think that many habitual drunkards partake of Colonial beer? There are various classes of habitual drunkards. There is the man who is pretty well off —
6137. But I am speaking of the man who is sent to Darlinghurst because he is unable to pay a fine. Do you think that in the case of the habitual drunkard the result is more pernicious from beer than from alcohol in its more ardent forms? I do not think so.
6138. But the man who drinks gallons of beer may be as hopeless a subject as the man who drinks one-twentieth of the quantity of rum and water? Quite right; I think that the effect is about the same, only of course a larger quantity of beer must be consumed.
6139. With regard to beer—respecting which you must speak with the knowledge of an expert—we have had before us a few witnesses, not experts, who have condemned Colonial beer as one of the worst intoxicants because of its manufacture. Some have said that it causes more lunacy than any other drink, and others—not connecting it with lunacy—have said that in their opinion drunkenness from Colonial beer is quite as bad in its effects as drunkenness from ardent spirits. That points probably to an opinion in

J. M. Toohy,
Esq., M.P.
23 Aug., 1886.

in their minds that the manufacture of this beer is not what it ought to be. As an expert, I should like you to tell us whether that opinion on their part is reasonably founded? It is not; they can have no possible data to judge by. In the first place it would be impossible for them to discover whether the drunkenness and lunacy were caused by the use of beer or ardent spirits, and in the second place the materials used in the manufacture of beer—I do not speak of our firm alone but for every firm that I know of—are simply malt, hops, and sugar—sugar of the best quality, because otherwise the yeast fermentation which is necessary for producing a brilliant beer would be destroyed; yeast bacteria would be created and the yeast would be useless for a further brew to produce an article of good quality—that is, bright, clear, and wholesome beer; it is necessary for the brewer to use the best kind of materials, and those materials are simply those which I have mentioned. I am perfectly confident that no other articles are used in any brewery in the city. Of course I would not undertake to swear it, but I am quite confident that the only articles used are malt, hops, and sugar. The competition has been and is so keen that the best materials must be used. I am quite satisfied that the witnesses could have had no data on which to found the statements to which you have referred.

6140. I suppose it is the tendency of human nature. If a man has a strong dislike to Colonial beer he may attribute all the mischief to it? Yes. I have a great dislike of rum, and I may attribute the vice to it; but it would not follow that I was right.

6141. There is another thing which has entered into people's minds here, that is, that glucose enters largely into the composition of Colonial beer. I need not tell you that it is grape sugar, and that if it is good grape sugar it is open to no condemnation. Do you use glucose? No; but we have used it largely, so has every other brewer for the reason that it is the best kind of sugar. I may explain that the word "glucose" is a mere term. One of the best experts in the Colony (Mr Morris) tells me that glucose is exactly the same as sugar in this respect, that when the milk supplied to infants from the bottle comes in contact with the mucous membrane of the throat it becomes glucose. This glucose which was sent to the Colony in solid form had a tendency to create a brighter beer. Ordinary sugar in the course of suspension is transmitted into glucose; but the article which was imported was more highly manufactured, and a great deal more expensive. The reason why the use of it was discontinued was not because the public said anything about it, but because we found that it destroyed our yeast fermentation; it was too quick in its action and destroyed a good deal of the starch which came down with the sugar from the malt; thus it had a tendency to destroy the yeast fermentation, and for that reason the brewers here discontinued its use. It is used very largely in Melbourne, the reason being that there the climate is different and the water contains less vegetable properties.

6142. Do I understand that the use of glucose has been discontinued to a large extent here? Almost entirely. I may tell you that I have no hesitation in eating glucose just as you would eat cheese, yet there are people who do not know what it is who will tell you what a vile destructive article it is.

6143. People must have their theories, and I suppose that a common one was to attribute much of the habitual drunkenness and much of the lunacy to the glucose which was used in the manufacture of the beer. You must have seen representations of this kind in the newspapers over and over again? There can be no foundation for attributing such things to glucose; it was not in use here for more than three or four years, and it was because we found that it was injurious to the yeast that we discontinued using it. The first glucose we used we purchased from another firm who did not understand its use. We thought that we were more scientific than they were and we took to using it.

6144. Was there not a plan of making glucose by a sulphuric acid process. The mention of sulphuric acid in that sense would give some people the idea at once that it was in the glucose, and that it caused drunkenness and lunacy. Have you ever noticed that some glucose which you have imported was better than other kinds? Yes; American glucose is nothing like as good as the German article. The latter was far the better of the two, and we attributed the fact to the more scientific development of the process in Germany than in America.

6145. Do you know what it is made of in the two countries? I think that both in Germany and America it is made principally from maize. At first it was made from grapes.

6146. Now it is made from various cereals? Yes. I do not think that the glucose which we used here caused an outcry on the part of the public.

6147. You gave up using it because it did not suit the trade? It was more expensive than sugar. Although the actual price per ton was not as high as that of sugar, yet the larger quantity of it which was required made it a more expensive article, and as I tell you we found that it had a tendency to destroy the yeast.

6148. It was not so much a matter of economy as of the character of the beer? Exactly.

6149. You say that your experience in this respect is the same as that of other brewers? Yes.

6150. Do you use the Company's sugars? They are used largely here; the sugars manufactured for brewing are known as brewers' crystals.

6151. Are those imported? They are generally imported from Mauritius.

6152. And the Company does not supply them? They have been doing so since the fall in the price of sugar; previously they did not, because their price was higher.

6153. You say that Colonial beer is made from malt, hops, and sugar, and nothing else? Nothing else; in fact when I speak of malt, hops, and sugar, it is nearly all sugar, as malt is composed of sugar and starch.

6154. You use the article which comes here in the form of malt to give that result which you cannot do without? The quantity of starch in the malt gives the beer its tone, and the flavour comes from the hops.

6155. What is the alcoholic strength of your beer—is it 7? Nothing like it.

6156. Is it 4? No.

6157. Is it as low as lager beer? Sometimes lower; 2 degrees is about the highest which we can cleanse at; the process of manufacture is an elaborate one. Beer is made in this way: First the malt is crushed and is allowed to run into what is known as a malt-hopper; it is then brought into contact with water of a certain temperature and is allowed to run into the mash-tub, at the bottom of which there is a false bottom; that is an iron bottom placed on a small pedestal and perforated with holes not much bigger than a pin's point to allow the wort or the extract from the malt to pass away into the boiler. In that boiler the hops required are boiled; the heat is then reduced to various temperatures according to the theory of the brewer. This liquid is then placed in fermenting vats with a certain quantity of yeast, and it is allowed to ferment until the brewer thinks that it is reduced to the degree at which he requires it. It is then sent away to be cleansed of yeast. In our brewery it cleanses itself by what is known as Pontifex's process. After it is cleansed it is put into casks freshly hopped and sent away to the customers. I do not think that you can get any beer to cleanse at 7 degrees here.

J. M. Toohy,
Esq., M.P.

23 Aug., 1886.

6158. What do you mean by cleansing? The beer is not bright as it leaves the fermenting-vats; there are certain impurities in it, and to remove these we use isinglass mixed with tartaric acid until it becomes a liquid; then it is poured into the cask and stirred with a slick and the impure material is raised to the top.

6159. Then the beer is a perfectly pure article? There is nothing more harmless for use in this Colony except lager beer.

6160. Do you think that the beer is subjected to any treatment after it leaves the brewery? I do not; the only treatment to which it can be subjected is to put water in it, and that certainly is not injurious.

6161. Do you think that any trouble arises from the pipes through which the beer is drawn? If the beer is affected by the pipes it is due to carelessness on the part of the publican. If the pipe is kept connected with the cask no harm can result, but sometimes pipes are taken off and left in the cellar without any plugs in them, and the result is that fungi form in them. Before using a pipe which has been disconnected the publican ought to cleanse it by pouring soapy warm water through it. The public now are so fastidious, so sensible that they will not drink beer which is at all affected.

6162. I always understood that the acid in the beer acts on the leaden pipe, and that as the pipe remains charged with beer during the night the early drinker gets a draught which may be tainted? None of the pipes will hold more than a quart, and it is the invariable practice of all respectable publicans to draw off the contents of the pipe in the morning.

6163. You think that in case the pipe is stowed away carelessly and fungi form in it there may be mischief? Oh, yes.

6164. During your experience of eighteen years as a brewer, have you ever traced any case of sudden illness to the drinking of beer? I never heard of such a case, but of course it does not follow that such cases have not existed.

6165. The beer which you supply is as perfect as you can make it for your own reputation? Yes.

6166. You don't believe that it is tampered with by the average publican? I do not believe that it is tampered with at all.

6167. Therefore in your belief the only person who would make Colonial beer noxious is somebody who wants to hoccus? Yes; but he would not adulterate the cask; the adulteration would be done in the glass.

6168. Have you never heard of any instance of lead poisoning which was traceable to Colonial beer which had been drawn through leaden pipes? No.

6169. In your opinion Colonial beer is wholesome? Undoubtedly.

6170. According to the knowledge you have of it? I do not mean to say that bad beer is wholesome.

6172. It certainly had a bad reputation, as far as I can remember; it had all kinds of names attached to it? Until the establishment of the Castlemaine Brewery and our own brewery a large firm here did not care what kind of beer they brewed. Competition made a complete alteration. The brewers imported first-class men, and there was a keen race between us for public taste. This necessarily led to the production of a better article.

6173. Are you of opinion that any outcry against Colonial beer is absolutely unfounded? Undoubtedly I am.

6174. Suppose a person is offering some excuse for the drunkard, is it fair of him to put the blame on Colonial beer? Unless he takes the trouble to go to the hotels and get samples of the beer, and have them properly analysed, he has no right to attribute anything to the use of the article. I can speak for four breweries in the city—ours, Tooth's, the Castlemaine, the Adelaide. If anyone wants a sample he can go to the breweries and take it himself if he says that he is authorized to do so. We don't want notice, let him come at any time he pleases. Analysis will show whether the article is deleterious or not.

6175. It is the custom with brewers as with other heads of industries, to have a large control over the retail trade. I suppose that in the course of your business it has happened that you have had control over some houses. I want to ask you whether in these—to use a short term—brewers' houses the publicans are required to sell what you choose to purvey to them? No. They are called "tied" houses.

6176. You said just now that it is the publican's fault if he supplies bad beer. Can the men who keep brewers' houses refuse anything sent to them? It is a common practice with publicans who pay due attention to their business to put a cask of beer on draught, and to draw off a couple of quarts or so, and if they find that it is not right to put in the cork, and return the cask to the brewer. We are obliged by the conditions under which we sell to take it back.

6177. Are you compelled to accept the beer which is returned? Often enough we are compelled to accept beer with which there is nothing the matter; if there is anything wrong with it it is because the publican has been careless in tapping it.

6178. Can you speak for the other brewers in that respect? Yes.

6179. If the beer is taken exception to the publican is not compelled to keep it by reason of the connection which exists between him and the brewer? No; it is only a careless publican who would keep the beer. A publican who wants to push his trade must keep as good an article as his neighbour does. If he gets a cask of beer which is not perfectly brilliant he exercises his own judgment, and to avoid losing his trade he returns the beer to the brewer, and has it taken off his account.

6180. We have heard a great deal about the relations which are supposed to subsist between the brewers and the licences of brewers' houses. Do you feel at liberty to tell us in general terms what that relation is? Certainly; the system of advancing money commenced, I think, when the Adelaide Brewery people came here, about ten years ago. The system exists in England and I think in all British communities. It is this: The brewer advances money to assist the publican to take an hotel conditionally on his giving the whole of the trade of the hotel to that brewer, and paying a fair rate of interest for the money, usually bank interest, in fact always bank interest. The publican wants to take a house worth £800; he has £400, and the brewer advances him the remainder. Some brewers only advance a third, conditionally on his giving the brewer the trade while he has the use of his money. The system is supposed to be very extensive for this reason: People look at the Register of Bills of Sale, and every week they see brewers' names in it. They imagine that these are new bills of sale, but practically they are not so because one man transfers his interest to another, and a fresh bill of sale is made out. The system appears to me to be advantageous all round. It is beneficial to the publican, because where a man has a large sum of money invested he is desirous that his business should progress. The brewer on the other hand desires to get his money back, and to see a good trade done in the house; consequently he is not likely to do anything to militate against that trade, such as the supplying of a deleterious article. The publican is under no special obligation to the brewer because he can transfer his obligation from one brewer to another. I am given to understand that this system obtains very largely in London; in fact that there are very few houses there which do not belong absolutely to brewers. Before entering an hotel the people look to see what brewer's name is over the door.

6181. How many of the 800 hotels in the metropolitan district are owned by brewers, do you think? I could not say.

6182. Do you think two-thirds? No; the Register of Bills of Sale is misleading because the same house may change hands five or six times in a year.

6183. Do you think one-half? I do not.

6184. I suppose the brewer is anxious to have his brewing connection, and his spirit merchant connection, if he combines these two things, with the most respectable licensed victuallers he can get? Yes.

6185. He would hardly be likely to look to low drinking shops to extend his business? I should have to answer that question generally, otherwise it might place me in a false position with regard to one or two firms.

6186. You may speak with regard to your own firm? Undoubtedly; the more respectable the man the better the chance we have of making a profit out of, and extending our business. The lower the class of house a man keeps the less are we inclined to deal with him. There is no advantage in dealing with a bad man, as invariably a man who is careless loses his money and yours too besides giving you a bad reputation.

6187. And he imperils the license of the house? Exactly.

6188. You must know that it is a common saying, "Oh; that is a bad public-house; it is a brewer's house," just as if a brewer had a greater interest in a low public-house than he had in a respectable one. I should like to know whether you think that suspicion is reasonable? No; the expression "tied house" first originated with the publicans themselves. Some time ago it was looked upon as rather a discredit to be attached to or tied to a brewer. Certain publicans did not care to have anything to do with a man who borrowed money from a brewer, and the expression passed from them to the general public. There is no sense whatever in the observation, as I have endeavoured to show. It is to the interest of the brewer to elevate the character of the houses in every way.

6189. You tell us that if a brewer behaves badly to his client by supplying him with bad liquor the latter soon gets tired and transfers his obligation to some other brewer;—is that customary? If he is a respectable publican he can transfer his obligation, but if he conducted his business badly there are four brewers at least who will have nothing to do with him.

6190. What are the breweries which do the largest business? Tooth & Co., Toohy & Co., Castlemaine Co., Waverley Brewery, Marshall & Co., and Cornwall's, a new brewery. All these do a large business.

6191. What are the others? The Pyrmont and Orient breweries, which are very small. Then there is a new one at Ultimo.

6192. Is the beer which is consumed in the city and suburbs mainly the manufacture of the breweries you have mentioned, or is much of it imported. I am speaking of Colonial beer. I want to know to what extent local brewers keep the trade in their own hands? There is scarcely any importation of Colonial beer, and what is imported is principally Marshall & Copeland's, of New Zealand. Our duty on bulk beer is 6d. per gallon, which is almost prohibitory.

6193. Is there no Tasmanian or Castlemaine beer imported? The Castlemaine Co. imported one or two brews to open their brewery here. There is very little Tasmanian beer imported. There is more noise than work about it.

6194. Practically, then, the Sydney brewers supply the city and suburbs? Yes.

6195. I suppose that there is a larger quantity of Colonial than English beer consumed here? I have been much struck with the Customs' returns with regard to the increase in the consumption of English bottled beer since the passing of the new Licensing Act, and also with the remarkable fact that immediately after the creation of that Act the consumption of Colonial beer increased on Monday morning. I requested our representatives to make inquiries as to the cause of this and they say that it became a common custom for people to take home a large quantity of Colonial beer on Saturday night, but they have discontinued that practice and now take home bottled beer instead.

6196. They do not take home demijohns of Colonial beer now? No; the cheaper brands of English beer are comeatable.

6198. Is it done by the publicans? By itinerant vendors. I speak with authority. We have had frequent applications for the use of our draught porter to manufacture bottled porter from under English labels. The public seem to prefer the same porter with an English label, but as that would come into competition with our own label we have not of late years sold any draught porter to these people. I know the same with regard to ale. Not only that, but absolute forgeries are going on; notably the pig brand of porter, which is largely forged.

6199. There is a compact been the brewer and the customer? Not with us, or with Tooth & Co., because we will not supply these people. Practically you cannot blame the brewers, because if a man orders five hogsheads of porter, you are not going to ask him what he is going to do with it.

6200. The returns of the Collector of Customs show that the increase in ale and beer in bottle for 1885 as against ale and beer in wood is extraordinary? That is within my knowledge.

6201. These figures refer to actual imports. The increase in 1885 over 1884 in bulk ale and beer was about 40,000 gallons, whereas the increase in bottled ale and beer was 825,640 gallons. I have not been able to find anyone who could give a reason for that very large increase? Sunday consumption.

6202. Do not the people who consume beer on Sundays get it from the tap? They cannot get it. They take home bottled beer on Saturday night, because it is more convenient to carry the beer in that way. J. M. Toohy,
Esq., M.P.
6203. You look on this as the result of the Sunday closing? Yes. When people went out picnicing on Sunday before the Act was passed they did not take any beer with them, as they could send to an hotel and get it. Now it is a common practice for them to take two or three bottles of beer with them. You can see the evidence of this in Parramatta and other public parks. I can form no other reason for the result, and I am satisfied that I am correct. 23 Aug., 1886.
6204. Mr. Colls.] Don't you think that there are too many low-class houses in the City? I think that since the creation of the new inspectors many of these houses have been weeded out. There are two or three inspectors who are anxious to remove that class of house and to encourage the publicans to adopt a better system.
6205. Still there are too many of them at present? Yes, it is impossible to avoid it in a large community. There is a class of people who will be low in spite of what you may do; they are too cunning for the police.
6206. There are many houses which cannot be called hotels, because they do not provide accommodation for families and visitors from the country? There is a number of them, but I cannot speak about the city houses except as a casual observer. I know that there are houses which ought not to be licensed; my observation as a citizen shows me that.
6208. Would you be in favour of continuing the present system of closing the houses at 11 at night? I would not be in favour of extending the hour.
6209. We have had a great many complaints respecting upstairs bars;—do you know anything about them? I was on the Commission when that evidence was given, and I think that the matter is one which ought to receive the serious attention of the Commission, not the bars themselves, but the manner in which they are conducted.
6210. Are you aware that some of these bars are sub-let to females? I am not; I took the trouble to make inquiries but I could not get any information; the people would not give it to me.
6211. Are you in favour of such bars? The difficulty is this: These private bars, which are known as six-penny bars, are a great convenience to people who want a first-class glass of liquor and are willing to pay for it; if you prohibit two bars being established in one hotel you would deprive these people of this privilege. If it could be proved that upstairs bars are conducted badly it might be provided that the private bars should be downstairs.
6212. They ought to be on the basement floor, where they would be under proper supervision? No doubt, but I hardly think that that would be a radical cure for the system you are alluding to.
6213. Are you in favour of local option? I am not in favour of restricting the traffic at all; I am speaking now on moral grounds.
6214. You have travelled throughout the country? Yes.
6215. I suppose that you found that in the country hotels you could get accommodation? Yes.
6217. Are you aware that there is a great deal of a bad description of spirits sold? I am aware that there are people in this city who sell spirits cheaper than we can import them. I think that you ought to make inquiry in this direction a special feature of your Commission, and ascertain why the provision of the Licensing Act, which gives the inspectors power to inspect wine and spirit stores, has not been carried out in its integrity. Since the passing of the Act our store has only been visited twice by an inspector. When Inspector-General Fosbery was being examined he asked me if I referred to the chemists' shops, referring of course to places where liquors are made up; he knew of the existence of these places and he ought to have taken extreme steps to put them down. Drinking is a habit which it is impossible to suppress altogether. I have heard men, who have had too much to drink, complain more severely at times than they did at other times, the reason being that they had been supplied with bad drink. It is the quality of the drink more than to anything else that I should like to devote myself in my examination.
6218. You do not blame the publican? Indeed I do not; it is adulterated before he gets it. He is tempted to purchase a cheap article in the hope that he will make a larger profit.
6219. I suppose that you have seen publicans drink out of the same bottle as they have supplied customers from? Yes.
6220. You think it is for the benefit of the publican, the brewer, and the consumer, the brewer should have an interest in the publican's business? I do.
6221. You say that in England the brewer's name is frequently looked for as a guarantee of the quality of the liquor? Yes, I have heard young men from England say they looked to see whose name was over the door before they entered a public-house.
6222. Suppose the state of things you refer to existed here? It will in time in spite of any legislation, unless of course you prohibit the traffic altogether. It must be for the public interest that a large and respectable firm shall have an interest in a trade with which their own progress and respectability are associated; as the publican progresses so does the firm progress. The publican's progress is based upon the character of the article which he sells.
6223. Do you think that all the brewers are turning out wholesome beer? I could not answer that question. I may tell you that we frequently have to waste a whole brew by turning it into the gutter; if a man is struggling he cannot afford to do that. I have not seen or heard of much bad beer in the market.
- 6225-6. This matter has been spoken of to me by a gentleman in the City, who regards the system as a terrible curse. He says it operates in this way: A brewer puts a man into a house, the man, if he has the cash, paying (say) £300 and the brewer £500. The publican then has instructions to push the trade by selling at all hours and on all days, regardless of the law, but as soon as he has been fined twice he is got rid of and another man is put in his place. Is it a fact that this sort of thing is going on? I can only speak for myself. We never encourage any breaches of the law by persons connected with us. It would not be practicable to carry out the system you describe. Suppose I lend a man £500, and he gets gets a six years' lease of a house, he will do what is invariably done—get back his own money and pay the interest on the £500; they never pay back the principal. If I instructed that man to sell under any circumstances, I should be acting against my own interest. I should ultimately have to take possession of the house myself; and if he refused to transfer, my money would be gone. It is contrary to reason that such a practice could be carried on. Of course there may be firms that will try to push their trade at any hazard, but that is no reason why a charge should be levelled against a respectable body.

J. M. Toohy, Esq., M.P.
23 Aug., 1886.

6227. There would have to be a third person in it? Yes; and the landlord would be difficult to deal with. He might want a large bonus to transfer his license. Once his license was forfeited he would have nothing to sell, and there would be nothing to seize.

6229. I suppose you supervise the making of beer, and know how it ought to be made? I cannot say that; my brother was the brewer. I should not be so competent as a professional brewer. We have a brewer to whom we pay £800 a year, and another to whom we pay £100 a year. If you leave the business for a few years you have a difficulty in getting your hand in again. There is no business upon which so much scientific attention has been bestowed.

6230. And does that lead to any deleterious elements being introduced into the beer? No; I am speaking of the machinery used.

6231. And you cannot conceive of any deleterious ingredients being used? No; for the reason that the material used is so cheap. For a bitter there is nothing cheaper than hops; malt is not dear, and sugar is very cheap. Any chemical substitute would cost a great deal more. This is not my answer; it is an answer given by Mr. Bass years ago, when he was asked if he did not use gentian.

6234. A false idea of generosity? Yes; a man would not take more than one drink where he takes ten now if it were not for this practice. It is common amongst all classes.

6235. I suppose you know people who are not likely to become drunkards although they have the decanter on their sideboards all the year round? I think that the habit of intemperance is greater in such cases than anywhere else. I do not mean the drunkenness. A man who gets drunk in a public-house is generally too sick next day to drink again for some time; but a man who keeps drink on his own sideboard is always drinking. He generally drinks with every visitor who calls, and females learn to drink from this practice in their own homes; never outside.

6237. You consider that if the upper bars are prohibited it will have the effect of driving persons who want to conduct a little private business down into the really drinking part of the establishment? That was not my view. What I want to point out is that there are private bars in the city which are properly conducted, where they charge 6d. for a glass of liquor on the basement floor. I refer to such bars as Mr. Roberts'. If you do away with the upstairs bars they will be removed downstairs. If you do away with the private bars you do away with the privilege of getting a good glass of liquor. I think that a strict supervision by the police would do all that is necessary. If fast girls behind bars were closely watched by the police they would give up their occupation.

6238. What—these snuggeries rigged up with a flighty girl behind the bar? The police could do away with them by harassing those who keep them.

6239. Of course it must be a source of annoyance to any one in your trade in a respectable way to see the sort of cribs that there are in the liquor trade? Yes.

6241. There are many in the city which are not conducted as they should be, and they are frequented by the working classes. Do you think that the high-class hotels or the others are the worst? I could not say. Drunkenness affects the wealthy as well as the poor man. I am desirous of protecting the poor and I should say that evil which affects the poor should be removed the first. There is as much drunkenness in first-class hotels as there is in the poorer class, but the drinking is done by a different class of people.

6243. Mr. Colls.] Do you think that the Sunday closing has caused more discord through liquor being taken home? Yes. I also think that the system of three fines is a bad one. It creates opportunities for cunning men to evade the law. A man openly boasted that he sold liquor on Sundays, and this caused others to do the same, but not being so cunning as he they lost their licenses. It would be better to give the Magistrate the option to take away their licenses.

6244. Are you aware that whiskey and brandy can be bought at 3s. a gallon? Yes; our manager says it has been offered to our firm frequently.

6245. President.] You condemn the Sunday closing system? Yes.

6246. You condemn it absolutely? Absolutely.

6247. Would you revert to the old system? Not entirely.

6248. What would you think an improvement? I hardly think that any system would tend for some time to improve the intemperate habits of the people, because they have got into the habit of taking drink home, and they will continue to do so even if you open the houses from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m.
6249. To get liquor to be drunk off the premises? No, drunk on the premises. People, as a rule, do not like to stay in public-houses on Sundays when they are open, and they will take a drink and go; but under the present system they do not like to be seen coming out.
6250. Then do you think they will stay all the day? Very likely. A publican told me that he had put as many as eight men in a cellar.
6251. What would you substitute for the present system? I would let the houses be open on Sundays from 1 to 3 o'clock and from 8 until 9:30 or 10 p.m.
6252. And yet you think that such a system would not have a good effect? Not directly. It would eventually.
6253. Do you not think that those licensed victuallers who violate the law now would violate it then? I do, but they would not have so much advantage.
6254. Do you think that the competition in the trade is such as to make it incumbent on the publican to keep his house open on Sunday? No, except where a cunning man is systematically evading the law. Then the others have to do it to protect themselves. From my own experience, I should say that if a system were brought in by which it would be optional to open on Sundays many would not open.
6255. Do you think they would lose their trade during the week? Many of them would.
6256. You think that the artizan class, amongst whom there is a great deal of fellow-feeling, would refuse to go to a house if it was closed against them at any time? They might for a while; but in the long-run they would respect the publican all the more.
6257. You think it would not do much harm? It would for a while, until the public got accustomed to it.
6258. I am going to ask a question which you can answer or not as you please. Do you not think that, from the point of view of an order-loving citizen, we have derived advantages from the Sunday-closing Act—that the streets are quieter, that we do not see those sights which we used to see ten years ago. Do you not think it has improved the appearance of the streets? It has improved the appearance of the streets, but it has not improved the people. They drink silently and quietly now, which is very much worse.
6259. Have not the streets improved under the operation of the Act? I think so.
6260. The police have less to do, but you think the drinking is only out of sight? That is all.
6261. Then you disapprove of Sunday closing because you think the mischief breaks out in another place? That is my contention. It is in the suburbs that the houses open on Sundays. Very few of the large houses are open on Sundays.
6262. Have you a knowledge of the artisan class? I have a very large personal knowledge of them.
6263. Do you know people who have become more addicted to drink in consequence of the closing of public-houses on Sundays—people who have taken drink home for the Sunday, and who, after drinking that, have gone to a publican who was willing to commit a breach of the law for their sake, and who have thus drunk more heavily than before and begun the week in a boozing state? I should be loath to say that, from my personal experience; but we found that there was a great demand for liquor on Mondays, and I set to work to ascertain the reason, and I found that the publicans were offering demijohns and large jars. They take home liquor in these vessels for the Sunday. Your figures also show that the consumption of bottled beer has largely increased, and that the consumption of Colonial beer has decreased. I think the people have transferred their taste from our beer to the cheaper classes of bottled beer.
6264. Then they are taking Colonial beer in disguise? Yes.
6265. I suppose it lasts longer? Not when once opened.
6266. If they take several bottles? Yes.
6267. I think you said that the brewers' relations to the publican were an advantage? Yes.
6268. Is it the custom for most wholesale manufacturers to have the retailer under their thumb, so to speak? Yes; in every trade. It is no more noticeable in our trade except that attention has been drawn to it.
6269. It is not to the advantage of the publican, is it? I am sure it is not to his disadvantage.
6270. I believe the brewer supplies the whole of the liquors, and may he not supply very inferior wine and spirits whilst supplying very good beer? In our case a bill of sale is used under which the publican undertakes to get all his liquors from us, but we leave it optional with him to get his spirits elsewhere if he chooses. We get very little profit out of spirits, being brought into competition with men of a certain class. We are obliged to keep in the spirit trade for the sake of those who will have first-class liquor. I would insist on the absolute importance of the inspectors paying frequent visits to the wine and spirit stores.
6271. Do you think there is much adulteration going on? I do; I am satisfied of it. Some people can sell wine and spirits cheaper than we can import them. They can sell them as low as 2s. and 3s. a case cheaper. Yet those people are well off.
6272. Would you conclude that it is immature spirit or silent spirit that has been flavoured here? I should say it is principally silent spirit which has been flavoured here.
6273. Is this conjecture on your part, or something better? I received my information from travellers who have travelled for those firms, whose names I could mention.
6274. You cannot supply the same articles at the prices at which they are supplied by the merchants? We cannot buy them at it.
6275. You do not manufacture the spirits in any way? If the publican requires us to mix them for him, we do. The process of mixing is simply putting in a certain quantity of water. We prefer to sell the certificates with the liquor as it is taken out of bond; then we do not touch it at all. All spirits have to be reduced by water according to their strength, and a publican will come and ask us to show him how to mix it. The quantity of water depends upon the strength of the spirit.
6276. You think there are some other kinds of mixing? Yes.
6277. Do you know anything of essences? No.
6278. Have you seen them? Only here.
6279. Do you suppose that the importation of them points to their being used by spirit merchants? Yes.
6280. Brewers do not use them? I am sure they do not.
6281. You do not? I am sure the others do not.

- J. M. Toohey, Esq., M.P.
23 Aug., 1886.
6281. Do you think the publicans do? No; I think the publicans are charged with many crimes which ought to be attributed to the merchants.
6282. Do you know whether the merchants employ a class of persons called "doctors?" I have heard it said that one or two particular firms do.
6283. Do you think there is any ground for that belief? Yes; I know they have been educating themselves to that extent that they can tell how far they can go without poisoning a man. Of course there are many respectable merchants who will be above it.
6284. The Collector of Customs says that the fact that these things are imported in however small quantities shows that some one finds it to his advantage to use them; you say the brewers do not? Yes.
6285. And you repudiate it on behalf of the publican? Yes.
6286. It remains then that only the merchants or some other class of middlemen use it? I remember some Hennessy's three-star brandy being offered at 3s. a case less than the actual price, and when I drew attention to the fact I was told that it did not matter to me, as the bottles were labelled and capsuled in the usual way. The man was evidently in collusion with someone who made the stuff. This may be going on all over the colony.
6287. They would be illicit distillers? Yes; where the still does not exist these things must be used instead.
6288. They would have to work upon a basis, silent spirit, and that would cost at least 12s. a gallon? Yes, but when the stuff is sold in bottles it is equal to 24s. a gallon.
6289. You have seen a good deal of the way in which we punish the drunkard;—what do you think of it? I think this Commission should recommend the establishment of inebriate asylums, a conviction I have held for years. If a man of any refinement goes to prison he will drink more when he comes out. A woman falls for ever if she once goes to prison.
6290. Would you allow a magistrate to commit a drunkard straight to an inebriate asylum, instead of sending him to a gaol? Yes.
6291. Do you not think these places would entail a very large expense? I think that any expense on behalf of the State to raise the morality of the people should not be considered.
6292. And would you get rid of the fine? Yes.
6293. When would you begin that kind of treatment? I would not send a man to the asylum for his first offence, or I would give him his choice.
6294. Then you would not treat drunkenness as a crime? No; I think it is a modified form of insanity—it is a disease.
6295. Have you any knowledge of any of the asylums? None; except from reading.
6296. You think a drunkard is not altogether a hopeless subject? No; I know a man who was a drunkard for 20 years, but he cured himself; by what means he did it I cannot imagine; I think it must have been by some accidental circumstance, because he had frequently tried and failed.
6297. Do you consider that the licensing fee is high enough in this country? Yes.
6298. You will see in the city a house worth (say) £100 a year, paying the same fee as a house worth £1,000 a year. That is not the practice in England? It is not, nor in Victoria.
6299. Do you not think it is hardly reasonable to charge the same fee to all? I hardly think it a fair thing, but I would not have the minimum less than £30.
6300. Are you in favour of ale and beer licenses, such as they have in England, or off licenses, licenses for the sale of ale and beer to be consumed off the premises? I have not studied that matter.
6302. The license fee might be raised in proportion to the value of the house? No, that would be a tax on capital and brains; it should be on the basis of a rental.
6303. Is the Licensing Act stringent enough in the matter of inspection? I think it is too stringent, and its most objectionable feature is the one which gives a policeman the right—whether he is in plain clothes or not—to enter a public-house if he reasonably suspects that there are improper characters within. That portion of the Act is evidently a mistake, for the reason that publicans are roused up at all hours of the night by men who with muffled voice pretend to be policemen. The publican goes down and finds not a policeman but a regular customer, and however much he may be offended he cannot afford to lose a good customer, and so it happens, perhaps, that the policeman finds him committing a breach of the law. And again, the interminable visits of the police lead to more bother and trouble.
6304. Is that a common occurrence? No, but it is done.
6305. You think there is some hardship in the present system of inspection? Yes. I think that the right to demand entrance should be given only to a sub-inspector or a sergeant; I do not think the ordinary policeman should have the privilege.
6306. The first case might be met by putting a heavy penalty on those who apply for these drinks? Yes, provided that a certain portion of the penalty went to the publican himself; he cannot afford to lose a good customer without some compensation.
6307. Do these cases happen frequently? No; but the possibility of such a thing happening must indicate that there is something wrong in the system.
6308. Have you any objection to the hours of opening during the day? Yes. I take objection to the hour at which the houses are opened in the morning. A large number of wharf labourers and ironworkers—all men with large families—have to go to work along the wharves about half-past 5 o'clock; they used to be able to get a cup of coffee and rum, or a glass of rum and milk, at the hotels, which they say was a stay until breakfast-time, but now they are deprived of that privilege. They complain bitterly. I think with them that the houses should be opened half an hour earlier. On temperance principles it may be regarded as a proper step to prevent them from getting this stay, but its effect is very hard on the man who has to carry coals.
6309. Would it not be wrong for any man, however strong, to begin his morning with rum and milk? Oh, no; men who work in these ways perhaps have two or three drinks a day. It was a common habit formerly, and perhaps it is now in some cases, to waken the publican to get a drink. Then, again, the gardeners who are travelling all night, instead of getting a cup of coffee and rum, or a glass of milk and rum as formerly, have to be content with a cup of coffee from the stall.

6310. But there are coffee-stalls? Yes, but it would not pay any one to keep a coffee-stall of any great character for what he could get from the gardeners. J. M. Toohy,
Esq., M.P.
6311. You think that facilities should be given to these men to get this stay until breakfast-time? I do. I do not think it does them the slightest injury, and if they do not get it it throws more responsibility upon the wives' shoulders, which of course does not tend to promote the happiness of these people. 23 Aug., 1886.
6312. And what do you think of the closing at 11 o'clock? I think it is an excellent idea; it works admirably.
6313. Do you regard the local option system as one that shortly will be made a very urgent political question? I do not.
6314. Apart from any merits it may possess, has it now arrived at a stage when it is opportune to legislate? Not at all, and for this reason: the majority of those who pronounced themselves in favour of the system before their constituents, endeavour to shirk dealing with it now that the opportunity is offered to them. I do not think that these men are really earnest in their solicitude for the welfare of the people; they use it as a stalking-horse to get a seat in Parliament.
6315. It is said that more than a majority of the members of this Parliament are in favour of local option? Oh, no.
6316. Have they been relapsing from their hustings pledges? It is a well-known fact that many of those who pledged themselves in one part of a constituency to the local optionist pledged themselves at the other end to the publican.
6317. Am I to understand that you think this is merely a political movement? No; I am confident that there are many who preach local option with an honest purpose.
6318. Is it a political or moral movement? I think it is generally a political movement; it is made a stalking-horse for a seat in Parliament.
6319. How many efforts have there been during the present Parliament to bring forward the question of local option? Not one. The matter is placed on the business-paper, but it is a singular thing that gentlemen versed in the forms of the House can never get it higher up than No. 12.
6320. To what motion do you allude? Mr. Henson's motion in regard to local option; it should come on for discussion early on Tuesday.
6321. Has it been long on the paper? About five months. I should like to see the question discussed in the House.
6322. Is there any general consensus of opinion in the House that the time is opportune to consider the question? The House does not trouble itself about it at all. We have had a very excitable House, and excitable matters to discuss, and in face of the great things which have been discussed lately I can quite understand an apathy in a matter to which the people themselves give so little attention.
6323. The people can take no step in local option—they can only educate themselves or their brethren—until some measure is introduced? Exactly.
6324. Have you ever considered quietly and thoughtfully local option as a thing which may come to pass in the course of a few years? I did think so some eighteen months ago, but I have changed my opinion.
6325. Is it so surrounded with inherent difficulties? Yes.
6326. Is compensation one of them? That is one great difficulty, and the other is this: that the constant threats which are held out to publicans as a class have raised up in them a power which is much stronger than that which they have to contend against.
6327. Then is their organization the stronger? Very much stronger.
6328. Mr. Hutchison.] Do you mean numerically, or by wealth? I mean by association. You have very earnest workers in every town, but the public-house is open every day, and we know that every mind can be influenced one way or the other? Your preachments are only made to those who willingly come to you; you cannot get at those who pay no attention to the matter, and that is the difficulty you have to encounter.
6329. President.] It is said that the believers in local option are increasing in numbers? I don't know that.
6330. They say that they are educating the people, and it seems likely by the votes they get in the House of Commons? A section banded together for a purpose at any time always has great influence at elections, and a section such as this, which clamours for local option, is quite prepared to accept these half promises. I notice that the secretary of the Local Option League has over and over again pronounced men to be local optionists who really are not so, and whose speeches show that they are half-and-half men. In one part of an electorate a candidate announces himself as a local optionist; in another part he denounces the principle, and though the League may claim them as local optionists I say that practically they are not.
6331. Do you think that the local option which the local optionists themselves desire would be beneficial politically and morally? I don't see how politically it can have any advantage to the State, but I should like to know who would have the votes. Would it be manhood suffrage?
6332. The local optionists seem to think that the Parliamentary voters should be the local option voters, and some would even give the vote to women? Politically I think it would be injurious, because so many vested interests have been created—interests representing a vast amount of money.
6333. The system which they proclaim as their grand desideratum would transfer legislation on a very important subject from the Legislature to the people; do you think that this politically is an improvement? I do not indeed; I do not think that any power should be taken away from the Legislature. Clamour for that right and procure it, what further rights could you not take away from the same institution? Morally I do not think that local option or even the closing of all the hotels would in the slightest degree decrease intemperance. The only way you can, by prohibition, prevent drunkenness or intemperance, is to close the breweries and bar the ports against the importation of spirit or beer of any kind.
6334. That is the Maine Liquor Law? Yes.
6335. You would not expect that the State of Maine would be found to be in the matter of either politics or morality an advanced State? I think that the closing of hotels altogether has the effect of transferring drinking to all the private houses.
6336. You think the trade cannot be eradicated? I do; it is much better to have it under the supervision of the Government than to have no control whatever over it. Suppose you close the hotels you lose entirely the control you have now, and everybody has the right to do what they like in the matter.
6337. The trade would be exercised in all clandestine forms? Yes; it was a common practice in Maine some time ago—I am told so by gentlemen well versed in the matter—to call at a friend's house and on your departure

J. M. Toohy, Esq., M.P. departure to leave money for whatever whiskey you took out of the bottle which was always to be found on the table.

23 Aug., 1886. 6338. If that custom is the result of prohibition it would be most demoralising to the community and to the State? Yes, the more restrictions you put on the drink traffic the worse you make it.

6339. Have you any hope then of local option as a system? No, but I have hope in this way for temperance: the example of a high moral life and of a temperate character would do more for the people than any legislation you may endeavour to bring into operation.

FRIDAY, 27 AUGUST, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,	T. COLLS, Esq., J.P.,
A. HUTCHISON, Esq.,	G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.,
J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

James Matthew Toohy, Esq., M.P., was recalled and further examined:—

J. M. Toohy, Esq., M.P. 6340. President. Having regard to the size of the Metropolitan Police District, in which there are some 830 public-houses, do you think that this number is in excess of the reasonable requirements of the population? That is rather a difficult question to answer, because it involves the consideration of whether drink is a necessity; admitting that drink is a necessity, I think there are not too many public-houses, but I am of opinion that they are too much concentrated.

27 Aug., 1886.

6341. Taking the city and suburbs, do you think they are in excess there? They are in excess within the city boundaries.

6342. Not in the suburbs? No; since the initiation of local option the suburbs have grown very fast; while the numerous licenses in the city have remained, very few new licenses have been granted in the suburbs; had the licenses been distributed over a larger area there would not have been too many; it is the concentration of public-houses within a small area that in my opinion is the cause of drunkenness.

6343. What is your opinion with regard to Gipps, Bourke, and Fitzroy wards; do you think the public-houses are in excess of the demand in those wards? Yes.

6344. Not only of the resident population but of the travellers also? No; that is exactly the point; the supply of houses in the suburbs being insufficient for the reasonable requirements of the people, they come into town to get their liquor when they would otherwise remain at home; the increase of houses in the suburbs has not kept pace with the growth of the suburbs.

6345. Take Gipps ward, do you think the public-houses are too numerous there? Yes.

6346. Not only for the requirements of the population but of the wayfarers? I do.

6347. Do you think that in other wards of the city the same excess is notable? I can hardly say, because I am unacquainted with the boundaries of the different wards.

6348. Would you say that there is an excess of public-houses within the city boundaries? It is very difficult for me to give a decided answer to that; the drinking population, so to speak, being migratory, go into the city. If the houses were spread out, and the suburbs had more and the city fewer, the requirements of the people would be more properly provided for; but I can hardly arrive at an estimate of what these requirements are.

6349. According to the official records there were 350 applications for transfers within the metropolitan police district, of which number 290 were granted;—in your opinion do these figures indicate an excess of public-houses? No; for this reason: Since the initiation of local option the good-will of hotels and the leases and licenses have increased very much in value. The concentration of the drink traffic within the city has, of course, increased the publicans' takings in that district, and there has been a consequent increase in the value of the good-will of hotels; from various parts of the Colony people have been flowing into the city with capital, prepared to give high prices for hotels. A good-will purchased two years ago for £500 or £600 would now be worth £1,500 or £1,600, and the publican would gladly sell it for £1,000 for the purpose of making a profit, and he would try his hand elsewhere; thus transfers are constantly going on, and people leave one house to-day, and in a month's time take the license of another; this accounts for the large number of transfers.

6350. We have been told that one of the principal causes is because the publican cannot come up to the mark with his payments? I have no experience of that kind—very, very little.

6351. And your firm holds, next to Tooth & Co., the largest number of houses? We do the largest business next to Tooth & Co.

6352. I mean doing the largest business with what you call brewers' houses—houses connected with you in the way you have described? I can hardly say that, because we do what is known as a very large free trade; there is a firm in Sydney who hold more houses than we do, irrespective of Tooth & Co.

6353. What firm is that? Burrows & Gleeson; a few years ago they were said to hold more houses than all the other brewers put together; they initiated the system.

6354. Originally, I suppose, the idea of having this interest in the houses arose from a desire to do a large beer trade? Yes.

6355. Then how did it come to pass that the brewers also provided wines and spirits;—do you remember the time when the brewer only provided beer? No; from the first initiation of the system the plan adopted was, that the brewer associated himself with some wine and spirit house in town, who divided the liability and took its share of the profit out of the spirits. When we entered the wine and spirit trade it was with great hesitation; we did not like to have anything to do with it, but we found, or thought we found, that the wine and spirit merchants—to whom we guaranteed the payment of their accounts—imposed upon our constituents, and we were obliged, in order to protect our constituents, to undertake the wine and spirit business, but we did so with great compunction.

6356. Then you think that the brewers were compelled to take this step in their own defence? Yes. With regard to Tooth & Co. I may say that when they started business in Sydney they did not care much about the beer trade, they preferred to cultivate the wine and spirit trade, and that is one of the reasons why Colonial beer had such a bad name; they did not care what business they did so long as they got orders for wines and spirits; I received this information from one of their first travellers.

6357. Do you think there was any disposition on the part of the publicans themselves to do all their business with the one firm? Hardly; for this reason: A habit has grown up amongst the representatives of the various brewers and wine and spirit merchants of spending money in the houses when soliciting orders, and the publican would naturally like to have as many of these gentlemen calling as possible.

J. M. Toohy,
Esq., M.P.
27 Aug., 1886.

6358. When a brewer obtains this kind of interest in a public-house he does not merely provide the beer? The stipulation which our firm makes with our constituents is this: They must take the beer, but if they are not satisfied with the wines and spirits they can go where they like for them. They complain very bitterly at times that our prices are not in keeping with the prices at which they can purchase the same material elsewhere.

6359. Apparently then your wine and spirit trade is a kind of excrescence? A necessary auxiliary.

6360. You would prefer to have nothing to do with it? We should prefer to be manufacturers of beer only; we do not care about the wine and spirit trade, because the profits are not of a nature to justify the expenditure of our money and of our energy. We are brought into competition with people with whom we cannot fairly compete and get a profit.

6361. Is it true that if a publican goes into the office of a brewer or of a wine and spirit merchant and says, "I want so much whiskey or brandy at these prices," naming very low prices indeed, he is not sent out but is told "We can supply you at any price you like to name?" I do not know that of my own knowledge; I cannot speak of what transpires elsewhere.

6362. Is that a likely thing to transpire? I hardly think it is likely to transpire with the brewers. I do not assume that they are scoundrels; I assume that they are men exactly like yourselves, and hardly think they can be in a position to supply an article at a loss.

6363. You do not think they are doctors of stimulants? No; people wonder why we brewers make so much money, but they forget that we turn over our money twelve times in a year.

6364. Is the licensed victuallers' trade deteriorating here? I do not think so.

6365. It has been stated that less spirits went into consumption during 1885 than in any previous year? I do not know that; I am a very great unbeliever in many of these statistics; you get the returns of the Collector of Customs but you do not know what happens on this side of the Custom-house.

6366. What stipulations are made between the brewer and publican in these contracts. Is the only security the brewer has the bill of sale? Frequently there is other security; a man may have some property and he may have very little money, and brewers get what security they can, for they are no different to any one else.

6367. Is the rate of interest the same as in other transactions? Bank rate of interest.

6368. He has to pay a fee to the hotel-broker? It is paid by the man who sells out.

6369. What is the commission on these transactions? I think it is generally matter of arrangement between the broker and the man who sells out.

6370. There is no double fee? No, the trade is thoroughly understood by the broker and the publican; it is a bonus rather than a commission which is given to the broker by the publican.

6371. Suppose there were no brewers' houses, would the class of liquors kept in public-houses deteriorate or improve, or remain as they are? I think it would deteriorate.

6372. Some people think the existing system has a tendency to compel the publican to keep inferior stock? I shall illustrate my answer by taking the case of two hotels, situated in the same street, and opposite to each other, on which advances have been made by brewers. The publicans are naturally competitors; people who drink can pretty well tell what is a good and what is a bad glass of grog or of beer, and suppose I have invested £500 or £600 in one of these hotels, is it not to my interest to see that he does a good and wholesome business, and to give him the best material I can possibly supply? Otherwise his business would materially fall away. His competitor opposite is exactly in the same position; he for his own protection will sell good liquor. Apart from that, however, the progress of the man is associated with the progress of the firm to which he is attached; if he is treated badly he will leave it off as soon as he leaves the house, and therefore their interests are mutual. Progress in hotel keeping alone can be brought about by respectable men by three means—civility, cleanliness, and good liquor; the latter is the salient point. It is to the absolute interest of the brewer to find the best possible material for the man to whom he lends money; we have very strong evidence of this in the fact that two brewers in this city are progressing very much, whilst one or two are going back very much.

6373. You do not think that the number of transfers indicates that the brewer does not care a straw about his man? No. These transfers come about in this way: A man buys into a house for £1,000; another man offers him £1,200 to sell out and he goes out.

6374. Is there any ground for supposing that the brewers' interest may not be so much to keep a particular publican on his legs as to be transferring the good-will time after time according as the holder of the house gets under disabilities as to payment? I hardly think so, because he has to get the consent first of all of the man in the hotel to transfer the license, and even if he so consent he can always go into Court and object to its being done; therefore it cannot be the act of the brewer which brings about these transfers.

6375. The licensed victualler in these cases is a free agent? Yes. The brewer has no power to compel a publican to transfer his license.

6376. Mr. Colls.] The spirit merchants of Sydney have a great many hotels in country towns throughout the Colony? Yes.

6377. And the brewers have nothing at all to do with them? No.

6378. President.] Am I to understand that the country houses are under the spirit merchants? Mostly.

6379. Mr. Colls.] There is invariably in the lease a clause to prevent the tenant from subletting or assigning without the sanction of the landlord? Yes, that is one of the most permanent clauses now.

6380. Mr. Roseby.] There are nine breweries in the city of Sydney? Yes. There is one at Parramatta that does business in Sydney.

6381. And a number of breweries in the country? Yes, at Newcastle, Goulburn, Bathurst, Yass, Young, Wagga Wagga, Glen Innes, and other places.

6382. That would indicate a very large consumption of Colonial beer in the Colony? I cannot say that.

6383. Have you any idea of the amount which goes into consumption annually? A very good idea. It has been stated in Parliament and to the Commission at 14,000,000 gallons, but I should estimate, based on figures which we alone can get, that it is only 6,000,000 gallons. That estimate is formed in this way: We take what we know to be the consumption of the city and suburbs, and then practically we get as near

J. M. Toohey, as we can to the local requirements of the particular districts where breweries exist. I went through the figures at the time Mr. Burns made his financial statement, and naturally enough I was very careful in preparing the return.

Esq., M.P.

27 Aug., 1886.

6384. Is there any way to get at the actual consumption? Oh, yes.

6385. Do the brewers communicate with one another? There is no special communication, but we have an affinity which give us opportunities to see ourselves at times.

6386. There is no association among the brewers as there is among the publicans? No.

6387. Is there a large amount of Colonial beer and porter sold in the colony under English labels? I do not think that there is much Colonial beer, yet there is a quantity sold with what I may call false labels, they may not always be English labels.

6388. There being a duty of 6d. per gallon on bulk ale and porter, and 9d. per gallon on bottled, the sale of Colonial beer and porter as English is a fraud on the State? On the individual, not on the State.

6389. But it has not to pay duty? Yes it does; it pays duty on the malt, the hops, and the sugar.

6390. But that does not amount to anything like 6d. or 9d. per gallon? No; but it amounts to considerably more than people think. The duty varies from 11 to 14½ per cent., according to the fluctuations in the value of the articles used.

6391. You think that the vending of drink by grocers has an injurious tendency? I look on it as one of the greatest curses which the temperance party has to fight.

6392. I understood you to say that in your opinion there were too many low public-houses? I did not. I am not clear as to what my answer was, but on thinking over the matter since it has struck me that it is necessary to have a definition of a low house. Some people may think that a small house in the suburbs, conducted by a respectable family is a low house, but I do not. When I speak of low houses I mean houses which are infested by larrikins, sailors, and a low class of people about town. There are very few of these houses in the suburbs.

6393. What I mean by a low house is a place where the publican sells drink to anybody and everybody, regardless of their condition or the class of liquor sold, or the effect it is likely to have on the drinker? If there are only half-a-dozen such places there are too many.

6394. You think that such houses ought to be suppressed? Yes, altogether; and once a man is discovered conducting such a house he ought ever afterwards to be disqualified from holding a license.

6395. What do you mean when you say that you are not in favour of restriction? I am not in favour of restriction by law.

6396. In what other way would you place a restriction on people engaged in the trade? By elevating the moral character of the people, by the preachments of those whose moral nature indicates that they have the capacity to teach others.

6397. In your opinion all restrictions and disabilities ought to be removed from those engaged in the trade? I really think that if people were allowed to sell drink as they are allowed to sell fruit there would be less drunkenness; that is my honest conviction.

6398. But you said just now that you would not allow grocers to sell it? They sell it under restrictions. Either make the trade universal or destroy it altogether, or else so educate the people morally that they will be above the use of it.

6399. Then in your opinion there ought to be free-trade in the sale of liquor? I did not say that. What I mean by restriction is the concentration by law of the traffic within a particular limit instead of allowing it to ramify in its natural way. That is the restriction to which I object. In preference to it I should like to see the trade universal, or freetrade if you choose to call it so.

6400. To particularise: Are you in favour of restricting the sale of liquor entirely on Sunday? I am not. I would restrict the trade on Sunday out of respect for the obligation we owe to our common Christianity, but I would not deprive the people altogether of the right to get necessary refreshment as they were in the habit of getting it prior to the new Act coming into operation, a habit which as a community we became accustomed to. The law is constantly broken now, simply because there is a peculiar spirit in the British race which will not submit to intolerant restrictions. You intensify the evil by forcing people to break the law. The people will break the law if necessary, if they think that it is wrong, or that it presses harshly on them.

6401. I think that you stated that you are in favour of opening the houses from 1 to 3 and 7 to 9? I would not have them open during church hours, after the people have gone home from church in the evening; the public-houses ought to be open for a limited time to enable people to get their supper-beer. They will have it if they have been used to it, and it is just as well to let them get it openly as to compel them to sneak in by the back door, and perhaps remain in the hotel drinking. I tell you that it is impossible to carry out an absolute Sunday-closing law.

6402. You know that the law is flagrantly broken at present? Not only do I know it but I have heard an hotel-keeper boast of it at a public meeting and he holds his license still.

6403. Suppose the law allowed the houses to be open at certain hours, what guarantee would there be that they would not be open at other hours? If you will refer to the police records you will find that there were a great many less fines under the old system for Sunday trading than there has been under the new system. There are two reasons why it is not likely that the houses would be opened during prohibited hours; one is the desire on the part of the publican to enjoy himself on Sunday, and the other is that there would be an opportunity to supply the requirements of his customers. By adopting the system to which I refer the publican would have an opportunity to go to church on Sunday morning—publicans go to church sometimes—and in the afternoon he could go out with his family for a drive. Under the present system a publican is compelled to be in his house whether he sells liquor or not; he cannot take his family out, because if a policeman demands admittance he must admit him.

6404. Are you not aware that when the law allowed the houses to be open during certain hours the arrests for drunkenness on Sundays were in excess of what they are now, notwithstanding that the law is so flagrantly violated? Are you quite sure that you are right as to the statistics?

6405. I suppose that you know that immediately the new Act came into operation the arrests for drunkenness decreased to a marvellous extent? Yes.

6406. Because the law was generally obeyed? Yes.

6407. Does not that show that when the law was obeyed it had a good moral tendency and prevented a great deal of crime? When the Act first came into operation the travellers' limit was 3 miles, and the result was that people flocked to Manly Beach and other places, where they were able to get liquor. Open-air air drinking is not a very serious matter; if a man goes into an hotel, has a drink, and then walks out into the open air the liquor does not affect him so much as it would if he remained inside. Half the quantity of drink would make him drunk if he remained inside; thus the intemperance was more apparent than real. I have heard of an instance in which eight men were run into a cellar when the police demanded admittance under the present law. The reason that intemperance has increased is that the 20 miles clause has taken from the people the privilege of having a quiet drink and then going out to enjoy the free atmosphere. You will find that intemperance is increasing as compared with the statistics for the period immediately after the passing of the Act.

J. M. Toohy,
Esq., M.P.
27 Aug., 1886.

6408. Do you not think that the reason is because the publicans generally violate the law? They do, but that is not the reason for the increased drunkenness, because they always did that.

6409. Is there any truth in the statement that publicans are compelled to sell on Sundays to meet their great expenses? That is not true. They are frequently compelled to sell on Sundays for this reason: There are men who are clever enough to evade the law, and they take advantage of their smartness to do business. The respectable publican, who really does not want to open, is compelled to do so, otherwise he will lose his trade on week-days. The clever evader of the law would reap the advantage of his neighbour's honesty. There are many instances of publicans who wanted to keep their houses closed, but were compelled to open them for this reason.

6410. Suppose a publican has £500 and the brewer advance him another £500 to help him to start in the business, is it not a fact that the brewer gets security over everything in the house? Like any other man who lends money, the brewer gets as much security as he can. The brewer has a bill of sale over the lease, the license, the furniture, and the goodwill, and if the publican happens to have a terrace of houses worth £2,000 of course the brewer will take that as security as well, if he can get it.

6411. But a man who has a terrace of houses worth £2,000 is not likely to need the aid of the brewer? If he wanted to borrow he would go to the brewer in preference to ordinary money-lenders because they only lend for a fixed time, whereas if he borrows from a brewer he can release his security at any time.

6412. In addition to giving the security you have stated does not the publican also give the brewer a transfer in blank? Yes.

6413. And the brewer can have the license transferred at any time in spite of the publican? No magistrate gives an answer to that at once; all that the man has to do is to stand up in court and say, "I object to the transfer, I am the holder of the license"; what magistrate would transfer it under such circumstances. The transfer in blank is not worth a snap of the finger, it is a mere matter of form.

6414. I suppose there are bad men among the publicans as well as among other classes? Yes, as among the temperance people.

6415. You say that this transfer is no security at all? None whatever, not the slightest.

6416. Mr. Hutchison.] Why take it then? A mere matter of form; nothing more; it has been the custom.

6417. Mr. Roseby.] It is of no value at all? Unless the publican is agreeable to a transfer being made; if he is not agreeable all he has to do is to go to the court and say, "I object."

6418. Mr. Hutchison.] I am far from being satisfied. The man is not in a position to go to the Court and defy you if you have made up your mind to force a transfer, because he is altogether at your mercy, as you could immediately put your bill of sale into force and close the house? That is all very well but what would you get out of him?

6419. You still have the transfer? What is the good of the transfer when the house is closed?

6420. We have it in evidence that that is the practice? What you wish to convey I understand is that the security held by a brewer over a licensed publican is available after his license and the house has been taken away.

6421. You can compel him to be consenting party or to lose everything that he has, that is quite evident? In what way?

6422. Because you have everything else in your power? Suppose he closes the house what has the brewer then if he puts his bill of sale in force—what will he get out of it?

6423. I believe that the majority of the community think that there is some value in the transfer—the police do? The value of the property is only during the existence of the license. It would be madness on the part of the brewer to force his constituent into such a position that the license would be lost. It is a mutual obligation and it must depend upon mutual trust and confidence. The man in the house is as well off as the man who lends him the money.

6424. Mr. Roseby.] If the man turns out to be a scoundrel the brewer, I suppose, may be deceived? The brewer invariably loses by the transaction; if he has lent a man £500 he finds it better to pay him £200 than to lose the £500.

6425. In your opinion the consumption of beer is not so demoralising as that of ardent spirits? No.

6426. Do you consider that there are low priced bad spirits sold in the country? I do.

6427. Do you consider there ought to be some stringent measures adopted to prevent their consumption? I do; provision is made in the Act of 1881, but the police do nothing, except in Sydney and the suburbs.

6428. You think the ordinary consumption of beer has not the evil tendency which some people attribute to it? I am sure it has not. My conviction is that, next to lager beer, Colonial beer has a less deleterious effect than any other liquor. We cannot make lager beer in this country.

6429. President.] Why? It is made by the cold fermentation process. The ice required for that process in America is cut in large blocks and kept through the season. In America they have cheap ice and cheap labor.

6430. Mr. Roseby.] Do you know that the consumption of this light beer in Germany is very demoralizing? No; I do not know that.

6431. You believe that the morality of the people ought to be a prominent consideration? I do.

6432. Do you not think that the consumption of drink generally has a very immoral influence? The extravagant use of drink has. Intemperance in anything has. In many instances there are natures which are better for the use of stimulants.

6433. Mr. Hutchison.] I am in a fog about the percentage of alcohol in your beer. I understood you to say that you could not refine or cleanse it beyond from one to two. Will the beer make any alcohol after it has been cleasured? No.

6434. There appears to be a discrepancy in the figures, which shows that it runs to as much as six and a half? That is wrong. Sometimes we consider it equal to water, but it carries a flavour with it. I may have

J. M. Toohey, Esq., M.P. have confused the figures as to the alcoholic strength with those as to the gravity. I will look into the matter.

- 27 Aug., 1886. 6435. Do you bottle any beer? Yes, beer and porter.
 6436. Have you ever known a man who had a licensed house refuse to allow a brewer to transfer? Yes, we have lost money by it. In one case the refusal to allow a transfer cost us the house. It was closed.
 6437. Speaking of local option, you said that many Members of Parliament at the last election promised both sides? Yes, I referred to the statements made in various portions of their electorates. In one part a candidate was a local optionist and in another he was an anti-local optionist.
 6438. You said they had given promises? Yes, to their constituents.
 6439. Could you tell us the object of the Licensed Victuallers' Association? The object is to protect their own interests.
 6440. They pledge themselves only to support men who will protect the interests of their trade? Yes.
 6441. Do you think that is moral? Yes; it is moral for a man to protect himself. The publican is called into existence by the law, and why should he allow himself to be crushed?
 6442. If the liquor traffic is the cause of a great deal of evil would it not be immoral to refuse unless you were prepared to do away with it? Yes, unless you were prepared to do away with it and to compensate the publican. When England abolished the slave-trade she compensated the slave-owners, and why should we not do the same with the publicans if their trade is taken from them?
 6443. If bad houses can be discovered would you have them shut up? Yes.
 6444. Would you give them any compensation? No, I would not, because I recognise that the keepers of bad houses are criminal.
 6445. How would you ascertain their criminality? That would be for the police, not for me.
 6446. Would you consider persistent law-breaking criminality? It depends upon whether the law can be reasonably kept, and whether it is a fair and just one. It is not criminal to commit a breach of a law which acts harshly and unjustly.
 6447. Do you not consider that all are bound by the law? They pay the penalty for breaches of the law, but a house which propagates immorality and is a danger to the people is outside of all law.

MONDAY, 30 AUGUST, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,	J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.,
A. HUTCHISON, Esq.,	T. COLLS, Esq., J.P.,
G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Joseph Benjamin Olliffe, Esq., M.L.A., formerly a member of Commission, called in, sworn, and examined:—

- J. B. Olliffe, Esq., M.P. 6448. President.] To what extent does your experience of the liquor traffic extend? I have had an experience of three years as a wine and spirit merchant, and of seventeen years as a hotel-keeper, principally in Sydney.
 30 Aug., 1886. 6449. At present you keep the "Hyde Park Hotel," at the corner of Bathurst and Elizabeth streets? Yes, I have kept it for nearly fourteen years.
 6450. You have had ample opportunities of forming an opinion of the old licensing laws, and of comparing them with the two laws passed recently? Yes.
 6451. Is the recent legislation a step in advance? Most decidedly.
 6452. On what grounds have you formed that opinion? On several grounds; it has been the means of doing away with many low public-houses and improving the status of hotels throughout Sydney; it has beneficially affected the publican in many respects; and the provision as to accommodation has wiped out of existence all those houses which did not carry on a legitimate spirit business, or a legitimate sly-grog shop business, but were simply cloaks to carry on a business degrading to human nature, and seriously detrimental to the whole trade.
 6453. You mean places where thieves, gamblers, and all that sort of thing would be harboured? Yes.
 6454. The small drinking-house or tavern which is incapable of providing any accommodation is a necessity? I think there is a necessity for some of them in the city of Sydney.
 6455. Of course these houses, although they are compelled to keep a certain number of rooms, make no pretence to ability to lodge or to feed a person? Many of them carry out the provisions of the law in that respect; they have the necessary accommodation, and yet they do not use it.
 6456. Is there a lot of superfluous accommodation? Yes.
 6457. Is it not a fact that a great deal of this accommodation is the result of the local option law, which exempts places of more than twenty rooms. Houses of required accommodation have been built in places so as to escape the local option provisions? No; the Act has demanded that larger accommodation shall be provided than formerly, and hence the change which has been brought about.
 6458. Is it in your knowledge that some of that accommodation—superfluous in regard to the average wants of the people—has been devoted to the business of attracting lodgers? No; I may say, knowing what I have said as to the improvement which the law has effected in the matter of accommodation, that some houses have provided the necessary rooms in order to evade the local option provision; it has increased the number of houses in Sydney unnecessarily. I know there are many houses with the proper accommodation which never take a lodger.
 6459. But have houses been built with superfluous accommodation in order to evade the local option provisions? Not only to evade the local option provision, but also to comply with the general provisions of the Act; the old Act did not require a hotel-keeper to provide so much accommodation as the present one, which has brought about an unnecessary increase in this respect.
 6460. The requirements of the neighbourhood do not demand such large accommodation? No.
 6461. In other instances the local option vote has been evaded by the hotelkeeper providing extra accommodation in places where it was not necessary? Yes; several licenses have been granted lately which in my opinion were unnecessary.
 6462. Mr. Hutchison.] Do you mean that the houses themselves were unnecessary? Yes.

J. B. Olliffe,
Esq., M.P.

30 Aug., 1886.

6463. President.] Not only the accommodation, but also the houses? Yes.

6464. Taking the metropolitan licensing district, what is your opinion of the number of these houses in relation to the reasonable wants of the population or the people who use the city and suburbs? I think they are in excess of the requirements.

6465. Are about 820 houses largely in excess? No.

6466. Could 100 houses be done away with? Yes; without injury to any one, and with advantage to the community; I am now referring to our present not to our future requirements.

6467. If the population increase that number might require adjustment? Yes; at the present time there are sufficient public-houses in the city and suburbs to satisfy public requirements under ordinary circumstances for the next three years.

6468. Taking Gipps Ward, for instance, don't you think that all these houses should be licensed victuallers' houses in the proper and old sense of the word. Should be required to give reasonable accommodation, such as food and drink, to those who need it? I think they should be compelled to carry out the provisions of the Act in regard to accommodation.

6469. Is it your opinion that all houses should be compelled when required to provide necessary accommodation in the matter of decent food and lodging as well as of drink? Yes; to the limited extent required by the Act.

6470. Then is it your opinion that houses which do not provide that accommodation should only exist on sufferance, or should be required to provide the accommodation that is implied by law? I think they should be compelled to provide the accommodation which is required by law; it is a just Act in that regard.

6471. Inasmuch as there is no demand for that accommodation in many places, no travellers asking to be admitted, no inmates to board there, and only a certain number passing by who ask to drink there, does it not appear then that these houses are not wanted at all? Yes; but still the accommodation is of so limited a character that it would not hurt any publican to comply with that provision of the law.

6472. Take the case of the intersection of two streets, where each corner is marked by a public-house. It is certain that the demands of the public do not require accommodation of that kind? They could not be filled unless we had an extraordinary number of visitors, such as we might expect to have at the celebration of the centenary.

6473. These houses should be made to comply with the law? Yes.

6474. Otherwise I suppose you would give them a short shrift? I should bring the law to bear on them as far as I possibly could.

6475. Any hotelkeeper who refuses to supply reasonable refreshment should be punished? Yes.

6476. Would the character of these houses be raised if they were compelled to provide this accommodation in regard not only to drink but also to food? Yes; it would induce a better class of people to keep their small hotels, which would improve the status of the licensee throughout the whole colony.

6477. You would have some hope then that drinking shops would be converted into small hotels? Yes; I believe that a great improvement might be effected. Hotelkeepers of the present day—I speak of them as a class—are 100 per cent. better than what they were three or four years ago. They are improving every day in respectability.

6478. You make a distinction between an hotel and a drinking-shop. You think the character of the ordinary drinking-shop then has risen 100 per cent. in the last three years. I do; more particularly during the last two years.

6479. And yet there are houses we frequently see by the police records which should not be in existence? Yes; but they are not half so numerous as formerly.

6480. The state of things a few years ago must have been very vile? Yes; it was worse than the people imagined. I am aware that the police, at the instigation of some informers, have wiped out of existence about twenty infamous places which would have been a disgrace to the most degraded city in the world.

6481. Did the police prosecute the keepers of these houses? I believe so.

6482. You have been instrumental in bringing a Bill to amend the law before the Assembly on two occasions? Yes; on the first occasion I was unsuccessful, and during the present session, at the suggestion of the Government, I withdrew the Bill.

6483. You suggest different hours from the present ones for the transaction of business in public-houses? Yes.

6484. You want half an hour extra in the morning and half an hour later in the evening? Yes.

6485. Is that necessary? I think so. I think it is necessary to open half an hour earlier in the morning, for the accommodation of visitors arriving in the city. At present they arrive in the city before the houses are open. Many of them want refreshment, and the hotel-keepers are afraid to give them liquor lest they should be summoned and fined for doing so, as many of them have been. There are other reasons in connection with the business why the doors should be opened earlier. It is necessary to clean the bars and get them ready for the ordinary business by a certain time. If you open the doors before the time specified in the Act you are liable to be fined. Half an hour earlier would suit all parties, and would remove any objection that could be raised by an officious policeman. It would afford accommodation to the public arriving in the city by steamers, trains, and by other means. My principal reason for proposing that the hotels should be allowed to remain open for half an hour longer in the evening than at present is so as to do away with a large amount of sly-grog-selling. At present young men coming out of the theatre go into a hotel for a glass of beer or wine, and knowing that if they have one glass and leave they will not be able to get any more, except in certain houses known to themselves, they consume more drink than they would do under ordinary circumstances. Then again, being turned out of the hotel at 11 o'clock they go into oyster-saloons and other saloons of that character, and are provided with a certain amount of liquor. This arrangement is beneficial to the publican because the proprietors of these saloons buy a few bottles of liquor and take it into their houses, and after 11 o'clock they retail it to their customers in a sly manner.

6486. Of course illegally? Yes. This induces a lot of youths to go to these places, and I believe causes more drunkenness, more dissipation, more debauchery, and more evil than if the public-houses were allowed to remain open until half-past 11 o'clock.

6487. Then it is your opinion that the oyster-saloons retail much liquor? They do.

6488. And do you speak of other saloons besides oyster-saloons? Yes, fruit-saloons and cigar-saloons.

6489. Do all do this? I believe so.

6490. Is it done on a large scale? Yes; I believe it is.

- J. B. Olliffe,
Esq., M.P.
30 Aug., 1886.
6491. Suppose you got this extension of half-an-hour at each end of the day would not the same result follow? I do not think so. I think the very fact of people being able to get a glass of liquor up to half-past 11 o'clock would prevent them from seeking other sources.
6492. Do you not think that the good gained would be more than counterbalanced by the evil produced by lengthened hours? I do not think so.
6493. With regard to Sunday-selling, you propose that the houses should be open between 1 and 3 o'clock? Yes.
6494. That of course is a time when Divine Service is not being celebrated? Yes.
6495. Do you not think that step might be regarded as rather retrogressive. What is the demand for that? The demand for that now is that the publicans now sell liquor wholesale on Sunday—some of them during the whole of the day.
6496. The whole of the day with impunity? Yes. They have to be very guarded, but still they do it; and I think there are many of them who, if they had the two hours, would satisfy their customers and shut up afterwards. Take my own business for instance. I think I can safely say that no person has observed the Sunday-closing law more strictly than I have done, and I do not think a Sunday passes without many applications from people for what they call the Sunday beer; and so it is with all the others. I think if the houses were allowed to open from 1 till 3 o'clock, a large amount of selling on Sunday would be prevented. The present arrangement improves trade because people take their grog home on Saturday night, and purchase more than they would otherwise do.
6498. Then you think that if the public-houses were allowed to open for two hours on Sunday it would be better in the interests of the public—not in the interests of the drinkers but in the interests of public morality and decorum—and that this would be better than absolute prohibition? I think so. It is a fact that prohibition is ignored now; that Sunday trading flourishes in spite of all impediments.
6499. To be fair and reasonable in this, I suppose you would make the closing during the remaining hours of Sunday absolutely compulsory, and put the law in force in a strict and effective manner? Decidedly so.
6500. So that it should really be a closing during the rest of the time? Yes.
6501. You say now it is only a sham one? Yes; nothing more.
6502. Perhaps hardly a sham? Hardly a sham; it is a name and nothing more.
6504. You know that in many countries Sunday-closing exists by law. It has existed in Scotland for a time, in Wales, and in Ireland, and it is said that there is a great chance of its being introduced into England. In these countries they seem to make the law fairly effective? I do not think so, according to information I have on the subject. I have read many authorities and I find that drunkenness continues to exist and is even worse than formerly.
6505. The houses sell? There is more drunkenness.
6506. Mr. Hutchison.] To what country do you refer? I am referring to all those places where prohibition or partial prohibition has obtained a footing.
6507. Scotland for instance? Yes, Scotland amongst many others.
6508. President.] Then you think that total prohibition on Sunday cannot be enforced? Not successfully.
6509. Do you think the police try to enforce it here? Yes; I think they do their duty fairly well. There are exceptions, but I think, as a rule, the police are composed of very good men.
6510. Do you think the police ever show a disposition to persecute any particular publican? Yes; there are some who do it.
6511. You know what I mean by persecution? Yes; I know perfectly well.
6512. The phrase is to "have a down" upon a man? I understand you perfectly. I am sorry to say I believe they do.
6513. What can the object be; it must be a personal one; can it be for the purpose of advancement? Some are influenced by that motive, others by spite, while others have a desire to carry out the law in its entirety. Some of them are genuine in their action, while others, I think, are guided by false motives.
6514. Do you think that the police—I am speaking of them now as a body—would take advantage of this evasion of the law to obtain drink themselves. Is that within your knowledge? As a body they would not, so far as I know.
6515. They might as individuals, perhaps. If, as individuals, they were refused, they might have a "down" upon the publican. Is that the case? No; I do not think so. It might be; still I do not say that. But there are other circumstances that I have known to exist, which were wrong and unbecoming.
6516. Mr. Colls.] I believe there are 820 licensed publicans;—how many of these are members of your association? There are two associations now and it would be difficult for me to give you an answer.
6517. Mr. Hutchison.] We understood they were amalgamated? Not at all.
6518. Is there not such an association as an amalgamated association? There is, but not so far as I am concerned.
6519. Of what association are you president? I am president of what they call the "respectable" association.
6520. President.] Is that called the Licensed Victuallers' Association? Yes.
6521. Mr. Colls.] How are the members admitted—by ballot? Yes, by ballot, the voting being confined to the members of the Committee.
6522. No one would be elected who did not keep a respectable house? No; we have rejected scores. I wish it to be distinctly understood that I am in no way connected with another association that is in existence. I say this out of no disrespect to anybody, but out of respect to myself.
6523. Mr. Hutchison.] Is Mr. Weale secretary of your association? I have nothing whatever to do with him, good, bad, or indifferent.

Mr. John Cyril Marie des Anges Weale called in, sworn, and examined:—

6524. President.] You are officially connected with an organization for the protection of the interests of licensed victuallers? Yes; I have been secretary of the Amalgamated Licensed Victuallers' Association of New South Wales since about the 11th or 13th August last year. Mr. J. C. M.
des A. Weale.

6525. What is the Amalgamated Association? There were originally two associations. One was the Trade Defence, and the other was the Licensed Victuallers' Association. A third was started towards the end of June last year. This new association amalgamated with the Trade Defence. 30 Aug., 1886.

6526. What became of the Licensed Victuallers' Association—the original one;—is that in existence now? I do not know whether it is in existence or not. There are a few members, I think, who still hold together, but I do not think they meet and transact business as they used to do.

6527. How many members does the Amalgamated Association comprise—the association you represent? Up to the present time it has only endeavoured to get members in the city and suburbs. It contemplates in the second year extending its organization right through the country.

6528. Do you know how many public-houses there are in the city and suburbs? I should think a few over 800.

6529. How many of those belong to your association? About 350.

6530. Leaving a balance of nearly 500;—how are they distributed? They comprise publicans who will not join any organization, and the members of the original society of whom there are very few.

6531. How many? I do not think there are twenty—probably many less.

6533. How long have you been secretary of the Association? Just over a year. It has been my business, pretty well, to see every publican within the metropolitan area.

6534. Have you any rules? Yes.

6535. Would you have any objection to furnish the Commission with a copy? None whatever.

6536. I presume you only work on one set of rules? Yes.

6537. Has your experience in the Colony been of long standing? I have been in the Colony about three years and nine months.

6538. Then you have had no large experience of the liquor traffic here? No, except in connection with my present position.

6539. How many houses within the city and suburbs would you imagine to be in the hands of brewers—what they call "tied" houses? That is a matter I have tried to find out for my own personal information, but I have not succeeded.

6540. Wherein lies the difficulty—could you not get a list of these houses from the ordinary circulars—is there not a bill of sale in each case? I should say there was a bill of sale.

6541. There is an organization that publishes those bills of sale. However you do not know of your own knowledge? No.

6542. But I suppose you can give a very fair approximate estimate of the number;—do you think that two-thirds of the houses in the city and suburbs are in the hands of the brewers and spirit merchants—of the 820 houses are 600 in the hands of the brewers? I should not think there were 600. I should think there would be quite 500 though.

6543. What is the class of house that is in the hands of the brewers—is it the large hotel? No; the very best hotels are not in the hands of the brewers—as a rule they are not.

6544. Is it then the second and lower class? Yes.

6545. Is it a fact that all the lower class of houses are in the brewers' hands? I do not think so.

6546. Do you think the trade in these lower-class houses is diminishing or increasing;—do you think their trade has diminished during the last year? Since last summer most of the houses have complained of a diminution in trade, and especially at the present time.

6547. This is in spite of opening on Sunday? Yes; it is mostly attributed to the general depression in trade; they all attribute it to that.

6548. You think that circumstances sufficiently account for this diminution in the liquor trade? I think so.

6549. Do you not think there is an excess of houses? I do.

6550. Do you not think there are far too many houses to do an honest and decent trade? I should like to put it in this way: That I think the needs of the population within the metropolitan area would be quite met by a lesser number.

6551. Do you think it would be a benefit to the houses themselves, as well as to the public, if the houses in the city were reduced by one-fourth? I should think that would be rather too large a reduction; there are places where there are a number of houses congregated together, and in such places, I think, they could be very well lessened; for instance, at the corner of Castlereagh and King streets there are no less than ten houses almost together.

6552. That is near a theatre, is it not? Yes; but I think that even there they could be very well lessened.

6553. But taking the most populous wards—Gipps, Bourke, and Fitzroy wards—are not the houses far too numerous there—to do a decent business, I mean? No; I think in prosperous times they all seem to do a very fair business.

6554. Then you think this is not a prosperous time? No; I think it is a very bad time for the trade; even the best houses are complaining of the depression and the consequent loss of income.

6555. We are informed, on official authority, that nearly 300 transfers were granted up to August in this year—that is to say, a period of seven months—out of 353 applications;—do you ascribe this large number of transfers to the general depression—that it is because the holders of the licenses want to get out of the houses, or are forced out? No, I should not say that; I think in most cases they get the price they ask; if the incoming tenant gets a long lease of the premises and if he has got the money he can afford to wait for prosperous times.

6556. Then you think there is still a demand for this kind of property? Oh, certainly.

6557. But is not the contract with the brewer, in these cases, of such a character as to make the holder of

- Mr. J. C. M. of the license powerless in the hands of the brewer. If he does not come up to time with his payments des A. Weale. does not the brewer say, "Well, your position is so-and-so; I hold a bill of sale over everything you 80 Aug., 1886. possess; I hold your transfer executed in blank; you must go out"? No; I do not think that is the way the brewer would look at it; the brewer, in the first place, would make sure of getting a good tenant.
6558. You think he would make sure of that condition? I do; he would make sure of getting a respectable man, upon whom he could rely to do a respectable trade, and whom he could trust, to a certain extent, to work up the business and attend to it; and during these bad times, which the brewer must feel as well as the publican, he would see that there was a depression in trade, and therefore would make some allowance.
6559. You think he would not be harsh to a decent man,—but you know that nearly all these men sell on Sundays, do you not? I should think nearly all of them do.
6560. And still you call that a respectable trade? There are several ways of looking at that.
6561. Don't you see how this business is jeopardised if it is in the hands of a man who sells on Sunday, because he may be caught? Of course if a man gets in that position that he has been caught twice generally he will transfer; and after the second conviction he will be more careful and not sell on Sunday.
6562. As a matter of fact do you not know of your own knowledge that most of the publicans who have made those transfers are men who are not good enough to keep, that is to say, men who have been unpunctual in their payments to the brewers and who stand a chance of losing their licenses? No, I could not say that of my own knowledge. It is very difficult to obtain any knowledge of their business with the brewers, and as a rule hotel-keepers do not like it to be known that they are under the brewers.
6563. There is an indisposition on the part of the publican to confess that he is tied to the brewer? Yes, to outsiders.
6564. Do you not think that the value of good-wills has been increasing? Yes.
6565. Do you not think it is in excess of the real value of the houses? I do not think it is in excess of the value of the trade.
6566. It goes up to £2,000, I suppose, in some cases? It goes a good deal higher. I know one house for which they want £6,500.
6567. But take the average. If I put the average of what you call good houses at above £2,000 am I below the mark? Yes.
6568. Then where would you put the mark? I should put it at from £2,300 to £2,500.
6569. And that you think would be the average value of the good-wills of the houses that change hands from year to year? The second-rate houses.
6570. I want a general average? That would be too difficult to give. It would be easier to classify them as first, second, and third rate.
6571. Then your estimate of £2,300 to £2,500 has reference to second-class houses? Yes.
6572. Give us an idea how you classify them. Such houses as the "Metropolitan," the "Royal," and "Petty's" would I suppose be in the first class? Yes.
6573. Now give us an idea of what you call a second-class house. I want to know whether you place a house in the second class on account of its stand, or the house itself, or its size;—would you call a house a second-class house according to its takings? The takings, the stand and the lease, all go together.
6574. There is a house near the Water Police Office; I think it is called "Belmore Family Hotel";—how would you class that? I think you allude to the house occupied by Mrs. Tweddle. I think that might be included in the second class.
6575. And a house like the "Oriental" at the other end of the Quay? That used to be kept by Mr.
Buckham. Since it has changed hands I know nothing about it.
6576. Take a small house with a very good trade, the "Star Hotel," near the Government Printing Office?
I have never been in that house.
6577. Then there is a house like the "Fortune of War," where the sailors go? That I should describe as a third-class house, and all houses frequented by sailors.
6578. In classifying a house do you take its respectability or otherwise, or a combination of respectability, stand, and takings? If a person came to me and said, "Recommend me to a second-class house" I should look at it from two points of view, the character and the takings; the character of the house—how it has been managed, and the takings; is it a respectable house and does it do a good business? As an illustration of a good second-class house I would mention the "Blue Lion Hotel," opposite Toohey's brewery.
6579. Is it the custom of the brewer to put in a new man or accept a transferee who can only pay one-fifth or one-sixth, or even less of the amount of the good-will? The rule I think is to require the hotel-keeper to provide two-thirds.
6580. Cash? Cash or properly endorsed promissory-notes.
6581. Then if £2,300 or £2,500 was the value of the good-will, do you say that the hotelkeeper would have to provide either in cash or the equivalent of cash £1,600? I do.
6582. Can a man who has command of £400 acquire through the intercession of a brewer a good-will worth £2,500? Will the brewer accept that amount, taking the balance in the form of a bill of sale or other pledge on the property? Can this be possible according to your view? No.
6583. You say two-thirds is the rule? It might happen that a brewer had a license himself for a house.
If a brewer saw a corner in a new neighbourhood that he thought would be a good position for a public-house, he might get some one to get a license for him, and put that some one in for the time being until he could find a suitable tenant, who would advance the two-thirds usually required.
6584. Then it is the practice of the brewers to get some one to act as locum tenens in this way? I would not like to say it is the practice, but it is done occasionally.
6585. Then the locum tenens holds the house until the brewer sees a mark? Yes; until some one comes to him who will give him the price.
6586. And you say that price averages about two-thirds of the value of the good-will? Yes.
6587. I suppose you know nothing of the country trade? No; I have been very little in the country.
6588. Are there many houses in the city and suburbs owned by spirit merchants? I believe there are some, but I could give no idea of the number.
6589. Have you any knowledge of this business acquired elsewhere? No. I have lived in other countries, but have only been a casual observer of the liquor traffic. I took no special interest in it.
6590. Has it come to your knowledge that there is a great deal of adulteration and sophistication of liquor in

- in this city. For example, is the word "essence" a familiar word to you. Do you know anything about essences? No, except what I have heard from the police authorities themselves.
6591. Nor about adulteration? No. Going into hotels one is obliged to taste something, and one sometimes gets impressed with the taste of the liquor.
6592. You have come away sometimes, I suppose, with a strong impression as to the character of the liquor? I have.
6593. Was it favourable or otherwise? In low or third-rate houses it was very often the reverse of favourable.
6594. To what cause would you ascribe the unpleasantness of flavour—if it did not even go further than unpleasantness? To the presence of fusel oil or to adulteration? That I could not say.
6595. I suppose you know nothing of Colonial wine licenses? No.
6596. The holders of these licenses do not belong to your organization? One or two may, but we do not enter into their business.
6597. What are the objects of the Association you represent? In the first place to get the trade to meet together, and know each other, and to understand the questions which affect them; in the second place, to defend their interests when they are assailed; to defend individual members when they are prosecuted, and when we think they are unjustly prosecuted; and, in the third place, to do all we can to raise the trade to a higher standard—to purify the trade.
6598. If a man is prosecuted for Sunday-selling do you defend him? We do not defend him in the first instance. If a man comes to us and says that he is being prosecuted, but that he is not guilty—that the person served, for instance, was a lodger—we say to him, "You must go into Court with your own solicitor and defend the case. If it goes against you bring us the depositions, and if we think the evidence shows that you have been unjustly prosecuted, we will appeal, and we will also pay you the costs in the first case."
6599. You see him through it? Yes.
6600. If you are satisfied that his is a meritorious case? Yes.
6601. You believe this man when he says the drink was sold to a lodger? We do not believe him in the first instance. We say that he must defend his own case in the police court, and must bring us the evidence.
6602. Do you submit the evidence to your solicitor? Yes.
6603. You have got a solicitor then? Yes.
6604. May I ask who he is? Our solicitor, Mr. Coonan, resigned a few days ago.
6605. And you have not yet appointed a successor? No. I may say that we have not taken up one case that we have not won. This will show that we only take up bonâ fide cases.
6606. In how many cases have you succeeded in getting the convictions quashed? I could not say.
6607. How many cases within the year during which you have been secretary? I do not think we took up any Sunday-selling cases after a conviction had been obtained. We took up two cases in the first instance, because the evidence was so palpable that there was no getting away from it—cases of Sunday-selling on the strength of a medical certificate.
6608. Sunday-selling alleged to be in violation of the law, but proved not to be in violation of the law? Yes.
6609. Those you took up? Yes.
6610. Now as to the other class of cases in which you waited until the man was convicted, and then protected him by an appeal to the Quarter Sessions. You incur the expenditure of an appeal to the Quarter Sessions on his behalf? Yes.
6611. If a man has been convicted, and you believe he has been wrongly convicted, you take upon yourself the expense of an appeal;—is that so? We only had one appeal, and that was not done through our solicitor, but we paid a good part of the expense.
6612. Were you successful? Yes.
6613. The cases you are referring to now occurred within the present year? Within the last twelve months.
6614. Since you have been connected with the Association? Yes. There were also two cases of Sunday-selling on the strength of medical certificates. The appeal case was one in which the man to whom the drink was sold was said to have been intoxicated.
6615. This was not on Sunday? No, during the week. And then there was another case for serving on Sunday which was dismissed. There were two or three cases like that which were dismissed in the police court, and the expenses of which we paid afterwards.
6616. Then I understand that you do not as a matter of course provide the necessary legal protection to anyone who is a member of your association? Not to any man who wilfully breaks the law; although of course serving on Sunday on the strength of a medical certificate is breaking the law, because the Act says nothing about that. We had a case in which a woman at Newtown was dying after childbirth. The doctor ordered some brandy. The husband went out with the prescription to endeavour to get the brandy in the neighbourhood, but the publicans would not open their doors to him.
6617. How long ago was this? About three months ago. They had to send a woman all the way down to Woolloomooloo to the father of the sick woman, who kept a public-house. The woman got the brandy there, but when she came out she was caught by the police; some of the stuff was taken from her, and she was delayed and did not get back for a long time. The case came on in court some time afterwards. The woman was still dying. It was a very bad case; so bad that the doctor could not attend in court in answer to the subpoena; he could not leave his patient. The mother and father and everyone in the house were dragged away to give evidence.
6618. What was the result? The case was dismissed. There was no compensation for all the expense and all the anxiety and trouble.
6619. Mr. Hutchison.] Was the drink obtained on Sunday? Yes.
6620. President. Have you ever known of a similar case of hardship? Yes, there was another case which occurred at Leichhardt. A person came to Mr. Artlett, of the "Imperial Hotel," with a certificate. He did not like to serve the liquor, but after a great deal of persuasion he gave what was wanted and kept the medical certificate. He was prosecuted, and was put to the expense of subpoenaing witnesses and paying the doctor his guinea for attendance, besides having to attend himself. These expenses amounted to about four or five guineas. The case was dismissed.
6621. Mr. Colls.] Are you speaking now of your own knowledge? Yes, I had to look into both of these cases and bring them before our solicitor in order to get them defended.

Mr. J. C. M.
des A. Weale.

30 Aug., 1886.

Mr. J. C. M. 6622. President.] You complain that although the cases were dismissed there was some expense incurred des A. Weale, for which the persons prosecuted got no compensation? No compensation whatever. Then there is the 30 Aug., 1886. loss of time, and in the Newtown case a great deal of anxiety through having to leave a sick woman who was in a state of great danger.

6623. Mr. Colls.] What is the name of the president of your association? Mr. T. F. Thompson, wine and spirit merchant, was our president, but he has had to resign on account of ill-health, and as the re-election of the committee takes place at the end of next month, it has not been thought necessary to elect another president in the meantime.

6624. Out of the 820 licensed victuallers how many are members of your association? About 330 or 350.

6625. How are the members admitted? Members are admitted on payment of a subscription of one guinea a year, and it is left to my discretion to say whether they are respectable men, fit to join the Association.

6626. There is no balloting on admission? No.

6627. Has any complaint been made to the Association as to the quantity of beer and spirits sold by the grocers? Yes, a great many complaints. There was one case which we referred to the Minister of Justice. There were two houses in Mary-street, off the Belmore Park, at which we were informed sly-grog selling took place; they were what you would term bawdy-houses. The liquor used to be brought in cabs by the tenants, who, in both cases, were women, and it was said, though we obtained no evidence of the fact that the liquor was procured from grocers. The police fully bore out our complaint to the Minister of Justice, to whom we applied to take action. Other cases have also been brought to our knowledge, but we have been unable to obtain evidence which would warrant a prosecution. We have also had complaints about the starting of clubs.

6628. How many clubs do you know to have been started? I can hardly speak as to the number. There was one started by the employés of the locomotive branch of the Railway Department at Junee Junction, in order that they might obtain beer cheaper than the local publicans would supply it. I suppose they get the beer direct from the brewers, and they sell it at a lower rate amongst themselves and divide the profits. I believe that a letter relating to that matter has been laid before the Commission. There was another instance at Goulburn, and I have heard of another club about to be started at Redfern.

6629. Do you know of any which have been started in the city within the last twelve months? There is one in Pitt-street, No. 184, the Cosmopolitan Club. We brought it under the notice of the Inspector-General of Police, but as it was in accordance with the Act he could not interfere.

6630. I suppose you know of several in the suburbs? I have heard of them, but I do not know of them of my own personal knowledge.

6631. Have you heard any complaints as to the results in families of taking spirits home on Saturday nights? A great many.

6632. To what do you attribute it? In the first place, the publicans now do an enormous business on Saturday nights, compared with what they used to do, in the shape of jug and bottle business, because liquor is now taken home by people who would otherwise get a drink or two in a public-house on Sunday.

6633. Have you heard any complaints as to the manner in which up-stair bars are conducted? Yes, that was one of the first matters we took into consideration when we considered what we could do to purify the trade. We thought that the best thing to do would be to advocate the removal of all up-stair bars.

6634. What steps, if any, did the Association take in that matter? We took no steps except in one way. A great many of these up-stair bars are supposed to be sublet, and we took up the matter of subletting bars whether up-stairs or down-stairs.

6635. Are bars down-stairs sublet? Yes, a lot of them.

6636. To females, I presume? Yes. I was appointed by the Association to interview Mr. Fosbery and talk the matter over with him, but he said that in the present state of the law it was impossible to interfere in any way, or to attempt a prosecution for subletting bars.

6637. Mr. Hutchison.] Does your Association object to two bars on the ground floor? If one is sublet we do.

6638. Mr. Colls.] Take the case of a public-house at the corner of two streets with a bar opening into each street;—is your association in favour of that? I take it that as a rule a public-house in town must have two bars—a sixpenny and a threepenny bar.

6639. President.] Do you consider both a threepenny and a sixpenny bar necessary? In most houses I think.

6640. Why? The sixpenny bar, as a rule, does the spirit business, and in it also are sold the better class of ales, such as lager beer.

6641. You mean that the drinks are 6d. all round? Yes.

6642. What is sold in the threepenny bar? Generally Colonial ales and smaller drinks of spirits.

6643. Is it not sometimes an inferior class of spirits? In third-rate class of houses, yes. But in those houses, as a rule, there is no sixpenny bar.

6644. Have the best houses both threepenny and sixpenny bars? There are some houses which have no threepenny bars.

6645. Do you think a sixpenny and a threepenny business both necessary in all houses? Not in every house, but some houses must afford accommodation to both classes of customers, those who want sixpenny drinks and those who want threepenny drinks.

6646. What is the reason for the two descriptions of bars—is it because the sixpenny drinkers will not amalgamate with the threepenny drinkers? Not that so much. One reason is that it simplifies the business to have the two kinds separate, and another is that it keeps distinct the two classes of people.

6647. Mr. Colls.] We are told that a publican cannot leave his house on Sunday because he must be there to admit a policeman if one should knock at the door;—is that a fact? According to the law a publican is bound to be on his premises on Sunday to admit lodgers and travellers. Of course he may have a representative there.

6648. Mr. Hutchison.] Has it ever been heard of in the world that a publican who has taken his wife and family out on a Sunday has been prosecuted for not being on his premises? I do not suppose anyone would go to the trouble to do it.

6649. Mr. Colls.] You are aware that there are a great many public-houses in Sydney which do not attempt

- attempt to accommodate the public? They are bound to accommodate the public, but many of them are not asked once in twelve months to supply accommodation. Mr. J. C. M. des A. Weale.
6650. Are you aware that many of them have not the means—that is to say, the necessary furniture, bedding, and so on? Yes; I should say that there is a proportion which have not decent accommodation. 30 Aug., 1886.
6651. Have you heard of a case in which communication has been opened up between a public-house and an adjoining private house in order to comply with the provisions of the Act with regard to accommodation, and that afterwards the communication has been closed and the adjoining house let again to private persons? I have heard of one such case, in Woolloomooloo I think it was.
6652. In admitting a member to your Association, do you make inquiry as to his character, or do you judge of it from your own experience? I generally judge from my own experience. I usually look in at his house two or three times to see what sort of business he does and how he conducts it, and I notice whether he seems a respectable sort of man.
6653. Of course he knows who you are when you go round? Yes.
6654. And does he give you liberty to examine his place? I do not think I have ever been refused, unless perhaps when a man has been busy.
6655. Have you been in the country at all? Not sufficiently to speak of anything there.
6656. Has the Association had any complaints about the sale of liquor at oyster-saloons and cigar-shops? A great many with regard to the oyster-saloons. It is said that a lot of porter is sold there.
6657. At exorbitant prices? No; I do not think we have had any complaints on the score of exorbitant prices.
6658. Have there been similar complaints against fruit-shops and cigar-shops? No; I do not think so.
6659. Mr. Hutchison.] I do not wish to be rude, but are you a paid secretary? I am.
6660. When you visit publicans, preparatory to recommending them as members of your Association, I suppose you are canvassing to get them to join? Sometimes; sometimes not.
6661. In your rules do you propound any Parliamentary policy? Nothing beyond the redress of grievances; that is one of our objects.
6662. Have you ever issued any manifestoes in connection with elections? Yes.
6663. Would you put them in? I think I could get copies. We have a book in which I paste everything of that kind, but I generally also keep one or two loose copies.
6664. In one of those manifestoes do you ask the trade to decline to vote for any candidate who promised to vote for local option? No; for full local option, yes.
6665. That is local option. Do I understand you to say that the people who are in tied houses do not readily join your Association? No; I said they did not readily give information as to their business relations with brewers and wholesale wine and spirit merchants.
6666. Then you are likely to have them in your Association? I am certain we have a great many.
6667. Do you think there are 500 tied houses in the city and suburbs? I think there may be that many.
6668. Are they mostly of the lower class? No, mostly of the middle and lower classes.
6669. Are any of the first-class houses tied? I don't think so; I don't know of any.
6670. You think there are too many public-houses. Now, out of the 800 in the city and suburbs do you not think 150 could be dispensed with? I think you might dispense with 100 certainly—perhaps 150.
6671. How would you get at the disposal of that 100? That is a very difficult matter to ascertain.
6672. Would you try and establish some basis of population as a justification for licensing, and allow the people to vote as to the number of public-houses there should be in any locality, on the understanding that they should not reduce the number below a certain standard? No, I would not.
6673. Then how are you to get rid of the 100? That is a thing I don't undertake to explain. The only thing I do state is, that I believe there are too many public-houses. The State might buy them out, or the people might buy them out.
6674. Let us try and be practical if possible. We are all agreed that there are too many public-houses, and yet new licenses are being granted every week, the house in each instance being worth £2,000, and you ask the State to buy them out;—is there not something wrong there? No, I don't think so. When a new license is granted it is for a house in some new locality where there has been an increase of population, and the existing public-houses are not sufficient. As an instance, a license was granted two or three weeks ago for a new house at Randwick where there was only one public-house, which certainly did not afford sufficient accommodation.
6675. If, as you say, there are too many public-houses, how do you account for the fact that the value of licenses goes on increasing? In this way: The holder of a license has a lease for (say) five years. After being in the house for three years doing a good business, he wants in the present depressed state of affairs to sell out. He can still perhaps get an increase of a couple of hundred pounds over what he gave for the house three years ago, because the person who comes in will not come in without an extension of the lease, and he may look forward to better times coming.
6676. Do you look for increased trade to better times or to an increase of population, or are they both factors? In outlying localities the increase of population may also be taken into account, but the state of trade is generally looked for. Of course if times are better there will be an increase of trade.
6677. What have the trade to complain of if they are doing a larger business on Saturday nights, more than ever they did before? They complain on very good grounds. They say that the selling of liquor in that wholesale way on Saturday night leads to more drunkenness.
6678. Then it is as guardians of public morality that they object? I suppose a publican has as much regard for that as any other person. I have heard many complaints—and I have heard that the late Dr. Portescue said the same thing—that many people who used to go to a public-house on Sunday and get a couple of drinks now take drink to their homes on Saturday night and thus their wives have acquired the habit of drinking and been ruined in that way.
6679. But it seems strange to me that the publicans who complain on moral grounds of so much liquor being taken into people's homes on Saturday nights should systematically violate the law by selling on Sunday? The publicans must sell on Sunday. The people will be served, and if the body of the publicans refused while one or two served the week-day business would go to the latter also in a large measure.
6680. Do you not think that if your Association were very anxious to do it they could easily induce all respectable publicans to close on Sunday? I am quite certain they could not. 6681.

- Mr. J. C. M. 6681. You would not recommend them to do it anyhow? It has been tried before. The Trade Defence des A. Weale. Association, with which the present Association amalgamated, tried it but failed, and I do not think it is 30 Aug., 1886. likely to be tried again.
6682. Do you believe that the publican can maintain his way and keep his head above water without selling on Sunday? A great many of them can.
6683. Then that is not the reason why they sell? In some cases it is; in other cases it is not. In some cases, in the suburbs and near the water for instance, when the publican obtained his license it was under the old Act which allowed him to sell on Sundays, and he made his calculations accordingly, but when the Act requiring public-houses to be closed on Sunday was passed, his business was curtailed by one day's takings.
6684. People have many times wondered why the publicans did not ask for compensation on that account?
They compensated themselves by selling on Sunday.
6685. You really think that it is creditable and honourable in these men to wilfully and defiantly break the law? I think that in this view of the case self-preservation is the first law.
6686. Do you know whether the brewers have any right to ascertain all about the business done in these tied houses, such as having access to the books and ascertaining what the takings have been. Have they any control in that matter do you think? They must know in the first instance what they served to these people.
6687. What they serve themselves they do, but they do not know what spirits go to the houses? They mostly supply spirits too. Nearly all brewers do. Of course the agreement made with the publican may relate only to the beer, but I should think that in most cases it relates to spirits also. I cannot, however, say that positively.
6688. Do you know whether the settlements are made monthly? I cannot say. The brewers have a look round once a week to see how the business is going on, but how the payments are made I do not know; I should think they were made monthly in such a large business.
6689. You said that in gauging the value of a house you would look at the business done and at the conduct of the house;—would Sunday-selling be a bad mark in your opinion? I should think that would depend on the estimation of the person who was going to buy.
6690. But would you yourself regard it as a factor in the value;—would you say that a house was of less value because of Sunday-selling? I would tell the person inquiring whether the house did a Sunday business or not; I would tell him what the takings were and whether the house was respectable; I would say nothing more. He could judge for himself as to the Sunday business afterwards.
6691. You said it was possible that a brewer might see a very eligible place where he thought a good house could be opened, and that he would put someone in for a time, until he had a man of his own he could put in? I have heard of such a case.
6692. Do you think it is the practice? I should not like to say it was the practice.
6693. Have you any idea whether any of the brewers own the property in the case of any of these tied houses? That I could not say. I should think not, though legally they could.
6694. You say that a person who wanted brandy on Sunday for a woman who had just been confined could not get it in Newtown, though he had a medical certificate. Yet we have evidence that nearly every publican in Newtown sells openly on Sunday? There is a general feeling of distrust. Many a publican would hesitate to serve liquor even upon a medical certificate, because he might think that it was a dodge of the police to get at him. A good deal would depend on the temperament of the man who was asked to serve.
6695. And also on the class of customer? Perhaps. There is a great mistrust on the part of the publi-cans against anyone who appears otherwise than in ordinary dress to get liquor. A man went to a public-house in Sussex-street one Sunday in the dress of a sailor, and asked for a drink, saying he had just arrived from Newcastle. The publican, who did not like his look, told him he ought to have gone to one of the other houses he had passed on his way from the wharf, and refused to serve him. He would not go away, but remained while the publican served three or four persons who were lodgers, and then he brought a policeman to the house, and had the publican summoned for serving. This man was himself a policeman in disguise.
6696. But it is also a fact that the publicans put sentries to watch for the police? I have seen that in one or two instances, but it is not done as a rule.
6697. Mr. Roseby.] Has your Association sought to obtain further legislation with reference to the liquor traffic? We have drafted some amendments which we have submitted to Sir Patrick Jennings. Most of them are on the lines of the English Act.
6698. Among those amendments is there one for the opening of public-houses again on Sunday? Yes.
6699. During what hours? 7 to 9 I think in the morning, 1 to 3 in the afternoon, and 8 to 10 at night.
6700. Is there any country in the British dominions where houses are open during those hours on Sunday?
The English Act allows three openings, though the hours do not exactly tally with those we propose; I believe they are from 8 till 9 in the morning, 12:30 till 2 in the afternoon, and 8 till 10 in the evening. I think Sunday opening is allowed also in South Australia.
6701. But that is far beyond anything that has ever been attempted in these Colonies before? Yes.
6702. In your opinion would the opening of public-houses during those hours promote public morality?
I may say that with reference to this amendment there is a good deal of difference of opinion. Speaking for myself, I would rather see one opening, namely, from 1 until 4 or 5 in the afternoon.
6703. The three periods of opening you have mentioned would leave little breathing time to the publican during the remainder of the day? At present he has no breathing time, because he is supposed to be in his hotel.
6704. Do you think it right that a man should flagrantly violate the law rather than seek by legitimate means to have it altered? I think it is a very great pity that the law is broken, but a bad law is always broken—must be.
6705. Do you believe that the men who now violate the law would observe it if public-houses were allowed to be opened during the periods you have named? I think that if the Legislature allowed them to open a reasonable time on Sunday it might inflict much heavier penalties for a breach of the law, because then there would not be the same excuse there is now.
6706. I presume that the openings you have recommended were agreed to by a majority of your Association? The matter has not yet been referred to a general meeting of the body. They may have been agreed to by a majority of the Committee.
6707. You know that legislation in the British dominions goes quite in the contrary direction to that you recommend recommend, that it goes in the direction of closing public-houses on Sundays? That has been so up to this time I think.

6708. Your Association is opposed to the principles of local option? Yes.

6709. Altogether, with or without compensation? With or without compensation.

6710. With reference to the fact that there are too many public-houses, you do not know how they can be dealt with equitably? I should not like to make any suggestion on that point. It is a matter which I have not sufficiently studied.

6711. Notwithstanding your official position, you know that drink lies at the root of a large proportion of the crime and misery we have in the community? I should say no.

6712. Do you think it has much to do with crime? It has something to do with crime. It is a matter I have taken a great deal of pains to look into. Often when the statistics show an increase in drink, they, at the same time, show a decrease in crime. That at any rate weakens the argument that crime and drink go together.

6713. Would you favour us with any statistics in proof of that? Last year, in South Australia, there was a great decrease in serious crime, and a large increase in drink. The statistics were published in the Herald a few months ago.

6714. Then in your opinion an increase in drink means a lessening of crime? No; the one argument is as absurd as the other. I say that the two things do not go together.

6715. Do you not believe that drink has a great deal to do with crime? It has in this way: Crime may be the result of drink; but a person intending to commit crime may take drink in order to nerve himself to commit it. In the latter case I should not ascribe the crime to drink, because it is not the result of it.

6716. Then you think that drink is a harmless thing—that there is no harm or evil connected with it? I think there is a great deal of harm and evil connected with it unless it is properly regulated.

6717. And you propose to regulate it by giving greater facilities for obtaining it—by opening public-houses on Sunday? I want to open public-houses on Sunday because it will contribute to lessen the drunkenness now caused by men taking liquor home on Saturday night.

6718. But where is the necessity for taking it home on Saturday night when people can get it now on Sunday? The publicans will not admit every person on Sunday.

6719. They will admit those who get their supplies on Saturday night? Not unless they are well known and can be trusted. I have often found it difficult to obtain admission, although I am known; moreover when a publican has been fined once or twice he is very difficult to get at.

6720. President.] But you have not answered Mr. Roseby's question. If I am a customer on the Saturday surely I should be allowed in on the Sunday? Not necessarily.

6721. Suppose that I am a good customer on the Saturday; that is to say, well known, and known to be a safe man, surely the publican will not run the risk of losing my Saturday custom by refusing me admission on Sunday? No, he will admit you on the Sunday.

6722. Then in that case Mr. Roseby's question is to be answered in the affirmative, that is to say, that the Saturday customer will be admitted on the Sunday? But if you were let in on the Sunday you would not want to obtain supplies on the Saturday night. The public-houses are not open to all customers on Sunday, only to a small percentage; you may say 30 per cent.

6723. Mr. Roseby.] Is it not a fact that the publicans do a larger trade on Sunday than on any other day in the week? The majority certainly do not.

6724. Well if we have evidence to the contrary you do not think it is true? I do not.

6725. Who ought to say whether a public-house shall be opened in a locality or not; the people of that locality or someone who has no connection with it? I should think the Magistrates.

6726. You think they represent the people? I suppose they are impartial.

6727. Why do you object to give the people a voice in the matter—they are interested;—are you afraid of them? No; we think the principle is wrong altogether.

6728. Do you know if the principle is a growing one in all British communities? I should not say so.

6729. Where is the exception;—is it a growing one in Queensland? Yes.

6730. And in Victoria? I suppose it has been up till quite lately.

6731. Is it a growing one in New Zealand? I could not say as to New Zealand.

6732. You do not think it is a growing one here? No, I do not.

FRIDAY, 3 SEPTEMBER, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,	A. HUTCHISON, Esq.,
T. COLLS, Esq., J.P.,	G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.,
J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Thomas Frederick Thompson called in, sworn, and examined:—

6733. Mr. Hutchison.] I believe you are engaged in the wholesale wine trade? Yes.

6734. How long have you been in the trade? Twenty-one years.

6735. Were you President of the Licensed Victuallers' Association? Yes.

6736. You do not desire to speak now as a representative of that Association? No; merely as a citizen.

6737. Do you think that drunkenness is increasing in this community? I think the drinking habits are increasing.

6738. Do you think the multiplicity of houses would account for that? I think that suppression, if not discriminately exercised, might lead to an increase in the sellers of drink.

6739. Do you think there are too many houses at the present time? Yes.

6740. We have over 800 in the city and suburbs—by how many, do you think that number might with advantage be reduced? I could only say approximately. I feel sure there are a great many houses not required; and I feel sure that there are a great many houses that should not be licensed, and a great many people conducting houses who should never have had a license.

6741. Do you think the number could be reduced with benefit by 100 or 150? A certain class of houses could; the neighbourhood pot-house class could with advantage.

Mr. T. F.
Thompson.

3 Sept., 1886.

- Mr. T. F. Thompson.
3 Sept., 1886.
6742. How would you reduce them—would you give them compensation? If I had supreme control I should go round with a piece of chalk and mark the houses I considered were not required and answered no purpose; and I would ask them to bring their lease, and all that sort of thing, and I would give them fair and reasonable compensation, which would not amount to much in the aggregate.
6743. You are now speaking of houses that you think are really worthless houses? Worthless houses, which answer no purpose.
6744. Then you have a strong objection to mere pot-houses? A very strong objection. My only reason for giving compensation is, that the persons who originally opened these houses have cleared out, and left the new comers to be entrapped in them.
6745. Would you compensate the property-holder? In some cases the property-holder might be entitled to light compensation; but the person who has been induced to buy into a house that a man cannot possibly get a living in I should fairly compensate for the value of his lease. You could easily find out what he paid for his lease.
6746. Then you really think there are houses in existence of that character that, if they did an honest trade, they could not make a living? I am sure there are.
6747. Have you any idea how it is they do cke out a living? A merchant may take a ten years' lease of a small hotel; he has his representative in the town in the shape of a hotel-broker, who advertises the house for sale. The person who applies imagines it is a tenant who is desirous of selling; and the broker will point out that the advantages of taking the hotel are so great, that, if the person has £100 to put down, he knows a merchant who has such confidence in the house and the takings that he will advance £400 or £500. This merchant is really the owner of the house. This applies more to Colonial beer-houses, because they get such large enormous profits that they can stand losses.
6748. That suggests another question: Do you think that in many cases the brewers are the owners of these houses? They are the leaseholders; they sub-let in many cases.
6749. Do you think that houses of that character largely adulterate? No; they have no occasion.
6750. Then they sell an inferior article? Yes; in some cases a very inferior article. There is such an immense disproportion between good and bad that they need not adulterate to compete successfully against the person who pays a high price for liquor.
6751. Then the inferior liquor would pass the examination? That is a matter that has always been a difficulty to me. I may hand over to an analytical chemist a sample of port wine or brandy, and he may inform me after analysis that there is nothing which he considers injurious in it; but still his theory and the practical verdict of the person who drinks it are at total variance: the man who drinks it will be made sick, and ill, and stupid, and therefore the theory must be at fault.
6752. We have here samples of brandy at 3s. in bond? Quite so.
6753. And the analytical chemist tells us it is inferior, but that he can only detect fusel oil in it. You think there is a genuine difficulty here; you think that the chemist is not up with the doctor? No; he cannot understand the effect the liquor will produce on the system. That the effect is produced there is no gainsaying. The man who drinks pure liquor may be stimulated, but he will not feel any ill effects afterwards. The man who drinks white spirit flavoured with brandy essence—which is the 3s. brandy—will become stupid, and will not be master of his own acts; and it will create a thirst and altogether upset the system.
6754. Is it brought into the country in that condition? Yes.
6755. Then it must be doctored abroad? I do not know. There is no doubt it is British spirit. It is a white spirit which they distil up to 60 per cent., and reduce to proof, and then with sweetening and brandy-flavouring they sell it for brandy; it is not brandy.
6756. What is your opinion of the effect of the recent legislation in regard to the liquor traffic? In some respects it has had a bad effect, and in other respects there is no doubt it has had a very good effect.
6757. Do you think the earlier closing on week-days is an advantage? On the whole, yes; I should think so.
6758. Do you think that if Sunday closing were uniformly enforced it would be an advantage? I am convinced that it could not be enforced, because the desires of the people will be met whether in defiance of the law or in accordance with the law; I consider that 99 out of every 100 adult males drink wine or beer, wisely or unwisely, and if you close the houses entirely they will find other means of getting liquor; it would be very much better, in my opinion, to try to regulate the traffic instead of prohibiting it.
6759. Do you really think that 99 out of every 100 of the population of New South Wales would clamour for Sunday opening? I do not think they would clamour for it; but I feel sure, from the great power hotel-keepers have at elections, through the people having a grievance, that if they did not clamour openly they would vote for the opening of hotels.
6760. Do you think that if a plébiscite were taken on the question of opening on Sunday or not opening on Sunday the former would be carried? I feel sure that if a poll were taken on the question of opening from 1 o'clock to 3 o'clock, and the voting took place according to the Parliamentary roll, it would be carried in the affirmative by a large majority.
6761. Then you believe that if a ballot-paper were offered to the entire community with these two questions on it:—Shall public-houses be opened from 1 to 3 on Sunday, or shall they be closed during the entire Sunday, the former would have a majority? I think so. I feel sure it would lessen drunkenness 20 per cent. if public-houses were allowed to open from 1 to 3.
6762. What machinery would you use to enforce the law? It is a reflection upon us as a community that we cannot carry out the law. If a law is passed that the people can respect it is a reflection upon us if the authorities cannot administer it.
6763. In the event of the law being altered so as to allow the houses to open from 1 till 3, can you suggest any means whereby the absolute closing during the rest of the day could be enforced? You have the machinery in the present law. The penalty is very heavy. You have power to take a man's license away after the third offence. But in my opinion the fact that they cannot get liquor on Sunday induces the labouring classes to take a great deal to their homes on Saturday night.
6764. Do you not think that is largely a matter of theory, and that there is nothing in it? No, I do not. I know that the Sunday-closing has been the means of opening hundreds of places where people can get drink on Sundays—clubs and other places.
6765. You mean in an illicit manner? No, it is not illicit; it is merely taking advantage of the law not being stringent enough to prevent it.

Mr. T. F. Thompson.
3 Sept., 1886.

6766. Do you know of any of these clubs? I know there are any number of clubs both in the city and suburbs.

6767. Are you in favour of local opinion on the entire question of licensing or no licensing? Taking the Parliamentary franchise, I should certainly be disposed to hand over the power to the people.

6768. Mr. Roseby.] I understand that you are strongly of opinion that there are too many hotels which are merely pot-houses? I think there are.

6769. You think that it would be well for the community generally if means could be devised to have these places closed? Quite so; with reasonable compensation.

6770. You think that the compensation which would be required would be comparatively small? It would not be large; it would purify the whole of the trade, as there is no trouble with the large houses, or houses which are under heavy expenses, in the city, because the licensees of such houses take good care to conduct them properly and to keep the best liquors.

6771. You think that in any new legislation some arrangement ought to be made for bringing that idea into effect, i.e., the closing of those pot-houses? Yes, it would have to be judiciously done of course.

6772. How many of such houses do you think there are in the city and suburbs? I should not like to say how many there are. My only knowledge respecting these places is from observation when driving about the city and suburbs.

6773. Is it your opinion that in these houses a large amount of deleterious liquor is supplied to customers? I am sure that there is a low class of liquor supplied. I am not a chemist, but I know that white spirit is the basis of most of this cheap stuff.

6774. Would you classify the hotels? I have not given much attention to that question, but it appears to me that there are two distinct classes of houses in the city; that is the legitimate hotel and the liquor shop, and there is no sympathy in common between them.

6775. Have you been connected with the trade organization? I was elected the first president of the Associated Licensed Victuallers' Association.

6776. Mr. Hutchison.] You say that the trade itself recognizes these low houses, and there is nothing in common between them and respectable houses? Quite so.

6777. Is there any Association which would refuse membership to the licensees of these low houses? While I was president of the Association I certainly objected to the admission as a member of any man who had been convicted, or who was reported by the authorities as not keeping his house properly.

6778. Mr. Roseby.] The Association of which you were president was an amalgamation of the Licensed Victuallers' Association and the Trade Defence Association? Yes; I resigned my position recently.

6779. How are members admitted? They are proposed and seconded and balloted for. Of course we may be imposed on at times by new arrivals who open houses, but when they are found out we certainly refuse to allow them to continue as members, because I have always impressed on the respectable section of the trade that the greatest enemies they have are those who do not conduct their houses properly. By degrees the members came round to the conclusion that I was correct, that by conducting the trade properly we were likely to get the sympathy of the large section of the community who were desirous of ameliorating or mitigating the evils which are said to ensue from drinking. There is a large number of people who are attached to no organization; they are on neither the teetotal nor the hotelkeepers' side; they simply throw in their weight for justice and fair play.

6780. During your official connection with the Association did you frequently reject persons who wished to join? Yes.

6781. The Association recently interviewed the Government with reference to amended legislation? Yes; but I did not attend. I disagreed with reference to Sunday opening.

6782. You are aware that the deputation asked that the houses should be open from 7 to 9 a.m., 1 to 3 p.m., and 8.30 to 10 p.m.? Yes.

6783. Have you any sympathy with that? None whatever.

6784. Was the Association considerably divided on the question? My idea is that the houses should be open from 1 to 3 p.m. on Sunday, and that discretionary power should be given to the authorities to authorize houses at places of public resort to open from 3 to 5, or any other hours which the authorities might think in their wisdom would be for the public good. I thought that that was the agreement which had been arrived at by the committee of the Association, but a few days afterwards the committee met, and decided to request that the houses should be open three times on the Sunday, and I refused to attend on the deputation, because I did not agree with that. It is against my interest to disagree with them in this matter.

6785. Still it is your candid opinion, with the exception which you have stated, that the requirements of the public would be sufficiently met by opening the houses from 1 to 3? Yes.

6786. Do you think that there is any general desire on the part of the majority of the public to have the places open on Sunday at all? I think there is. I think that a large class have an apparent grievance, and it is felt at the ballot-box to the injury of legislation, and often a good representation in Parliament.

6787. Are you not aware that the tendency of legislation in the British Dominions is in the direction of the entire closing of public-houses on Sunday? I know that there is a great deal of speculation on the whole subject; that different methods have been tried to regulate the traffic; but they have been frequently arranged by men who did not understand the question.

6788. Are you not aware that for many years there has been Sunday closing in Scotland, that recently an Act was passed for Sunday closing in Ireland, and that there is a strong agitation going on for the same thing in England; that in many parts of Canada Sunday closing is the law; and that a similar law obtains in other Colonies? Yes.

6789. Still, notwithstanding that, you think there is a general wish on the part of a number of people to have the places open on Sunday? I think so. I feel sure that it would be beneficial to the working of the law, and that it would lessen drunkenness considerably.

6790. Why do you think it would be beneficial? For the simple reason that people will have liquor; and if they get inside the hotel they will drink immoderately, and if they have to take it home families will drink who otherwise would never have liquor in the house. It is human nature that where a thing is prohibited to a large extent people value it the more; they imagine they want it much more, in the same way as a child whose parents keep a lolly-shop does not eat half as many lollies as the child next door who steals pennies to buy them.

- Mr. T. F. Thompson.
6791. You really think that there is such an inordinate thirst for drink that the people will have it? 96 per cent. adults of the people drink, and it is no use trying to prohibit their getting it.
6792. You really think that 96 per cent. of the people violate the law for the sake of getting drink? I think that the law demoralises the people and the publicans. I can see no advantage in having a law which people will not respect, which they will violate because they think it is unjust. I have very strong opinions as regards Sunday observance, and if I could bring myself to believe that entire Sunday closing would lessen drunkenness I would go whole-heartedly into the agitation to bring such a law into existence; but I see clearly that it is better to regulate the trade than to try to prohibit it altogether.
6793. If the houses were to be opened from 1 to 3 on Sunday do you think that the law should be made very rigorous to prevent its being infringed during the other hours of the day? There would not be so much difficulty in getting the law observed if you opened the houses from 1 to 3. I think that the present machinery if properly worked is quite stringent enough to prevent the breaking of the law.
6794. Do you not know that when that was the law the law was violated? I know that the law was very faulty, and I know that it was not rigorously administered. It is only lately that so much attention has been given to the administration of the law.
6795. The law with regard to Sunday closing is really a farce? Simply because the people will have liquor, and their desires will be met. The same thing occurred in Maine and Massachusetts. The desires of the people were met and the result was that a Commission, appointed in re the liquor traffic, advised that it was better to regulate than prohibit.
6796. Are not a number of public-houses in the city "tied" to the brewers or spirit merchants? I think the brewers and spirit merchants hold the leases and sublet in many cases. It is done in all the Colonies.
6797. You know that a large proportion of the houses are in the hands of the brewers? A good many of the smaller houses are. It may be that the licensees of some of the larger houses have borrowed money from the merchants to go into their houses. Those houses would die out if they were not well conducted. It is the very small houses which should not have been brought into existence that are doing so much damage.
6798. Is the Secretary of the Association near the truth when he says that 500 out of 800 houses are in the hands of the brewers? That is simply a guess. All I know is, that it frequently happens that the brewers have bills of sale over many of them.
6799. Are you acquainted with the mode of fastening up the men by the brewers? I have heard of agreements being drawn up by hotel-brokers. A man takes a house and gives a bill of sale, and he is compelled to deal with the brewer who holds the bill of sale.
6800. Suppose it costs £1,100 to go into an hotel, and the man, having £500 of his own, borrows £600 and gives a bill of sale, does he not sign a blank transfer, putting himself at the mercy of the person who lent him the money, and is he not bound to deal with that person? Yes, he must deal with the brewer who holds the bill of sale, or he would demand the whole of his money.
6801. Do you not think he is frequently supplied with drink which no respectable merchant would supply? By some brewers, I have no doubt. The merchants mostly only trade with the larger houses; the brewers supply the small houses with everything.
6802. Do you not think that men are frequently entrapped and ruined by this arrangement? As the public come to discriminate in regard to liquor a house that sells bad liquor must be ruined.
6803. Do you think the liquor supplied is deleterious? It is said that it is not, but I believe it is.
6804. The brewer says the damage is all done by the spirits;—you do not think so? There is a great deal of damage done by drinking spirits, but I do not think it is done by drinking good spirits; but the price of good spirits puts them out of the reach of the small houses.
6805. Do they all use an inferior class of spirits? A great many—yes.
6806. Do you not think that the houses being under the thumbs of the brewers does a great deal of harm to the trade and to the customers? It depends upon the brewer. If he has no conscience he may get a poor devil into his house and supply him with the very lowest class of liquor. I am sure that the brewers would not all do it. In many cases, no doubt, it has a most injurious effect, as regards both the public and the hotelkeeper. Still they sign these bills of sale with their eyes open.
6807. What steps would you advise to prevent bad spirits from going into consumption? It is a question surrounded with the greatest difficulty; I have often thought over the matter with a view of suggesting some means of preventing that low class of liquor from going into consumption; I have thought that it might be wise to double the tax on white spirit. Still we get bad stuff out, which passes under the name of brandy, and the experts say it is not injurious; you cannot recommend the brandy and other liquors made by one firm to the detriment of others who have their reputations to make. I thought some time ago that the thing would cure itself; that people would not go to a house where they were poisoned; but unfortunately people seem to hang about houses at the corners of lanes like moths round a candle, and to drink and get ill. It is only amongst a certain class that any discrimination as to the quality of the liquor is shown.
6808. President.] Do you think it is necessary to have both threepenny and sixpenny bars? Where the two are well conducted I do not see that they can be any disadvantage to the public.
6809. You are aware that the 3d. drink is an inferior one? Yes; it is, except the ale.
6810. You think then that it is necessary to have sixpenny as well as threepenny bars? I think it is an advantage to the public. In a house that is well conducted there should be a bar for the working people.
6811. You do not see any reason why threepenny drinks should be necessarily bad? No; I think they might sell rum and English ale at 3d.; no doubt they could make it pay to sell good liquor diluted, at 3d.
6812. Do the spirit merchants hold many houses in the town? I should not think so; it is the brewers mostly.
6813. Do you hold any in the city? Yes. The merchant is more particular, because his profits are a great deal less than those of the brewers. The low-class houses seldom come to us; they get most of their liquors from the brewers.
6814. Is it the custom for spirit merchants to have tied houses in the country? Yes, they have some.
6815. Not to any large extent? No.
6816. Can you tell what proportion of houses are in the hands of the spirit merchants—would it be one-third? I should think not more than one-fourth certainly.
6817. Have you ever thought of the high licensing system as a mode of regulating the trade? Yes.

6818. What is your opinion of high licenses—such as they have in London, for instance? I should think there are advantages which might be given to a highly rated house which would only be fair.

6819. Would it not be an advantage, that it would close the small houses? It would be hard on some of the roadside houses in the country.

6820. It is not to be supposed that it would be in force in the country generally; the charge would be according to the annual value of the house? I should think it would be a great advantage.

6821. The main object would be the gradual closing of the small houses? I do not know that that would kill them. I should go round and mark the houses not required, compensate the lessces, and wipe them out.

6822. That is not what you mean by local option, is it? No.

6823. You would hand over to some authority the power to do it arbitrarily? Yes, with fair compensation. I think that those who administer the law should certainly be in a position to know which houses are well conducted and which are not.

6824. Is that the way in which you would reduce the number of houses? My opinion is that the whole of the trouble as to the regulation of the liquor traffic is caused by a few people. It would be the best way to at once get rid of that class. Licenses have been granted very recklessly in the past, although we are more careful now. Shops have been turned into hotels, because the landlords could get higher rents by making hotels of them. Hotels exist which not only serve no useful purpose but degrade those who keep them and those who frequent them. You can gradually drag a respectable man down by sending him into a low neighbourhood and putting him into a hovel of a house.

6825. He is forced then to break the law? Yes, to get a living.

Mr. T. F. Thompson.

3 Sept., 1886.

MONDAY, 6 SEPTEMBER, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,
T. COLLS, Esq., J.P.,

G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.,
J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.,

A. HUTCHISON, Esq.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Joseph Benjamin Olliffe, Esq., M.L.A., recalled and further examined:—

6826. Mr. Colls] Are you in favour of a grocer holding a spirit license? Not under the present conditions.

6827. Has it come to your knowledge that liquor is frequently sent home with the groceries? Yes; I can give you the names of several houses that supply liquor in quantities of less than 2 gallons; there is no penalty provided in the Act to prevent them from doing so.

6828. Have you heard of cases where the wife has taken home drink and had it charged to the husband as groceries? Yes.

6829. Are you aware that Sunday closing has led to a large sale of drink on Saturday and other nights for consumption on Sunday? I, as a publican, sell more grog on Saturday night now than I did previously.

6830. You are aware that since the new law came into force a great many clubs have been started in the city and suburbs, in which you can get drink on Sundays? Yes.

6831. Are they injurious to hotelkeepers? Yes; they increase the facilities for drinking.

6832. Is it your impression that these clubs should not be allowed to exist? Yes; but I don't know how you can do away with them.

6833. Mr. Hutchison] Should they not be licensed? It is very hard to say. Suppose you had in your house a certain amount of drink, and invited a friend to partake of some, I might very well say that you should not do so unless you had a license; on the same principle clubs are, to a certain extent, the private residences of the members, and therefore are beyond the pale of any law.

6834. Mr. Colls] There are a great many of these clubs at the present time in the city and suburbs? The prohibitory clause in the new Act has developed this species of Sunday drinking.

6835. It has been stated that some hotels have as many as five upstairs bars? I have not the slightest doubt of that.

6836. A great many of them are let to females? I believe so. On one occasion I, as president of the Licensed Victuallers' Association, made inquiries as to some of these bars. I received a communication from the police that one in particular was conducted in a most disgraceful manner; the circumstances to which I allude occurred on a Sunday night; the house was nothing more nor less than an assignation house, and is situated in George-street, not 500 miles from the "Royal Hotel." The person who held the house then is not in New South Wales to-day.

6837. Are you aware that the same kind of thing is carried on now in houses in George-street? I cannot speak from actual knowledge, although I believe it is done. I know there are many houses in town in which the bars are let off to females, and I believe the conduct there is not of the highest character.

6838. You would not be in favor of upstairs bars at all? Not unless they were under the strict supervision of the authorities.

6839. President] What do you think is the justification for upstairs bars at all? The majority of them at present are carried on for purposes contrary to the Act—for the purpose of making money by means of the improper conduct which characterises them.

6840. Under some incentives which you think wrong? Yes.

6841. If the upstairs bar is wrong in itself why should there be any at all? I think that some of them are a convenience to the people.

6843. Is it used in connection with eating? Yes, at luncheon-time. There was a similar bar in Pfahlert's.

6844. They are a convenience to the people, a very respectable class frequents them, and therefore you would not do away with them? Yes.

J. B. Olliffe,
Esq., M.P.

6 Sept., 1886.

- J. B. Olliffe, Esq., M.P.
6 Sept., 1886.
6845. Mr. Colls.] Your remarks do not apply to bars let to females? No.
6846. Would you be surprised to hear that one of these bars is let off for as much as £9 a week? No. I believe that some are let for as much as £15 a week.
6847. The same thing exists in King-street to-day? I don't know that it does now. There used to be one there.
6848. I have been told that since this Commission commenced to sit the number of these bars has increased? I am not aware of it. I have been busily engaged during the last two months, but previous to that time there was one of these bars in King-street to which I had occasion to call the attention of the police, and action was taken at once to suppress it. Previous to the last lodging of applications for licenses several bars of this description were in existence. The police told the licensees that if they did not remove them objection would be made to the renewal of their licenses, but whether or not the habit which is designated by the police a grievance has been revived since the licenses were renewed I am not in a position to say.
6849. Out of the 800 houses in the metropolitan district how many can accommodate a family from the country? There are not 100 houses in which people can get what I would term respectable accommodation. The houses are sufficiently large enough, but the owners will not make them suitable for the purpose of family hotels.
6850. Would you be surprised to hear that the Stipendiary Magistrates could not get even a bit of bread and cheese at any of the hotels at St. Leonards, or Newtown, or Balmain? I have heard so.
6851. Has it been brought under your notice that grog is sold in oyster-saloons? Yes; it is sold in many of them.
6852. You believe it to be a fact? I have been instrumental in getting many of them fined. The late Mr. Waters had, I think, a dozen prosecuted, of whom four or five were convicted.
6853. Would a beer and wine license be sufficient for those houses to make no attempt to accommodate the public? I am opposed to that kind of license.
6854. You would sooner see these houses done away with altogether? I have a tendency to assist in the suppression of disreputable houses, and I think that a beer and wine license would create a class of evil-doers.
6855. How do hotelkeepers become members of your association;—are they nominated or balloted for? They are balloted for by the members of the council.
6856. The secretary does not canvas for members? No. If an applicant is not of good repute he is objected to.
6857. If a member is prosecuted for Sunday-selling does the association render him any assistance? If he has broken the law he is not assisted, but if he is maliciously prosecuted the association does help him. A person who requires the assistance of the association to defend him against a prosecution by the police has to deposit a guinea, and should his assertion turn out to be a truthful one the money is returned to him. On the other hand, if he has broken the law and should be fined the deposit is forfeited to the association.
6858. You are of opinion that Sunday-closing has led to much more drinking than formerly? Yes; strongly.
6859. Mr. Withers.] Your experience as an hotelkeeper has been confined to your present hotel? No; I had a similar one in Newcastle previously.
6860. Yours is a family hotel? Yes.
6861. Our hotels are in excess of the requirements of the people? Yes; we have sufficient hotels and public-houses to supply our wants for the next three years.
6862. Which class of public-house do you think should be done away with—the higher or the lower? I should be very sorry to say one thing or the other.
6863. Which do you think leads the more to excessive drinking? It is impossible for me to say. I have seen as much drunkenness among the upper as I have among the lower classes of society; I have seen people, in good positions in society, commit themselves in a manner that would be degrading even to the lower classes. I have also seen the lower classes commit themselves in a very unseemly manner. Men of culture and of position are generally the greatest blackguards when they take to drink.
6864. Is that class more likely than the other to produce the outcast or chronic drunkard? It is very hard for me to answer such a question as that. I think that there are bad people in every grades of society.
6865. A gentleman has stated that the higher class public-house does more than the lower class one to develop drinking habits among the youth of the community? I certainly cannot indorse that statement from my experience.
6866. Mr. Withers.] You think the lower class houses objectionable? Most decidedly.
6867. Do you think that the system of shouting is more common among the working classes than among other classes? It is as common amongst one class as it is amongst another.
6868. Do you think that the system of shouting tends to excessive drinking? If you induce a man to drink more than he wishes you increase the consumption. I presume that your meaning is that if a man is shouted for he will drink more than he would if he was not shouted for.
6869. If a number of men go into an hotel one shouts and then another thinks that unless he shouts he may be thought mean—so that if there are twenty men twenty drinks will be consumed? Yes.
6870. Do you think that excessive drinking results from that? No doubt it does.
6871. President.] Is shouting an institution? Not to such an extent as Mr. Withers imagines.
6872. Not amongst the working-classes? Not among any class. I have noticed that particularly of late. The absence of the practice is more conspicuous in Sydney than in the country. If several country-men go into an hotel it is a usual thing for them to participate in a glass of grog from each other. In Sydney it is an exceptional thing.
6873. Mr. Colls.] Is it an understood thing in properly conducted hotels that persons worse for liquor are not to be served? Yes; such persons are a nuisance.
6874. You admit that the custom of shouting does exist, but you say not to such an extent as has been suggested? It does exist, but not to that extent.
6875. Does it tend to increase drunkenness? I admit that it will tend to a greater consumption of drink.
6876. Mr. Withers.] As a rule a bar away from the bar proper is generally in a more private apartment, is it not? Yes. The price of the liquors would make it more private. 6877.

6877. Do you think the private bars a convenience in some places to people who want to do business? They are, if conducted properly. I have mentioned two houses in which I know the convenience of the private bars is exceedingly great to the more respectable portions of the community. Nearly all private bars in good houses are a convenience to the people. As I have already said there are houses in which a business is carried on which is degrading to society. J. B. Olliffe, Esq., M.P. 6 Sept., 1886.

6878. The hotel at the corner of Pitt and King streets is in a prominent part of the city, but the space is very limited there. If I met a gentleman in the city, I suppose you would consider that a convenient place for us to go to? I know the bar you refer to to be a convenience. That bar is in the hands of the proprietor—not sublet. I have already said that I see no objection to these bars when they are under the control of the proprietor. The bars that are relet are improperly conducted according to my experience.

6879. Do you think there is any objection to those bars being presided over by females? Certainly not, as long as they are respectable persons. They are, as a rule, respectable where the bar is under the control of the landlord. The status of hotels to-day is far superior to what it was a few years back. There are not half the immoral places carried on to-day that there were a few years ago.

6880. Then you would not approve of a proprietor letting a bar to a female? I should have no objection if the place was respectably conducted.

6881. Would you think there was any danger if a woman was allowed to take the control of a part of a building and to manage it herself? It would have a tendency to evil if she had an immoral taste. It depends upon the character of the individual who becomes the lessee.

6882. Do you think that in the bars of the city the temptations to immorality are greater than in the various factories? Not by any means. I think the barmaids of to-day are a very superior class to what they were some years ago. In the factories I know there is immorality of the grossest character. I have heard boys and girls of almost tender age, when coming from those places, indulging in language of a most indecent description. A complaint was made to me by a gentleman in Liverpool-street of the conduct of some boys and girls employed in a tobacco-factory. They were about fourteen years of age and they were referring to their previous night's debauchery. This is a common thing with that class. As a rule these institutions are of a most dangerous character to the youthful portion of the population, especially to those who have to go there to obtain a livelihood.

6883. You think the two are not to be compared as regards the temptations they offer? Not at all. The barmaid of to-day is a different sort of person from the barmaid of a few years ago. No one with a respectable house will take a barmaid who has not some credentials as to character. It is a difficult thing now to obtain the position of barmaid in a respectable hotel. When a young woman gets the position she is watched, and if her conduct is not satisfactory she is discharged.

6884. President.] Is it a common thing for barmaids to help themselves to money? I believe it is. Even in that particular there is a great improvement as compared with the past. I have made it a matter of study to watch these people, and I have noticed that things have improved wonderfully. The position of barmaid seems to be sought after by a more respectable class of girls than formerly, and the proprietors of hotels are more careful as to their selection.

6885. How many barmaids do you think there are in Sydney and the suburbs? I do not know—not many.

6886. Do you think there are five hundred? No; they are being done away with.

6887. Is it a common thing for an hotel to have no barmaid? Yes.

6888. They have not gone down to the lower houses, have they? No; those houses are generally conducted by the proprietor and proprietress. In the lower houses they cannot afford to pay a superior barmaid, and they would not trust an inferior one. They mind their own businesses.

6889. Mr. Withers.] What is your opinion of the present Act as regards Sunday closing? I do not think it has been conducive to the suppression of drunkenness. It is not a perfect Act. It could be improved. But, as a whole, it is a better Act than some of the preceding ones. The last Act before this was to my mind a tyrannical one. Under that Act, if my lamp was blown out three times my house might have been closed. If I had been a lessee and chose to do the landlord an injury I could have got the house shut up altogether by committing a few paltry offences.

6890. President.] Have you any recommendation to make as to the amendment of the existing Act? I had a Bill before Parliament dealing with the subject.

6891. And does that Bill embody your ideas as to the shape any amendments of the Act should take? It does. I introduced the Bill, but withdrew it at the request of the Government.

6892. Mr. Withers.] It has been stated by a gentleman in the same business that it would be a good Act if Sunday closing could be properly carried out;—do you think that if Sunday closing were carried out we should have an improved condition of things? It is very hard for me to say. If people choose to drink, they will take the liquor home on the Saturday night, and you will have more drink consumed and more home debauchery.

6893. President.] Is this your opinion—that the more rigorous the Sunday-closing the more drink will be consumed on the Saturday? No, not on the Saturday; I say that more liquor will be sold for Sunday consumption.

6894. The more rigorous the Sunday-closing the greater will be the Sunday consumption of liquor taken home on the Saturday? Yes.

6895. Mr. Withers.] The records of the Courts show that during the first year of the new Act there was a great reduction in the number of cases brought before the Courts on Monday mornings? Yes, I am aware of that. People had not then got initiated into the way of getting liquor.

6896. Do you not think that a deal of excessive drinking is caused from the fact that nearly all the houses sell on Sundays? I will not say that nearly all sell on Sunday, but I will say that the report of the Inspector-General of Police had a considerable semblance to the truth.

6897. Then, they did not open to any extent in the first year of the Act? There was just as much drink consumed clandestinely, but the people were more careful than they are now; now they have become more hardened and indifferent as to the law and its results.

6898. President.] But the Inspector-General of Police goes upon the convictions? That still bears out my statement.

6899. You think, then, that although there were fewer convictions the same amount of drink was consumed? Perhaps I should not say to the fullest extent, because there was certainly a check for a few months;

J. B. Olliffe,
Esq., M.P.
6 Sept., 1886.

months; but after that barrier after barrier was gradually swept away. We have had convictions of publicans oftener since than we had during the first year, because they were then more careful.

6900. Mr. Withers.] People were not then so well aware of the difficulty of getting a conviction as they are now? The publican who does a Sunday trade devises some system by which he can generally escape detection.

6901. Under the present Act? Yes.

6902. There was an outcry about the detectives being sent round and that practice was discontinued? Yes.

6903. I suppose that the only way to get a conviction is for a detective to go into the houses? That is the only way, but it would be almost impossible even then, because the police are so well known. The publicans do not supply everybody on Sundays; if a stranger enters an hotel he must have some one with him with whom the publican is acquainted before he can get a drink; if there is any doubt about him certain precautions are taken.

6904. I suppose you consider it an injustice for one to sell whilst another keeps the law? Of course it is an injustice.

6905. Do you think that if the publicans were to keep their houses strictly closed on Sundays so that nobody could get anything to drink there would be such an outcry from the people that the Government would see the reasonableness of allowing the houses to be open? That is my firm conviction.

6906. Do you think that those who would get up this outcry are the sober and law-abiding classes of the community? I should be sorry to take upon myself to say that. I believe that if the publicans were to keep their houses closed the people would appeal against the Act; and I think it would have to be amended.

6907. In regard to Sunday closing? Yes.

6908. You think the majority of the people are in favour of the houses being open on Sundays? I do.

6909. Would you be in favour of increasing the licensing fee? I would not.

6910. Would you be in favour of imposing a license of £10 extra on each bar? No; I think it would be cruel.

6911. Mr. Colls.] Some hotels in Sydney have several bars—one facing one street and another facing another street;—do you think that is justifiable? I do not see anything wrong in it; they pay a very high rent, and they ought to be permitted to carry on their business as they choose as long as they do it legitimately.

6912. Mr. Hutchison.] Being of opinion that the majority are in favour of Sunday opening, would you be in favour of a plébiscite being taken on the subject? As far as I am concerned I see no objection to it.

6913. What is the average wages of barmaids? £1 a week.

6914. Are they expected to make up anything from perquisites? Their wages vary from 17s. 6d. to 25s. a week, and they have board and lodging. I should think that 25s. a week will be the average.

6915. Have they not to dress nicely? In plain clean clothes—prints and other material of an ordinary kind—not in silks or satins. A girl who dresses in costly and gaudy attire is soon discharged, because she is above her position, and there is an impression that she cannot be getting her clothes by proper means.

6916. You said that barmaids were being done away with;—what is the reason of that? I cannot give any particular reason for it; but I notice that they are not so numerous as they were. I know several houses in which men are employed instead of barmaids.

6917. You seem to have said that whatever law is enacted it will be evaded? I do not know that I have said so yet, but I say so now.

6918. Have you no power as a leading man, and one who is looked up to, to make the publicans more tractable so that they will obey the law? No, I have no idea how to proceed to bring about such a state of affairs as you would like. I do not think anyone has been more careful to avoid Sunday selling than I have been, but I have had great difficulties to contend with. If I was seen near the house persons would come up to me and beg of me to let them have a drink. For the first three months after the Act came into force I used to do this with my best friends; if they came and wanted a glass of grog I used to take them into my private apartment and give them a glass of liquor there. I have to keep away from my house altogether on Sundays. I used to keep my private door open on Sundays, and the result was that we were continually annoyed by people coming and knocking. Now we have to shut the door.

6919. You said you could produce authorities to show that Sunday closing everywhere, and particularly in Scotland, had been a failure;—I will take your authorities? I cannot tell you from memory; but an eminent man wrote on the subject some time ago condemning the system.

6920. Would you be surprised to hear that Mr. Duncan McLaren, who was Provost of Edinburgh and Member of Parliament, shows, from statistics, that in 1853 there were 650 cases of drunkenness in Edinburgh on Mondays; that in 1854 the number was reduced to 495; and that in 1855 the number was only 318? I have not seen that.

6921. President.] Did you say Sunday-closing had been a failure everywhere? No, I said any attempts at prohibition had failed. The Inspector-General of Police here has shown that our attempt at partial prohibition has failed, and I could produce other authorities.

Mr. Joseph Spora called in, sworn, and examined:—

Mr. J. Spora.
Sept., 1886.

6922. President.] You keep an hotel, I think? Yes; the "Australian Inn," at the corner of Woolloomooloo and Riley Streets.

6923. Have you been long in the business? Yes; seven years.

6924. Then you kept that hotel before the present Licensing Act came into force? No; I kept one in George-street at that time.

6925. Do you think the present Act is an improvement upon the old Licensing Act? I think it is not.

6926. Why? Before the new Act came into force there used to be less drunkenness. If two or three men get into an hotel on a Sunday, they do not have a drink and go, they insist on having a belly-full, because they cannot get any more if they leave the house.

6927. Did that not happen under the old law? No, people went in and out when they liked.

6928. That is to say that the breaking of the law was winked at? Yes.

6929. Then you say that there is more drunkenness now than there was under the old Act? It is very likely. Men come into the house for 5 minutes, drink three or four long beers, and make themselves drunk right off.

6930. How much is a long beer? Nearly a pint.
6931. What you have stated is your honest belief? It is. Men will not go out until they have had enough. I cannot get them out.
6932. But when it is past 11 on a week-day night you have to put them out, have you not? Yes; I always close at 11 o'clock.
6933. Did you do that under the old law? Yes; at 12 o'clock.
6934. Has Sunday closing been a good thing or not? I think it has not.
6935. What reasons do you give for thinking so? I believe that if we were allowed to open two or three hours on Sunday the houses could be kept closed up properly.
6936. You think that at present they are not effectually closed by law? Not by law, because you will see drunkenness on Sundays the same as on other days.
6937. Drinking goes on in all the public-houses on Sundays? There are very few who don't do business.
6938. I understand that you are willing to tell the whole truth? I have come to tell the whole truth.
6939. You may answer my question or not, as you please. Do you break the law on Sunday? I keep the law as near as I can. When I went into the house I did so with the intention of strictly obeying the law. For six months I never sold a drop of liquor on Sundays. Mr. Lenthall will tell you that my house is opposite his station. I found that my business on week-days was falling off very fast. My customers were going to other places, because they said that they would patronise houses where they could be served on Sundays.
6940. Is yours a "tied" house? No; it is my own freehold property.
6941. You could not compete with the law-breakers, so you had to become a law-breaker yourself? I could not keep my business together. All that I do is very little as I am out half the time on Sundays.
6942. Does it make much difference to you whether you sell on Sunday or not? It would not make a great difference to me if all the houses were closed on Sundays.
6943. Did it make any great difference to your business on week-days when you closed on Sundays? It made a lot of difference.
6944. Did it mean ruin? It would have meant ruin to me.
6945. How many public-houses are there within 100 yards of yours? There is one on each side.
6946. Are there six? Not within 100 yards.
6947. Within 5 minutes walk how many are there? Six or seven.
6948. You say that you were compelled to resort to Sunday-selling to protect yourself? If a friend or a neighbour comes to see me I oblige him. I do not look for the business altogether.
6949. To prevent your customers leaving you on week-days? Yes.
6950. You would not sell drink to a chance comer on Sundays? No.
6951. You would prefer not to sell on Sundays? I should be very glad to close if all the others did.
6952. Then you do not think that it is necessary to open public-houses on Sundays? It is not necessary for the publican, but it is necessary for the public. For my part I like to have Sunday to myself.
6953. But you could leave servants in charge? We have no barmaids; my wife and I look after the house.
6954. How many bars have you? One.
6955. Threepenny drinks? Yes.
6956. Do you think that it is necessary to have threepenny drinks? I suppose that the public do not care to pay more than that.
6957. What do you call a threepenny drink? A nobbler of brandy or any other spirit; a pint of beer, and so on.
6958. Is the threepenny drink different in quality or quantity from the sixpenny drink? There is no difference in quantity; there may be in quality. I have never tried sixpenny drinks; I have always sold threepenny drinks.
6959. I suppose that the class of people who go to your house are mechanics and labourers? Yes; people who will not pay 6d.
6960. Are you often asked to provide accommodation? Yes.
6961. Do you provide it? Yes.
6962. How many lodgers? Six is the most I can keep.
6963. What number of rooms have you? Fourteen altogether.
6964. Could you supply a chop at a moment's notice? No; we have no call for such things. If it were ordered before hand I could supply it.
6965. Could a traveller get a bed at your house? I have always one or two beds to spare.
6966. Do many drunken men come to your house? If any drunken man comes in I at once advise him to go home. I will not supply him; I do not care what time of the day it is.
6967. Do you think that much drunkenness is caused by bad drink—adulterated liquor, or liquor which is not sufficiently matured? I am not exactly a judge of drink. I do not know what other people sell.
6968. Are you a tectotaller? I am not. I have never been drunk in my life. Sometimes I never touch liquor for months.
6969. Do you think that it is the quantity or the quality of drink which causes the drunkenness? I should say the quantity. A man will get drunk on the best of liquor if he takes too much of it.
6970. Do you approve of the provision of the law respecting the hours of business? I think that 11 o'clock is an unhandy hour for closing. Public-houses ought to be open from 5 o'clock in the morning until midnight.
6971. Are you speaking in the interests of the working classes now? I speak in the interests of travellers and all other classes, and of the publicans themselves. In the summer-time the working-men are at work at 6 o'clock.
6972. Is not your neighbourhood infested with larrikins? I have been keeping the hotel since 1877, and the police have never had occasion to enter my doors on account of any disorder.
6973. The larrikins do not visit your house? No; because they know their marks.
6974. Mr. Withers.] Would you be in favour of a law which would make it optional with publicans whether or not they opened on Sundays? No; whatever the law is it ought to apply all round.
6975. Is not shouting a common practice? Not exactly.
6976. Does it not lead to a great deal of drunkenness? I do not think so. If a man wishes to keep his house respectable he will refuse to supply any more liquor to people who show signs of getting drunk.

- Mr. J. Spora. If a man wants to get drunk he can do so by himself as well as in company. There is more shouting on Sunday than on any other day. Perhaps people take more then because they are afraid that they might not be admitted to another house. If the places were allowed to be kept open for short periods during the day, men would walk in, take their glass of beer, and walk out again.
6977. What class of liquor produces drunkenness quickest—rum, brandy, whiskey, wine, or beer? It is difficult to say, as it all depends on the constitution of a man. He might take a gallon of beer and it would not affect him, whereas two glasses of rum would make him drunk, or it might be the other way.
6978. Do you think that there is much doctoring of drink? I have no experience of other people's business. I guarantee that what I sell is good enough for any one to drink.
6979. Have you ever suspected that any drunken man who has come to your place has been foully dealt with by any one in the trade? I have not. I have heard men say that they had not been supplied with good drink at some houses.
6980. Are there many publicans who do not trade on Sundays? Nearly every one does.
6981. They did not do so when the Act first came into operation? I think that they did just the same as they are doing now.
6982. Do you think that the publicans are as much concerned about being detected in selling on Sundays as they used to be? If a man wants to do business on Sundays he has to watch both himself and some one else.
6983. President.] Have you ever been proceeded against for Sunday selling? Once, and I was fined.
6984. How long ago? Eight or nine months ago.
6985. Mr. Withers.] Do you think that persons who take too much drink get it in high, medium, or low class houses? You see people of all classes drunk. I do not think people are at all particular; if they are inclined for a drink they go to the nearest public-house.
6986. Do you think it proper that there should be two or three bars in one house? If there is enough business for them.
6987. You advocate the opening of public-houses on Sundays? For one hour in the morning, two hours at dinner-time, and one hour in the evening. The law ought to be very severe to prevent its being broken during prohibited hours.
6988. Would you not prefer to have a day's rest like other people? There is reason in everything. People who are accustomed to have drink on week-days miss it if they cannot get it on Sundays.
6989. Suppose publicans had to obey the law for Sunday closing entirely, would it be for the benefit of all parties in the trade? I could not say that. In my native place, Genoa, the public-houses are never closed, and you do not see any drunkenness about the streets there.
6990. Do you think that it is the desire of the publicans to make money every day in the week? I suppose that every man likes to please his customers. The law provides that butchers' shops shall be closed on Sundays, but I suppose if you wanted a joint your butcher would not object to supply you with it on Sunday.
6991. Suppose the houses were strictly closed on Sundays do you think that the public would complain? I do not think they would like it.
6992. Mr. Roseby.] Do you think that drink is necessary at all? That is a matter of opinion.
6993. How many drinks have you known a man to take at your bar? Three or four glasses in an hour.
6994. Have you ever known a man to take twenty glasses in a day? No.
6995. Do you test the quality of the liquor which is supplied to you? I buy it in bond.
6996. Is there a great demand for Colonial beer among your customers? Yes, among all classes of them.
6997. Do you supply by Imperial measurement or by glass? If a man asks for a pint of beer in a pewter he gets a full pint. Some prefer it in a glass.
6998. What quantity does the glass contain? Very little less than a pint. People get whatever quantity they ask for.
6999. Do you think that it is a proper thing for a girl to be serving behind a bar? I would not have the best girl in Sydney behind my bar.
7000. Suppose you had a daughter, would you allow her to serve at the bar? Yes.
7001. If your idea as to Sunday opening were given effect to what guarantee would there be that the law would not be broken during the prohibited hours? Make the law very severe.
7002. You think that a publican ought to be employed from 5 in the morning until midnight? I think those hours would suit the publican and the public.
7003. Are many of your customers fathers of families? No doubt they are.
7004. What class of people would want drink at midnight? The people who go to theatres would like a glass of beer before going home and they cannot get it now because the theatres are not out until after 11 o'clock.
7005. Is your house near a theatre? No, but when people are returning home they like to go to a house where they are known.
7006. Have you many young men as customers? I have all sorts.
7007. Any travellers? Now and then.
7008. Did you have any last week? Two, but this week there may be none.
7009. What kind of people are they who want the houses open on Sunday? All classes.
7010. They are anxious to spend the money which they receive on Saturday? If a man wants to spend his money he can do so on Monday as well as on Sunday.
7011. Do many children come to your house for liquor for their parents? Very few.
7012. Do you ever refuse to supply liquor to a little boy or girl who comes with a jug? No.
7014. The language is not always very choice? It is not always bad. A respectable publican soon puts a stop to the use of bad language.

FRIDAY, 10 SEPTEMBER, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,
T. COLLS, Esq., J.P.,J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.,
G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Tilden James Hilder sworn and examined:—

7015. President.] What is your name, Mr. Hilder? Tilden James Hilder.
7016. You have, I think, been for some time in a responsible position in Messrs. Tooth & Co.'s employ? Mr. T. J. Hilder.
Yes. 10 Sept., 1886.
7017. Are you managing? No; my duties are in town.
7018. Will you state what your duties are—I mean what position you hold? Traveller.
7019. Are we to consider that you represent the views of Messrs. Tooth & Co.? Oh, yes.
7020. Can you tell us approximately how many houses in this city and suburbs are in the hands of brewers? That would be a very difficult question.
7021. You know that we have 830 houses in the metropolitan licensing district;—will you say, proportionately, what number of these are tied houses, and what number are free? I should think there would be a third of them tied houses.
7022. Not more than a third? I should think not; the register is nothing to go by. Of itself it would not be any guide, because there may be as many as half a dozen bills of sale on one house, simply because they are not taken off the register. They go on from one transfer to another with the same bill of sale, and half a dozen may be on the one house. There may be as many as a dozen bills of sale against one house.
7023. In general terms could you give us an idea, even approximately, of the number of houses in the hands of brewers' and spirit merchants, and the number that are free? It would take a little consideration to do so.
7024. Do you not think that a third would be too few? It is possible.
7025. Do you not think that a half would be nearer the correct number? I scarcely think it would reach a half. I must tell you one thing, that I have only a certain number of houses to call upon. We have four other travellers who have their own divisions, and therefore we can speak only of our own divisions.
7026. I am assuming that in a matter of this kind you are well informed? Well, yes, I am; but I should not think the number would possibly reach a half, from what has come under my knowledge.
7027. I suppose that Messrs. Tooth & Company having the largest interest, have the largest number of brewers' houses? It does not follow.
7028. Will you state the number of houses that are called brewers' houses which you have? I should imagine that we will have more than any other brewer. I should think that we would have rather more than any one brewer.
7029. Might you have a hundred? I should think so.
7030. The phrase "brewer's house" is capable of being misunderstood, and I think is largely misunderstood, not by the Commission here but by the public generally. Will you state as nearly as you can the relation which exists between the brewer and the licensed publican when the brewer obtains control over the house and its supplies. Of course nobody knows better than you what would take place? For instance, a buyer or the person looking for an hotel goes to a broker, and he tells the broker that he has so much money, or the broker asks how much capital he has got.—£500 or £1,000. He may say £1,000 or £1,500, according to the cost of the house he is looking for. Then the broker says: "If you can put down two-thirds I have no doubt I shall be able to obtain the other third," or, when the house is a good one, he may possibly obtain one-half.
7031. The broker being a middle-man between the purchaser and the brewer? Exactly; he transacts the whole business. All the brewer does is to find a portion of the capital whatever it may be. Of course the usual security is given, and in many cases other security.
7032. The usual security? A bill of sale on the hotel or a mortgage on any freehold property the man may possess.
7033. That is to say, in order to get the balance he gives what security he can, and that I suppose is the whole security he possesses, lock, stock, and barrel? Exactly so.
7034. Then on the approval of his securities I suppose there is some written contract entered into with the brewer? No written contract, except that he binds himself to deal with him. That is included in the bill of sale. Of course that is the inducement.
7035. In other words then the bill of sale contains a bond on the part of the publican that he will supply himself with all his liquors from the brewer? Exactly.
7036. Including beers, wines, and spirits? That is if the brewer is in both businesses. Of course that is the object of making the advance.
7037. As a rule I suppose the brewers do supply? Nearly all.
7038. At all events, Tooth & Company do? Yes.
7039. In transacting business of that kind do the brewers regard the character of the applicants as of vital importance? Well, as a rule, they do. They always like references. I am only speaking of our own people. They always like some reference—that travellers should have some knowledge of the person. If he is a perfect stranger, a man coming from some other Colony, or from England, or any other place, we like him to produce references. Invariably, if he is from the country, he brings references from the Inspectors of Police.
7040. Has there been much transferring of houses of late? Not very much of late; not so much as there was a little while back. The advances are not so easily obtainable now as they were a little while ago.
7041. Are these transfers made out in blank;—have you told us the whole transaction? I think I have.
7042. Is there no transfer made? There is a transfer form made, but we look upon that as a mere nothing; we merely take that in the event of a person absconding; the title is looked at as collateral security, but we have never acted upon any of them.
7043. Can you tell me whether Tooth & Company have ever acted upon any of them? Not one.

- Mr. T. J. Hilder.
10 Sept., 1886.
7044. Messrs. Tooth & Company have never yet put one in force? No; it is useless, because the Bench does not acknowledge them.
7045. But would the man who gives a transfer be able to refuse to give his signature to complete it? Decidedly.
7046. Would he not be much more under the control of the capitalist in that case? Not any more than if he did not sign it at all.
7047. Are we to understand then that this is a mere form? Nothing else.
7048. Then where is its value? It is of no value.
7049. Absolutely of no value? None whatever, because, unless both applicants appear before the Bench, they will not transfer a license. Even supposing they have signed the day before, unless they are there to answer to their names, the transfer is not made; and more than that, they can sign it to-day and the next day go and object to its being done. It is not binding in any way.
7050. Under the law, as carried out in practice, it requires the transferrer and the transferee to be present? Yes.
7051. Has this blank transfer, or transfer in blank, been the result of legal advice to the brewers, do you know? No.
7052. Apparently it is of no value whatever? None whatever.
7053. Is it merely an intimidation? Well, the man thinks it is more important.
7054. But if it is a farce why do people continue it? Well, I think the lawyers do it.
7055. You have been a great many years in the trade? Nearly fifty.
7056. And with Messrs. Tooth & Company all the time? All the time.
7057. I take it that there is nobody in the Colony, probably, who knows more about the drink traffic than you do? No, I do not think there is.
7058. In the city and suburbs? Yes.
7059. Has the brewers'-houses system had the effect of inflating the value of public-houses? I believe, in consequence of people being able to get advances, they have been induced to give higher prices for houses than they would have done if they had been going with their own money; that is, in some instances. There are some instances where houses have not brought more than their full value, although they have got an advance.
7060. Then the brewers' capital competes for the control of the houses;—is that not a necessary inference? Yes.
7061. And that necessarily raises the value of the good-will? Well; yes.
7062. Surely it does? Yes; it has in some instances.
7063. Then you think in some instances you would attribute the perhaps excessive value of good-wills to the fact that there is a large amount of capital competing for the command of the trade? Well; it is rather a difficult question to answer, for this reason: I have known houses where persons go in as cash buyers, the same as those who may be going in with assistance.
7064. Lately? Well; yes.
7065. Has it not been the case as a matter of fact that the value of houses has increased rapidly of late years? I think a great deal of it is due to the increase of business and the decrease of competition. Under local option the increase of hotels has been stopped, and it has caused less competition, and made houses more valuable, so we cannot attribute all this to the advances.
7066. Then the Licensing Act has created a monopoly? Decidedly.
7067. And increased the value of houses? Yes.
7068. Capital has taken advantage of that statutory increase? Yes; it has.
7069. And the enhancement of the value of good-wills has followed in consequence? I dare say it has, but not altogether. I cannot say that these high prices have gone up altogether in consequence of the advances. I think local option has had more to do with it than the advances.
7070. The result perhaps has been from a combination of causes? Exactly so; a combination of causes; that is a much more proper way of putting it.
7071. The majority of brewers' houses—are they houses of high-class, of secondary-class, or of a low-class. Understand that by low-class I do not imply anything wrong with regard to the conduct of the houses? You mean third-rate houses.
7072. Yes. Do the brewers obtain control over the high-class houses, or over the second-rate houses, or the third-rate? I do not think there is any difference in regard to advances, for they apply as much to the higher class as to the second or third class.
7073. Can you tell us, without mentioning names, any high-class houses that are in the hands of brewers? Oh, yes.
7074. Where is the largest trade in beer, in the city or in the suburbs? Oh, in the suburbs.
7075. And there, I suppose, it is a jug trade and not for consumption on the premises? Yes, during the dinner-hour for instance, the working men take their dinners in their own houses.
7076. I suppose in certain cases where there is a large demand for labour springing up rapidly a great demand for beer also springs up? Yes.
7077. And that is a pure working man's demand? Exactly. Where there is a large number of working people at work the houses have the benefit. You may go past a house twenty times and see no person in the bar, and yet they sell a large quantity of beer.
7078. Do you consider that the off-trade—the jug trade—has been affected by the closing of houses on the Sunday;—has it been increased? Oh, dear no; I do not think it has. It may have been a little in the suburbs; I do not think it has in the city. As a rule there is not much jug trade in the city since there have been so many working men's houses in the city condemned; it has driven the jug trade to the suburbs.
7079. Do you consider that the Licensing Acts at present in existence have a tendency to ameliorate the drink traffic? To increase it I think.
7080. Not to lessen it but to increase it? Yes.
7081. I will ask you why? Under the old Act, when the houses were thrown open from 1 to 3 on the Sunday for out-door purposes, people went in and got what they wanted at the bar and then went out again. There was not then nearly the amount of drunkenness there is now. People were satisfied to take what they wanted in moderation, simply because they could go in and take it as they chose. People going out for a walk for instance could drop into a house with a few friends during the forenoon or after-noon, noon, and if the publican took as much as £2 or £3 it was considered a good taking; if they took £4 it was considered large. But now, in the case of some houses, where they do a very large trade, people get inside, and fearing that they will not get inside again take more than they otherwise would.

7082. What are the takings, for you seem to measure the drunkenness by the takings? Well, they can drink a good deal without getting drunk.

7083. But what are the takings under the new Act compared with those under the old? You mean in some houses?

7084. You see the books of the publicans, do you not? No; I know only by hearsay.

7085. I thought you were entitled to overhaul every man's book? Oh, no; we have never yet done that; even a man under a bill of sale has the same liberty as a free man.

7086. Then you, as representative of your firm, have no right to inspect, and never demand an inspection of books to see what the trade is? I never do it. We take our bill at the end of the month, and get that paid, and if there is anything over then it is taken off.

7087. Then, if a man pleaded bad custom as a reason for not being able to come up with punctual payment, you do not demand an inspection of his books? Oh dear, no.

7088. Mr. Colls.] A large number of these hotels are freeholds of the brewers? Very few; we do not care for that sort of thing.

7089. It has been the case, has it not? In very few instances; I do not suppose we have now a dozen freeholds.

7090. But you had more? Not many—very few.

7091. President.] Do you think it has been the practice of many brewers to hold many houses in freehold? No; I do not think it suited them.

7092. The system of brewers' houses is a recent system? Yes, recent; only since competition—since the Castlemaine commenced.

7093. How many years is that—ten? Oh, yes, more than that. In fact before that advances were not heard of; of course there was only one brewer at that time and there was no necessity for it.

7094. I suppose, Mr. Hilder, you are not a practical brewer? No.

7095. Well, is the Commission to understand that the result of your experience of the Licensing Acts recently passed, as compared with the old tipping Act as it was called, is that drunkenness has increased under the reformed system, or what we suppose to be the reformed system;—is that your opinion? I should think the police would be the best judges of that matter.

7096. You stated a little while ago that the effect of the recent Acts was to increase drunkenness. If you wish to alter that opinion you may? I must say it has not decreased.

7097. That is to say considering the population. Having regard to the population you do not think that the effect of the new Licensing Acts has been to decrease drunkenness;—is that your view? Yes; I think the more you restrict a man the more he hankers for it. I believe there was less consumed—less drunkenness—under the old Act.

7098. Perhaps I should not ask this question of you as a traveller, but as a man who has seen so much of the drink traffic I should like to have your opinion. Do you think the mode of punishing drunkards we have now in force is an intelligent one. We fine them, and if they cannot pay the fine we send them to Darlinghurst. Is that a system you approve of? Oh, yes.

7099. You would fine a drunkard? Yes.

7100. Do you think the drunkard is a person to be reformed, or do you think he should be punished? If you could reform him it would be best.

7101. Perhaps you have not considered the subject of reformatories for drunkards? I certainly believe in reforming them.

7102. Then you believe in reformatories for drunkards rather than gaols? Oh, yes; it would have a very good effect. With regard to Sunday trading I should say that personally I am opposed to it.

7103. Personally, or are you speaking for your firm (the firm of Tooth and Co.) as opposed to Sunday selling? Yes, decidedly; they regard it as the law, and consider that the people should keep the law. I do not say that they consider that a man should not be allowed his dinner beer.

7104. That raises the question as to how he is to get his dinner beer? I think that every working man ought to be allowed his beer for dinner.

7105. Then that means a limited Sunday closing, not a wholesale Sunday closing? Yes.

7106. You think a man ought to have his dinner beer? Yes.

7107. Mr. Roseby.] Have you any knowledge, Mr. Hilder, as to the quantity of beer that is manufactured and sold in the city and suburbs? I could not possibly tell you.

7108. Of course there are, I think, nine or ten brewing establishments besides your own? I think there are seven, or eight, or nine. Some small ones have cropped up lately.

7109. Have you ever made a computation as to the quantity of beer that is consumed in the city and suburbs? No; I have not.

7110. Your firm does a large business, does it not? Yes, what is called a large business in this country, but not as compared with other Colonies, and in the mother country it would be considered a very small one, perhaps.

7111. At one time your brewery was the only one in the city? It was.

7112. Has the large competition or increase of brewers' houses very much diminished your manufacture of beer? It has increased it. The article is very much better than it used to be in olden times. The quality is much better.

7113. But, with reference to the quantity, do you manufacture as much yourself as before you had this competition? More.

7114. That would indicate that the large number of other breweries has not at all diminished—that the consumption must have grown enormously, as well as the number of breweries? Yes, but at the same time we have driven out the English beer; the Colonial beer has taken the place of the English. That is the cause of the great increase in consumption, and no doubt the article has improved in quality, in consequence of which it has driven out the English beer. At one time it was very nearly all English beer that was used.

7115. President.] Was that caused by the increase of duty? It was not.

7116. Suppose there were to be an excise on beer would that drive it out? No; the brewers would simply put an increased price on.

Mr.
T. J. Hilder.
10 Sept., 1886.

Mr.
T. J. Hilder.
10 Sept., 1886.

7117. Is the improvement in the consumption due to improved quality, or is it not perhaps due to the duty on beer? The duty has nothing to do with it.

7118. If there were an excise put on beer what would be the effect upon the consumption of Colonial beer? It would reduce the consumption very much, because people would drink spirits and English beer. If the Colonial beer had to be sold at 1d. a glass more people would drink other things.

7119. Mr. Roseby.] Of course the Colonial beer is a protected article in this Colony? No, we have to pay duty on malt, hops, and sugar.

7120. But the duty on malt, hops, and sugar cannot amount to more than 6d. or 9d. a gallon; 6d. a gallon is the duty on bottled beer, and 9d. on draft beer. But you say that you pay on malt, hops, and sugar, something like what you consider equivalent to the duty on English ale? Yes, I should think so; but what I want to impress upon you is that the effect of their putting a duty on English ale does not necessarily reduce the consumption of beer, because it is now, with the duty, cheaper than when it had no duty at all.

7121. That is what the protectionists say, that the increase of price would increase the consumption? But I am trying to explain to you that putting a duty on English beer does not necessarily improve the Colonial manufacture, because with the duty it is cheaper now than when there was no duty at all. Secondly, it cannot affect the Colonial production. If the duty were doubled on English beer it would not lessen the consumption of it, neither would it increase the consumption of the Colonial article.

7122. To what do you attribute then the decreased price of English ale, compared with what it was formerly? English ale is cheaper now with the duty than it was before the duty.

7123. To what do you attribute that? That the home brewers I suppose brew a cheaper article. They can send out a beer that suits the people better, a lighter beer, and I suppose at less cost. They send that out at much less cost.

7124. President.] Has the freight anything to do with it? I do not think so; that is about the same.

7125. Then they brew now at home more cheaply? Yes.

7126. Do you mean that the article is the same in quality? Not so strong.

7127. Not so much malt? No; they brew a lighter beer, which is better than the old strong beer.

7128. Mr. Roseby.] From what country does the principal part of our importations come? Nearly all from Scotland.

7129. Lager beers are from Germany, are they not? They only come in bottle, but they are not used to anything like the extent of English beers. Bottled beers are chiefly English, but the bulk beers are Scotch.

7130. President.] Is Bass' Scotch? No; that is English.

7131. And so is Allsopp? Yes.

7132. Tennant? We got little or no Tennant. Bass's and Foster's are now the only two English we get. There are some Scotch. Aitken's, M'Ewan's, and Tennant's are the principal Scotch ales that come out here, but not to the extent of Bass's and Foster's.

7133. Mr. Roseby.] Is there not a large amount of Colonial beer sold here with English brands? Not a hoghead.

7134. President.] Would you say not a bottle? There is no Colonial bottled ale. There is bottled porter, but not ale.

7135. Not at all? No.

7136. We have been told that large quantities of Colonial ale are bottled here under sham labels? It is not possible for it to be, for having been in houses from morning to night, if such a thing had occurred I should know it. There is any quantity of porter, but not ale.

7137. Mr. Roseby.] Have you not heard of large quantities of fictitious labels imported here? I cannot say I have.

7138. I am not wishing to insinuate that your firm would be guilty of that kind of thing? Every article that we bottle and put a label on has our name in print on it. We do not put anything in bottle which does not bear our own label, whether our own production or imported. Take whiskey, brandy, or rum, anything we bottle here has our name in print on the label and our trade-mark, so that there can be no mistake as to who bottled the article.

7139. But do you wish to tell me that you have not heard that a large quantity of Colonial beer is bottled and vended as English beer? I have not.

7140. President.] You have not heard it? No; I do not say it is not so, but it has not come under my notice.

7141. One particular manufacture appears to have been much counterfeited—Tennant's? I should doubt it, as the quality would not come anywhere near it. If you were to sell one cask of bottles you would not sell another. The article itself would condemn it.

7142. But suppose the publicans know it; suppose they say we only want the labels and our customers will buy it? It is quite a mistake.

7143. Do you know the country trade as well as you know that in the city? No. I am only speaking for the city and suburbs.

7144. Do you know enough of the ordinary consumer, supposed to be partial to bottled beer, to say whether he is likely to be taken in by Colonial beer counterfeiting Tennant in bottle? Not more than any first-class man in the city; there is no one knows more of the public trade than I do.

7145. So the working man is not to be taken in? No, not unless he is drunk.

7146. Then you discredit the report that this counterfeiting takes place? To a great extent I do; in fact so far as the Colonial bottling is concerned, I do not think anything of that kind is done here; if it were it must have come under my notice.

7147. Mr. Roseby.] You say that a large quantity of Colonial beer is not bottled for English beer? No, not for English. The public would know over the bars that it is Colonial; they pay for it as Colonial, and of course it is Colonial. A person wants for instance a glass of ale and porter; instead of having it in bulk they have it in bottle, for it opens better, and the people like it better although it is precisely the same as that in draught. All the porter we bottle has our trade-mark, and it is known on the counter; it is exposed on the counter and is kept under the eye of every consumer. They know it to be Colonial too, because of the price they pay for it. They come in for instance for a long ale and porter, and they know by the price they pay for it that it is not English; they know that it would not pay anyone to give them English for 3d.

7148. Has the consumption of this Colonial porter superseded to a large extent the English porter? In the draught porter it has. There has not been a hogshead of draught English porter come into the market for years.

T. J. Hilder.

FRIDAY, 17 SEPTEMBER, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,	J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.,
G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.,	A. HUTCHISON, Esq.,
T. COLLS, Esq., J.P.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Tilden James Hilder further examined:—

7149. President.] I think when you were here the other day we asked you some questions as to your views on local option? Not exactly my views upon it; there was something said about local option with regard to the high price of houses.

Mr.
T. J. Hilder.
17 Sept., 1886.

7150. Were you not asked any questions on the subject of local option? I think not.

7151. You know pretty well the number of licensed houses in the city and the suburbs? Yes.

7152. Do you think the number of houses in the city is in excess of the reasonable requirements of the population? No, I do not.

7153. But in wards? They are very much equalised throughout all the wards.

7154. Take Gipps Ward? I know that ward.

7155. What do you think is the number of houses in Gipps Ward? I do not think that by reducing the number of houses in any ward you necessarily reduce drinking.

7156. That is not the point just at present. But taking Gipps Ward, do not you think that having at the intersection of many streets four houses, and within, perhaps, 200 yards of those, in each direction, half-a-dozen more, is having too many? Fewer houses would answer the purpose, but the fact that they are all making a living does not make it appear that there are too many. They are all paying their way.

7157. Do they pay their way? Oh, yes.

7158. Applications for transfers are very numerous this year? The reason for that is the offer of high prices.

7159. Is it not a fact that the trade is overdone in many localities; that there are really more houses for the retail of liquor than can give the licensed victualler a decent living? If the fact of their being able to pay their way is any guide there are not.

7160. Are they not sometimes pressed to get out of the houses? No, they are not.

7161. Is it not a fact that they cannot pay the interest on sums they have borrowed to go in—that the trade is not good enough? Take my own division, for instance; I have 138 or 140 houses; I have the whole of Gipps Ward.

7162. Then you belong to Gipps Ward? I do the business of Gipps Ward; I have 138 houses.

7163. Are those the houses of the firm? No; houses I have to call upon.

7164. Not brewers' houses, merely? No; not more than a fourth are tied houses. With regard to them they do not sell out because they are pressed. We do not press any of them. As long as they are able to pay their month's account and their interest, we are satisfied to let them go on until they can pay off the rest or a portion of it. Whatever they pay off their loan, £5 or £10, as the case may be, is taken off, and the interest is reduced accordingly. We never cause people to sell off because they cannot pay off their loan. In the winter months they are not able to pay much; in the summer they are able to reduce it considerably. It is according to the amount of business done, but they are never pressed to pay off so long as they pay their month's account and the interest.

7165. It is an unusual thing, I should imagine, to see a licensed victualler in the Insolvency Court? Hardly ever such a thing occurs either in the city or the suburbs. In the country you will see many of them.

7166. Can you then give us an explanation of the number of transfers that are made; there appear to have been some 200 lodged during the present year, up to this date? I have known many instances where a person will this week buy into a house, and in a month or so another person will come and offer him £200 or £300 profit on what he gave for it.

7167. That is what I want to come at. Are these transfers the result of holders finding an opportunity for selling out at a profit, or of their wanting to get rid of the business? It is because they sell at a profit.

7168. Are you sure of that? Yes; I don't say it is so in every case, but it is in nine cases out of ten.

7169. I am asking you for an explanation of the large majority of these transfers, and you say it is because holders sell out at a profit and not because they are squeezed out? I know it is that with our customers; that almost any man can dispose of his house any day of the week.

7170. Then your opinion is that the wards of the city are not burdened with too many houses, for the wants, or what are supposed to be the reasonable wants, of the inhabitants and of wayfarers? A less number of houses would answer the purpose, no doubt, but I do not think the houses are overdone.

7171. Would you not think that fewer houses would be an advantage inasmuch as the houses would probably be of a better character? Well you will often find the smallest house the best conducted.

7172. I do not say that necessarily the houses would be very much enlarged in dimensions. I remember, for instance, a house in Pitt-street, which was not a large one, and yet I think it had the largest bar trade at the time in the city? Yes; and all George and Pitt street houses were closed on a Sunday under the old Act. They did it themselves, and for the best of reasons—they had no customers on a Sunday; it was not worth their while to open their houses between 1 and 3, simply because they had no trade or custom.

7173. We have been told by publicans—by several—that if they shut wholly on Sunday they ruin their week-day trade. You have now given us an instance of a class of houses that voluntarily close on Sunday? Not so much a class as houses in a certain position.

7174. Well, you say that George and Pitt street houses used to close on Sundays voluntarily? Yes, because they had no custom.

7175.

Mr.
T. J. Hilder.
17 Sept., 1886.

7175. Is it that those houses had a command of whatever trade they liked, and that others have not; licensed victuallers who have spoken to us of their business have said that their weekly trade would be ruined if they refused A, B, and C refreshment on a Sunday? There is a great deal of truth in that; I do not say ruined.

7176. They say ruined? Perhaps that is a little too far. Of course where people are served on a Sunday largely they naturally go on a week-day, but not to the extent that some are inclined to make out; and many a person is compelled to sell on a Sunday because his neighbour does in order to keep his weekly trade together.

7177. Mr. Withers.] Referring to the question of having a lien over the different hotels, you say that very few fall into your hands: that is you have to foreclose in very few? Very few; we scarcely ever foreclose on them.

7178. As long as they pay the interest and their monthly accounts, and I suppose as long as the premises are kept fairly up to the standard—not depreciated as to the character of the building or the trade—you give them very long terms? Almost life; as long as they continue to conduct their business.

7179. As long as the securities are not depreciated you do not interfere with them? No.

7180. I suppose many of these houses have been in your hands for very many years? Yes; in many instances. Many of them pay off their bills of sale while they are in the houses, although the bills of sale are never taken off the register. A bill of sale may be registered against a house, and yet have been paid. I know people who have five times the means they appear to have if they chose to use it, but they prefer to leave their money in the position it was in when they borrowed. A man, not long ago, bought a £3,000 house, and although he was worth at least £6,000 he borrowed £2,000 to go into it. There are many instances of that kind.

7181. I suppose there would be about three classes of hotels? Yes.

7182. What would be about the minimum or the average value? A third-class house would bring as much as £3,000.

7183. Bonus they call it? Yes; and from your imagination you would think the house would be worth nothing.

7186. But there are exceptions, I should think, where a certain class of men come along who have had a varied experience in other parts of the world, and who seeing certain houses which they consider might be better conducted, give a larger bonus than other men would? That is quite an exceptional circumstance. The buyers are led more by the brokers and the results from the house during the last twelve months. The accounts for the last twelve months are generally shown. They have their banking accounts, and their weekly takings, and everything is put before the buyer.

7187. President.] Then the trade done is the principal guide to the purchase-money? Yes.

7188. Mr. Withers.] There may be for instance the railway coming into the city. If Mr. Hunt, of the "Oxford Hotel," were to sell his hotel, he would consider that question and the circumstance of a railway station being very near? That is going on another point altogether; that is putting a prospective value on the house.

7189. Mr. Colls.] The lease is a consideration, is it not? A great consideration. If a house has a long lease it will bring a much better price. The landlords unfortunately come down on the publicans for bonuses; the lease is one of the first things they look at.

7191. We have evidence to show that the incoming tenant always gets it? It is not always the case.

7192. President.] What is the average length of the leases of houses used as public-houses; give us the maximum;—is it seven or fourteen years? Not more than four or five.

7193. Then a seven years lease is practically unknown? Oh no, there are such things. I am speaking of the general average. Some run up as long as twenty years; but they pay very dearly for that.

7194. I want to know the highest and the lowest value of good-wills. What is the highest? I have known £7,500 given for it.

7195. Have you ever known £10,000? No.

7196. I suppose there are good-wills that would be worth that? I could tell you of houses that are asking that now, and would not sell under that.

7197. Mr. Colls.] They contain valuable furniture, I suppose? I do not know.

7198. President.] The good-will would be the lease together with the license? Lease, license, furniture, and good-will.

7199. And stock at a valuation? That is it.

7200. The maximum price of good-wills of houses in the country is about £7,000? Yes; the average would be £2,000, and the highest £7,000.

7201. Mr. Withers.] I suppose the rate of interest charged by the brewers is not above the bank rate? Not so much; six and seven, and in some instances eight.

7202. If you advance pretty well up to value I suppose you make the interest pretty well up to bank rate? We never go over eight. In very many of our bills of sale we have other securities—freehold and fixed deposit receipts. In these cases we make the interest less.

7203. Do you know whether much building society scrip is used as security in that way? Very little; we sometimes pay off building society scrip to get security.

7204. Are you of opinion that many persons identified with our building societies—freeholders in our building societies, either as investors or borrowers—are connected with the publican's business? Very few; the the only people of that sort we come in contact with are people who wish to go into the business. They say, "We have only so much money, but we have a certain interest in the building society." If we find that the property is worth so much more than what they owe the building society we arrange to take over the property, and pay the building society.

Mr.
T. J. Hilder.
17 Sept., 1886.

7205. Have you any idea of the rents of respectable or medium class houses in the suburbs: for instance, places like many of the good hotels in the suburbs—what would be the rents of those buildings? Many of them are very high; too high I think. I think the landlords are rather severe on publicans. I think that as a rule they get a heavier rent from the fact of an house being an hotel than they would if it were used for any other purpose.

7206. They average £6 or £7 a week, I suppose? Many of them; if it is anything of a sort of a house.

7207. Do you think the majority of persons in the publican's business are content with six days work as other people are? A very large proportion would prefer to have six days only, if all could be alike. As it is it becomes very severe on them.

7208. Do you think that the majority of persons who consider they have to sell on Sunday in order to keep their trade during the week regard it as a hardship, or are they prepared to do it because it is profitable; it has been stated to us that many publicans who desire Sunday closing are induced to sell on account of the competition of their neighbours on a Sunday? That is true; many of them, however, will not sell whether it injures their business or not. I know many houses who would not take a three-penny bit from anyone, no matter how their neighbours sold.

7209. Then you think the majority of publicans would desire to close on Sundays? I think they would.

7210. Do you think a majority of the public desire it? No; not the working class. I may, in fact, include all classes, for all would feel it very hard if they could not get their glass of wine, beer, or grog, on a Sunday. If all the houses were totally closed I believe the general public would complain of it.

7211. President.] Do you mean by the general public respectable sober men, or do you mean —? I mean all.

7212. Mr. Withers.] The majority of all classes? Majority of all classes is going rather far; but the majority of two classes out of three, who never get the worse of drink, would not be satisfied to be debarred from getting their glass of grog on Sunday.

7213. President.] You are talking of the class of men who never get the worse of drink? Yes. Suppose persons go out for a walk, and find that they cannot 7 miles out of Sydney get a glass of grog on a Sunday—that is the class I mean.

7214. Mr. Roseby.] I suppose that the trade done in Sydney by the brewers, of which probably your firm is the largest, is very considerable—very large indeed; that the quantity of Colonial beer consumed in Sydney and its environs must be very large? It is. Of course we do the largest business.

7215. Have you any idea of the quantity brewed by the different establishments? I have no idea; it varies very much. The winter season is very much slacker than the summer season.

7216. Could you inform us how much your establishment sends out every year? Not without referring to the books. Every collector's trade is kept separately.

7217. I should think you would know how much you brewed every year? I know very little of the working of the brewery. The brewers only keep that account.

7218. But you have been very long in the business? Yes.

7219. Well, with regard to the mortality among the publicans engaged in the business—has the drink itself a deadly influence upon those engaged in it? There are instances of that kind, no doubt, but it would be the same if the persons were not in the business. I do not believe it is because the publicans take to drink. There are no doubt many publicans who take to drink, but if they were out of the business they would do the same. I do not think there is a larger proportion of drinking publicans than of any other tradesmen.

7220. Have you not known many men go into this business sober, respectable men, and then blight and shorten their lives by the drinking they engage in? I cannot say that, because I know very many publicans who never get the worse for drink.

7221. I know that, but have you not known very many enter the business sober, respectable men, and the very business they have engaged in has shortened their days? Very few; I do not know that I could enumerate a single case.

7222. President.] Then you know none? No.

7223. Mr. Roseby.] Do you know, as a matter of fact, that the insurance societies will not accept a publican as a risk? I never heard of one.

7224. Do I understand that you are in favour of the principle of local option? Well, as it now stands I think it is very good; not, mind you, that it lessens drinking. I believe it is better for the publican, better for the merchant, better for the brewers, that the increase of houses should be checked; but it does not necessarily reduce drinking. I believe that the more you scatter the houses the fewer people get together and there is less inducement to drink. If you decrease the number of houses and increase the number of people in the houses there is a greater inducement to drink.

7225. But the principle you are in favour of—is it that the people should have the right to say whether there shall be an increased number of public-houses in their neighbourhood? I am not in favour of full local option, but as it is at present.

7226. You are not in favour of giving the people a voice beyond what they have at present? No. I do not think one man should drive a nuisance from his door to that of his neighbours. Suppose all the houses in one ward were wiped out, they might go to the next ward, and the people there would have the nuisance driven out of the other ward.

7227. How many houses in the city does your establishment supply? It is very hard to say the exact number.

7228. I understood you to say that you had 136 under your charge in one ward in the city? No; in one division in the city.

7229. I thought you said one ward in the city? Gipps ward is in my division; that is what I said.

7230. You have given us your knowledge of the characteristics of public-houses. Would you be in favour of allowing young girls to serve liquor behind a public-house bar. Is that a proper place for any girl to be found? I am certainly not in favour of abolishing bar-girls altogether. Young girls would perhaps be out of place, but I think if barmaids were totally abolished some of them might lead worse lives than they do behind a bar.

Mr.
T. J. Hilder.
17 Sept., 1886.

7231. You think this a respectable business for young girls to be in? I know a great many bars that are very respectable. No doubt there are some that are not so.

7232. Mr. Hutchison.] You think that the girls might lead worse lives than behind bars? Yes.

7233. You also say that you do not think an increase of public-houses leads to excessive drinking? Yes; I think it is the other way, if anything.

7234. Do you not think that the tendency of a multiplicity of houses is to increase the temptation of the weak to drink? Not as the houses are now situated. We have already got what I may term easy access to public-houses, and an increase in the houses would not necessarily lead to an increase of drinking. It is better to have the custom spread over a larger area, because where a large number of persons are congregated together in one or two houses it induces drinking.

7235. You say you are not in favour of full local option, and would not give the people a vote in vetoing the trade. Would you give them a voice to reduce the number if they desired it in a given locality? There would be no good result from it. I do not think it would be fair to give them the power, and I think it should be left to the Bench of Magistrates to decide.

MONDAY, 13 SEPTEMBER, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,
T. COLLS, Esq., J.P.,

A. HUTCHISON, Esq.,
G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.,

J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. John Britty North called in, sworn, and examined:—

Mr.
J. B. North.
13 Sept., 1886.

7236. President.] What is your name? John Britty North.

7237. Have you any practical acquaintance with the liquor traffic? Yes, I had, years ago.

7238. To what length does your experience extend, and will you describe what it amounts to—in what way you have had experience of the traffic;—have you been a licensed victualler? No; I was in the wholesale wine and spirit business years ago.

7239. How long ago was that? A great many years ago—eighteen or nineteen years ago.

7240. Have you had any connection with the liquor traffic since that time? Yes; some fourteen years ago I was connected with it; I was travelling at the time in the country.

7241. You have been a traveller, then? Yes; for a wine and spirit business.

7242. I suppose you know substantially the object of this Commission? Yes.

7243. You understand, generally, the scope of these inquiries? Yes, I think so.

7244. I shall not ask you anything about the licensed victuallers, but, while employed in connection with the wine and spirit business, did your duties lead you in any way to notice things which you imagined should not have existed in that traffic? From conversations with people I have learned it to be so.

7245. I mean have you noticed whether there has been a custom in the trade of tampering with liquors? I know it is generally done.

7246. You know now, but did you know then as well as now that it is generally done? I have known within the last three or four years, and prior to that that it has been largely done.

7247. Do you consider that the practice obtains largely of either counterfeiting liquors or doctoring them? I do.

7248. Do you know how that is done, and where and by whom? To the best of my knowledge and belief it is done in wholesale houses in a great measure.

7249. That is to say, by the wine and spirit merchants? Yes, and the wholesale grocers, where they are combined—the intermediate distributing houses.

7250. I presume you mean by that the people who intervene between the importers and the consumers? Between the importers and the publicans—the middle men, the middle houses.

7251. Not, then, the importers of the articles? Well, only where they sell direct to country hotels.

7252. But do they not sell largely? Not all; there are a great many middle men large importers; I am not speaking of the wine and spirit merchants and wholesale grocers only.

7253. But the wholesale grocers are wholesale wine and spirit merchants; they cannot sell retail; they must sell by virtue of holding wine and spirit merchants' licenses? Yes.

7254. So practically it is the wine and spirit merchants? Yes.

7255. And you say that doctoring goes on largely among these people? Well, I say it is my opinion; I cannot say from direct experience that it is so—not from positive experience.

7256. Then is your opinion only hearsay? No; my belief is that twenty times the quantity of white spirits comes into this country that is required for practical purposes, and I believe it is there where the trouble comes.

7257. You have seen this white spirit I suppose? I have.

7258. Do you think it is a low kind of spirit, or do you think that it is fairly rectified? I think it is a low quality of German spirit.

7259. You know there are different qualities of white spirit;—do you think we get the cheapest and worst? I think a great deal of the low quality comes into the market.

7260. Of course if a white spirit is distilled from grain it contains fusel oil? It has.

7261. Do you think it is the new spirit that comes here—the spirit that has not lost its fusel oil—on which these practitioners operate? I do; from conversation with Custom-house officers and others I arrive at that conclusion.

7262. Have you ever looked at the returns of the white spirit brought here? Not personally, but I have had it in conversation from the Custom-house officers.

7263. Do you not know that the importation of white spirit has diminished of late years? I do not know that, but I am glad to hear it.

7264. You may not have heard that in consequence of some exposures made some years ago in connection with white spirits, the large importations of white spirit are now reduced, and the liquor comes here now in the ordinary forms? I am quite sure that pure spirit would not have the effect upon the people that the liquor imported as white spirit has. I say that from my own knowledge.

7265.

Mr.
J. B. North.
13 Sept., 1886.

7265. You think then that the liquor which goes into consumption, or that a large quantity of it, is pernicious, because of its composition? I do decidedly.
7266. And if it were what it pretends to be it would not be pernicious? It would not.
7267. Then you make a distinction between alcohol and alcohol, that is, alcohol in a certain condition of maturity, and immature alcohol? Precisely—I say that spirits if pure, and drunk in a pure state, would not do anything like the injury that these compounded spirits do.
7268. Do you say that of your own knowledge? I have experienced it in my own case. I will give you my experience of some years ago: I am a temperate man, and have always been so; but on one occasion I met a friend who would insist upon my taking something with him. I drank with him, taking not more than half a nobbler of brandy (the remainder I did not drink) in a certain house off Sussex-street, and the effect of it was that I did not get half way up the street before I was overpowered with giddiness; and yet I could have taken four or five nobblers of pure spirit without such a result. Then I have seen so much of the effect of impure liquor with my own men—I have never less than 100 to 150 men employed at a coal-mine at Katoomba. I have seen the effects there on strong men, who I know could drink four glasses of pure spirit.
7269. When you say pure, do you mean mature? I mean pure spirit unadulterated. I have seen my own men overcome, men who have taken one or two glasses, and yet who I am sure could take half-a-dozen of pure spirit.
7270. Is it your opinion then that these men have been overcome by taking spirit, silent spirit with the fusel oil still in combination with it, or by drinking spirit that has been adulterated? I think it has been adulterated by the mixture of this young spirit with other materials.
7271. Do you think that this spirit which has affected these men has been manufactured in the Colony wholly? Not wholly.
7272. You think the silent spirit has come from abroad? From Germany probably.
7273. Has there been any Colonial spirit mixed with it? I do not know.
7274. Any essences? Yes.
7275. Then is it your opinion that these men were poisoned with silent spirit, mixed with essences? I think it has injured their health.
7276. And you have suffered the same thing yourself? I have on one occasion.
7277. This you say happened at Katoomba? It has happened with my men at Katoomba, where I have seen it on more than one occasion.
7278. Have the men ever complained to you? Yes, but in that case it was beer, which I believe was at the time hoccussed; but I have known two or three occasions on which the men have taken spirits, and have found themselves in a state such as you could not expect a man to be in who has taken a moderate quantity.
7279. Did the men under these circumstances go to the same place again? Yes, simply to meet their companions.
7280. Do they object to being subdued in this rather sudden manner? Well, they get led to these places by companions.
7281. Do they object to this liquor? I have heard the men say that had they drunk pure spirit it would not have had the effect upon them that this has had; and these men have been steady men, all good, trustworthy, and reliable men; and I have every reason to believe that the spirits sold to them were not pure.
7282. Were the drinks threepenny drinks? I do not know whether they were threepenny or sixpenny drinks.
7283. We are told that a good many kinds of bad spirits are sold for 3d.? I think those at Katoomba were 6d. The scope of my observation has led me to conclude that a great deal of the drunkenness that prevails in the Colony comes from the want of a pure article; that is my conviction.
7284. Do you mean purity alone—that age would not be of much account? Purity and age.
7285. You mean a spirit fit to go into consumption? Yes, such as a respectable grocer or merchant would send out.
7286. To what do you attribute the sale of these inferior liquors? I think that in a great measure they are supplied to the publicans.
7287. Do you think the publican asks for them? He goes for cheap liquor; he will go to the cheapest house.
7288. Then I suppose the wine and spirit merchant can supply him at any price? That is it.
7289. You do not think the merchant thrusts these cheap liquors on him? He seeks for them in the course of competition.
7290. Would not the spirit merchant be naturally well disposed to give him pure liquors and matured liquors if he would pay for them? I should think so, decidedly. My impression is that it is the bonded warehouses where the check should be put.
7291. How so? By investigation of the qualities of liquor that come in.
7292. Can you give us an idea of how that can be done—how you could analyse the importations in the bonded warehouses? Well every hogshead or every case, or samples of every bulk quantity of cases, are sampled to ascertain the strength, and there I think the authorities could arrive at the purity of the liquor.
7293. How? By analysis. A scientific man could give you a better opinion upon that than I can. I know it is a very difficult thing to arrive at the contents, but I should imagine it could be done.
7294. At present however you have no idea as to how this could be arrived at? No; I have not studied the question.
7295. Do you think that everything should be subject to scientific examination? I do.
7296. I suppose you know that fusel oil is only the accompaniment of immature spirit? I know that.
7297. Do you not know also that the basis of all spirits made now is a spirit which necessarily contains fusel oil? I do; nearly all.
7298. How could you get rid of that without having a certificate attached to every importation, showing that it was six or seven years old, which is considered to be the age when the fusel oil is converted? I do not know.
7299. You are a practical man, Mr. North? In what way?
7300. In respect to the relations a Government ought to have in dealing with importations of this kind? I think so.

Mr.
J. B. North.
13 Sept., 1886.

7301. You would not like a grand motherly Government to say to you, with regard to your importations, that you shall not sell them? I do not know. I think it ought to be done.
7302. Suppose you have 100 casks of whisky, and you find the Government saying, "You shall not sell them; it is not old enough"? If it is the law of the land I should say it was a proper thing to do, seeing that new spirit is wholly injurious.
7303. But if you were anxious to turn it into money you would be very sorry to have it on your hands for years, or it may be turned into the harbour? No; if I knew it was the law I should take care to purchase spirit of a proper age.
7304. Do you not think the importers would be up in arms if the Government made any attempt to dictate the age at which they should sell spirits? I think that the health of the community is more to be considered than any of the importers.
7305. Do you consider that the drunkenness so much complained of in Sydney, and which exists to a far larger degree than it should, is caused rather by drinking too much spirits than by drinking bad spirits. I suppose you will agree that the drinking of a large quantity of spirits, however pure they may be, will make a man drunk? Undoubtedly, and make a man ill; but not with the same effects as immature or improper spirits. I am not at all advocating the use of spirits.
7306. We have not so interpreted you; but the matter we are now discussing is surrounded with very great difficulty? While I would not force men to be teetotallers, I would take care that they had an article that would not do them any harm, which would bring them to the point of being able to decide which course they should take—that is, either to take the article offered them or leave it alone. I am persuaded that a very large proportion of the drunkenness is from the immaturity of the liquor they get, or from its want of age, or its impurity.
7307. You see the mischief, but can you propose a remedy? I see the mischief, but have not studied the matter sufficiently to propose a remedy. The only remedy I see is this: That spirits come from a bond in England, and come to a bond here; whether the certificate can be obtained in any way from the shipper I do not know. The greater part of the spirits sold in this city and in the Colony are known brands. They come from known people—very large manufactures at home—and where they are sold at all very large quantities are sold. They become a favourite brand.
7308. And then it is counterfeited? Yes, to a large extent.
7309. You could not depend upon brands? Not wholly, as things are at present.
7310. You could identify the brand as being the genuine one? Yes; I may take Hennessy's brandy, and if I can get anything to prove that it has come from Hennessy, and has come out of bond, then I can depend that it is Hennessy's brandy.
7311. With regard to beer;—do you think that the beer manufactured in the Colony is bad in quality? A great deal of it is.
7312. And ought not to be consumed? I would not say that.
7313. But it is of an inferior quality? I think so; very much inferior to the Victorian beer.
7314. Do you think it conduces to drunkenness? I think if a higher quality were made there would be less drunkenness.
7315. Do you know what our beer is made of? No.
7316. You are guided then by quality not the mode of manufacture? Yes.
7317. With regard to what you have said as to the quality of beer, do you know it from your own experience, or the experience of the men in your employ? Of the men. I cannot drink a glass of Colonial beer but it gets into my head directly; but I can drink a bottle of Bass's.
7318. What do you ascribe that to? I do not know; it gets into some people's heads, and it gets into mine.
7319. Do you know that it is made of malt and hops, and sugar—principally sugar? I think there is something else.
7320. Do you think the brewer puts an intoxicating ingredient into it, or do you think the publican does? I do not know; it gets into it.
7321. What object would the publican have? To sell large quantities.
7322. That would be to dilute it. But what object would he have to make a man drunk? Create a thirst.
7323. But that may be done by salt? Yes.
7324. What object would he have in making it heady? I do not know; but it is there.
7325. Do you think the brewer does it? I cannot tell.
7326. Or do you think it arises from the composition of the beer? The fact is there, but how it occurs I do not know.
7327. Do you think that it ferments in the stomach, and that the fumes rise to the head in consequence of the quantity of sugar? It may be so in a very great measure.
7328. I suppose you have heard that some of those who drink honey beer are constantly seized with giddiness? Yes, I know that at home.
7329. Mr. Colls.] Have you been long in the Colony? Thirty years.
7330. Did you ever represent any spirit firm in Sydney? Yes.
7331. What firm might that be? I think it is hardly fair to ask me that, as I have given opinions about wholesale spirits. I have represented three or four firms. I have travelled for them.
7332. Are you aware that a large quantity of brandy and whisky is bottled in this Colony? I am.
7333. And labelled? I believe so.
7334. And capsuled? I do not know it as a fact; but I believe it to be the case, undoubtedly.
7335. Are you in favour of spirit merchants selling groceries, keeping grocers' stores? Yes, I think it a good thing. The wholesale grocer and wine and spirit merchant does a legitimate business. The trade of the Colony is hardly large enough to keep one or the other by himself.
7336. Has it ever come under your knowledge that a small quantity of ale or beer goes home as groceries? I believe it to be so, but I would not like to say so as a fact. It is generally reported.
7337. Do you think there is a great deal of bad spirits in the city at the present time. Do you think it is worse in that respect at the present time than a few years ago? Well I would not like to say it is worse. It has always been bad. As a rule the quality of the spirits here has not been equal to what it is in England. I know that from inquiries I have made.
7338. You have travelled a great deal through the country? A great deal.

Mr.
J. B. North.
18 Sept., 1886.

7339. How have you found the hotels generally in the country? I am sorry to say not so good as they should be—a long way short of it. The system of nobblerising and treating men is very bad.
7340. Have you found the spirits bad in the country? Worse in the country.
7341. Are you in favour of closing hotels on Sundays? I am in favour of having them quite closed. There is no excuse for a person getting drunk on the Sunday.
7342. Has it come to your knowledge that quantities of spirits and other liquors are taken home now to families? Yes; but I have no objection to that. If persons take liquor home on Saturday night I think the wife will take care that the husband does not consume too much. I would go so far as to encourage the sale of grog by the storekeepers and grocers, because the people would take it home, and they would purchase special brands. Then if you protected these brands in the bonds the storekeeper would have certain brands for sale and the consumer would know what he purchased.
7343. President.] You look upon the diffusion of spirits as the summum bonum? I do. I think it would further the ends, and the desire of the teetotallers, to a very great extent. We should have people more sober than they are now.
7344. Mr. Colls.] Have you ever heard of wives taking drink home, and having it charged as groceries? I have heard so. I think it is a good thing to take it home. I believe it has been done, but only to a limited extent.
7345. Are you aware that there are a large number of small clubs which have started in the city since the Sunday closing? I am not aware of it.
7346. Would you be in favour of such a thing, of private clubs, where you pay so much to become a member, and where you can go at any hour on the Sunday and get what drink you want? I would be totally opposed to it.
7347. Have you known them in the city? I am not in the city now. I am at Katoomba.
7348. I suppose the men in your employ are more beer-drinkers than anything else? Yes; but they take what they call grog as well.
7349. I suppose it would be impossible to make these men take water instead of beer? Oh yes, every man must act according to his own opinion and his own wishes.
7350. Mr. Withers.] One of the objects of this inquiry is excessive drinking and its cause. Do you think that excessive drinking is indulged in by the upper and working classes? Yes.
7351. With which class do you think excessive drinking has become more habitual or perceptible? It is more perceptible in the working classes. And very much of it originated from a system which has crept into this Colony, and which is a very bad one. I mean men treating one another or "nobblizing," or, as it is called here, "shouting." That is a system which is very conducive to drunkenness.
7352. How is that shouting usually carried out? Eight or nine men go into a public-house and one calls for glasses all round, and then each shouts for the others in his turn.
7353. Do you think that applies to the upper classes—professional men, lawyers, &c.? It does to a very great extent, but it applies to all classes. It is one of the very great evils that exist in the community.
7354. Do you think it applies to professional men and persons calling themselves gentlemen in other spheres of life? I do. I believe shouting leads to drink; that is, men treating each other.
7355. Are you able to suggest anything that would prevent that? I saw a system in operation in Rockhampton that might effect a perfect cure. I was there on one occasion when an anti shouting association was formed. Each man when he went into a public-house, put his 6 pence or shilling on the counter, to pay for what he drank, and it was agreed that no man should shout for another. No doubt that lessened the amount of drink consumed.
7356. I suppose the association saw that the system of shouting was causing great injury? Yes, and they determined to break it down. It required a great deal of courage, but a number of gentlemen decided that they would do it and they carried it out.
7357. Do you know whether it is carried out now? I do not. I have not been there for years.
7358. Then you think that system a serious evil? Yes, it leads most men into drink.
7359. And you think that excessive drinking is more perceptible in the working classes? Yes, excessive drinking.
7360. Have you any idea of the number of public-houses in the city and suburbs? No.
7361. Do you think that 500 would be in excess of the number required? I do not know; but in the country, where my experience lies, there are too many, and they are too free in licensing others. I think there are three in the town of Katoomba, and they are talking about opening another. In the town and district of Katoomba there are not more than 500 souls, and we are determined to oppose it.
7362. Would another hotel like Goyder's get a reasonable support? I think so, and it would do no harm. There were two public-houses besides Goyder's, and that is ample for the town. Now they are talking about opening another, and some of us have decided that whenever it is attempted we shall do our utmost to oppose it, simply on the ground that it is not wanted. When I have travelled in the country I have always seen too many public-houses. There would be no objection to half a dozen houses like Goyder's; but it was the places opened simply for the purposes of drinking and shouting to which there was a great objection, and there was no pretence that they were a benefit to the public. I have travelled over the country a great deal, and from what I have seen I am convinced that these small houses have always caused a great deal of injury. There are over 800 public-houses in the city and suburbs. Do you consider that sufficient? I should say that there was ample accommodation, in fact a great deal more than is necessary. My idea is that local option should be extended to the fullest extent to enable the residents to decide the number of public-houses required.
7363. I imagine that your opinion is that the small houses simply for drinking purposes are objectionable? Undoubtedly.
7364. It has been said that the more aristocratic hotels are more objectionable, and that the confirmed drunkards are initiated there, and graduate to other places? I think those hotels show very few scenes of drunkenness. If men drink to excess they are turned out.
7365. What is the lowest age of the boys you employ? The lowest age of the boys I employ in the mine is 14, but I am not quite sure.
7366. Do you think that lads of that age should be supplied with drink? No. I never saw it. If I did I should not allow it. I do not think that lads under 18 or 19 should be allowed to take spirits.
7367. From your experience of the miners in your district, what would you say as to their drinking habits?
There

Mr. J. B. North. There is a good deal of intemperance. The love of society draws them to the public-house. If they had a School of Arts, where they would be away from evil influences, they would not be so bad. They have no home. They have a rough life in the bush, and they want society. The result is that they go to the public-house, and could not go there without nobblerising. My idea is to encourage Schools of Art and other forms of entertainment as counteracting influences.

18 Sept., 1886.

7368. Do you think the present hours of closing quite late enough? Quite.

7369. You have some recollection of the condition of things under the old Act? I have.

7370. Do you think the present Act an improvement? I think it is a decided improvement. I have seen a wonderful improvement.

7371. You must have formed an opinion with regard to how the city and the Colony generally compares as to the drinking customs of our people with other countries. What is your opinion? My opinion, formed in travelling through Victoria 5 or 6 years ago, was that there is a great deal less drunkenness visible there than here; but that was only during a visit of three or four weeks, in passing through the country.

7372. Allowing for the increase of population, do you think our people are more drunken now than five or six years ago? No; I think there is much more sobriety now than there used to be. It has now become a disgrace to give way. It was not so at one time.

7373. Is there more than one bar in connection with the hotels in the country? Yes, I have seen them; I do not know that there are 6d. and 3d. bars. The two bars were more for the purpose of keeping the lodgers separate from the common customers.

7374. There has been a good deal of inquiry as to the advisability of employing females in public-houses;—what is your opinion? I am under the impression that no female should be allowed behind a bar, not even the wife of the publican. I think it is a source of great temptation.

7375. Do you think the temptation they are subjected to there is greater than in factories? Much more. And they hear language which they should not hear, and there is a levity both with the customer and server that should not be allowed.

7376. Have you had much opportunity of judging of the condition of things in factories where young girls are employed? To no very great extent. I have only seen the clothing factories here.

7377. Then you think that females should be prevented from obtaining a living in a public-house? Yes, in the bar of a public-house. I think the Act proposed in Melbourne would have been a good one.

7378. Mr. Roseby.] I understood you to say that the health and well-being of communities deserve more consideration than the profits of the publican or spirit merchant? Unquestionably.

7379. And you think that this drink traffic should be well under the control of the people themselves; that is to say, that you believe in the principle of local option? Very greatly.

7380. And you would extend that principle to all classes of the community? Yes, I would give all the franchise in this matter.

7381. Would you extend it to women also? The only difficulty is that women have no voice in other legislation, but I think they should have a voice in this, if it could be brought in.

7382. I think you have also expressed a belief in the principle of Sunday closing? I have, and I would make it very strict.

7383. You also stated that you considered that young people should not be supplied with liquor? Yes, any under eighteen years of age.

7384. Would you allow publicans to supply children with drink to take to their parents? I would not.

7385. You spoke of commodious hotels. Is it not possible to have such places without drinking bars at all: I mean temperance hotels? Certainly, I think it would be a very good thing.

7386. People would enjoy more quiet and comfort than where drinking was carried on? Undoubtedly; but experience has proved, so far, that the promoters have not been able to make them pay.

7387. Have you read anything in regard to the condition of things in America and Canada and the United Kingdom where drink is prohibited in certain places, and where they have large hotels with every accommodation but where no drink is sold? I am aware of it and it would be a very good thing if we had them here.

7388. Would it not be better to close the public-houses on election days? I think it would be a very good thing, and I think a great many elections have been gained by open public-houses. I have seen it myself repeatedly.

7389. And you believe there are far too many drinking shops and that some means ought to be devised to lessen the number very materially? Yes; and I believe that local option should affect not only the opening of new public-houses but should limit the number in each district. I know there would be a good deal of difficulty in regard to vested interests but I think the power is a good one.

7390. You think that these public-houses should be subordinated to the health and happiness of the community? Yes.

7391. In view of that would you close public-houses earlier on Saturdays. In some portions of America and Canada the law is that they should close at 7 o'clock. Would you favour that? I do not give that as my opinion, but if it were done here I could see the advantage of it.

7392. Mr. Hutchison.] You say that you knew of a large amount of doctoring being done in wine-shops. Do you really know that? I do not think I said I knew it from personal knowledge, but that I had heard repeatedly of it. I have heard it so frequently that it has now become impressed upon my mind. The opinion is very strong that such is the case, but it is only a belief, and I cannot give you positive information.

7393. If that be the case, your proposed remedy of having drink examined in bond would have no effect? I would put a very heavy duty on all material which can be converted into this adulterated stuff, and spirits of wine, and would not allow it to be imported, except as methylated spirit.

7394. President.] Do you think spirits of wine enter into the composition of these drinks? I believe so. Mind I only go by hearsay.

7395. Mr. Colls.] You are aware that spirits of wine are used to a large extent for killing essential oils? I know that; I know of course that a great deal of it is used.

7396. President.] Do you believe spirits of wine are used for purposes of adulteration? From information I have received at different times I have a conviction that they are, although I have no positive knowledge.

7397. Then you would prohibit the importation of white spirit and spirits of wine? Yes; except the quantity required for medical purposes, which could be easily ascertained.

7398. Notwithstanding your great desire to give people pure drink you still believe that pure drink will make people drunk? Yes, if they drink too much. But I say that purity is of vital consequence in these drinks.

Mr.
J. B. North.
13 Sept., 1886.

7399. Is your notion of local option confined to an expression of opinion as to the number of houses that should be allowed in any given area, or would you allow voters to say whether or not they would have any at all? I would allow them to say whether they would have any at all or only a certain number.

7400. And in the event of the people exercising the vote in either of these cases would you be prepared to give compensation to the owners of the houses? I think fair and equitable compensation must be given. You could not turn a man out from a living without giving him something. He has paid for the good-will of his business and it would not be fair to turn him out into the street with nothing.

7401. Do you think he has any right beyond an annual right to his license? Well, I think he has. He has formed a connection just as a man would who had established a grocery business in town. If a man is turned out of a public-house he is entitled to compensation in some form.

7402. Do you think he is like an auctioneer or pawnbroker whose licenses are annual? I look upon an auctioneer's license as a perpetual kind of thing which he can retain as long as he conducts himself properly.

7403. Then you do not think that the term of the license to the licensed victualler limits his right to the duration of a year? No, I think it would be very unfair to cut him off utterly unless ample time—say five years—was given him. If you do not give him compensation you must give him ample notice that he has to close, and that being done it would not be fair to grant a license to others.

7404. Do you think that if he had five years' notice he would not be likely to dispose of as much liquor as he could in that time? I think he would always do that as a matter of self-interest.

William Self called in, sworn, and examined:—

7405. President.] You are a licensed victualler? Yes. I keep the "Star Hotel," Bourke-street, Woolloomooloo.

Mr. W. Self.
13 Sept., 1886.

7406. Have you kept it long? About four years.

7407. Have you had a public-house before? Yes, for twenty years. I went into business I think in 1862.

7408. Have you been in Sydney all that time? No, in the country, first at Merredoo, on the Maroo. I kept a public-house at Two-mile Flat, and afterwards one at Gulgong, and I was there from about 1870 until about four years ago.

7409. Your first experience was on a diggings' township? I had had experience in Sydney before.

7410. Has your house a larger accommodation than that prescribed by the Act? I think there is one room more.

7411. I suppose you do not give any accommodation to the wayfaring public? Very little there. I have a few respectable boarders but I do not give any accommodation to the general public.

7412. Have you had any trouble while you have been at the "Star"? Yes, I was fined three years and five months ago.

7413. May I ask what that was for? For letting a friend of mine have a bottle of beer on Sunday.

7414. Did you appeal? No; I was guilty and so did not appeal.

7415. Have you cause of complaint against the existing Act? I have.

7416. Will you tell us what your objections consist of? First that it is a law that is not respected by anybody. It may be respected by a few but it is tyrannical to work under. I feel it as much as a lot more people. I am well known in the country and if a number of friends from the country come to see me on Sunday I am not allowed to entertain them. I consider that the law is bad that does not allow me to entertain these people after not seeing them for a long time. And if I give one person a glass of grog on Sunday I am punished just the same as if I had served 100. And people will come and take liquor away on Saturday night and drink it that night. If the Act allowed them to get a little on Sunday I do not think they would consume so much at home. In my experience I have known parties take a couple of gallons of beer home the last thing on Saturday night and in the morning they had not any left and wanted some more.

7417. I suppose you think that some regulation is permissible in the drink traffic—you would not have free trade? Well; I do not know, if it was free trade in the liquor law, that it would be as bad as it is at the present time.

7418. Do you consider that the law has been beneficial? I believe that there is more drink consumed under the present Act than there was before. That is from my own experience. The only thing I can go back to is my experience in the country.

7419. Being a native, I presume you are a very temperate man yourself? I drink a little. I have been the worse for drink at times, but not often. I am a moderate drinker.

7420. I suppose your business is not to make a man as drunk as you can? I never serve a drunken man. When a person appears to be drinking too much I send him home. I say that nobody respects this law. It interferes with the liberty of the general public too much.

7421. Do you think it interferes with the liberty of the public on Sunday? I do. Suppose I live a little way out of town, and I want a drink, I should have an opportunity of getting a drink when I come to Sydney. People could not go to private houses and ask for a glass of water.

7422. In the matter of the business days of the week, do you think the law is tyrannical there? Well; I think if the public-houses were allowed to open half-an-hour sooner it would be better. Then, in the evening, when I have country people stopping at my place who are away at the theatre, I have to keep my place open and the lights burning in order to receive them, and I can do nothing in the way of trade.

7423. Do you think much drunkenness is caused by the character of the drinks supplied? Yes, in a great many instances.

7424. Whose fault is that? I do not know whether it is the publican or the importer. There is a good class of liquor and a bad class.

7425. Do you think the quality of the liquor is affected by the brewers' houses? I should not like to say anything about that because I do not know. I know I have had at several houses very bad liquor.

7426. Were they brewers' houses? I cannot tell you. I got such liquor in one house that I went back and

- Mr. W. Self. and gave the publican a good reprimand, and if I could have got the bottle I should have given it to the inspector.
- 13 Sept., 1886. 7427. When an inspector goes to get samples do you think he gets an average sample? I think if he takes it from the shelves he must get a fair sample because the publican does not know when the inspector is coming.
7428. It would be impossible to hoodwink him? Yes; if he is up to his business.
7429. And you think he can rely upon what he gets as a fair sample of what is supplied in the town and suburbs? Well, I should think so.
7430. Do you think much doctored spirit is sold and drunk? Well, I cannot tell you whether it is doctored, or whether the spirit sold contains a great deal of fusel oil. I always buy the best of liquors myself and I always deal with one firm. I keep one tap, but if a person asks for "three star" I give it to him and charge 6d. I serve all classes. I buy brandy at 24s. to 25s. per gallon, and that ought to be good brandy, and I mix it with water and adulterate it to a sufficient standard. That is what I call adulteration to a certain extent.
7431. You said that everybody despised the law. Do you despise it to the extent of selling on Sundays? I did violate it and was punished.
7432. Do you violate it habitually? I do not desire to answer that question.
7433. I understood that you were one of those gentlemen who expressed a willingness to tell the Commission all their doings even to the extent that you thought so little of the law that you would violate it? Well, I did violate it, but another thing I may say is that houses are changing hands at such a rapid rate that it was almost impossible to keep them respectable, inasmuch as many are owned by brewers and wine and spirit merchants, and other persons who had liens upon them for money lent; and these persons, finding it impossible to exist under the present law, evade it and sell at prohibited hours, while the man who does not attempt to do so loses not only his Sunday trade, but his weekly trade as well, and the house naturally goes to the wall. If men worthy of holding a public-house are fined, if they go out of business they cannot get into another house. A great number of houses are getting into the hands of people who do not respect anything.
7434. Do you think that the Sunday-closing law has a deteriorating effect; that is to say, does it degrade the house? I think so.
7435. In other words it deteriorates the trade? I could not say whether it does or not. I would not like to say that.
7436. You appear to think that it creates a number of violators of the law? It does, and it is almost impossible to avoid it.
7437. Suppose an hour or two hours were given to the publican on Sundays would the number of persons who violate Sunday be as great? I could not say.
7438. But would their desire to get liquor on Sunday be satisfied by opening an hour or two on Sunday? I think it would. I am in favour of opening three times a day. That is the old law and the law that they have in England. I believe it would do away with a great deal of intemperance. Now persons go into a public-house on Sunday, and instead of being content with one glass they will not walk out until they have had two or three.
7439. Do they shout much in the city and suburbs? Yes, it is carried on where there are three or four friends together. They do not shout for strangers, except at odd times.
7440. You appear to think that some very bad spirit is imported into this country? It is very bad when it comes here, more especially in whiskeys.
7441. That is a general drink? Yes.
7442. People do not here take so much gin as they do in England? Not so much.
7443. Nor brandy? Well brandy is gone out of fashion.
7444. And rum? Yes, rum is a favourite drink. Rum, beer, and whiskey.
7445. What do you think of the number of public-houses—do you not think there are too many? Yes, in some places. I think 800 is too many. There are too many in my locality.
7446. The residents would be satisfied with fewer houses in your locality? Yes, there may be two or three houses too many.
7447. You would be against low class public-houses or drinking shops? Yes, I believe every man should be made to keep his house respectable and to keep it clear of rogues and vagabonds and women of bad fame. You can of course serve them and let them go, but not keep them about, making the house a place of continual resort. That is done in my locality and I have had to complain of certain houses harboring these people. I should be for very severe punishment to a publican who served a man who was drunk, and I do not think he should be allowed his license.
7448. Mr. Colls.] Have you lost much of your weekly trade through keeping closed on Sunday? When I first came I closed for three or four Sundays, and then I was almost entirely crippled. Respectable men called at my house—men not given to intemperance but who liked their glass, and I found that I was compelled to open Sundays or go out of it, and when a man gives a lot of money for a place he cannot afford to give it up.
7449. Have you known any Colonial bottled beer being sold? Yes, I have sold some myself, but very little. It was labelled.
7450. Have you any clubs down in your part of the city? No.
7451. Mr. Withers.] With regard to Sunday closing, it appears that during the few Sundays upon which you kept your house closed you considered that everybody else was doing the same? I knew they were not.
7452. I suppose you were disappointed when you found it was against your interest to keep closed, and that these people were not obeying the law like yourself? Yes.
7453. It became the law to close public-houses on Sundays, and you conformed to the law? Yes.
7454. And you considered that everybody else had a right to do the same? Yes.
7455. And you think they did very wrong not to do so, and they have deprived you of the opportunity of closing on Sunday? Yes, a number of them had been fined, and it would have been far better if they had obeyed the law.
7456. I suppose publicans would like their day's rest? Of course they would, but it is not the wish of the general body of the people, and there would soon be an outcry from the general public.
7457. There are people who take a glass of wine or ale occasionally. Do you believe they would like to see them open on Sunday? There are thousands that would. I believe that out of every hundred people

- people there are fifty or more, taking the average of all classes right through, that would like the houses open. I am quite certain that there would be more than half.
7458. Do you think the Government of the country should pander to these people, and make a man keep his hotel open if he wishes to close? It should be optional whether a publican kept his house open or not.
7459. Do you think it would be wise to make it optional on the part of the publican to close or open on Sunday? I think it would.
7460. Do you mean to say that 800 publicans in the city and suburbs set the law at defiance. We know the police wink at it? I do not think they do. The difficulty is, that the law is not stringent enough to bring about convictions. I see the police every Sunday running from one place to another to get convictions.
7461. Do you not think that all the injury to the public is done by the publican? No; I do not think so; there are some no doubt, but they want wiping out. There may be some places that the police wink at, but they never wink at me.
7462. Then you think that all sections of the community desire that public-houses should be opened two or three times on Sunday? I believe a majority of all sections of the community. I am not speaking now as a publican but as a citizen. I should not like to be tied hand and foot by a tyrannical law like this. I like my glass of whiskey or wine, and if I go into a public-house on Sunday I do not like to be followed by a policeman.
7463. You say that you desire personally to have your Sundays quiet and away from your business? Yes; if everybody else was agreed; but the public would not have it, and I live by the public.
7464. You think that the business of the ordinary days of the week would be enough? Well, I should be content with it.
7465. And do not you think that others who were not law abiding should be forced to close? Well, I believe a man should be allowed to have his glass of drink on Sunday if he wants it. I do not think that because a man is poor and cannot afford to join a club or keep a stock of liquor at home, the law should tyrannise over him.
7466. Do you know that the numbers of these people who were fined and degraded on Monday morning under the old Act, for drunkenness, was in excess of what is the case now, owing to the facilities which then existed for getting drink on Sunday? I am not aware of that.
7467. Of course as this is a public business the public have a right to have a say in it? Yes.
7468. You think it an injustice that the Government should dictate the terms of selling liquor? I do not say that the Government should not dictate the terms, but that they should dictate a fair and equitable law for one man as well as another.
7469. Do you think the local option vote is arbitrary? Yes, unless two-thirds of the people voted.
7470. Why should two-thirds vote? Because I do not think that a minority should overpower the majority; and besides, there was only one party that took an interest in local option. There is not one-twentieth part of the residents who voted for it. In its present shape it was harmless, as it only prevents the accumulation of houses where they are not wanted. On the other hand, full local option, without compensation would be a robbery.
7471. You are in favour of local option with compensation? Yes; but I do not know how you are going to compensate the publican, or the owner of the property.
7472. Mr. Roseby.] Do you not think there are far too many public-houses at present? In some localities there are, but in others there are not.
7473. There are between 800 and 900 in the city and suburbs. Do you not think we could do with fewer? It would not do to have too few.
7474. Have you known many families in your experience who have been ruined through excessive drinking? I have.
7475. And many a man who has gone to destruction through excessive drinking? I have.
7476. Do you not think the health and happiness of the people ought to be the first consideration of the Government? The health of the people, and happiness to a great extent.
7477. If there is anything that injures the people the Government ought to suppress it? Well, of course; if there is anything that injures the people generally; but I do not think where a majority of the people were not injured the Government should trample upon them.
7478. You do not think drink is an injury to the people? Where it is taken in excess it is.
7479. Do I understand you to say that you do not think the people themselves ought to have a voice in controlling this traffic. You do not believe in the principle of local option? No; I do not without full compensation. I do not believe it would be of any good.
7480. Would you favour the opening of public-houses generally on Sunday? Yes.
7481. Are you a member of the association that petitioned the Government to authorize opening on Sunday? Yes; from 8 till 10 in the morning, 1 until 3 in the afternoon, and from 8 until 10 o'clock at night. And I think it would do away with a great deal of drunkenness, because if these hours were strictly adhered to there would not be so much liquor consumed.
7482. The law says that the houses shall be closed altogether on Sunday, and it is generally disobeyed? I do not believe there are twenty publicans in the whole city that obey it strictly.
7483. And if the houses were open three times on Sunday, what guarantee is there that they would not be open all day? The law could be made more strict, and the public and the publican would have no excuse then.
7484. Do you really think that drink is a benefit to the community? I do not think it is any harm if the public do not take too much.
7485. Do you think it causes crime? Well, to a great extent it may cause crime in this way: that I have known men who had not the courage to go and commit a crime without a glass of liquor, and thus it was put down to the drink.
7486. Has it not caused misery in families? It has in some cases.
7487. Has any wife come to you and implored you not to supply her husband with drink? Yes, in about a dozen cases. I have known numbers of people go to destruction through drink.
7488. Are young people given to drink in this Colony? There are a good few but not a majority of them.
7489. But do you think that more young people are giving way to drink lately than formerly? Yes.
7490. I suppose you usually serve at the bar yourself? Yes, generally.
7491. Do you think it wise to allow girls of seventeen or eighteen to serve behind bars? I think any girl

Mr. W. Self.

13 Sept., 1886.

- Mr. W. Self, girl of seventeen or eighteen quite able to look after herself. I know some girls who are very good behind bars, and others who are giddy and flighty.
- 13 Sept., 1886. 7492. Have you any daughters? Yes.
7493. And do you allow them to serve at the bar? Yes; I cannot help it.
7494. Mr. Hutchison.] You say you do not respect the law? No, because it infringes upon my liberty.
7495. You believe that if the law was uniformly observed it would be a good thing and you would be able to swim? I do.
7496. Why do you not try to get the trade to agree to a uniform observance of the law, and see whether the public would rise up in arms against it? You cannot get everybody to join you in your way of thinking. It would be better if they combined to obey the law, or that the Government should frame a law which would give the publicans and the public no excuse to break it.
7497. Would you be willing to allow Sunday closing to go to the vote of the entire country? I would.
7498. And if the majority said that they should be closed you would punish those who opened? I would. Wherever there was a majority I think it should rule.

FRIDAY, 17 SEPTEMBER, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,
T. COLLS, Esq., J.P.,

A. HUTCHISON, Esq.,
G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.,

J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. James Hunt called in, sworn, and examined:—

- Mr. J. Hunt. 7499. President.] You are a publican? Yes.
7500. And keep the "Oxford Hotel"? Yes.
- 17 Sept., 1886. 7501. What is your experience as a hotel proprietor? I have had twelve years' experience, wholly in Sydney.
7502. Is it limited to the "Oxford Hotel"? No; I was for six years with Mr. Charles Roberts, Market and George streets.
7503. A portion of the time, therefore, was when the old Act was in force? Yes.
7504. Will you give us your opinion about the results of the new licensing laws compared with the old laws; first of all, has it been to the advantage of the appearance of the streets this closing earlier on the ordinary days of the week and on Sundays? Decidedly.
7505. Has the present law your sympathy in that respect? Yes.
7506. Are you in favour of Sunday closing? I think myself that working men require a drink on Sunday, and if it was allowed it would tend to a great deal less being sold than is the case at the present time.
7507. By "working men," whom do you mean? The labouring classes.
7508. Not, for example, clerks in banks, and Government and other offices? No; they nearly all belong to clubs and can get all they want.
7509. Then it is the labouring classes not belonging to clubs that require reasonable refreshment on Sunday? Yes.
7510. And therefore you would open the houses on Sunday? For a short time. I had the "International" for several years, and would never open on Sunday because I thought it would be better for me and my servants that we should have Sunday to ourselves, and I never took 6d. on Sundays for three years; as it is now it is impossible to do so, because I have a family house and am obliged to serve my lodgers and the friends they may bring in.
7511. Your house is exceptionally situated, is it not, and your experience may not apply to many houses? There are only a few so circumstanced.
7512. What might be true of your hotel might not be true of the houses generally? There is no doubt about that.
7513. You are aware, I presume, that a very large number of houses in Sydney and the suburbs open on Sundays? No, I am not; I know there are only a few.
7514. You have not read the Inspector-General's report? I saw that he mentioned that several hundred houses opened.
7515. He says that about three-fourths opened? I should not think so from what I have seen.
7516. Then what hours would you consider reasonable to open on Sunday? I think we ought to have the same Act as they have in England—two hours in the morning, two at midday, and I think from 7 to 10 o'clock at night.
7517. You are aware that in England there is a strong movement even to abolish that? Yes.
7518. And in Wales and Scotland? Scotland is worse than it ever was before.
7519. Do you mean that the closing there is a farce? Decidedly; a perfect farce. In towns like Glasgow you can go 3 miles and get as much drink as you like.
7520. Then is it your deliberate opinion that in Scotland the effect of the Act has only been to send a man who wants a drink 2 or 3 miles out of town to get it? Yes.
7521. And he goes? Yes?
7522. And that drunkenness is not reduced? Yes.
7523. How long is it since you were in Scotland? Fourteen years.
7524. What is your opinion of the hours of closing? I think 11 o'clock is a very good hour for the majority of houses, but I have a family house and it interferes with it very much. I think there ought to be a separate license for a family house and they should be asked to pay extra. We are compelled to keep open late to let our lodgers in from the theatres. They very often bring friends in and what can we do? If they stop up all night I cannot prevent them. I think the 11 o'clock closing has, however, done a great deal of good, especially in the lower parts of the town, as ladies were formerly afraid of going through the streets for fear of being insulted. That does not happen now.
7525. You know that in London they have late licenses for the purpose? I do not know that they exist now.
7526. Would you not recommend something like that? Yes; but Sir Alexander Stuart said that it was in force many years ago and did not act well.
- 7527.

7527. But it was indiscriminate then? No. You had to apply and they gave you permission to keep open. Mr. J. Hunt.
7528. But anybody could get it who applied for it? Yes. 17 Sept., 1886.
7529. And what you propose is that on application a man should get permission to keep open in like manner as places near the theatres? Yes.
7530. What would you raise the higher licenses you describe to? To £50.
7531. Would you have any scale;—you know that some of our largest houses do not keep up to the Act, and have not the number of rooms required, and that a great number of them could not supply food if required to do so at a moment's notice? Yes, I know that.
7532. Do you think that the tendency to increase the number of bars is pernicious? In large hotels they must have two bars.
7533. Two upper bars? Certainly not; some of those bars are very badly carried on indeed; and they are subtle to persons who have no right to have them. They are subtle to women. I reported twelve hotels that did so and Mr. Fosbery said that he was perfectly powerless unless we assisted him.
7534. Are there many? I think there are twelve or fifteen.
7535. And you think the holders are either disreputable characters or encourage vice? Yes.
7536. And the girl is —? What she may be; she has a bedroom to herself.
7537. Do you think the number of houses in the city is in excess of reasonable requirements? I do.
7538. You think that they might be reduced beneficially? Yes.
7539. In consequence of the number being in excess of the demand do you think the trade is made worse; that is to say, that persons cannot make a living except by a violation of the law? That would be hard to say, but my opinion is that there are too many by a couple of hundred.
7540. By what system would you reduce them to a reasonable and proper number? Where the Act was violated and drunkenness encouraged, I would make the law very hard upon the offenders.
7541. Then there would be transfers perhaps? I think it would be possible to prevent that; I think where these houses are carried on disreputably as many of them are, very severe measures ought to be taken with them.
7542. Do you not think that people in a given area should have a voice in reducing the number of houses? That is one form of local option. I do not think any house ought to be disfranchised except for misconduct, and for being badly kept, and encouraging drink.
7543. Not because the houses are in excess of that number? I do not think so when the Legislature has granted them a license.
7544. Then you are opposed to local option? Yes.
7545. With or without compensation? Yes; I do not acquiesce in it.
7546. Do you think high licenses would reduce the number of houses? I do not think it would.
7547. Do you think that those houses that now get on at £30 could get on at £50 or £60? I think so, because they would increase the price of their drinks.
7548. Are all the bars three-penny bars? Nearly all for draught-ale, whisky, brandy, &c. There are only a few that charge 6d. I charge 6d. all through.
7549. I suppose it may be that persons would have houses in which a three-penny bar would be useful? Yes; but mine being a family hotel I do not want it. I have done away with it so as not to encourage cabmen and people of that class to come in.
7550. Do you think that intemperance has spread during the last few years? I do not think so. I certainly saw more drunkenness six or seven years ago than I do now. Perhaps it was because then I was in the midst of it in George-street, and now I am in a quiet part of the town. But I do not think so.
7551. You do not think that the people are more drunken now than they were under the old system? I do not.
7552. Do you think we are more sober? Well, I have certainly seen less than I have six or seven years ago.
7553. I should like to hear your views on the subject of the habitual drunkard. Do you think his case one for punishment by fine or gaol, or would you treat him otherwise? Otherwise. I would have an inebriate asylum by which you might save one in eight or ten, but by sending them to gaol you save none.
7554. You have not considered the cost? No.
7555. Perhaps you think the object in view would justify the cost? I am certain of it.
7556. You have not considered the cost to the State of the habitual drunkard now? No; but I do not think the cost by having an inebriate asylum would be more.
7557. Do you not think the burden would be taken off the police? I have no doubt of it.
7558. Would you allow the magistrates to send an habitual drunkard to an asylum? I would.
7559. For what period? That would be according to the man's state.
7560. Would you not send him there for reformatory treatment? I would.
7561. It is generally considered that you cannot reform an habitual drunkard under six months? Yes; I have seen a great deal of it in India, and men never got over it under three months. They have no asylums there.
7562. Have you met with any inebriate asylums in other parts of the world? No.
7563. Mr. Hutchison.] Do you know of any of these clubs where men can get drink at any time? I do.
7564. How many do you know? I know of two. Of course those who get drink go in with the members of the club.
7565. Would you license these places if they sold drink? I certainly would. There is a club in Sydney where they have access to the hotel, and that must be against the law.
7566. President.] Is it next to the hotel? It adjoins it.
7567. Mr. Hutchison.] How long ago were you in Scotland? In 1842, before the Forbes-Mackenzie Act.
7568. Do you know of your own knowledge whether crime increased or decreased by reason of Sunday opening? No.
7569. Would you be surprised to know that it largely decreased in Edinburgh, and has ever since? I have been speaking of Glasgow, where I have seen great drunkenness outside the town, towards Paisley and along the Clyde.
7570. On the Paisley Road? Yes; and I have seen them often going as far as Hamilton to drink.
7571. In the city of Glasgow there is no open drink-selling? No; but you can get drink every Sunday.
7572. But if people want to carouse they must go out of town? Yes,

- Mr. J. Hunt. 7573. Mr. Roseby.] I understood you to say that you considered there were about 200 more public-houses in Sydney than were really required for the ordinary wants of the community? I think so.
- 17 Sept., 1886. 7574. And you cannot state what means ought to be used to suppress that number of houses? No, I cannot.
7575. There are many that you would designate as low, disreputable houses? Yes. In England they would come under the designation of "Tom and Jerry" shops.
7576. They are supposed to provide accommodation for the public? They are.
7577. And as a matter of fact they do not? They do not.
7578. How many hotels are there like your own that can give comfortable accommodation to families? Not more than fifty or sixty.
7579. And do you not think that hotels ought to be compelled to provide proper accommodation for travellers and the public generally? I do, and I would have two classes of licenses.
7580. Would you have beer licenses as they have in England? I do not think so.
7581. Have you any knowledge of the quality of liquor ordinarily consumed in the City? Yes; some is very bad.
7582. Do you think low-priced spirits are largely consumed in these low houses? They must be to make it pay.
7583. Many of these houses are under the thumbs of the brewers? Yes, I believe that is the case.
7584. And they are compelled to take whatever the brewer sends them? I believe so.
7585. And does it not have a very bad effect upon the trade? There is no doubt it must have.
7586. Have you known transfers to be made out in blank? I have known it to be done some years ago.
7587. And that transfer must place the house in the hands of the brewer? Yes.
7588. And the brewer would profit by the man's ruin? He would profit.
7589. Then it would be to the benefit of the brewer to have the tenant of the house changed as often as possible? I do not believe that it would be more to his benefit to have a respectable person in the house.
7590. Do you know that there are a large number of houses in the hands of people quite unfit to have them? Many.
7591. Do you not think the people should have some voice in deciding whether they should have these houses or not? I do not think so. I would leave it in the hands of the magistrate.
7592. Do you think that the present Licensing Bench is a competent authority in this matter? I think it is a very good bench.
7593. Do you say that the Sunday closing part of the Act is frequently violated? I think it is a very great deal.
7594. And you would favor the opening of houses for some time on Sunday? Yes, and I believe it would result in less drinking than at the present time.
7595. Do you not think that the publican should have a day's rest? Yes, if they dare do so, but they cannot if the others do not close. I think it is impossible to make them close without an immense amount of expense as every house would have to be watched. They tried it in Victoria and the licensed victuallers banded themselves together to fine everybody who sold on Sunday, but it did not last three months.
7596. Do you not think that the public would obey the law? I do not think so. They think that it is a very unfair law. When the present Act first became law and when I was at the International Hotel I saw more drink taken home on Saturday nights than I ever did before. They drank it at home and went out for more on Sunday. I sold more on Saturday night than I did at any other time. They used to take away 4 and 5 gallon jars full.
7597. There is no necessity for that now? Well, it is not everyone who will open his house on Sunday unless it is to customers he knows.
7598. Do you know that very few publicans, comparatively, have obeyed the law? There are very few I believe.
7599. Have you observed whether there is an increase of drink among young people? No.
7600. In the community? I have not observed it.
7601. How long have you been in the colony? Fourteen years.
7602. Do you think the native youth has given way to drink a great deal of late years? I saw a great deal of drinking at the time I was at Roberts' which I do not see now, and a great deal of drinking in King-street which I do not see now.
7603. You know that a great many men have gone to destruction through drink? Yes, a great many.
7604. And you know that some of them have been reformed? Yes, I reformed one myself, a son of one of our Governors.
7605. Mr. Colls.] Are you President of any Association? I am vice-president of the Licensed Victuallers' Association.
7606. How are you admitted? By ballot.
7607. And it is the better class of hotel-keepers that are admitted? Well, we admit those who do not break the law.
7608. What is the object of the Association? To protect trade and those who keep the law and do a legitimate business.
7609. You think there is more drink going on in homes than there was previously? Yes.
7610. You think the Act has done a great deal of evil in homes? I am sure of it.
7611. Are there any upstairs bars in the suburbs? I do not think so.
7612. Are you aware that these small houses do not attempt to accommodate the public? I am sure of it. I know they cannot, and some of the large houses do not although they are supposed to be up to the standard.
7613. Have you known them to let any of their rooms after being passed by the inspector? I hear so, and I have heard persons say that they had taken the places.
7614. You know of clubs in the suburbs? I do.
7615. Do you think that they ought to pay a license? Yes.
7616. You would not be in favour of any bar except on the basement floor? Not unless it is in the very large hotels that are likely to be built.
7617. But as they are now you would not be in favour of upper bars? Certainly not.
7618. I suppose you know that there are several females in these bars in addition to the licensee? Yes, one of them handed me a card on one occasion, as having kept a bar, and I handed it to the police.

7619. Do you find closing at 11 o'clock inconvenient in the case of steamers coming in late at night? Mr. J. Hunt.
Very inconvenient.
7620. Could not that be altered? I do not see how it could be. Of course we have to open the house to people coming into Sydney at late hours. 17 Sept., 1886.
7621. Does the law compel you to refuse to serve them on Sundays? Yes; but I can serve them in their own rooms.
7622. But persons coming to stay at your house? Then they are lodgers, and I can serve them. Travellers can compel me to serve them and open the bar.
7623. President.] Do they cease to be travellers when they become lodgers? Yes, the law says so. I have refused travellers over and over again on Sunday. The onus of proof that they are travellers remains with me, and unless I know them I refuse them.
7624. Mr. Colls.] Do you know that the farmers' trains arrive about 11:30 p.m., and it is impossible for the farmers to get accommodation? Yes, and I have given them accommodation on the floor of my rooms.
7625. Is it a common occurrence for the vendors of oysters to sell liquor? They send out for it, and in the majority of cases they will not serve you unless you give them the money.
7626. Do you think the wine-shops serve a little drop of hard stuff occasionally? I have got my own opinion, but I could not say that they do.
7627. Do you see any objection to young ladies serving behind respectable bars? None whatever.
7628. How long have you had them? I seldom change; I have had mine for three or four years, and I treat them as my own daughters; and I would not allow them to be insulted in any way.
7629. Have they instructions never to serve a man the worse for liquor? Yes; I discharged one girl on that account.
7630. Mr. Hutchison.] Of your own knowledge is the Governor's son you referred to living? Yes.
7631. Have you seen him recently? No; I think he is home on a visit.

MONDAY, 20 SEPTEMBER, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,	G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.,
T. COLLS, Esq., J.P.,	J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.,
A. HUTCHISON, Esq.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Richard Albert Watson called in, sworn, and examined:—

7632. President.] What is your name? Richard Albert Watson.
7633. You have been for some time, I think, keeping the "Paragon Hotel"? Since April 2nd, 1868. Mr. R. A. Watson.
7634. Does your experience as a licensed victualler date before that time? No; I had a printing office, and was proprietor of a newspaper before that. 20 Sept., 1886.
7635. Have you been connected with any of the licensed victuallers' organizations? Yes, I have.
7636. Will you state in what way? I have been one of the committeemen or councillors, and I have been vice-president and president at different times.
7637. You have held office then as president, vice-president, and councillor? Yes.
7638. Do you hold office now? No.
7639. Is there more than one licensed victuallers' organization for the protection of licensed victuallers' interests now? I know of only one.
7640. But is it not a fact that there are fragments of another? There are two or three of the council of the late Licensed Victuallers' Association who have some funds in hand.
7641. That in existence now is the Amalgamated one? Yes.
7642. Is that for all purposes the association which represents the interests of the licensed victuallers of the Colony? Yes.
7643. The Trade Defence Association is defunct, is it not? Yes; that merged into the amalgamated association.
7644. All the time you have mentioned you have been at the "Paragon"? Yes.
7645. You must have a very large acquaintance with shipping people, as well as the ordinary wayfarers? Yes; the mercantile community generally.
7646. Have you a large trade with seamen? Not much.
7647. Although your house seems to be peculiarly situated for seamen it does not, as a matter of fact, do a large seamen's trade? No, not for many years. My trade is principally with the mercantile people; Customs agents, and other such people about.
7648. You know perhaps it is asserted that the community as a whole is more intemperate than it used to be; that the habit of drinking to excess has increased;—do you believe that? I do not think so. I have seen less drunkenness during the last year or two than I ever saw before. There is very little drunkenness now.
7649. Some of the people summoned here have said that since Sunday closing has become law there has been more drunkenness;—do you believe that? I have never seen that.
7650. That is to say that a large number of people have had incentives to drink given them under the new system which they did not have before, one incentive being, I suppose, to break the law; that it is necessary for them to take more drink home on Saturdays; and that they go on drinking over the Saturday and the Sunday, and so begin the week boozy? I have often spoken to my customers about that, and they have said that since the Act came into force they have laid in stores of liquor.
7651. Is your custom larger than it was before the new law? There is no change with me.
7652. Then judging by your house the demand on a Sunday is no larger than it was in 1870? Not in proportion. The trade has of course gradually increased.
7653. In proportion to what? The population. The trade has increased gradually every year, but I have never noticed anything out of the way on a Saturday.
7654. I suppose your trade increases yearly? Yes. 7655.

- Mr.
R. A. Watson.
20 Sept., 1886.
7655. Do you ascribe any of that increase to Sunday closing? No; there has been no appreciable increase from that cause.
7656. Presumably you know the condition of affairs beyond your own house. Do you consider that elsewhere the closing on Sunday has given rise to increased drinking at the end of the week and the beginning of the next week? No; I have no way of knowing that personally.
7657. It has not come to your knowledge? No.
7658. Does the association of which you are a member believe that? I am not a member. I withdrew from it altogether. I have quite enough to do at home.
7659. You take no further interest in the amalgamated association? No.
7660. Do you think that there is a very large quantity of bad liquor supplied in this city over the bars? I have no means of knowing directly. I have had bad liquors offered me for sale, but I never buy them.
7661. You could get bad liquors if you like? Certainly; I could get new spirits if I liked—cheap.
7662. You could get it for 3s. per gallon, for instance, in bond? Do you mean rum, brandy, or whiskey?
7663. I mean brandy and whiskey? No; but it has often been offered to me at 4s. 6d.; that is the lowest. Rum has been offered at from 3s. 8d. to 3s. 10d.
7664. That is the Colonial rum? No; Lowndes' rum, in bond.
7665. What could you get Colonial rum for? I do not know; I have never bought any.
7666. The fact is then that perhaps you have no knowledge of low spirits? No; I have not. I like to buy good old spirits, and am quite prepared to give a good price, because I consider that it is cheaper in the end to have good old spirits. I will tell you what I have noticed. I have noticed an increase in the sale of Colonial beer, and a diminution in the sale of English ale.
7667. How do you account for that? I account for that by the improved quality of the beer.
7668. It is driving the English out? Yes, gradually driving the English out.
7669. Do you regard the Colonial article as a wholesome beer? Yes; it is light, and not so heady or intoxicating.
7670. Is it much bottled now, or sold in bottle? I could not tell you that.
7671. Is Colonial porter used? I think that it is largely used bottled.
7672. Do you think there is much doctoring or sophistication of spirits? That I could not tell you. I have no knowledge.
7673. Have you ever heard of a "doctor?" No. Some years ago a man came to me and said he was prepared to doctor spirits for me, and I said, "I do not want to know anything about that." He said he was prepared to make spirits cheap for me, and I said, "I do not care to know anything about it."
7674. Was that long ago? Yes, about 18 years ago.
7675. They have not resorted to you since? No; I have respectable people to deal with, and I do not care about dealing with any other class of people.
7676. Do you think the Sunday-closing law is much violated in your neighbourhood? I do not believe that there is one publican in my neighbourhood who violates the law.
7677. I suppose that on the Sunday you go about a good deal—perhaps to Manly? Yes.
7678. Have you any reason to suspect much violation of the Sunday closing law? I do not know of one instance—not in my particular neighbourhood.
7679. Or within a quarter of a mile? There may be some; I would not like to say with regard to the houses about Lower George-street; but in the houses around the Circular Quay I do not believe there is one who violates the Sunday closing.
7680. You would not answer for Lower George-street? I would not answer for any part of the city. I think in my neighbourhood they are all the same, and that they do not violate the law; in fact under the old law I went to them several times to try to get them to close on Sundays.
7681. Then you are an advocate of Sunday closing? Yes, although I have lost many customers through it; many good customers that I would have had; because I do not serve them on Sunday they go to other places during the week.
7682. You know that? I know it for a fact that I have lost many good customers in that way. They say to me, "Why cannot you sell? I can get it at so and so's"—and I answer that I cannot help that.
7683. You would rather lose the custom? Yes. I say that "Your remedy is to alter the law."
7684. Now we come to that point. What do you say about the law. I have inferred from what you have said that you are in favour of Sunday closing? For myself.
7685. But, speaking generally, with regard to wayfarers, or supposed wayfarers, and of the people generally engaged in the trade, are you in favour of the Sunday-closing law? From what my customers have said to me I do not think I have spoken to two who would not like to have the houses open during certain hours on a Sunday. They say it is not right not to be able to get a drink on a Sunday. The majority of them think they ought to have a drink on a Sunday, and I think it would be a fair thing to have the houses open for a couple of hours on a Sunday.
7686. As under the old system? I would have it more open, but I would not have it open after those hours, not even to lodgers.
7687. Would you have three openings? In the morning early, and at mid-day for people to get their lunch beer, and in the evening for an hour or two.
7688. Arranging so as not to interfere with the church hours? Yes; but to have the houses strictly closed at other times, and not allow them to sell to any one, even to lodgers.
7689. Not to bonâ-fide travellers? Not to any one.
7690. You would have that strictly complied with? Yes; and then the publican would know what he was to do. He could lock up his bar at a certain time, and no one could demand a drink, and his servants could have a rest.
7691. I suppose you have but little demand for meals and accommodation for travellers at your house? I have considerable demand for accommodation for travellers.
7692. But I suppose that generally in that part of the town there is not much demand for travellers accommodation? Oh, yes there is; every week I have to refuse about twenty.
7693. Your house should be twice as big then? If I had 50 or 100 more rooms I could fill them all the time. It is in consequence of the steamers arriving near there (the Melbourne boats and the Orient steamers), but of course my accommodation is only limited.
7694. Where then do these people go? I recommend them to different hotels.
- 7695.

7695. They have to go a long way up the town then? Yes; to Wynyard-square, and so on.

7696. You know that it is a requirement of the law that you must have certain accommodation—six rooms? Yes.

7697. I suppose that in many houses in your neighbourhood this is not necessary, inasmuch as no one ever goes near them for accommodation? Well; I often send them, but they say they are full up.

7698. But down in Gipps' Ward there may be many houses which are never asked for accommodation? I cannot say.

7699. Do you think that in the city it is necessary for all public houses to have accommodation rooms. That raises the question, should a publican be a mere vendor of drinks, or should he be a licensed victualler, providing food and accommodation? I think a man, if he is licensed, should be prepared to receive lodgers.

7700. Apart from there being no demand? I think so.

7701. Of course you are aware that about 75 per cent. of these houses could not afford reasonable accommodation; they might supply a crust of bread and cheese, but certainly not a chop and a bed? I am quite sure they could not; they do not lay themselves out for it; but I have often thought that persons who cater for the travelling public should not be treated as men who simply trade in drink, as some of the keepers of large houses in central stands do. I do not think that persons who furnish a large number of rooms, and have a large number of servants, should be treated the same as the others.

7702. You spoke just now of having the law more severe on Sundays than it is now. Possibly you mean that you would have something stringent, such as the "English Intoxicating Liquors Act of 1872"? I will just draw your attention to what that Act says. Practically the 25th section puts upon persons found on premises during closing hours the onus of proving that they were there for a lawful purpose. Now our law does not. It goes on the converse theory. Suppose you introduced something like that 25th section of the Licensing Act of 1872, do you think that that would be considered a great hardship in this colony? The section says:—"If during any period during which any premises are required under the provisions of this Act to be closed, any person is found on such premises, he shall unless he satisfies the Court that he was an inmate, servant, or a lodger on such premises, or a bonâ fide traveller, or that otherwise his presence was not in contravention of the provisions of this Act with respect to the closing of licensed premises, be liable to a penalty not exceeding forty shillings." A man travelling, if he is found on premises during closing hours must prove that he is a lodger, a bonâ fide traveller, or a constable? I think that is a very hard case. One friend may go in to see another, and because he is found there he would have to prove why he was there.

7703. That is exactly what it amounts to—a gentleman may come to see you without any idea of taking a nobbler, but the onus of proof rests with him to show that he is not a violator of the law? I think that would be very arbitrary.

7704. You talked about a more stringent regulation. Without something like this it would be utterly impossible to make the Sunday closing effective. Why cannot you have a clause fining a man who goes in for that purpose? So we have. A constable or prosecutor has to prove the supply, but this clause says you are found there, and we must consider you guilty unless you prove you are not guilty. Well, friends come in to the house, old customers, and they say we must have a drink, and they sit down and won't go away. The policeman may then come in, and it would be very awkward for them if a clause of that kind were in force.

7705. Well it is the law? I must for instance keep my hall door open for lodgers, and then others come in, and it is very difficult to get rid of them.

7706. You would not be responsible under this clause, but if the men were found there they would have to prove that they were privileged persons? Well I think it would be very arbitrary.

7707. That is exactly what we wanted your opinion upon? I think it would be very arbitrary to cause a man to prove this because he came in to see a friend, and a policeman then came in and said, "What are you here for"?

7708. Then the section goes on to say:—"Any constable may demand the name and address of any person found on any premises during the period during which they are required by the provisions of this Act to be closed, and if he has reasonable ground to suppose that the name or address given is false may require evidence of the correctness of such name and address, and may if such person fail upon such demand to give his name or address or such evidence apprehend him without warrant and carry him as soon as practicable before a Justice of the Peace. Any person required by a constable under this section to give his name and address who fails to give the same, or gives a false name or address, or gives false evidence with respect to such name and address, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding five pounds. Every person who by falsely representing himself to be a traveller or a lodger buys or obtains, or attempts to buy or obtain, at any premises any intoxicating liquor during the period during which such premises are closed in pursuance of this Act, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding five pounds." You see that this is very severe, and yet it has been in force in England for fourteen years without being repealed? I think it is very arbitrary.

7709. Do you not think we could endure it in this colony? I think it is a very severe law, interfering very much with the liberty of the subject.

7710. You think so? I do.

7711. I daresay that among the 830 houses here about 700 openly and calmly violate the law? There must be some, and they do a big trade under the Act.

7712. Of course that is unfair to you and to those who keep the law? Certainly it is.

7713. Your customers go to others in the week-day by way of punishing you? Yes; they say a certain person obliges us on Sunday, and we will go to him on the week-day; and they will go out of their way to go to him on the week-day because he obliges them on the Sunday; there is no doubt about that.

7714. Do you think there is any necessity for double bars; speaking for yourself, would you care about having two bars? I have two bars; it is necessary for a different class of customers altogether.

7715. Are they 3d. and 6d. bars? Yes.

7716. On the same floor? Yes.

7717. Do you approve of upstairs bars? No, I do not approve of them.

7718. Do you not think that a man having two bars should pay more for his license? I do not see why a man who caters for the public should pay more because he has two bars.

7719. Do you think a man should have as many as he likes? Yes; on the lower floor.

7720.

Mr.
R. A. Watson.
20 Sept., 1886.

Mr.
B. A. Watson
20 Sept., 1886.

7720. But upstairs bars you do not like? No. I know many places with very respectable upstairs bars; but I know other places that are not.
7721. You have not been there to see them? No, I have not; but customers who come into my house have told me about what has occurred at these places.
7722. Would you abolish the upstairs bars? Not altogether.
7723. You say that some houses have respectable upstairs bars, where, I suppose, men of business, for instance, go, bound on perfectly proper errands; but the upstairs bars you object to are, I suppose, those kept by women? That is what I mean, bars that have been sub-let.
7724. There are a good many of those in the town? Yes, I have heard men say they make the rent out of them, and they supply the liquor.
7725. That is the bar where champagne is supplied at a guinea a bottle? That is it.
7726. Do you know anything of the clubs that are said to exist about the town? I have heard of a good many of them.
7727. You have heard of many existing; I suppose they are mere cloaks for drinking? That is all, and they have sprung up since this Act.
7728. The cost of membership is a merely nominal sum? Yes.
7729. And a man takes as many friends as he likes and treats them? Yes.
7730. In the night? Yes, at any time.
7731. That is to say, ordinary closing hours are not observed by them? No, not at any time.
7732. Do you not think that the number of houses here—830—is in excess of any reasonable requirements of the city? In some portions of the city they are.
7733. And in other portions you think they are not? In some portions of the city I have often wondered how they get a living.
7734. Would you be in favour of a higher license fee for houses as they exist at present? I would not.
7735. You know that in some countries very high license fees are charged? I know that in England there is what they call a license to retail beer only.
7736. That is the law now, but the ordinary license—the license that corresponds to our general publicans' license here—can in England go up to treble the amount here, being created on the inhabited house tax? Yes, I know that, but I think they ought to encourage a man to keep a respectable house, and not increase his fee because he does so.
7737. If they got a kind of monopoly do you not think that would be very well purchased by paying a higher fee. Suppose a man were permitted so many bars, and billiard tables, do not you think he could very well afford to pay a higher fee? No; in many houses he could not do it.
7738. But the object would be to destroy the low houses. Wherever there is a high license fee the object is to get rid of drinking dens? I do not think it would have that effect. They would pay that extra money, and there would be worse liquor sold.
7739. Do you mean in a good house? No; in the small houses. They would pay the money, and take it out of the customers in some other way.
7740. What is your opinion of Colonial wine licenses in this city;—do you think they are needed? I do not think they are needed in the city.
7741. Do you not think that they sell spirits? I think they sell everything.
7742. Especially the foreigners? Yes.
7743. We have been told that it is the vilest of compounds that is sold there? Yes, I believe so.
7744. Are you satisfied with the hours of opening and closing during week days? I should like if it were half an hour earlier in the morning, and half an hour later at night, but not so much at night; but I think half-past 5 in the morning would be a reasonable hour.
7745. Many of your customers I suppose would be passengers by the Manly boats? Many of my customers have to be at work at 6 o'clock.
7746. What is the latest Manly boat? A quarter past 11.
7747. And the return boat—is there one after that hour? Not at that hour, but people coming from the theatres complain that they are not able to get liquors.
7748. That is the traffic going to North Shore? Yes, and to the ships.
7749. They complain that the hour of closing is too early? Yes; I think that half-past 11 would be a reasonable hour.
7750. Do you think the inspection of liquor is sufficiently stringent in this Colony? Well, I do not know—I cannot say anything about that—I cannot say whether it is or not. I have no means of knowing.
7751. I suppose you admit that the liquor is very bad in some places? I have heard my customers speak of the liquor in some places.
7752. As pernicious and unwholesome? I have heard my customers speak of the liquor in some places not being good.
7753. No offence is committed unless an ingredient is put into the liquor; the liquor, however young, is not of itself an objection—that is to say, the fusel oil under the present law is not objectionable; you cannot touch them for that? I do not know anything about that. I have never troubled myself about it. I always like to get the best liquor I can.
7754. As you admit that the number of houses is in excess of the demand in some places, has it ever occurred to you how the number might be reduced;—for example, are you in favour of local option as a mode of reducing the number of houses; would you allow the people in any locality to give their opinion as to the number of houses? I think if a majority of the householders were to say so it would be a fair thing to reduce the number.
7755. That is to say, you would allow in the ward (you are in Bourke Ward) a majority of householders to control the liquor traffic there? Yes; a fair majority.
7756. To say how many houses there should be, and, perhaps, whether there should be any at all? If they like; but I do not think it would be a fair thing for persons having vested interests, for these interests to be taken away without compensation.
7757. That is, you would not be in favour of local option without compensation? Certainly not without compensation.
7758. With regard to the liquor traffic generally, have you any suggestions to make to us that you think would be for the benefit of those engaged in the trade and the public generally? There are two or three points that I do not like.

Mr.
R. A. Watson.
20 Sept., 1886.

7759. I would like you to name them? Publicans are singled out from all other trading people and special privileges are given to the police to demand admittance to their houses. Now there are other places worse than public houses, yet the police cannot get admittance to these places; I mean gambling and other places, and confectioners' shops, so-called, which are carried on for many other purposes.

7760. Do you mean as assignation houses? Lots of things; I think the power of the police ought to be extended generally. The publican is not dealt with fairly but is singled out for police inspection when there are far more demoralizing haunts than his. A man is looked upon as a respectable member of the community until he gets a publican's license. He must have a character and must be recommended before he can get a license and he is not subjected to any annoyance at all, but the moment he gets his license the police can go and demand admittance to his house. I do not think he should be treated in that way any more than anyone else.

7761. Would you not allow any police inspection when you admit yourself that much violation of the law goes on? If there is such a law I would have a general law so that the police could demand admittance to anyone's house. Why should the publican be singled out more than anyone else?

7762. But for what purpose would you demand admittance to other person's houses? Well, there are many irregularities carried on in Sydney which I dare say you are aware of, and the police also, but they cannot demand admittance and go in.

7763. Now, supposing I am a retailer of tea and coffee, would you allow the police to be admitted to my place? Yes, if they have any idea that there is something wrong going on.

7764. You mean that you would put all persons on the same level who sell anything, but before the police had a right to enter they must have a suspicion that there is a violation of the law? That there is something wrong. I would let the police have a general power to go into any man's house if they have any idea that there is anything wrong going on. Why should the publican be singled out. He must have a good character before he gets his license and directly he gets his license he is looked upon as a criminal. That is a part of the law which really I do not think a fair thing for the publican.

7765. You object to the liability of police inspection? No. I have never been interfered with.

7766. You speak on behalf of your Order? Yes.

7767. What else do you think is a matter of grievance under the Licensing law? I think the law relating to the sale of liquors, &c., on Christmas Day and Good Friday should be amended. The Licensing Act allows houses to be opened on such days at certain hours in the morning, mid-day, and evening, for the sale of liquors, not to be consumed on the premises. The publican should be allowed to open his house the same as on week days or Sunday. I do not know of anything more specially. I think that with reference to places visited by the public out of town, they should be provided with refreshment. It is so in England.

7768. Cannot you do that now? No. The public can get meals but they cannot get liquor to drink.

7769. Unless they are lodgers or travellers? They cannot be considered as travellers at Manly Beach; it is not far enough. In England, and a number of places in America, they have watering places where the public are able to get drinks by travelling a short distance. I should like to see that in the Act, although, of course, it would not affect me in the least.

7770. Have you any other suggestion to make? No.

7771. Mr. Withers.] Of course you are aware that you are not bound to go into this business? Oh, yes.

7772. Do you not think it is a compliment rather than otherwise to know that the characters of persons engaged in the same business are scrutinized? Yes; I believe they should be of good character.

7773. You do not think for a man who carries on his business properly that the police should have access to his house? I do not say that it is wrong that they should have access, but I say that it is wrong that publicans should be singled out as the only class for this indignity.

7774. Of course you really become the servants of the Crown to a very great extent? I consider we are really the collectors of the duty on liquors. We pay in advance to the Government and trust to Providence to get our money back. The Government would have a difficulty in collecting the revenue in any other way.

7776. You know that the other places you have referred to are not licensed? Yes; but why should not the police have power to go into them. I know when I was an officer of the Association we often used to complain to the police of houses where you could get champagne or beer, and where they did not pay a license, and the police said that they had no power to go into these places. They have no power to visit clubs or so-called clubs. If the police have power to go into public-houses they should have power to go into these places. Last night in King-street I saw twenty or thirty people drinking at a place called a milk and lemonade shop, and there were doors leading further on. I think such places should be looked after as you do not know what is going on inside.

7777. President.] Is that the place where they retail "Koumiss"? I do not mean that particularly; I mean places where they sell hot spiced milk and iced milk, &c.

7778. Mr. Withers.] You do not think the police should have power to enter private residences? If they have a suspicion that there is anything immoral going on. They must have certain information given to them that something wrong is going on. You can have a law allowing the police certain powers, and not single out a particular class of men to be supervised by the police. I quite approve of the clause as it stands. Only I say that we should not be singled out as a special class of the community to be legislated for in the matter.

7779. They have asked for legislation, have they not, and you cannot get away from the fact that it is a public business. The other class you speak of should be dealt with as vagrants? Well, the police say they have no power to enter. I have reported many places to them. I have had letters complaining about them, and women have written, complaining of their husbands being robbed in these places.

7780. There is a lot of drink consumed in these houses? Yes; night and day.

7781. That is supplied by the hotel-keeper, I fancy? No, not always; they buy it in quantities to supply to their customers.

7782. Mr. Colls.] You are aware that quantities of spirits are taken from the grocers on Saturday nights? Yes; they supply all sorts of liquor made up in mixed cases. I have been told of it by customers; but I do not know it from my own experience.

- Mr. R. A. Watson. 7783. And what you say in regard to these other houses you do not know from your own experience? No; I have been told.
- 20 Sept., 1886. 7784. Mr. Withers.] You have heard of men who can manufacture spirits out of anything, or doctor spirits? Yes.
7785. Would they not be very dangerous men to the community? Of course, because the revenue of the country would suffer.
7786. And do you not think it would be injurious to the community to have such a man in their midst? Of course if he used anything deleterious.
7787. If encouraged you think he would be a dangerous man to have? I think so.
7788. Mr. Roseby.] The police have never annoyingly interfered with you? No.
7789. You think there ought to be supervision exercised by the police over every house which has suspicious work being carried on? I think there should be a general law allowing the police power to go into houses where they suspect that there is anything wrong being carried on. There should be one general law for the purpose, and the publicans should not be selected specially.
7790. But you know that a public-house business is a specially dangerous business? I certainly do not know it from my own knowledge.
7791. Have you not known people to get overmastered by a habit of drinking? I have known one or two in the course of my career that have drunk to excess.
7792. Do you not know that in this community there are a large number of people who are intemperate. Have you ever gone to the Police Courts in a morning and seen those who are charged with this offence? No.
7793. Are you aware to what extent drink has to do with the crime of the country? I believe it has to do with it to a certain extent.
7794. Are you aware how much it has to do with the distress and pauperism of the country? Well liquor may have that effect, but why should you blame the people who sell the liquor? If a man wants liquor he will get it.
7795. Do you not regard the public-house business as a specially dangerous one? Certainly not.
7796. But, in answer to the President, you did state that you believed in the principle of local option, and that the majority of the people should have the power of saying that they should do away with the houses? Yes, with fair compensation. I think it is a proper thing to leave it to the voices of the householders.
7797. Would you give it to the general residents or only the tax-payers? I would give it only to the tax-payers, in the same way that tax-payers elect the aldermen and Members of Parliament.
7798. Would you not allow the Parliamentary electors to rule the public-houses? Yes; that would do.
7799. Do you not think there are a large number of public-houses in Sydney that are bad houses and have no accommodation such as you provide for the public? I believe that some of the houses do not provide accommodation.
7800. Do you not think it would be a benefit to the community if a large number of these houses were done away with? I could not say that, because if a man is inclined to drink he will get it in some way or other.
7801. Do you not think that a man who will have drink at any cost is in rather a bad way? I do not think so.
7802. Mr. Hutchison.] You are personally in favour of Sunday closing? I am,
7803. And you state that if publicans were allowed to open for a few hours on Sundays you would have a very strict law to compel closing during other hours? Yes.
7804. What would you suggest? Fine them heavily for the first and second offence and forfeit the license for the third offence.
7805. Seeing that you are in favour of Sunday closing, why not keep it up? I do not think it would be a fair thing for the community, because if a man wants a drink on Saturday he gets it, and if he felt that he required a drink on Sunday why should he not get it at a certain hour? I think it a most unreasonable thing to the community that they should be deprived of anything on Sunday.
7806. You are in favour of closing at 11 o'clock on business days? Yes; I think it a reasonable thing for a man to go home at 11 o'clock; I would not allow any house to be open after 11.30 p.m.
7807. Is not the very fact of a public-house being licensed a reason why the police should go in—the other places you speak of are not licensed? Yes; and they carry on all sorts of games.
7808. And I gather that you would license these clubs? I do not say so.
7809. By licensing them they would be brought under police surveillance? But why should not the police have power to go into these suspected houses?
7810. Do you have any trouble with workmen in the mornings inquiring for drink? My servants say that the men often apply to them for drink; they are told to wait till 6 o'clock, when the bar would be open.
7811. Do you think that is a hardship? Yes; I think it is a hardship not to allow any man to have what he may reasonably require.

Mr. Frank Smith called in, sworn, and examined:—

- Mr. F. Smith. 7812. President.] You keep the "Burrangong Hotel"? Yes.
- 20 Sept., 1886. 7813. And the "Sir Joseph Banks Hotel"? No; I am the owner, but not the licensee.
7814. You have been some time in business? Over twenty-one years.
7815. In Sydney? Yes; all the time in one place.
7816. Is your acquaintance with the trade principally confined to one place, and the classes who resort to the "Burrangong Hotel"? Yes.
7817. What classes are they chiefly? Well, all classes—working men and business men.
7818. Do you have more than one bar? No.
7819. Do you think there is any necessity for a house to have two bars, either an upstairs bar or two on the ground floor? I do not think so.
7820. As to the upstairs bars, are you acquainted with them? Yes; I know of them, and have been in them.
7821. I am speaking of bars that are let to women? I do not know of any one to my own knowledge.
7822. The upper bars you have been in are conducted by the publican? Yes.
7823. Are you contented or discontented with the provisions of the present law? Discontented.
7824. Do you object to the Sunday-closing? Yes.
7825. Would you revert to the old system? I would not. I object to it.

7826. What is your objection to Sunday-closing? Because if we refuse to serve people on Sunday who do business with us all the week, they say that other people will serve them on Sunday if we do not, and consequently they desert my house altogether.

Mr. F. Smith.
20 Sept., 1886.

7827. Suppose the law could be made so effective as to close all the houses indiscriminately on Sunday, would you then have any cause to complain? Oh, no.

7828. Then it is because one man opens and another keeps shut that you complain? Yes, we feel the injury done from it.

7829. It does not affect a trade like yours much? Oh, yes, it does. We used to take £14 or £15 on Sunday, but since the new Act we have taken none at all, because I do not sell on Sunday.

7830. Do you think you lose a portion of your week-day custom in consequence? Yes. We felt it more at the commencement of the Act than we do now.

7831. You are aware that there are a number of publicans in the city and suburbs that violate the law? There is no doubt of that. I have been living for twenty-one years in one place, and I have seen more drunkenness since the new Act came into force than I saw before.

7832. Then you think there has been more drunkenness since the new Act than before? Yes. Since the Darling Harbour locality has become peopled a large number of public-houses have been opened, and I do not think they could live unless they sold drink on Sunday.

7833. Does not that point to the fact that there are too many in the trade? That I could not say.

7834. Do you not think there are too many houses in the trade? I do not know. I do not think there are too many, but I think there are many publicans in the back parts of the town who could not do business if they did not carry on after hours.

7835. Do you belong to any organization? Yes, the licensed victuallers.

7836. Are there not several? Yes, two; but I do not think either of them is any good at all and are only societies in name.

7837. The association you belong to is the old one? Yes.

7838. And that has been maintained all the time? Yes.

7839. That has nothing to do with the Trade Defence Association? No.

7840. That has gone down? Yes; what they call the Amalgamated Association is the same one.

7841. How many members does your association consist of? It is on a par with the others. It has about four, and simply exists.

7842. What is its particular object? To protect the publicans generally.

7843. In what way? From prosecutions when they considered that publicans had been prosecuted unjustly, and to take up their case and fee a solicitor if they deserved it.

7844. Suppose it was an open violation of the law? We would not take up a case where we considered that there had been a clear breach of the law.

7845. Was another object to root out places that were badly conducted and give information to the police? Well they did do it, and there were some very bad houses we did root out. We spent about £200 in assisting the police to put down these places and cleanse the trade. We never prosecuted ourselves, but we put people in to detect sly-grog-selling. We put men in to board for a week in the place, and paid their board and lodging.

7846. In how many cases did you find sly-grog-selling? I could not tell you.

7847. You have some faults to find with the Licensing Act besides the one you have named, With regard to Sunday selling you would go back to the old times? Speaking individually, if the law was altered I would not open my house again on Sunday. In the first place my servants want the day, and having kept closed so long I myself would object to it.

7848. Do you object to the power given to the police under the new law? I do not think the police have any right to rush in upon the publican any more than any one else, without having authority.

7849. Do you not think that a suspicion that the law is being violated is sufficient authority? I do not think so.

7850. Do you not think the hours are sufficiently long? No; I do not think they are long enough.

7851. How long would you have? There are people who wish to get a drink at my house before 6 o'clock, and I cannot open, and therefore a good hour's business is lost. I should alter the law so as to let people open at 4:30. A great many people go to and fro from the Haymarket early in the morning.

7852. Are they the class known as market gardeners? We see more of the dealers than the market gardeners. They come all through the night.

7853. You say that personally you think the hours are too short; I suppose that would apply also to your neighbours? Yes.

7854. And the same thing at night? Yes.

7855. Are there any houses of amusement near you? Yes; I have one myself.

7856. Are the hours too short for the theatre visitors? Not for mine; because the performance is over at 10:15 or 10:30 p.m.

7857. Does that complete the list of your grievances with reference to the Licensing laws? That is the part I object to, not getting sufficient time.

7858. You do not think the license fees are too high? No.

7859. Would you not raise them for hotels of a higher class? No; I do not think so. £30 is a good deal to raise out of a 3d. bar.

7860. You do not have a distinction in your price? No; with reference to the present hour of closing I think by closing so early you drive persons to places to get a drink where they would not go at all. They would go home.

7861. Where do you think they would go? To houses of ill-fame. I have gone there myself.

7862. Do the police know of these houses? I could not tell you; it would be strange if they did not.

7863. Mr. Colls.] You went to see if they did sell drink? Yes; I went for a drink. It is not an unusual thing to go to these places and pay a sovereign for a bottle of wine, and you may be sure it is not the best you get there.

7864. President.] Of course there is police surveillance over these houses? They are private houses, and some of them are called boarding-houses. These are the places where you can go and get a drink. The law, as it exists now, sends these people there, whereas if the public-houses were open a little longer there would be no necessity.

- Mr. F. Smith. 7865. If the public-houses were opened, as in the old times, would not people want them open a little longer? I do not think so. In all the experience I have had, when 12 o'clock came, as a rule you did not have to ask anybody to go, and the moment that 12 o'clock came away they would go. They might on odd occasions stop until 1 o'clock.
7866. Am I not right in saying that there were places where you could get your drink at 1 or 2? I do not know. At that time there was a place called Horne's, and there you could get a steak or a bottle of grog, or anything else, and there was no occasion to be mixed up with anybody. But all that kind of thing has since been swept away.
7867. However, you are of opinion that the earlier closing hour has given rise to the habit of frequenting houses of ill fame for the purpose simply of getting drink? Of getting drink, and then the drink leads to other things, of course.
7868. Then you think this business has been encouraged by the present Licensing law? I think so.
7869. I suppose you admit that the state of the streets is very much better since 1881—that the streets are clearer;—you see less drunkenness about them? I am quite sure you see more.
7870. Well, in that respect we have contradictory evidence. Many of the witnesses say the streets are a pattern compared with what they were ten years ago. But you state positively, do you not, that in your locality there is more drunkenness—that you see more drunkenness in the streets than you used to do before? On a Sunday.
7871. Well, that is a novelty I was not prepared to hear. There must be something peculiar about that. What area do you refer to;—do you mean the Haymarket, that is to say, from your house down to the tramway? I mean more behind, towards the railway at Darling Harbour.
7872. And on the Parramatta Road? I could not tell you what goes on there; but in Hay-street you will see a continual stream of drunken men and women on a Sunday, six, seven, and eight at a time. You see them going up Hay-street, passing across George-street, and then cutting across Belmore Park, where they sleep. They are to be found there. I pass Belmore Park, and I see them there repeatedly. Mr. Withers, when he has been crossing there, has no doubt seen drunken persons.
7873. Then you do not think this reform is any reform at all? I do not.
7874. You are not speaking now, I apprehend, in the interests of the licensed victuallers, but as a member of the community? That is all.
7875. You think there would be less of what you have described if the law were altered? If the houses were open until 12 o'clock I think there would be a great deal less of it; and I think if men could get a drink in a legitimate way on Sunday there would be less drunkenness. My opinion is that if you pass a house on a Sunday now, and you take notice you will find a man on the watch, and perhaps a batch of twelve inside. The publican will probably say to them, "Now, boys, drink it up," and one says to another, "Now boys, we will have another," and the chances are they will have another drink in a hurry. Then the men will walk out, and call at another house, and so get another drink. From my own experience on a Saturday night, for one quart of beer that went out of our bar on a Saturday night under the old system there are 3 gallons going now, to be taken home for Sunday's dinner.
7876. I suppose that goes in jugs? They get it in gin-bottles; and, as we are doing a good trade there, the people weary us out with these bottles. We don't care for this traffic, and yet young and old come with these bottles to be filled.
7877. With beer? I am speaking of Colonial beer principally, and I think it has gone home into many houses where it never went before.
7878. Do you think that the people who take home this beer on Saturday indulge on a Sunday? I think it just warms them up to go and look for some more. There are many men who work all the week, and who do not get up until breakfast-time on Sunday. They get up then, and they have their breakfast; then they leave the old woman, as they call her, to cook the dinner, and they used to go for a stroll, and probably would have a couple of beers, and then come home. Then they would get a bottle of beer for dinner; but now they go out and when they do get into a house they simply gorge themselves, and become beasts for the rest of the day.
7879. And that is the man you say who would not have done that under the old system? Yes; that is what I wish to convey to you.
7880. Do you think very much bad liquor is sold? I do not know at all; I could not tell you.
7881. Mr. Withers.] In regard to the hour of opening in the morning, you say that there is a good hour's business lost between 5 and 6 o'clock? Yes.
7882. Do you not think that it is rather early for men to commence drinking before they go to work? I think if you give it to a man in moderation, and in the way he likes to take it, that he is less likely to become a soak or a sponge over it.
7883. Many men commence work now at 6 in the morning? I could not tell you now, for I do not get up that early, but at the time I have referred to Sussex-street was black with men going to Russell's.
7884. That was under the old system of ten hours. I fancy that men now commence work later in the morning? All the Corporation men commence early, and they were men who frequented my place.
7885. The hours, I think, are now from 6 to 4, and they make up the dinner-time. There was a great fight over the Bill with the view that these persons should have an opportunity for getting something before they go to work. Then with regard to market days, there was an attempt to fix special days for opening at a certain time, and to give certain houses near the fruit and other markets a special license; but it was objected to by other persons just as near and who would not get the same license? One man would have had as good a right to the privilege as another.
7886. But you think what you have described is considered to be a privation by a large section of the people? I do.
7887. Do you think there are many ill effects from men getting drink in the early hours of the morning? No; I do not think so.
7888. Do you not think that men getting drink at that time would run the risk of losing a quarter of a day's pay? I never knew one man to lose any time from it.
7889. President.] He takes this before breakfast, remember? Yes. I have known men to come from Redfern and Waterloo, and who have made it a point to come to my house for what they want; of course I do not want to say that I sell any better stuff than anybody else, but the men liked it, and they used to come for it.
7890. Mr. Withers.] Some publicans are more popular than others? Yes; but at the same time any man who gets a class of drink that does not take effect upon him will go a long way for it. 7891.

7891. President.] Was it beer or spirits for which they used to come? Spirits—principally rum.
7892. Mr. Withers.] This would be in the summer-time—the thirsty time I suppose? Yes.
7893. Now what do you think of the system of shouting—that is, one man standing treat for another;—do you think it induces to excessive drinking among the people? Oh, yes. Five men will go out, for instance, and one man wishes of course to be as good as another, and the consequence is that they all have five times as much drink as they otherwise would have.
7894. Consequently they have twenty-five drinks before they get home? It is according to what they can carry.
7895. Does that apply to all classes? It is according to what they spend.
7896. Persons consider themselves called upon, as a matter of honour, to respond when asked to drink with a friend? Well, they will not always drink so much; they will not always drink more than they want.
7897. But this system of shouting;—does it apply to all classes? No; more to the labouring classes.
7898. But to some extent all round—a friendly glass they call it? That is it, but it is amongst the working men.
7899. You think it tends in many cases to excessive drinking? Amongst working men and youngsters.
7900. Do you think that the youth of the country are becoming fond of drink, more so than they were? No, I do not think so.
7901. Do you think the age of sixteen is the proper age at which persons should be supplied with drink? I think so; but, as far as I am concerned, I would not give any boy of sixteen a drink.
7902. You made a remark just now about houses of ill-fame that are maintained in the way you describe by persons who are forced out of hotels at an early hour? I think the early closing drives them to these places; whereas if they could get what they wanted in a respectable hotel they would have their drink and then go home. They are turned out of the theatre at a quarter past 11, and if they could have a drink in a public-house they would have it and go home.
7903. How do these places of ill-fame become public? Well you would have no show of getting to them, but if you went with me or with anyone who knew them nobody would ask a question.
7904. But they get sufficiently public to be known to a certain class, and of course I suppose they are supported in that way? Well, in the first place, there are girls belonging to them; they, for instance, ride in the trams and they put a card into the men's hands; then the men call to see them; that is the preliminary proceeding.
7905. Do you not think that a man who was allowed to remain an hour later than 11 o'clock in an hotel would go more readily into these excesses? I do not think so.
7906. He would have more drink? That is all the more reason why he would go home.
7907. Mr. Hutchison.] All the more reason he ought to go home? And all the more reason why he would. Now when you see five or six gentlemen in a bar at a quarter past 11, you say, "Now boys, you must go home," and they say, "Damn it, don't turn us out"; but I say, "You must go, and if you profess to be a friend of mine you will go." Then they are turned out into the street, and someone of the crowd will suggest some other place, or a cabman may suggest a place. He will say, "I know a place where you can get a drink." Then he gets a fare, and he takes them there.
7908. Do you think that sort of thing applies to any large class of people? Much more than you think.
7909. To fairly steady family men? Men that you would be surprised to see frequenting these places.
7910. Do you not think that men who, though having a taste for extra indulgence of this kind, yet, having sons and daughters, would not, if they were asked to poll, give a vote on the question of closing and say that it is just as well to close the hotels early? I think they would say leave the houses open until 12 o'clock and this would not occur.
7911. Many men, very great drunkards, will always vote to reduce the facilities for getting drink? Yes, but when you try to keep anybody from anything you simply create a want, and they will have it if possible. I will tell you where I have had experience of it, probably more than most men in this country. I have provided picnics for parties of from 100 to 700 persons. There will be about 700 people at a picnic, and at these picnics you pay so much for your ticket, and that enables you to go to the bar and drink as much as you like and as often as you like; and yet it is a rare occurrence to see a drunken man or a drunken woman at these picnics.
7912. President.] Are you speaking of the Sir Joseph Banks' picnics? Yes, in some cases people will bring their own drink; in other instances the people come down there and go to work on sandwiches and so forth, with bottled ale, and porter, and so on, and there is a free bar serving out all day; and the people can take as much as they like. They then sit down to a dinner, and that is the only time at which I have known a man to get drunk—that is the working man. He will take four, or five, or six drinks; he has had, for instance, a drink of porter, which he is used to; but then he takes a glass of Colonial wine, or claret, or sometimes champagne, and it is too rich for his stomach, and he gets too much. Where there are only two or three toasts to drink, and the men have the free run of the bar it is the rarest occurrence to see a man drunk; but where a man is kept from it then he is driven to the drink. Sometimes it occurs that we have gatherings of this kind, three or four times a week, and the average number at each gathering is about 200 or 300; but we have had as many as 750, and they have had the right to take as much drink as ever they liked.
7913. When a man gets into a public-house on a Sunday I suppose he feels the instinct of taking his drink gluttonously;—is that your theory? That is it.
7914. The same man who, under ordinary circumstances, would be content with very much less? Yes; if he were not debarred from it.
7915. Mr. Withers.] You said that the Trade Defence Organization are pretty well defunct? Yes.
7916. They simply exist in name, but they make a big row at electioneering times? Well; they spend a good deal.
7917. In addition to their duties as citizens, they meet in the interests of the trade, do they not, to exercise their right as publicans? Yes.
7918. There is very little concern given to matters at ordinary times, but when election times come on there is great activity among them as a body? Quite so.
7919. And they support their brother publicans, and so on, in defending their business? Yes.
7920. Do you think there are too many public-houses? I do not think so. I think in this way:—If the people had what I consider a fair and just law for all men, some might consider their business would be gone, and they would have to get out of it.

Mr. F. Smith.

20 Sept., 1886.

- Mr. F. Smith, 7921. You prefer your Sunday's rest, do you not? I am now in a position to take it; but when I commenced business twenty-one years ago I wanted to do all I could. It was then all fish that came to the net.
- 20 Sept., 1886. 7922. Do you think there are people in the trade who, by serving on the Sunday, are simply actuated by a desire to meet the wants of their fellowmen? That I cannot say.
7923. You say it is so in your case; but in your early days you wished to work as hard as you could? Yes.
7924. It has been stated by a person out of the trade that, if the publicans were alive to their interests, they would have a very rigid understanding amongst themselves, to close for three months without any of them selling in any way—three months closing on Sunday—which would have the effect of creating a feeling of dissatisfaction amongst the people, and then of forcing the authorities to give them the Sunday opening? That is certainly my feeling.
7925. You think that would have the effect? Yes; I have taken a delight in refusing people. You know when the Act was altered we had an opinion from Mr. Salomons to the effect that a great injustice was being done us by the Government; that is, in taking our £30 and then robbing us of thirty hours a week. Mr. Salomon's opinion was that we could not have retrospective legislation, and that we could go on and sell. Several of us did so, and I amongst them. I received seventeen summonses for seventeen days, and they said I should be in more trouble. Then the others took fright and shut up, but I did not, for I had commenced to do a thing, and I was not doing it on my own opinion, but on that of Mr. Salomon's. They did not however carry out what they said they would do for the seventeen days. When the matter was in a kind of abeyance, I think at that time a few of them of little minds would have been glad to see me getting into some trouble. They said however I was doing what no other man could do. After that I thought that if everybody kept closed the law would have to be altered.
7926. President.] What was the upshot of the summonses? I was not fined. The police said I kept a respectable house, and Mr. Mackay showed that what I had been doing was not done in defiance of the law.
7927. Then you were not fined? No.
7928. Case dismissed? Yes.
7929. Mr. Hutchison.] You promised to discontinue it, did you not? I did.
7930. Mr. Withers.] You did not uphold the point taken by Mr. Salomon? No, the Court said I was wrong.
7931. President.] Which Court? The Court in King-street. There was a case stated.
7932. I should like to know what you think of the tied houses—the brewers' houses—do you think that is a system which is pernicious? I think it is against all trade in every shape, against good, honest trade.
7933. You think it is a bad thing? Yes, I do. A man who has got his £200, £300, or £400, as the case may be, goes along to a brewer and wants assistance for £600 or £700 more. He gets assistance from the brewer, and consequently he is tied up and contracts this liability. He has a lease made out, but it is the property of the brewer. The consequence is that he may lose his business and have to get out of it on the best terms he can. Then another comes in and the same thing is repeated. I do not think that at any time there were more brewers' houses than there are now.
7934. You think there are more brewers' houses now? Yes.
7935. And more brewing too? Yes; but I think that is a great boon to Sydney.
7936. Does the brewer sell spirits also? Some of them do, but people may drink beer now if they want it. There is no comparison at all between what beer is now and what it was.
7937. Mr. Roseby.] I understand you to say that restriction in the liquor traffic is a bad thing? I do.
7938. Do you not think that the publicans' business, as a rule (I am not speaking personally), is a very dangerous one? I do not. I think that where a publican's business is carried on in a straightforward, honest manner, it is a benefit to society generally.
7939. But do you think that drink is a good thing to take? That is a matter of opinion. I do not take it, or I may not take it for a week, and then I do, for I might go around to see those friends I talked about.
7940. Then you do not think the drink traffic at all dangerous? I do not.
7941. Now how many have you known that have gone to destruction through drink? I do not know of anybody.
7942. None at all? No. I have known men who have failed in their business, who have got no mind nor heart of their own and have flown to drink, but these are not men for public-houses—they are men who go to the bottle.
7943. I mean men who have taken to the bottle and have been landed in gaol, and their families reduced to ruin or sent to destruction? I do not know of any.
7944. Do you not think that drink produces a great amount of crime? No.
7945. Do you think it produces a great amount of pauperism? No.
7946. Do you not think it a dangerous thing for a man to start drinking rum early in the morning? No more than for a man who can keep a bottle at home and take it there.
7947. But the man who keeps a bottle at home and drinks there, do you not think he is following a dangerous habit? I do not think so. A man has got his faculties about him and is a free agent, and if he considers that a stimulant is a good thing for him, why should he not take it?
7948. Do you not think that if a man takes a lot of drink he is liable to get into a good deal of trouble? Drink acts very differently on different men. It makes some men fools, and others very cunning.
7949. Have you known a family to take as much as 3 gallons home on a Saturday night? No.
7950. I thought you said you have known 3 gallons to go home on a Saturday night? That is only proportionately to what used to be sold. What I wanted to convey to you was that if a man can come with his jug or bottle on a Sunday and get his quart of beer and take it home fresh from the cask, he would much rather do it than get it in on Saturday night. If you have a quick draught people will always frequent the house.
7951. President.] To carry out your theory, as far as I can understand it, you would have absolute free trade in drink? What do you mean; all day on Sunday?
7952. I mean any time. Let anybody sell drink who likes? I think that would be better if every shop were a public-house; I do not think there would be any noise about it in any shape or form.
7953. Mr. Roseby.] I gather from what you say that you do not regard the business, or habit of drinking, as dangerous? No; I do not.
7954. Then you would give people a voice in saying whether they will have a public-house in their neighbourhood or not? Well let the people say whether they will or not, and if they will not, a man would simply take his property and go, but I do not think that the people should have the right to say so.
7955. Then you do not treat the public-house business as a peculiar one, nor the establishment of it anywhere as dangerous? I do not.

7956. You do not think that the young people of this country are given to drink? No; no more than they would be in any other. Mr. F. Smith.
20 Sept., 1886.
7957. You are the proprietor of "Sir Joseph Banks' Hotel";—are you not? I own the property.
7958. But you do not keep the public-house? Another man has the license. I do not live on the property.
7959. Have you known any young people there the worse for drink? I have seen 3,000 or 4,000 people out there on a holiday.
7960. But have you seen a large number there under the influence of drink? Not a large number. It has been the opinion of people from other colonies that they have never seen such large numbers of people together, and at the same time less quarrelling and drinking. I have had as many as 4,000 people there at a time, indulging in foot-races and so on.
7961. Then what has been stated about the conduct of the young people going home in the tram-cars is not correct? It is not correct.
7962. You have heard of it, have you not? Yes.
7963. Have you ever had wives or sons come to you to ask you not to give men drink? I have heard of one instance of a person going to the "Burrangong Hotel" to ask that a man may not have drink.
7964. President.] Are you aware that there are many clubs in the city? I am aware of it, but in my opinion they are perfectly legitimate.
7965. Mr. Withers.] There is a great distinction between the different classes of houses. I suppose you are willing to admit that there are houses which are not conducted properly? I think so.
7966. And you know that there are houses that are nuisances in the trade? Certainly, and when a man keeping a house like that comes for a license the authorities ought to have sufficient power to stop him.
7967. You think that is an evidence why the authorities should have control over the public-house business. You are not against restriction being held over houses of that sort? No; but then in the case of grocers for instance, they may sell half-a-dozen bottles of pickles to your wife, and she takes it home as whisky.
7968. But does not a house which is a nuisance bring discredit on the whole trade. Suppose that there is a house where it is understood objectionable persons are engaged, would it not be a great injury to the surrounding neighbourhood if it were known that people were allowed to congregate there in large numbers. Would it not be better if they were distributed? Yes; but the law provides measures for abolishing nuisances of any kind.
7969. Then you say that that law should be applied to a badly conducted house? To any house. Wine-shops are very bad. I know, for instance, an Italian house, where you will find twenty or thirty men stopping every man they see.
7970. Do you say that gentlemen have expressed their surprise at the few cases of drunkenness which have occurred in connection with your picnics? Yes; and not only that, but with regard to there being no quarrelling and fighting.
7971. Do you not think that these gentlemen have seen very differently in other parts of the world? Well if you have a large congregation of 5,000, even if they are clergymen, they will fight.

FRIDAY, 24 SEPTEMBER, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,	G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.,
T. COLLS, Esq., J.P.,	J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.,
A. HUTCHISON, Esq.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. James Henry Rainford called in, sworn, and examined:—

7972. President.] Your name? James Henry Rainford.
7973. You have been in the public-house business for some time, I think? Yes; father and son for fully thirty years. Mr.
J.H. Rainford.
24 Sept., 1886.
7974. Speaking for yourself, how long have you been in the business? I have held a license for about fourteen years altogether.
7975. In what houses? The "Royal Hotel" in Woolloomooloo, "Pier Hotel," Manly Beach, and, at the present time, the "Cambridge Club Hotel."
7976. You are familiar then with the condition of things in respect to the drink traffic before the present Licensing Acts were passed? Yes, I am pretty familiar with it.
7977. Are you of opinion that the new Licensing Acts have been generally beneficial in their results? As far as the community is concerned?
7978. Generally. As to the community, not as to any class? Well I do not think that the new Act has been so beneficial as the old—not right through, or generally.
7979. For what reason? Well, in the first place the 11 o'clock closing has in my opinion been the means of having the Act transgressed where it would not have been, and was not with the 12 o'clock license. People come from all kinds of amusements at night, and they almost insist on admittance, 11 o'clock being such an early hour; whereas with the 12 o'clock system they did not do so. Of course I am speaking of what I have found myself.
7980. Is your house in the neighbourhood of any place of public amusement? No, but within a reasonable walk.
7981. There is no place of public entertainment near you? No, not nearer than the "Gaiety," or the "Standard."
7982. But I suppose great numbers of people pass by? Yes.
7983. Then you think that to persons frequenting the theatres and other places of public entertainment the new Act has been somewhat oppressive? I do.
7984. That is on the week days? That is on the week days.
7985. How about Sunday closing;—what is your opinion of the effect of Sunday closing? Well I really believe that if we had some stated hour during which we could open on a Sunday it would be much better than closing altogether. I do not believe publicans would have the temptation laid before them to sell if they had the certainty of a particular hour. 7986.

- Mr. J.H. Rainford.
24 Sept., 1886.
7986. You mean they would not be tempted to violate the law? Yes, to violate the law.
7987. But I presume the majority of them do that now? I dare say the majority of the publicans do.
7988. I suppose you yourself do not? I do not to any extent. It is generally only in urgent cases, but I have done so openly.
7989. Did you do that at the time when it was a question amongst the publicans whether they could not legally keep their houses open? I did do that.
7990. But on Mr. Salomon's opinion? No; I did it because others did it; it was simply a test case.
7991. Do you consider that the publican loses a large proportion of his week-day business if he sacrifices the Sunday trade—that is, if he refuses liquor on a Sunday to any of his customers? I do, sir, honestly.
7992. To a large extent? To a very large extent.
7993. We have been told by several publicans that to offend a few good customers on a Sunday is to offend a very large number of customers during the week days;—is that true? I really believe so; I have found it myself.
7994. Have you lost custom? I have.
7995. And these customers, presumably, have gone where they can get their Sunday drinks? They have told me so. I have questioned them, "How is it you have passed my door?" and they say, "You are too damned proud to serve me on Sunday, and we go where we can get it."
7996. What class of persons would that be? The higher class.
7997. Men going to and fro to their work? Men I should call Government officials, respectable clerks, and men of standing.
7998. Were those who said what you have just mentioned, lushingtons? No.
7999. Sober men? Moderate men.
8000. Men you have not seen the worse for liquor? No.
8001. They do not belong to the inebriate class? Far from it.
8003. Do you mean any single hour? Such as from 1 to 3.
8004. But you say that might not suit others? It might not.
8005. Then is there no consensus of opinion with regard to this? What they really want is from 1 to 3, and from 8 to 10.
8006. On Sundays? Yes.
8007. And on business days do they ask for an extension of time? Well we did ask. I am one of the Vice-presidents of the Amalgamated Licensed Victuallers' Society. That is how it came from us. They asked the hours I have mentioned; and it was carried that we should ask for them—these being thought the best hours for us.
8008. Mr. Hutchison.] I think, if I remember rightly, the association desired more than two openings on a Sunday? They did at first. I know they asked for it, and it was to be put on the table of the House,—1 to 3 and 8 to 10 at night the hours were originally.
8009. Then you do not agree with the early morning? I do.
8010. You think, speaking for yourself, that one hour on the Sunday would be sufficient? Honestly I think there would be less drunkenness if people had a better chance to get what they wanted; they would not steal into a house. When they do get in now the difficulty is to get them out.
8011. But in your evidence you said you would be in favour of one hour? No, I did not say that. One opening I say would suit me—from 1 to 3. There is a big jug trade in my neighbourhood.
8012. Do you think there is a general desire on the part of the public to have the houses open for an hour or two on Sunday? I do.
8013. Believing that, would you be prepared to allow people to vote on that question? You mean the body of the people? Yes, oh certainly.
8014. Would you broaden the vote, and let them vote as to how many public-houses there should be, or whether there should be any in a district? The local option vote. No; I believe in local option to a very great extent, but not altogether.
8015. I will put it in two ways: Do you believe in allowing the people to say how many public-houses there should be in their midst? Yes, in reason I do.
8016. Do you believe there are too many public-houses now? I believe there are a few too many.
8017. Will you give us an idea as to how many they could be reduced by; we have over 800 in the city of Sydney? That is a question I should not like to answer.
8018. We have had it answered here by people in your own trade. The opinion of your Association is that they might be reduced by 150? Well, I would not like to say, because my experience is confined to going from the "Cambridge Club" down to Thompson's, the wine and spirit merchant, and then back home. I do not think I get into Clarence-street once in a year; and I don't think I should be answering honestly to answer that question.
8019. Do you think there is much law breaking in connection with the early closing on the week days? I do; that is, you mean actually serving after 11 o'clock at night? Yes. Yes, I do; I am certain of it.
8020. Would you propose any remedy to prevent the selling on Sunday during prohibited hours, provided you had a couple of hours given you; you say the law is broken now; what guarantee should we have that it will not be broken in the future? I think if we had some hours on the Sunday there would be less chance of people breaking the law; they would know they had these hours to go by.
8021. Then you think it is the people who cause the publican to break the law? Yes; I do think so. I do not believe any publican cares to open on a Sunday.
8022. Then if the publicans as a body desire to close on a Sunday, do you not think that if they unitedly closed they would succeed in overpowering the public? If they were united.
8023. Then they are not united? No; I do not think I shall live to see their unanimity.
8024. You have a powerful organization, have you not? Yes.
8025. What is its strength; are you 500 out of 800? I should think so.
8026. And I suppose you would be the most respectable portion of the trade? There is no doubt about it.
8027. It is a wonder that your association does not take the matter up? They are so far apart. One friend friend brings to the house another friend, and that friend brings another, and so it is; and if you offend one you offend the others.

8028. Has your association fairly and honestly tried with their own associates to get this law observed—the closing on Sunday? I do not think they have really gone to work to have the places closed on Sunday.

8029. President.] I presume your house is not a tied house? No, not at all; I am a free man.

8030. What is your opinion of the system of brewers' houses;—what is your opinion upon its tendency on the trade? I can only go by hearsay; I have never been under a brewer in my life; I have always been happy enough to be out of their hands; you have to take what they send you.

8031. Is it fair to say that the brewers' houses retail worse liquor than the others;—is it right to say that their beer or spirits or wines are of inferior quality to those in other houses? I should not think it is as good, because I reckon I can buy with ready cash better than a brewer can send me; I think that is only feasible.

8032. Are there many houses in the city under spirit merchants? Not to my knowledge; I think the firm I deal with has not a house at all.

8033. But it is said that if the brewer supplies inferior liquors there is nothing to prevent the publican from sending them back? Oh, you can send them back again—especially ales.

8034. I mean in regard to tied houses? Oh, they always send their beer back—that is always understood.

8035. But do they send their other supplies back? Not to my knowledge; but never having been under a brewer I could not say.

8036. Then I apprehend that you think the system is not one that you could approve of? I was at the "Pier Hotel" for a time, and for the first five months I was there Burrows & Gleeson held the house. They said I could go to the house, and have it for a certain amount of money and try it. They held a certain amount of money of mine, and they said, "We will give you a certain amount to manage it for us." I did that, and I had not the least difficulty with them; they sent me their beer, but when it was not good I used to telegraph up and get it from Marshall, or wherever else it was best; but I found that their spirits were very good at that time; whether they thought I was a good judge or not I do not know, but I could find no fault with the firm at that time.

8037. Is it within your knowledge, that inferior liquors are largely sold in the city and suburbs? I have been given to understand so in some houses where they sell for 3d.

8038. You think that a 3d. drink is of inferior quality? No honest man can sell a good article for 3d.

8039. Not beer? You said spirits.

8040. Suppose it is a smaller quantity? They would not take a smaller quantity. A working man likes his glass pretty well primed, and if he does not get it he will go somewhere else. Since the "split" business has come in—the small lemonade and a "dash"—you lose money at it by selling it for 3d. It costs you 1½d. a bottle for the lemonade, and then there is the spirits.

8041. Mr. Withers.] You get nothing else for the "dash"? No; and it has been brought in by the small houses. A man will come in for a glass of beer, and he puts down 3d., and he will say, "Put in a 'dash' of porter with it," and you must do it.

8042. President.] The character of the Colonial beer has been much improved of late, has it not? Wonderfully.

8043. Has it had the effect of knocking the imported article out of the market largely? I do not sell as much English ale as I did.

8044. What is your custom chiefly, a beer custom or a general custom? A general custom. In my 6d. bar it is more bottled ale and brandy and whisky.

8045. Then you have two bars? I have a bar level with the street, and then I have another bar above that.

8046. One 3d. and the other a 6d. bar? Yes.

8047. Is your house, in respect of accommodation, a large house? There is not a better in the Colony.

8048. I mean in respect of the number of rooms? It is.

8049. Have you any number of inmates? I have, I think, at the present time, forty-three or forty-five, besides servants; say forty-three for certain.

8050. Did I understand you to say that you were in favour of limited local option? I am in favour of local option to a very great extent, but not of full local option.

8051. The Licensed Victuallers' Association, of which you are now vice-president, is it still active? Yes.

8052. I mean the amalgamated association? Yes, I mean the amalgamated; there is another consisting of about four.

8053. And how many does the other consist of? About 500.

8054. Is that the association of which Mr. Weale is the secretary? Yes.

8055. President.] Suppose a limited sale on Sunday were granted by the Legislature, would you accept on the other hand more stringent regulations? Certainly I should.

8056. Of course you know that the law is now violated with comparative impunity? I have not the slightest doubt of it.

8057. Now do you really think that the community would be more temperate if they had power of purchasing drink on Sunday? I do honestly.

8058. Has your Saturday trade been larger since the new Act came into force? Yes.

8059. Is that what you go by. Do you consider that the fact of selling larger quantities on Saturday for Sunday's consumption shows that if you opened on Sunday there would be less consumed? Yes; I believe the public would sooner have it on Sunday than take it away on Saturday night.

8060. Do you think there is more drinking on Sunday now? I do.

8061. Then it would be to your advantage not to open on Sunday? Yes; but we would not have the annoyance of these people battering our doors.

8062. Do you not do a large trade on Saturday in flasks of spirits? Yes, fairly large.

8063. What do you ascribe the extra importation of flasks of spirits to? There is an increased demand. People take away the flasks now on Saturday night. Where I now sell thirty flasks I only sold one formerly. The greater part of it is bought for Sunday consumption. These flasks consist of brandy and whiskey as a rule. There are no flasks of rum that I know of.

8064. Mr. Withers.] As far as I can gather from gentlemen like yourself in the publican's business, that with regard to Sunday they would prefer that day wholly to themselves? If they possibly could, but I do not think it would be possible.

8065.

Mr.
J.H. Rainford.
24 Sept., 1886.

- Mr. J.H. Rainford.
24 Sept., 1886.
8065. Do you think it reasonable to imagine that if the Government liked to put the law into force 800 persons could set the law at defiance? It is not the 800 people who defy the law but the number of people who try to make them break it.
8066. If you were all consolidated in one body could you not insist upon the law being observed? I do not think it is possible.
8067. At present, then, you are really driven to working on Sunday? It is not with any very great desire to meet the wants of our fellow-men. I have a number of lodgers, and I have to serve them, and it is surprising the quantity of friends these lodgers have, especially on Sunday. I have said to them, "For God's sake do not annoy me with your friends," and they will ask for bottles of brandy which they take up stairs. I have to keep my barman one Sunday and my barmaid the next to serve the lodgers on Sunday, and lodgers invariably have friends. While the lodgers are there they bring in somebody.
8068. You think it is thoroughly impracticable to carry out the law as it stands? I do not think it ever will be carried out unless you give them a certain amount of time on Sunday, and then make the law as stringent as you like.
8069. Is there a violation of the law after 11 o'clock? Yes, I am sure of it. The thing is to get the people out. You would not believe the trouble we have to get them out.
8070. Do you not think it desirable to get them out at that hour? I do not think it is too late.
8071. You believe that drinking to excess is injurious? Yes.
8072. And do you not think the people should go out of public-houses at 11 o'clock? Well, they will not go, but keep hanging about, waiting until the police go away, and if I will not serve them they go elsewhere.
8073. The class of people you refer to as troublesome in that respect are not the general public, but men seized with an insatiable taste for drink? No; they are very few.
8074. Do you think a large section of the community are disappointed if they cannot get a drink after 11 o'clock? Yes; and if they do not get it from me they get it elsewhere, they even get the help of the police to obtain it.
8075. Do you think the system of shouting induces excessive drinking? There is not the slightest doubt of it. You very seldom see a man take a glass of drink by himself. It is considered infra dig.
8076. That applies to all classes? Yes; there are very few exceptions.
8077. I suppose that persons in the trade regard people who take too much drink with as much abhorrence as persons outside the trade do? Nothing can give me greater abhorrence, and there is nothing I would sooner discharge my servants for than serving a man who is under the influence of drink.
8078. In what class of houses is the habit of excessive drinking acquired? In the side houses in the more disreputable parts of the city.
8079. It has been said here that the habit was generally acquired in high-class houses, like your own and the Oxford? I do not think so.
8080. It has been said that the higher class houses are the more dangerous? It may be so, but I doubt it.
8081. You say that the law is broken a good deal after 11 o'clock. Do you think there is a more excessive consumption going on after 11 o'clock than when the houses were open later? I think there is a great deal more about 11 o'clock and 12 o'clock at night than there was when the publicans were licensed to keep open till 12 o'clock.

Mr. Benjamin Palmer called in, sworn, and examined:—

- Mr. B. Palmer.
24 Sept., 1886.
8082. President.] Do you keep a public-house now? No; twenty years since.
8083. But you have been for a long time in the trade? From boyhood until twenty years ago.
8084. Did you not have a house at the corner of Pitt and King Streets? Yes.
8085. A place of large resort I think, especially for beer at night? Yes; it was very well patronized generally.
8086. I suppose, although you have given up connection with the trade, you still keep up your familiarity with it? Yes, occasionally.
8087. You know what is going on? Only in a superficial way.
8088. It is thought by some people that the community generally has been giving way of late years to more intoxication than formerly; that there is more consumption of drink, and that the drinking to excess is larger than formerly? I am not in a position to say; I do not know.
8089. Do you think the new Acts have been at all beneficial in their operation? No.
8090. You know that they have shortened the hours on business days, and closed the houses the whole of Sunday;—has that been a reform or not? I think not.
8091. Will you give us the reason? Well, I believe that people make their provision by supplying themselves, say on Saturday, for consumption on Sunday, and it also tempts the trade to break the law on account of the restrictions.
8092. When the publican violates the law who is his tempter? I imagine the public.
8093. You do not think it is he himself that opens his bar in order to obtain some profit? No; I think it is a matter of competition.
8094. We have been told by persons in the trade that the publican was practically obliged to violate the law in order to prevent his customer leaving him on the ordinary days of the week? There is not the slightest doubt in my mind that that is the result.
8095. Are you of opinion that Sunday prohibition has increased the consumption of drink? I could not say that.
8097. The system of brewers' houses has given rise to much discussion. What is your opinion of that system. Do you think it tends to deteriorate or ameliorate the trade. For example, do you think it has a tendency to induce the publican to keep worse liquors when he has a tied house? I could not say that; but my own impression is, that with the amount of competition with the brewers it does deteriorate the status of a man's house. A man, say he is going to take a place for £1,000,—well, perhaps he has £400 or £500 and the brewer or spirit merchant advances the rest on certain terms, holding a bill of sale, and then the publican has to deal with him. I do not say that they take any advantage of the provisions of the bill of sale, but it places a man more in the light of a servant to the brewer than a man in an independent position.
- 8098.

Mr.
B. Palmer.

24 Sept., 1886.

8098. Then do you think that practically he must take what is sent to him? If he does not he knows the result.

8099. Do you think the value of good-wills has been generally inflated by brewers having an interest in the house? No, I do not think so.

8100. Can you give any explanation of the extraordinary value of good-wills? I think it is the restrictions placed upon the issue of licenses.

8101. Then if there were free trade in liquors you think the values would recede? Undoubtedly.

8102. Are you in favour of any form of local option? I am not.

8103. Are you adverse altogether? I do not see why a publican should pay any license any more than a bootmaker, grocer, or any other business man.

8104. I suppose the reason is that the authorities believe that much trouble is caused through drink, and much crime is committed under the influence of drink, and that in some cases some of these houses are the resort of criminal characters;—do you not think these reasons sufficient? I think if there was only one house where there are four now the customers of the other three would go to the one.

8105. Then you do not think that the reduction of houses is followed by a reduction in drink? No, I think not; I think the extension of licenses to grocers has been a mistake and the means of introducing drink into private houses which otherwise would never have taken place.

8106. Are you aware that much inferior liquor is vendid in the city and suburbs? No, I am not; but I have been informed that the drink has in several instances been analysed and the only fault that they found with it was that it was too weak.

8107. No noxious ingredients? No.

8108. Do you think the number of houses is in excess of the demand? I could not say; of course the city has increased to that extent that a large number of hotels are devoted to lodgers and boarding houses.

8109. Do you think that is a satisfactory result? Well visitors must go somewhere.

8110. But there is a particular class of people who are attracted to the public-house when the publican has more accommodation than he knows what to do with? Yes, he lets his place out to boarders at so much a week. That is the result of the new Act.

8111. Do you think it is a good result or a bad one? I have heard that under the new Act they were obliged to add so many rooms to their places which were not necessary for the requirements of the locality, and they let the rooms furnished to parties in order to recoup themselves for the expenditure.

8112. Personally I suppose you would like to see all public-houses raised in the standard of character? Most decidedly.

8113. Holding that view how do you think it could be done. We know that it is generally acknowledged that on all sides, especially in Sydney, there is an absence of first-class hotels? Yes; it is a common complaint that a stranger cannot come here with his family unless he specially gets accommodation beforehand.

8114. If you have a given number of houses can you tell us what would be a reasonable and proper course to adopt for their regulation? No; I believe in the system of letting everybody do the best he can.

8115. Then you believe in free trade in liquors? Yes; I believe it would be a step in the right direction if licenses were abolished altogether. For some years I acted as Secretary to the old association some twenty-five years ago, and we brought the matter under the notice of our present Chief Justice, who was not at the bar then, and he laid our case before the Government, and I believe a Bill was drafted for us and laid before Sir Charles (then Mr.) Cowper, and it met with his approval. The only objection Mr. Cowper had with it was in reference to having a lamp over the door. It passed through the Assembly, and became law.

8116. That was the old tipping Act? Yes, it was called Driver's Act. It was afterwards repealed. We formerly worked under Plunkett's Act, where it was said in the application that the applicant was a free man, and his wife a free woman. And the question was often put whether the man was living with his wife or not. We thought we had got above that sort of thing, and the Act was repealed, and a new measure passed, with the exception of a lamp over the door.

8117. You know what led to the repeal of the old Act? I believe I do.

8118. What was it? Policemen demanding admittance at any hour of the night they liked.

8119. Was it not the constitution of the Licensing Bench? No; it was the power given to policemen to demand admittance at any hour of the night. I know it, because I was a victim to the circumstance, and I determined to put a stop to it, and I succeeded.

8120. Then you do not believe in any regulation? No; I would let them sell grog as they liked. I have seen so many evils of the law, and seen tried so many plans that have failed, that I think free-trade ought to be tried.

8121. Of course you know that there is hardly any place in the world where they have free-trade in liquor? I think so. I think there is one method that ought to be introduced. People will drink and if they cannot get it by one means they will by another. I think the introduction of Colonial wine in every possible way would be the means of doing away with a great deal of drunkenness.

8122. We have evidence here that there is more drunkenness in Colonial wine-shops than is generally suspected, and that it is caused by these people selling spirits; that the class of houses is low and the keepers not men of good character? But that does not apply to the wine. Of course if they sell grog under the guise of Colonial wine it cannot be helped.

8123. Is it your opinion that the shortening of the hours and the prohibition of Sunday selling has led to an increased consumption of liquor? I could not say that.

8124. Are you aware that a new trade in flasks has set in since the passing of the Licensing Act? I do not know that; I have never heard of it. I have been told that there is a great trade done in flasks, and generally speaking from what I have heard it is very inferior liquor.

8125. Are you aware that there is much doctoring of liquor by professional doctors? I do not know.

8126. And the importation of essences? No; I am quite ignorant of that.

8127. Are you dissatisfied with the constitution of the Licensing Bench? Decidedly; there are so many erratic judgments given occasionally.

8128. Do you think drunkenness is a crime? I cannot answer that question.

- Mr. B. Palmer.
24 Sept., 1886.
8129. Would you be more inclined to treat it as a crime than as a form of mental aberration? I would treat it as a form of mental aberration.
8130. You would treat him rather as a patient than a criminal? Yes. There are some people I have known who for months have kept away from drink, but something upset them, and they go on nobblerising until they are pulled up again.
8131. We have been told by some leading members of temperance societies that there is always hope for a man however confirmed he may be, but never for a woman? Yes; they will pull up for two or three months or years and break out again.
8132. Would you allow the magistrates instead of sending a prisoner charged with drunkenness to gaol or fining him to send him in the case of repeated acts—that is when he appears as an habitual drunkard—to an asylum? I would send him to an asylum. I believe myself that in some cases the tendency to drink runs in families.
8133. You know that out of the thousands of apprehensions for drunkenness from year to year a very large percentage consists of old offenders? Yes.
8134. Who make a constant circuit of the gaol? Yes.
8135. Mr. Hutchison.] You are not aware that free-trade has been tried in Great Britain? No.
8136. In the city of Liverpool the magistrates tried the experiment of giving anybody a license at a small rate? I am not aware of that.
8137. Suppose Sunday-closing were possible do you not think it would improve the condition of things in the city. Do you not think it would be an advantage to the entire community if the law could be enforced? I hardly know how to answer that question. If everybody was virtuous we should not require police, judges, or gaols.
8138. Supposing the law were successfully enforced, do you not think it would be an advantage to the community? I daresay it would, but at the same time I can not see why people who feel inclined to have beer on Sunday should not have the same privilege as persons who can keep their own liquor, or who belong to clubs.
8139. You think there ought to be free-trade and yet you object to grocers' licenses. That is in the direction of free-trade? I believe that there is a lot of grog that gets into private families that would not get in if grocers had not the privilege of selling. I believe the more restrictions you have in the sale of liquor the more the public will have it; and as to the Sunday trading, I believe there is just as much now as ever there was—I believe more.
8140. Mr. Roseby.] You would put a public-house business, knowing it as you do, on exactly the same footing as a bootseller or grocer? I did not say that.
8141. Do you know that selling drink has always been regarded as a dangerous business in its effects upon the community? Yes; and the more you hamper it the more dangerous it will be. The more restrictions you put upon a thing the more desirous the public become to get it, and thus they break the law. No doubt grog will have evil effects, but I contend that if people feel inclined to have grog they will have it, and if you shut up three houses out of four, I do not believe that the quantity of drink sold is lessened one tittle, because the customers of the three go to the one.
8142. Then you do not think that increasing the facilities for drink increases the consumption? Not at all.
8143. You know that drink is largely associated with the crime of the Colony? I believe that to a certain extent, but we generally find that generally the men who commit crimes, such as forgery, &c., do not drink. They have to keep their brains about them.
8144. I am speaking of violence, robbery, murder, and crimes of that sort? I have no doubt it has the effect of increasing the crime of the country, and the question is which is the best way to get rid of it. Shutting up the public-houses would not.
8145. Mr. Hutchison.] Would not absolute prohibition carry it out? I cannot swallow that.
8146. Mr. Roseby.] The drink business has always been regarded as exceptionally dangerous, and legislated for accordingly? Yes.
8147. As an alderman, you believe in doing everything for the good of the community? Yes; and we do it if we can get a chance.
8148. But you believe in free-trade in drink and are opposed to restrictions? Yes; so many schemes have been suggested, nearly every one of which has proved a failure, that I think free-trade ought to be tried, and then the best supplier would get the best customers, and the other houses would have to shut up.
8149. Mr. Withers.] You must admit that it is a class of business which nearly every nation and country considers that the State should exercise some supervision over? Yes.
8150. Do you not admit that excessive drinking contributes very largely to serious crimes? I cannot admit that when I know nothing at all about the excessive drinking of the community. From what I have seen at places where an exceptional number of our fellow-citizens meet—cricket-matches, races, and other sports—I do not think there is excessive drinking. As far as I have had an opportunity of judging, our citizens ought to be congratulated on their sobriety.
8151. Have you not known men destroyed by excessive drinking? No doubt about it. Everybody in the community must know that. I have known more than one and they would have grog under any circumstances.
8152. Would you think that 93 per cent. of the inmates of our gaols and asylums are there indirectly through excessive drinking? I could not say. I am under the impression that Dr. Norton Manning in his report says that many cases in the asylums were attributed to drink but that it was not so.
8153. We have it on record from Mr. Read, the Governor of the Gaol, that 99 per cent. of the prisoners in Darlinghurst Gaol were there directly and indirectly through drink. But then he amended his statement by saying it was 93 per cent.? I could not tell.
8154. We have also had evidence from long-sentenced prisoners who have brought it to about 85 per cent. Do you think that an unreasonable per centage? I cannot answer that because I do not know.
8155. Do you think excessive drinking necessitates the keeping up of a large Police Force and gaols and pauper institutions? I do not know. No doubt we have to have an increased number of police on account of the evils of drink.
8156. And those who indulge in excessive drinking have to be looked after by the State? Yes.
8157. And the police have to be paid by the State? Yes.

8158. And seeing that the publican costs this to the State is it not a proper thing that he should be licensed and his character inquired into? I do not think so. I was very intimate with the late John Bowie Wilson for many years; there was no man in the country who was more strict in reference to drink; and we often used to have chats about it; and it was through him that the desire was first impressed upon my mind to do away with licenses. He often told me if he had his will he would throw the trade open.
8159. Mr. Roseby.] Was not his object to so disgust the people that a radical change would be called for? I do not know, but he impressed it upon my mind so strongly that I have come to the conclusion that we ought to try it.
8160. Mr. Withers.] Do you not consider it a compliment to persons getting licenses that they should be called upon as auctioneers are to find some persons to speak as to their respectability? I do not know; it might be to an auctioneer.

B. Palmer.

MONDAY, 27 SEPTEMBER, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,	J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.,
T. COLLS, Esq., J.P.,	G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.,
A. HUTCHISON, Esq.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Charles W. Roberts called in, sworn, and examined:—

8161. President.] You have been many years in the business of a publican? Thirty years on and off.
8162. In the city? Yes wholly in the city.
8163. And in the same position as now? No; I first kept a house in Elizabeth-street for five years, and upon giving that up I went to the corner of George and Market streets.
8164. The house, I presume, is not one which lays itself open for the accommodation of the public in the ordinary way of an hotel? No, but everything is in readiness, but it is never availed of by the public.
8165. I suppose it is perhaps the largest resort in the city with those who are particular about having a good glass of beer or good liquors? I think it is one of the largest.
8166. With regard to the first assumption underlying our Commission, namely, that there has been an increase in the drinking habits of the colonists, do you think we are more addicted to habits of intemperance now than we have been hitherto? I think not.
8167. Are you a native of the Colony? Yes.
8168. Are your fellow natives, or people of the Colony generally, more drunken now than at any other interval—say ten years ago or twenty? Drunkenness prevailed in a greater ratio forty years ago than it does now in proportion to the population.
8169. Take your memory back to 1880? Well, the population has materially increased since then.
8170. Now, allowing for an increase of population, do you think there has been a disproportionate increase in drunkenness? No; I do not think so; it is rather a difficult question to answer. There is a great deal more liquor consumed and more business done than six years ago.
8171. But is there more liquor consumed per head of the population? I do not think so, but I have no data to go upon.
8172. But from such data as a man who goes about a good deal, and uses his eyes and ears, would have, do you think people are more addicted to intemperance now than they were six years ago? I think not.
8173. You do not think they have been made more intemperate by the prohibition of Sunday opening. Do you think that has had a converse effect to that which was intended? I cannot say that, but I do not think so.
8174. You know we have tried to close the houses on Sunday? Yes; but I think it would be the wiser plan to open between 1 and 3 on Sunday.
8175. You think first of all that there has been no disproportionate increase in intemperance? Yes; I do not think there has.
8176. And you are also of opinion that the Licensing Acts which were intended to regulate the traffic, and decrease intemperance, have had a converse or contrary effect, and have increased it? I do not think that. I cannot see it.
8177. On Saturdays is there not a very large sale of drink in your house? Yes; there is.
8178. Will you tell me whether on Saturdays the off-business is not very much larger than it used to be under the old law? I think it is; but of course the population has increased very much, and therefore the consumption would be greater.
8179. Then you do not think the extra consumption is to be accounted for by the closing of public-houses on Sunday? No. I should say that people knowing they cannot get any drink on Sunday would naturally get it on Saturday night.
8180. We have been told by persons in the trade that the effect of closing public-houses on Sunday has been to compel a very large number of people to take home quantities of liquor on Saturday which they would not otherwise have done, for consumption on Sunday. Is that your experience or not? I cannot say; I never took any notice.
8181. Have you had any opportunity of comparing the Saturday's takings lately with the takings five or six years ago? Of course Saturday's takings are considerably greater than upon any other day of the week. And they are greater than they were before the Act came into force.
8182. Is it not a fact that your traffic is a large casual traffic and does not depend so much upon persons living in your neighbourhood? To a great extent.
8183. Then it is the casual people; that is to say, the business people? Yes, just in the same way as the customers in a grocer's shop may be.
8184. Then you are not able to recognise any large increase in the Saturday sales which you can ascribe to the fact of people taking their Sunday's allowance home on Saturday? I am not aware of it.
8185. Are you in favour of the Sunday-closing law? I am, and I always observed it all the time I lived in George-street, and never opened or sold anything on the Sunday.

Mr. C. W.
Roberts.
27 Sept., 1886.

Mr. C. W.
Roberts.
27 Sept., 1886.

8186. Was that under the old law? Yes.

8187. When you could open? Yes, but I did not.

8188. Then this Sunday-closing law has your sympathy? To a certain extent. I think it would be exercising a wise discretion to allow the houses to be open between 1 and 3 o'clock.

8189. You do not mean your own? No, but if a publican refused to supply me with my dinner beer I would say, "Very well, I will go and get it elsewhere."

8190. You would boycott him? People are accustomed to have their beer and if they are prevented at one place they will go elsewhere.

8191. Do you think the "working-man's beer" is a sterling honest cry, or an honest demand upon the part of the working man himself? I do. If they were able to get it I think it would put a stop to a lot of illicit work going on.

8192. You believe that a large number of the artizan class—not habitual drunkards—want their Sunday beer and ought to get it? Yes, and they look upon it as a privation in not being able to get it.

8193. And the publican looks upon it as a privation if he is not allowed to supply it? Well, I do not know. It does not affect me.

8194. Do you think there is a bonâ fides in this demand that the man who is accustomed to beer for his dinner should be able to get it fresh on Sunday? I have no doubt there is. Let me explain: If I am a man of means I can lay in my stock for the Sabbath, whereas the working man lives from hand to mouth, and has only a few shillings to pay his expenses, and cannot participate in the indulgence.

8195. Your argument is one of equity? Yes, and it would prevent infractions of the law. You know the risks that people run in order to do business, and if people cannot get it in one place they will get it at another, and the police cannot be at every door.

8196. You know that a very large proportion indeed of the publicans violate the law? I am not aware of it, but the probabilities are that that is the case.

8197. Are you not aware that the Inspector-General has reported that about five-sixths of the publicans within the city and suburbs habitually break the law? There is an inducement to do so, and I was just foreshadowing what would probably obviate that.

8198. Do you not know as a matter of fact that it is broken. You may take it from us that it is broken by a large proportion? Oh, yes. In fact, I have seen persons loafing about the public-houses, watching for an opportunity to get in. If you prevent a man from getting his beer it is an inducement to him to violate the law. I would be against Sunday selling, except between the hours of 1 and 3 o'clock.

8199. You are in favour of that from no personal pecuniary motive whatever? Yes.

8200. Do you not think it would be a little retrogressive to go back upon the law and open on Sunday without getting any countervailing advantage? I do not think there would be so much duplicity and breaches of the law.

8201. Do you not think there is a remedy for that by making the law still more stringent? In what way?

8202. You know the law is not stringent now for a very obvious reason; some men go into a public-house on Sunday and are served, they pass as inmates. The policeman lays an information against the publican, and you know what happens? Yes; I have read of that.

8203. Suppose the law were made as stringent as it is in England; the law in England is this: If a man is found in a public-house during prohibited hours he is taken to be a violator of the law unless he proves the contrary; the burden of proof rests upon him. Here it rests upon the police. You may enforce the intention of the Legislature by having some stringent enactment, such as now exists in England;—what is your view on that subject. You propose to open from 1 to 3 on Sundays, because you are disgusted at the duplicity which the present law has produced? Exactly so.

8204. But suppose the law were altered so that the duplicity would be reduced to a minimum, would not that achieve the same object you have in view; you say that your object is to stop the duplicity engendered by the law? Quite so; the duplicity I mean is where people get drink by stealth; and if they cannot get it from one publican they will get it from another.

8205. That is something different from duplicity? Well, of course an arrangement is made by which a man is supplied.

8206. Suppose that all the publicans consented to close on Sunday and that they agree to be all on the same level, and that one man should not take advantage of another but be an observer of the law, do you think then that the artizan would have good cause of complaint in not getting his beer on Sunday? I think so. I think it would be circumscribing the rights of the subject. He looks upon it as necessary to his enjoyment.

8207. Then it is in the interests of the man who has a right to get his dinner-beer that you ask for limited opening on Sunday? Yes; and I would not allow a drop of liquor to be sold even to a lodger after the hours of closing.

8208. Do you think that men who now sell indiscriminately would be prevented from selling to lodgers? You have the police.

8209. What number of police would you require to prevent that? I cannot say.

8210. As to another point: Do you consider that much deteriorated, spurious, or bad liquor, is sold here? I have no doubt there is a deal of it, but I do not know anything directly in that way.

8211. Do you know a class of men known as "doctors" going about here? I believe there are such persons, but I have never met with them. Ours is an independent sort of business, and it would not do if our liquor were doctored in any way.

8212. You strive to have the very best that money can get? Yes; of course we sell ordinary brands, but they are not adulterated.

8213. Do you believe that ordinary spirits sold are made of silent spirits? Well I do not know.

8214. You do not know of your own knowledge perhaps, that a large quantity of what is sold as whisky and brandy has no malt in it whatever, and no juice of the grape? I do not know, but I apprehend that there is a deal of vile rubbish being disposed of.

8215. Did your customers ever complain to you that they had reason to suppose that spirits retailed by you were rather too young and contained fusel oil? No. We had one man complaining about a bottle of whisky :

- whisky; he said there was copper in it. I had it analysed by Professor Watt, who said it was present in a minute quantity and came from the distillation worm.
8216. Do you think it would cause much complaint on the part of purchasers of liquor in bond if the Government prevented any imported liquor from going into consumption unless they had been certified as sufficiently wholesome to be consumed by people and bearing a certificate to that effect? I think a good result would be achieved by it.
8217. You understand my question. That the Government should intervene between the importer and the consumer? Yes; if the thing is unwholesome it should not be sold.
8218. I do not say unwholesome, but not matured enough? I think that would be straining the point too far, because it would not be unwholesome and unfit to drink, but merely liquor which required age to be a better article.
8219. You know that whiskey contains fusel oil? Yes.
8220. And that fusel oil is a very noxious form of alcohol, and all new grain spirits contain it? Yes.
8221. Do you see any harm in the Legislature saying, "This liquor must not pass out of bond until it is certified as free from fusel oil?" I do not see that there could be any objection to it if practicable.
8222. And supposing people had sufficient notice that such an Act was to be passed do you think it would give rise to complaint if they found that they could not sell their importations? It would be a very serious embarrassment, and would put very many to considerable delay, trouble, and annoyance, and not only that, but the analyst, whoever he might be, might make a mistake and pronounce drink not fit to be used when it was fit to be used.
8223. That is readily remedied by giving the man who has a grievance the right to appeal? Well, that would meet it. If he pronounced a thing unfit for use it certainly should not be used.
8224. I mean unfit to be retailed over the bar. It might be fit for certain things? I do not see what it would be fit for if not fit for that. That I think would be a principle of exclusion, and I do not agree with that because if a man wanted to get a glass of good spirits he would have to pay 2s. 6d. for it. It would be a species of tyranny.
8225. You say that the effect might be to make whisky dearer? Yes; but look at the time that whisky takes to mature.
8226. Well, it takes seven years to mature, and it would be a general warning to the importers not to import in whisky unfit to go into consumption? That would be going too far. When you come to unravel the question there are some very knotty points in it.
8227. Practically you would not have the Legislature interfere in that way? I do not think so.
8228. Do you think the license fees are high enough? It is a question whether they are or not.
8229. Has it ever occurred to you that the number of houses might be reduced by raising the license fees? That might remove the difficulty you have mentioned, but I have not given the matter consideration.
8230. Do you agree first of all that the number of houses is in excess of the requirements? I think there are too many, particularly in the suburbs, because you will see them at every corner almost.
8231. Are they as thickly spotted there as in Lower George-street, opposite the Seaman's Home? Well really I have not taken notice.
8232. At any rate you think they are in excess? Yes.
8233. We have got, in round numbers, 830—do you think we could do with 200 less? Well that is hard to say, as the population is increasing so rapidly, but I would not think of increasing the number. I think there are quite as many as can live honestly. The population is increasing so rapidly that the houses now in existence will not be found too many in a short time.
8234. That is to say for the casual drinkers? Yes.
8235. Some of these you admit are of a very low class? From what I read in the papers I should imagine so. I do not know anything directly.
8236. Would you favour the reduction of the public-houses by the local option vote—would you allow the people to express an opinion upon the question, whether they think the houses are too numerous, or whether they should have any at all; do you believe in local option or not? It is rather a difficult question to answer.
8237. Local option has been tried and is now in existence? Yes, in a limited form, but it does not seem to satisfy anybody, and is not spoken of by anybody with approval.
- 8237½. Let me put it to you in a very concise form. Do you think the inhabitants of Macquarie ward ought to have the right to say whether your house should exist or not? I think it would be hardly fair to shut a man's house up who had been carrying it on for some years and founded a good business, merely at the caprice of a few individuals. You know what people will do to be revenged in many instances if they have a feeling against you. I think it would be very hard for a man who has been conducting business for many years to be recklessly screwed up by people, many of whom are total abstainers.
8238. You are aware that the ground upon which the local optionists claim the right is this, that public-houses are inherently bad because they dispense liquor? Yes.
8239. They consider the liquors bad and the dispenser of them equally bad, and they do not hesitate to say that they are a nuisance? They say that public-houses are institutions that ought not to exist, and that they should have the right to say so? I think it is an arbitrary enactment myself.
8240. We have heard that a very large number of houses are owned or controlled by the brewers. Do you think that is a good practice? It may suit some persons certainly.
8241. Do you think first of all that it is a necessity? It is not.
8242. Has not that practice the effect of raising the value of the good-will in a degree that is by no means proportionate to the trade done. In fact, has not the good-will of a public-house now an unnatural value? I should think it would be at the present time, because of the high price of liquors and the duties levied, which leaves a very small margin for profit.
8243. Then as a matter of fact it is difficult to get a living? Yes, it is from hand to mouth.
8244. Do you think that is the reason for the number of transfers this year, namely, 200? It has a great deal to do with it because the price of the liquors and the duties leave a very small amount of profit.
8245. Do you consider that the system of brewers controlling these houses has a tendency to compel the licensees to take a worse class of liquor than they would if they went into the open market? Yes, if he is obliged to take what the brewer or spirit merchant gives him.

Mr. C. W.
Roberts,
27 Sept., 1886.

- Mr. C. W. Roberts.
17 Sept., 1886.
8246. How many bars have you in your public-house? Two; one sixpenny and one threepenny. At the sixpenny bar you generally help yourself and get a better article. It is a convenience to people to have a threepenny as well as a sixpenny bar, because many people are not sufficiently well off to go into a sixpenny bar but could go and take his threepenny glass.
8247. Do you keep beer specially for the accommodation of people in business? Yes; that is sixpenny beer.
8248. Do you think there should be upstairs bars? No; I do not know of them.
8249. Let to women? I never heard of any.
8250. When you consider that the State allows drink to be retailed, and you see the result of the practice and the numbers of habitual drunkards [seen about our streets, do you think that these habitual drunkards ought to be treated as criminals, or do you think that the more merciful and the better treatment would be to consider them as irresponsible persons, and fit only for asylums or inebriate retreats;—in other words, are you in favour of substituting inebriate asylums for the gaol? I should certainly say so.
8251. The Stipendiary Magistrate now fines the habitual drunkard 20s. or seven days, and the drunkard takes the seven days, and when he comes out he gets drunk again and goes again to gaol for seven days. That is not effective and is very expensive. Does it occur to you that sending him to an inebriate retreat would be the more humane way of treating him? Yes.
8252. I suppose you have not travelled much? No.
8253. You have not seen any of these asylums in other countries? I have not.
8254. Mr. Colls.] Are you a member of the Licensed Victuallers' Association? No; I never have been.
8255. Are you in favour of the trade retailing groceries? No.
8256. Has it ever been reported to you that grocers sent home small quantities of spirits with their groceries? I have never known anything directly myself, but nevertheless the inducement is very strong.
8257. I suppose you know that there are many clubs started in the city and suburbs for obtaining drink on Sundays? I have heard of these clubs.
8258. Would you be opposed to a continuation of these? Yes; I think it is unjust to the publican that these clubs should not have to pay any license. The publican is under the eye of the police and these others are not, and he also pays his license fee. I think it is a manifest injustice that clubs should not pay a license.
8259. I suppose you have no upstairs bar? No.
8260. And you would not be in favour of any upstairs bar? I would not like to express an opinion. I would be in favour of two bars on the basement floor. There might be an upstairs bar for the convenience of a number of persons.
8261. You would not be in favour of an upstairs bar being sub-let? No it should be under the immediate supervision of the licensee.
8262. Do you think that the small houses that do not pretend to accommodate the public should hold general licenses; are they not only just drinking places? I would not like to hazard an opinion upon that.
8263. You are prepared to give the necessary accommodation? Yes, we are bound by the Act to have so many beds and so many rooms in readiness at my house.
8264. You are under the impression that there are too many small public-houses in the town? I think there are quite enough.
8265. Mr. Withers.] Do you consider it a hardship for the Government to exercise supervision over the trade; do you think it unreasonable on the part of the Government? Well, at the time of Mr. Plunkett every publican had to have a form over his door declaring that he was applying for a license, and was recommended by so-and-so as a person of good character, and I do not think that any man of any honesty or integrity whatever could object to have his character inquired into.
8266. And you think it very desirable that respectable men should conduct such a business? Yes, because it requires persons of unquestionable integrity of character.
8267. And you think unscrupulous men might be very dangerous men to have in the trade? Yes.
8268. We know that persons frequently go into hotels who are not able to take care of themselves, and it is necessary that the publican should be a respectable man who would not allow these men to be robbed? And to prevent them from taking too much drink.
8269. Then you do not think it a hardship at all to inquire into a man's character before granting him a license? Certainly not. If his character will not bear investigation he is not fit to hold a license.
8270. It has been stated that the higher class of public-houses tend more to induce excessive drinking than the houses of a lower class. Do you think that? In a great many cases the habit of drinking is constitutional, it is part of a man's nature and habitual, and I have known whole families to die out from drink. Then again the habit may be acquired; as far as my observation goes very few youths are seen in public-houses. Many youths at night-time go to the Theatres and go and do their nobblers but in the day-time you seldom see them in a public-house.
8271. Do you think that 16 is a proper age at which to serve a youth? I would not like to see them drink at that age. I think they should not drink until they attain their majority, but it is a difficult thing for a publican to draw the line. The idea of a youth of 16 drinking is abominable. I do not think the higher class of houses would trouble to have the people you speak of about the place, and in what I call places of business people do not spend the afternoon, but have a drink and go away about their business.
8272. Do you not think under all the circumstances it was an objectionable business for young women to be engaged in? From my experience they are a respectable class of girls, and I do not see any objection to their employment in the hotel business.
8273. It has been stated that there is a different class of society altogether getting an undue taste for drink, namely, young ladies who attend at our public balls and social parties, who have never hitherto been suspected of having such a taste before? That is possibly where the habit is acquired. I am inclined to think there is more mischief done at these socials than in the public-house, because in the public-house it would not pay.

- 8274. Do you think the surroundings of these factories are not far more objectionable for young girls than behind bars? It may be so.
- 8275. Mr. Roseby.] You are an abstainer yourself? I take nothing at all as a beverage.
- 8276. You think that the public-house being a rather dangerous business compared with the grocer or bootmaker ought to be under more restrictions? Yes; but the grocer has certain advantages and can if he likes send out drink.
- 8277. Do you think there are too many houses in the suburbs? Yes.
- 8278. And too many in the city for legitimate business? I think there are quite enough, but I daresay, in the course of a few years, the population will increase, and these places will not then be too numerous.
- 8279. Mr. Hutchison.] You are in favour of Sunday closing, providing that the working man would not clamour? Provided that you opened from 1 to 3 on Sunday to allow him to get his dinner beer.
- 8280. Are you sure it is not the loafers who want the drink? Believing as you do that it is the people and not the publican who want the Sunday opening, would you allow the people to vote as to whether public-houses should be opened on Sunday or not? Well, I would say that that would be only fair.
- 8281. Suppose that there was a majority of people in favour of closing do you think that their wishes should have effect? Yes, but if you close up these houses you ought to compensate them.
- 8282. Then you favour local option provided the publican gets compensation? No; but you should not shut him up and turn him into the streets without compensation.
- 8283. You do not think that the real value of public-house property is increased by the houses being in the hands of the brewers? I do not believe it. The reason I gave before was that it was in consequence of the high price of spirits coupled with the duty that reduced the profit, and therefore the house was not worth as much money.
- 8284. President.] Take your own house, the surroundings of which you know best; do you not think that the value of the good will has been enormously enhanced during the last 10 years? Yes, but that is an exception to the rule. It has increased by reason of there being a larger population.
- 8285. And will not all houses increase in value with the increase of population where there is a good stand? I should say so.
- 8286. But I gather that houses in central positions have improved? Certainly, because there is a greater population, more traffic, and consequently more business.
- 8287. You do not open on Sunday? No.
- 8288. And you do not know of any appreciable increase in your sale on Saturday that cannot be accounted for by the increase of population? No. Of course you must understand more money circulates on a Saturday than at any other time.
- 8289. Mr. Hutchison.] You have always done a larger trade on a Saturday? There is always a double business on that day.
- 8290. You remember when Sunday closing was first spoken of there was a great deal of argument against requiring working men to take their drink home on the ground that it would not be so good? Quite so; that is reasonable.
- 8291. Do you think that still obtains? I do.
- 8292. What they take home now cannot be particularly good? No; beer is absolutely worthless.
- 8293. Not in bottle? Poor people cannot afford to take home bottled beer.
- 8294. Has your bottled trade increased? Well, it has, but it fluctuates.
- 8295. President.] You said your customers were of a casual kind? Yes; persons passing by and popping in.
- 8296. Mr. Hutchison.] Do you do a large luncheon trade? We have no luncheon at all.
- 8297. Have you not a pro bono lunch on the counter? Oh, yes.
- 8298. A snack? Simply bread and cheese.
- 8299. President.] Any sandwiches? No.
- 8300. And none on Sunday? No.
- 8301. Mr. Hutchison.] That luncheon you mention will be a large regular trade? No.
- 8302. But generally there will be the same people about the same hours? Oh, yes, a great many; but the population increases to that extent that you see fresh faces every day.
- 8303. Mr. Roseby.] You must have known in your long experience a number of citizens go to destruction through drink? Well, I have, certainly; it is the curse of the country, no doubt, where people do not govern themselves.

Mr. C. W.
Roberts.
27 Sept., 1886.

Sir John Robertson, K.C.M.G., called in, sworn, and examined:—

8304. President.] The Commission is anxious, Sir John, to be made acquainted with your experience of the Licensing Law, as gathered from what you have observed in and about Watson's Bay and other resorts of holiday-makers, especially on a Sunday? I do not think I am a very great authority upon the matter, and it was because of that I determined to obtain the consent of the Governor and the Executive Council to the appointment of this Commission; and in the selection of the Commission I took the different classes of people—those who I knew to be thoroughly out-and-out teetotallers, those who I knew were publicans, or their friends, and those who I knew were moderate, respectable, fair drinking honest men, like myself and the President. I wanted to have it a fair Commission. Why was that? Because I could not rely upon myself. If I could have relied upon myself I am never afraid to act up to my own convictions. I want to say that preliminarily, because my evidence in this matter is not very valuable. So far as I have seen at Watson's Bay, which is one of the great suburbs of the city, I mean great as far as relates to travellers on the Sunday for recreation—I suppose it is almost the greatest. Manly Beach may be greater, certainly no other, for there go to Watson's Bay on a Sunday 3,000 or 4,000 people. Some of the people who go there have always, as it has seemed to me, taken more wines and spirits, or intoxicants of some kind, than was good for them. But it has been a very small proportion of them, an exceedingly small proportion. I have an opportunity for seeing them, because they almost all go by my gate, and because circumstances compelled me to be the owner of steamboats there. Through circumstances arising from mortgages over these boats I was obliged to take them over, and therefore I know a little about the kind of people we have have had there and of their habits, not only before the prohibition of Sunday-selling but since; no doubt the prohibition of Sunday-selling has been very beneficial in some regards. I do not believe it has been beneficial at all in reducing the consumption of intoxicants. I do not think anything of the kind; I am quite impressed with the conviction that the use of intoxicants has been greater.

8305. The consumption? Yes. The consumption of intoxicants has been greater; and I should think to men of moderate intelligence that must be palpable. It cannot be escaped. Men go down there now with bottles which were not in existence before the Sunday abolition business arose. They have side pockets in which the bottles are carried, and these bottles usually hold, or are supposed to hold, half a pint of spirits. Well, a man who has one of these would never think of drinking half a pint of spirits if he had not it with him. If he went to an hotel he would probably drink half a glass, or a little more; but I have frequently seen—and we have suffered from it—I have frequently seen people with these bottles containing heel-taps, or being about half-full, inviting everyone to drink, because they must take it before they go home. "What is the good of carrying it back to Sydney," they say. That, I believe, has caused more drunkenness in the steamboats than we ever had before. I am sure it has been so; and of course more drunkenness means more consumption of intoxicants. Whether it would be better to open the houses for an hour, or, as the last witness said, for two hours, I do not know, but I should think opening for two hours would be very objectionable. Opening the houses for an hour for the sake of the working men getting their beer, or of people in moderate circumstances getting their beer for luncheon, is quite different from opening for two hours. An hour seems to me to be quite long enough time for a man to get a good supply of it—indeed, very much more than is necessary for ordinary consumption. But I am quite satisfied that the closing of public-houses on Sunday causes workmen to take home more liquor on Saturday night, and causes quarrels and disturbances in their families which would not arise if they could get the liquor on a Sunday. What I have absolutely seen is what I have told you, about the small bottles. On the whole it is a most difficult question to deal with, and on the whole I think if I ever dealt with the question entirely out of political influence on the matter, I would let the people buy, at any rate beer, between 1 and 2. I do not think there is any necessity for selling ardent spirits. Usually respectable people do not use ardent spirits in the middle of the day; and I think when people want ardent spirits in the middle of the day they are the kind of people who ought not to be facilitated in possessing them.

8306. Then you think the natural—the reasonable—demands of the people here would be satisfied by one hour's opening of the public-houses on a Sunday? I do not know whether they would be satisfied.

8307. I said the reasonable requirements? I think it would be quite as much as I should be willing to give them.

8308. And if that hour were given, do you think there would be any diminution of the scenes of drunkenness on those steamers which you have described? There could not be such scenes. There would be no need for carrying bottles on the person.

8309. Do you think the people would cease to take these flasks? I think so.

8311. I understand you to say that a large amount of drunkenness is caused by the owners of these side-pocket flasks dispensing heel-taps? Yes; what is a man to do with it?

8312. I suppose the contents of these spirit-flasks are spirits—not spirits and water? They are nominally half a pint, but not quite half a pint.

8313. Is it so diluted as to be a beverage? It is not diluted at all. There is plenty of water at Watson's Bay.

8314. We have been informed that since the Licensing law came into operation quite a new business in flasks has developed itself, and that thousands of these flasks have been imported that were never imported in the old times? I think I could put my finger on a mercantile firm that imported 5,000 in the first year.

8315. May we ask you the name of the firm? No; I do not think you should ask that. It is a very successful firm, and a very respectable firm, and they do not think there is any harm in it. You can see empty bottles kicking about Watson's Bay anywhere.

8316. I suppose there is at times some danger of persons tumbling overboard in consequence of these flasks? I do not think the captain of the steamer would allow anybody to go on board in liquor. The steamer people take great care of their passengers. But as they go on board they say, "We might as well drink this up instead of taking it back to Sydney." You will see the same thing on the railway. When travelling on a railway men will do the same.

8317. There is a very important question which we should like your views upon. It is this: Drunkenness simply, without any aggravation whatever, has for centuries been considered a crime, and has been punished as a crime. I dare say you are aware that in this Colony simple drunkenness subjects the offender, if it be his first offence, to a fine of 5s., and if he cannot pay that amount he is generally required to remain in custody until the rising of the Court. For the third or any subsequent offence there is a fine of 20s., or seven days in gaol. As a rule the seven days in gaol are taken, the fine not being forthcoming. But the effect of that system is to bring about this state of things: The drunkard goes to gaol and serves his seven days, and then coming out he gets drunk again as soon as possible. We have evidence that in some cases this operation has been performed on a habitual drunkard, many even up to forty or fifty times in the course of a year or so, and as we have begun to regard this punishment as worse than farcical on the part of the State, we have come to the conclusion that some treatment other than of a punitive character is necessary for the unfortunate being who, we are told by medical experts, and we ourselves believe is, when the craving for drink is on him, an irresponsible agent. That raises the whole question whether the drunkard should be treated punitively, or in the way of reformation. As you no doubt see it is a serious question, and I should like your views upon it? I remember many years ago a Bill being brought forward by the Government of Sir Henry Parkes and Sir James Martin. I am not quite sure about Sir Henry Parkes being in the Government at the

the time ; but I am sure Sir James Martin was premier, and I remember him bringing forward a Bill for sending people who had been drunk many times to an asylum, called an inebriate asylum, or an asylum for the protection of inebriates, or something of that kind. I voted against it, but I do not think I should vote against it now, because drunkenness has grown to such proportions here that I think something of that kind would be far more beneficial than stopping those who do not take too much from having a glass of ale, or even a glass of brandy and water. But I think that when a man is frequently intoxicated, and frequently comes under the law it would be better to have some asylum, such as they have, I think, in America, for caring for him, and trying to cure him of the propensity to drink. At the same time I do not think it can be possible that the idea suggested by the President's question can be correct—that there should be nearly so many persons going, or that one person should go to gaol so many times in the year. I think it is quite likely that persons may go to gaol and serve their time for seven days, and then come out, and it is possible if they have money enough to get drunk again. But I do not think that could be frequently the case. It might be so, however. I do not think that the circumstance of a man having a little more than is good for him ought to bring him under the law ; but when a man becomes a public nuisance, and commits his offence many times, I think he ought to be under control, and in an institution for the cure of inebriates.

Sir John
Robertson,
K.C.M.G.
27 Sept., 1886.

8318. Would you let the Magistrates send those inebriates or those habitual drunkards to this establishment ; should it be a formal committal in the ordinary way. Instead of committing to gaol as now, would you when the habitual drunkenness is proved let the Magistrates send to this institution for a stated period ? With the right of appeal.

8319. To the Quarter Sessions, I suppose ? To some proper court.

8320. So that the question at issue, whether the drunkenness is habitual or not, should be capable of being appealed from ? Yes ; I think the remedy would be to send them to an institution for the care of inebriates, and I think that institution should be governed with a large amount of moderation—not with too strong a twist at the law ; that it should be managed by a committee of gentlemen who would act fairly by these people, and not keep them there when there was a hope of their coming out with safety. I think the committee of control should be a kind of men who would not keep these people there unnecessarily, and that they should have the power of letting them go.

8321. You are perhaps referring to something like the discharge to which a lunatic is entitled ? Something of that kind.

8322. But would you not be favourable to keeping them for a fixed period. If they are proved to be habitual drunkards, do you not think that as they would be subject to treatment, and not punishment, he ought not to object to curative treatment ? I would not care whether or not he objected if he were a nuisance.

8323. The doctors have told us it would be of no earthly use to send a man there for less than three months ? I do not think doctors know much about it ; I think it would be better to have a good committee of control, with power to act ; of course they could take professional advice.

8324. Do you think it would be necessary to have some persons kept in retirement for perhaps six months ? Yes.

8325. And others for a shorter period ? Yes ; and others longer.

8326. I suppose you have known habitual drunkards who have been actually reformed ? I have known one or two.

8327. So you do not think there is anything hopeless in the matter ? I have known some who have been in my memory terrible lashingtons, and who have afterwards become some of the best members of the community. They absolutely abandoned it. I do not think there is any harm in a man drinking, if he can only stop it, if he can only put the stopper on at the right time.

8328. I suppose the kind of institution you regard with some favour should not be in the form of a gaol ? Certainly not.

8329. It should differ from a gaol as much as possible ? Yes ; it should be a place you could not get away from, but it should not have the least appearance of a gaol.

8331. There would be the hope of reformation ? Yes.

8332. Do you not think that a system in which there would be a retreat to which a man could be sent for periods varying from three months to a year would itself act as a deterrent to many people ? I am certain it would—just as the "Vernon" has with boys. The "Vernon" has been alleged to be a very costly institution. When Sir Henry Parkes proposed to make provision for misconducted boys, the expense of the "Vernon" was put forward. I was an opponent of Sir Henry Parkes at the time ; but I never could see this objection on the ground of expense, because it appeared to me that the mere fear of going on board the vessel would deter more boys than would ever go on board. It has had a deterrent effect upon boys ; it has acted as a check upon many, while many even of the worst who have gone on board have been under control, and have become good citizens. I think nothing better was ever done for this colony than that Bill of Sir Henry Parkes for the boys. I think the Government was the same as that which made the attempt to provide for inebriates.

8333. It is complained that the liquor which goes into consumption in this colony—especially in this city and suburbs—is of a very inferior quality, and that the inferiority does not arise so much from added ingredients—from adulteration—as from putting into consumption a raw immature spirit. I do not know whether you admit that it is so ? I do not know. I avoid all raw immature spirits.

8334. But supposing that in the evidence it is demonstrably so, do you think that upon that state of facts it would be right for the State to interfere between the importer and the consumer, and say, this case of spirits, or that cask of spirits in bulk, shall not go into consumption unless with the certificate of some expert that the liquor is wholesome ? I should allow no liquor to be sold retail unless it was wholesome—I would not care whether it was because it was new or from any other reason. I think no liquor that is not wholesome ought to go into the retail shops. Because, though, whether a man who can afford to buy—or whether he can afford it or not does buy his brandy by the dozen, he is pretty sure to have it good, the man who takes it over the counter can have no guide at all, and the only control is a control of the licensed seller of the liquor.

Sir John
Robertson,
K.C.M.G.
27 Sept., 1886.

8335. Whether he be the retail or the wholesale seller? No matter which it is.

8336. Would you have the spirits examined in bond? I would have them examined before they were taken out of bond. Any amount might go into bond, and after some years it might be the best spirit in the world. But when it went in it might have been raw and unfit for use.

8337. It might go into bond bad, and then become with age good? Crude I say, not bad.

8338. Well, is not crude spirit bad? It is only too new. By keeping it in bond in Sydney I presume it would ripen in Sydney as well, for instance, as it would in Brisbane. I do not think the general howl about the Queensland rum being new is an objection to it. Queensland rum is very good. People drink it when it is new; but if it is kept long enough it is as good as any rum in the world. It is made from sugar. It ought to be as good as the best in the world. I mean if it has the time. If a person in Queensland has a hundred hogsheads of rum he sends it up here. The buyer cannot afford to pay the duty, but he pays a price and puts the rum in bond where it may remain for many years. He pays the store rent, and he eventually pays the duty, but, if he is a fair trader, he does not take the rum out until it is fit. If you make an arrangement of this kind, that the article shall not come out of bond until it is fit for consumption, the seller will not attempt to take it out, and then you have an ample control over all imported spirits that come here. With the spirits that are made here you will find it a little more difficult.

8339. Do you think the number of public-houses in the city and the suburbs in excess of the requirements? Well, I have peculiar views about public-houses. I have lived in this country, in the bush, during many years of my life, when we had only one public-house, and what I am now going to say will not be agreed to by many people. When I lived in the bush, and there was only one public-house in the village, there was a good deal of drinking. When there were two public-houses there was less drinking. I will show you why: We all met at the one place when there was but one public-house, and everybody knows that when one stands a bottle of wine or glasses round, the more persons there are present the more liquor is drunk; but if you go to a village where there are two public-houses the people are divided. Now, I suppose, this is a very peculiar view of this matter. I do not care much about the number of public-houses. I think if the people have got the money they will drink, if they desire it, just as much with the number of public-houses we now have as they would if we had half the number and no more. It is not the want of a public-house that stops a man from getting drink; he will always get to them pretty quick. Where, in Sydney, can you walk a few yards without finding a public-house? I do not think the number of public-houses to be a bit of consequence. I know this is a peculiar view; I never heard it put forward by anyone but myself, but I am quite sure it is true. We say there are 800 houses here. Suppose there were only 400; does anyone imagine that would limit the amount of drinking? Well, I am sorry for the man who supposes it would, for it would not. The only way to limit the drinking is to do away with it altogether; but to reduce the number of public-houses only produces successful men like the gentleman who was giving evidence here when I came in. He would like the number reduced, for it would suit his book altogether. Reducing the number of public-houses is all humbug if your object is to limit the consumption. Reducing the public-houses in order to have better houses and ensure better accommodation for people is another matter, but reducing them for the purpose of restricting liquor-selling I think is all humbug. I know if I mean to have a drink I do not care about having to walk the distance of another block for it. What odds? Only more people would meet there, and there would probably be more drinking; that is all. If you want to stop drinking, do away with the public-houses, and that you cannot do.

8340. But suppose the object is to raise the standard of the houses and the quality of the liquor supply? That is good.

8341. Then, even for those reasons, might it not be wise to limit the number of public-houses? I think that would be a good reason. I think the quality of the liquor supplied and the class of accommodation should be the thing to consider, and not how many public-houses there were.

8342. Then assuming that were the reason of those who wish to reduce the number of public-houses, do you think they best promote their object by having what is called local option, or by having some fixed statutory number, as in Sir Graham Berry's Victorian Act, the statutory number of the public-houses being in a certain proportion to the number of the inhabitants? I do not remember Sir Graham Berry's Act, but unquestionably if the majority of the people in a district were against having any public-houses in that district there ought to be none there. The same thing might be applied to butchers' shops. I voted in Parliament for the Local Option Bill, but I found afterwards that the people would not, at elections, vote on the question. When we came to an election I think there was one in ten would vote, showing how little people cared for it. If the people did care for it there is nothing fairer in the world than local option. I mean by local option that there should be no public-houses unless with the will of the majority of the people. If you cannot get a tithe of the people to vote one way or the other you cannot call it a majority of the people. That has cured me of local option. I voted for it on the ground that the majority should rule; but the majority does not take any interest in it.

8343. Mr. Roseby.] It is the ratepayers who vote, not the Parliamentary voters? I am perfectly aware of it, and the ratepayers would not vote. Everyone knows that. I say not one in ten voted one way or the other, and that the people do not care a button about it; and if they do not care who shall say their opinion has been taken.

8344. President.] With regard to the remark made by Mr. Roseby, do you think the Parliamentary voter would care more than the ratepayer? I do not think it matters a bit. I would myself rather have the Parliamentary voter than the ratepayer, but I do not believe either matters. I am of opinion that the Parliamentary voter would pay less attention to it than the ratepayer; I do not think that those who want to stop public-houses would gain a bit by shifting from ratepayers to Parliamentary voters; I think they would lose.

8345. Mr. Hutchison.] With regard to the complaint that very few actual ratepayers vote, do not the landlords vote in their place? Well, if I am asked that question I will answer it straight to a line. I do not think that the holders of property should have so much power over the general ratepayers. But I do not think it would matter a button with regard to voting, because there would be comparatively no voting at all; the people do not care; you cannot get anyone to go and vote. I know very well we have a large teetotal organization here, earnest, enthusiastic, and capable, and with a large amount of public influence, but they cannot get people to go and vote against public-houses. I say not one in ten will vote at all, and therefore, I say, the people do not care a button about it.

8346. Mr. Roseby.] But you are in favour of the principle? Entirely. The principle is right. I am a democrat out-and-out. I would let the people say what they want. But then they will not say.

8347. We will educate them? But they will not be educated; they snap their fingers at you; they laugh at you. You know they look upon this thing as total humbug; and I think there has been more drinking since this row about teetotalism than there was before; but if you can get the people to vote, or if you can compel them to vote, then let the majority rule.

8348. Mr. Hutchison.] Make the law inoperative unless there is a fair proportion? That will do—a fair proportion. Say something like what occurs in a spirited election contest. That would mean about two-thirds of the people; if two-thirds of the people in the whole district voted one way or the other, I think that would be a fair majority; if two-thirds voted it means substantially that the opinion of the people has been taken.

8349. President.] But apart from the democratic sentiment which you have just now expressed do not you think that it would be inopportune to submit further instalments of local option when the people are apathetic? I mean inoperative, not inopportune.

8350. Would you be in favour of there being on the statute book a law which would permit two-thirds of the people in any given area to say whether this law relating to local option should be put in force or not? Certainly, two-thirds of the whole electoral body of the district.

8351. Mr. Hutchison.] The real local optionists simply want the law to remain applicable to the locality and they will put it into force when they are ready; do you agree with that? Your President has put it more accurately; if of the people in a given district two-thirds apply to have the law put in force, and two-thirds vote, I think it ought to be in force, but none of your rubbish about one in ten; that is ridiculous as testing the views of the whole.

Sir John
Robertson,
K.C.M.G.

FRIDAY, 1 OCTOBER, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,
T. COLLS, Esq., J.P.,
S. H. HYAM, Esq., J.P., M.P.,

A. HUTCHISON, Esq.,
J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.,
G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Morton Joseph called in, sworn, and examined:—

8352. President.] I think you are and have been for sometime a hotel broker? Yes.

8353. How long have you been in business? Ever since 1866.

8354. Is it a fact that the business of hotel brokers, has been largely increased of late years; since the passing of the last two Licensing Acts? It has been increased.

8355. In old times there was not so much demand for the good wills of publicans' licenses as there is now? There was a demand but prices were not so high.

8356. Do you ascribe the increase in price—the enhancement of the good will, to the competition of the brewers, or only the increase in the city and suburbs? I attribute it to the increase of population.

8357. Then, as a matter of fact, the value of any particular house increases because business increases? Yes; business increases with the increase of population, and it makes a house very valuable.

8358. Is it not a fact that there were a large number of transfer applications lodged this year? Not an extraordinary number.

8359. What do you consider a large number? There have been very few transfers lately.

8360. There have been some 200 or 300 in the course of the year? I could not say what the number is.

8361. Is it not a fact that business is rather bad with the publican? Yes; business is very slack now.

8362. That is to say, slack generally? It is a slackness right through the trade.

8363. Has that been accompanied by a reduction in the value of good wills? Well, I could not tell you that, but there is a very great slackness in the trade from the large hotels down to the small ones. It is a uniform slackness which is felt by everyone in business. Business is slack at the Metropolitan District Houses.

8364. The takings have appreciably decreased? Yes.

8365. I suppose that is the case all over the world. Prosperity means more drink, and adversity less? I cannot answer that.

8366. What is the highest value you know of as attached to a good will. Have you ever known it to reach £10,000? I have known £10,000 to be given for a freehold, not a good will. It is termed lease, license, good-will, and furniture.

8367. That may depend largely upon the term of the lease? Yes.

8368. And what is the average term of the lease? Well, people are now not inclined to buy a house unless they get a long lease; I would call ten years a long lease.

8369. Are there any over ten? Yes.

8370. What would you call an average lease when the lease is created in the first instance? Between five and seven years. Several large houses in Sydney have realized as much as £4,000, but then there would be a great deal of value in the furniture and stock. I allude to a case where the stock was taken in and reached a certain price.

8371. We were told that the stock is taken at a valuation? Yes, you are right, and that would bring it up to a certain amount.

8372. You think that £4,000 represents a fair specimen of a valuable good will? Yes, and up to £7,000.

8373. And there are few under £1,000? Oh, lots. They average from under £400 to £500 and £600 to £1,500.

8374. Inclusive or exclusive of stock? There is always a certain amount of stock. In some instances I have known £100, £50, £60, and other amounts to be paid.

8375. Do you consider that a very large proportion of the houses are tied houses. There are 830 houses in the city and suburbs now? That is a very peculiar question to put to me. I do not reckon a house tied where the publican has borrowed money.

8376. We have had the term frequently used here of "tied houses" to denote a house which is under the control of the brewer or spirit merchant? In reality these houses are not under the control of the brewer. The publican is independent and can pay the brewer at any moment.

8377. Then what is a tied house? Where the brewer owns the hotel himself; where they buy the freeholds and lease them. That would be a tied house and not otherwise.

8378.

Mr.
M. Joseph.

1 Oct., 1886.

- Mr. M. Joseph.
1 Oct., 1886.
8378. Does not an hotelkeeper who has given a bill of sale to a brewer also sign a bond undertaking to get his supply of beer from the brewer? Not in all cases. I have only had one of these bonds myself under my notice. Of course I do my business principally with one firm in the city, although I have transactions with many of the other brewers.
8379. Have you any objection to mention the name of the firm? Tooth & Co.
8380. Have you any objection to give the number of houses that Tooth & Co. have? I could not tell you. They do a large business with the hotelkeepers in the city—the largest amongst the brewers.
8381. Then you do not consider that a house is a tied one when the licensee has given a bill of sale over all that he can give? I do not consider that a tied house. The bill of sale can be taken up two hours afterwards. I could go and give a cheque, and take up the house myself. What I term a tied house is where the brewer holds the freehold of the hotel, and a man takes a special lease under which he is tied down to buy from the brewer. Where the lease is free it cannot be a tied house.
8382. You have told us of a house that is more tied than any other house, and you have also told us something we did not know before when you say that the giving of a bill of sale in no way compels the licensed victualler to deal with the brewer? They cannot compel him, although he borrows money from them. They can simply say, "You must pay over the amount of the bill of sale."
8383. Practically, we are right in saying that when a bill of sale is given to Tooth & Co. they supply the beer and spirits to the publican? Yes, like other merchants in the city, but as a rule it does not bind a man at all.
8384. Perhaps it is that Tooth & Co. do not tie their houses and others do? I cannot answer as to what other brewers really do. There is no doubt that other brewers may be more severe than Tooth & Co. would, but if they are they can easily be paid off.
8385. But they have to get the money? That is easily got independently of the brewers or wine and spirit merchants. If a man was really pulled up no man would object to lend him £500.
8386. And as to the agreements between other brewers and the publicans you say nothing because you know nothing? The securities are about the same.
8387. We have heard about transfers in blank accompanying these arrangements? Yes, it is usual for every brewer who lends money to take a blank transfer signed by the publican. That is part and parcel of his security under the bill of sale.
8388. Is that considered to be a tangible security that you could put into force at any time? I consider it not worth the paper it is written upon. It would only be valuable where the bill of sale included a power of attorney.
8389. That is to say that some body is mentioned in the power of attorney to do all things that are necessary? If I put a transfer in to-morrow I could do nothing unaware to the publican because the Inspector of Police takes these transfers round and makes the necessary inquiries. The publican can go to the Court at any moment and the very instant the transfer is called he can say, "I object to it and withdraw it." The bill of sale holder cannot get the transfer if the publican steps in and objects.
8390. Then, as a matter of fact, all the trouble the bill of sale holder has taken is worthless? It is worthless as to the transfer. The only thing a brewer could do if he wished to go to extremes would be to enforce the bill of sale, but it is a difficult thing to get a transfer because you cannot compel the publican to transfer if he will not. My experience for a number of years is that if you enforce your bill of sale and put a bailiff in and demand your money, the publican can turn round and say, "You can do as you like; I will not transfer my license."
8391. Although he has stipulated to do so he can revoke? Yes.
8392. Then it comes to this, that the transfer is waste paper? It is; I look upon it as not worth the paper it is written upon. In fact the whole of the securities of the brewer are not of much good. The brewer can be let in at any moment. The publican can do as he likes with the brewer if he is a cantankerous man. The security over the license is of no value to the brewer, and the blank transfer is no good because he can step into court and withdraw it.
8393. Is not something extracted from the publican sometimes by means of the bill of sale? No.
8394. Not by any of them? Not by any of them.
8395. Then this transfer cannot be carried out except by consent? It has never been used, except with the express authority of the publican. The only circumstances in which you can use it is if the man cleared out of Sydney entirely. You might produce the bill of sale and say that you had a legal right to call for the transfer, and the magistrates, on sufficient evidence, might be quite justified in granting the transfer.
8396. And to look upon the holder of the bill of sale as the publican's representative? Yes.
8397. Are many of these arrangements by way of sub-lease made between the brewer and publican? I believe so. The only thing that I should consider a tied house is this. Where a brewer owns an hotel himself and gives a sub-lease to the publican for five or six years the publican is tied down to deal with him, and if the publican broke the covenant he would be liable to be ejected. That is what I call a tied house.
8398. There the remedy would be in the form of a covenant in the lease? Yes; but borrowing money by means of a bill of sale does not make a house a tied house.
8399. Is a tied house a common state of things? That is a question which I cannot answer. It is a difficult thing for me to say how many sub-leases brewers hold.
8400. Is the practice common? I should imagine that if a brewer could take a lease of the premises it would suit his purpose to do so and the man would be tied because it would be the brewer's lease and almost the same as a freehold.
8401. We have been told by a witness here that it is not a usual practice for brewers to hold leases of houses; that is to say, it is the exception and not the rule? The people I do business with have a great objection to take sub-leases because they are afraid of the liability attaching to them. They may have to pay the rent or fines and the license may be cancelled.
8402. Then your constituents do not like them? Tooth & Company will not take them. They object to them entirely, but I am not going to say that other brewers do the same. They may get as many as they can in order to secure the business.
8403. Then I gather that the practice is not approved by Tooth & Co. but it is by other brewers? Yes, to the best of my belief. I have known instances where people have offered me several leases but Tooth & Co. would not touch them, the liability is too much.
- 8404.

8404. This custom is common all over the world wherever there are public-houses is it not? Yes. In Victoria it is very common. There they go in more for taking leases than in Sydney. The more leases the brewers and wine and spirit merchants take, the more trade they get.

8405. It originated, I suppose, in the brewer wanting to sell his beer? It originated in the lessor desiring to have a good mark rather than a bad one. I do not agree with any brewers taking these subleases. I would like to see these houses on their own natural leases, and as far as the publicans are concerned they would also like to see them so.

8406. In the case of an absolutely tied house I suppose there can be no doubt that the tendency is to put upon the publican very ordinary liquor? Oh, no.

8407. Mr. Hutchison.] When you were asked whether the bill of sale was given by the publican and accepted by the brewer in order to enable the latter to secure the custom you said that the publican could go where he liked for his spirits. Do you mean to separate the spirits from the beer? I am simply speaking with respect to the people I do business with. Some brewers do not sell spirits, they simply sell beer.

8408. On brewers taking the bills of sale out they bind the publican to take all their beer from them? There is a covenant in the bill of sale saying that they should deal with them for beers and spirits, but they really could not bind the publican to do it.

8409. You say the publican may refuse to transfer. Suppose he did, and he were sold off, would not the license lapse? If the publican objected to transfer, the holder of the bill of sale would be liable to lose the lot. It would be a very dangerous process to push the man.

8410. Could a publican legally execute another transfer than the one you held? Of course he could. He could go to-morrow and sell his license to another man.

8411. Has it never been known that a person named in the bill of sale as an attorney has appeared for the publican and asked for a transfer and put that signed transfer in force? I have never myself known it to be done. I do not see how it can be done against the publican. Even admitting that such a power was given the publican would still have his right against those who exercised it, by mandamus, and he could get his transfer transferred back. It would be actually a silly thing if it was got unknown to him.

8412. You say that good sales, where they amount to £4,000, £5,000, or £7,000, generally include the stock? The stock would be taken at a valuation and paid for.

8413. Mr. Roseby.] We have been told that there is a very large proportion of houses in the city and suburbs held by brewers in this way, that the people are obliged by some agreement to deal with those brewers and obtain all their supplies from them. Have you any knowledge as to the extent to which that exists? That is a question which I really could not answer.

8414. Mr. Withers.] That could be compiled from the Trade Circular? Yes; I think that would be the best authority.

8415. Mr. Roseby.] You know, as a matter of fact, that the firm that you are identified with, as a rule deal more leniently with their clients than others in the same line of business? I cannot say that they deal more leniently with them because if they are owed money under security they require to get it the same as any other merchant would, but they give them every facility in business. They give them considerable credit and do not disturb them.

8416. Is there any firm that does not do anything like the business of the firm you represent, but who nevertheless hold far more bills of sale over the licenses? I believe so.

8417. I dare say you have known instances where transfers have been sought, and the publican has appeared in Court and withdrawn the application simply because the brewer was trying to force him to transfer to some one else against his will? Yes; a few instances. They could not get them through because the publican steps into Court and withdraws the application.

8418. Mr. Colls.] You say that the bill of sale is not worth the paper it is written upon? Yes; the whole affair hinges upon the licensee himself. You have to place your trust in the honesty of the publican.

8419. Would you think that there are plenty of hotelkeepers that have not £10 worth of furniture? They must have furniture up to the standard, for if they had not they would not get their renewals.

8420. Would you be surprised to know that after they are passed a portion of the premises is relet? Not to any great extent. He is not allowed to let the rooms, and is liable if he does to have his license cancelled.

8421. Mr. Roseby.] After he has got his license for upwards of twenty rooms he can reduce it as long as he keeps up to the standard accommodation? If a man applies for the standard license he is not supposed to let anything, and if the inspector walks past the house daily and knows that it is not up to standard it is for him to interfere. You are not supposed to let anything off. You apply for a conditional license of thirty or forty rooms, and if you let some of the rooms off for shops you are liable to have your license cancelled. A conditional license is granted before a house is built, and when the building is completed the inspector inspects and measures the rooms, and should the publican let off these private rooms he would be summoned to show cause.

8422. Mr. Colls.] Do Tooth & Co. hold any freeholds? To my knowledge they have not more than five; of course they may hold more houses than I am aware of. I know they have sold two of their freeholds.

TUESDAY, 5 OCTOBER, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,
T. COLLS, Esq., J.P.,

A. HUTCHISON, Esq.,
J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.,

G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. William John Gray called in, sworn, and examined:—

8423. President.] Your name? William John Gray.

8424. You are in the employment of Mort's Dock and Engineering Company? Yes.

8425. Have you been some time in that employment? Thirteen years continuously.

8426. Do you represent here the temperate men among the workmen of the Company? Well, I am not supposed to represent anybody as I know of, but I have come here to honestly answer any question put to me.

Mr.
M. Joseph.

1 Oct., 1886.

Mr.
W. J. Gray.

5 Oct., 1886.

8427.

Mr.
W. J. Gray.
5 Oct., 1886.

8427. Well, without credentials, do you think you represent the moderate men employed at Mort's Dock? Just so. There is another thing I would like to say: we do not keep any drunken men at Mort's Dock. If any drunken men come there they are discharged.
8428. You have none but moderate men there then? None but those.
8429. However you come here representing the interests of the temperate men in your employment? Just so.
8431. Then you do not think it necessary to open the public-houses at all on a Sunday? Oh, no; I am entirely against that.
8433. You honestly believe that? Yes, I do.
8434. How many men are there at Mort's Dock? We are very slack now, and we have about 300.
8435. But you have sometimes had about a thousand? Yes; we have had a thousand. But there are then a great number of lads, and of course your question is with reference to men.
8436. Yes. What do you call a lad? I should call a lad one who was 21 years of age, or something of that sort.
8437. I should have thought you referred to apprentices? We have apprentices of course.
8438. But speaking as well as you can, without being formally authorized to speak—speaking as well as you can on behalf of the temperate men in the employment of Mort's Dock Company, whether they be 300 or 1,000, do you tell us that they do not want Sunday opening? I believe the majority do not.
8439. You begin by saying you do not? Yes.
8440. And you think the others do not? I think not.
8441. In what department are you? The Engineering Department.
8442. And in that capacity I suppose you see a very large number of subordinate hands—a large number of mechanics of all grades? Yes.
8443. Have you ever talked about these things with them? No; not to my knowledge. In fact I have had no time to talk to anybody about coming to this Commission because I did not receive the summons until late on Friday.
8444. Then the only evidence you can give is to the best of your belief, and from the opportunities you have had of talking with men under your eye? Just so. Of course I do not wish to intimate to you that we have all temperate men. There are some that are rather intemperate sometimes, especially on a Saturday night; but they are very few.
8445. Do you take your beer on a Sunday? Sometimes I get it in. A small supply, one glass or so, does me; that is all I have.
8446. A man may have a family of two or three boys capable of drinking their beer? Well I have, but they are total abstainers. The girls as well.
8447. Well I take it that, as a rule, girls are total abstainers? In the majority of cases.
8448. You think it is not necessary, in your opinion and the opinion of the men you represent, to have your beer fresh on a Sunday—that is, to have it drawn from the tap, open for the purpose, on a Sunday? Oh, no.
8449. That means, perhaps, that in your opinion it can be got otherwise? I know they can in many places.
8450. How? Going in at the back door in many places.
8451. But by legitimate means. Is it, in your opinion, sufficient to get it on Saturday? Yes.
8452. That is quite sufficient? Yes.
8453. The beer will not get stale? Not if corked up. And there are ways of reviving it.
8454. What are they? A little sugar or carbonate of soda will revive it.
8455. Now, you are telling us your honest opinion on this subject, not the opinion of a man who has preconceived convictions on the subject. What you really think is the balance of opinion prevailing among your own people? Just so.
8456. Then from that we must gather that the men are temperate in that employment to the extent of not requiring the public-houses to be opened at all on a Sunday? Yes; the majority amongst the mechanical portion. I do not mean to say that there are not plenty of labouring men who would like the public-houses opened on a Sunday. We reckon a mechanic to be an intelligent man, and the majority of those would be in favour of the public-houses being totally closed on Sunday.
8457. Then they are in sympathy with the existing law? Just so.
8458. Are they also in sympathy with the existing law in regard to closing on business days at 11 o'clock? That I cannot say. But as a rule mechanics have to get up at 5 o'clock, and to do that they must go to bed at a reasonable time at night.
8459. They do not go to theatres? They generally go to bed at 11 o'clock, and that does not refer to them.
8460. But I thought a number of the artizan class went to the theatre on a Saturday? Not so much as you might think. I have not been to a theatre for thirty years. As a Christian man I do not believe in them. When I was a young man I had quite enough to do with theatres.
8461. Do you consider that in the part of Balmain where Mort's Dock is situated there is a larger number of public-houses than there should be, accessible to the men at the dock? Well; at the present time there are four within almost a stone's throw of the docks, and one was closed some time ago; that made five.
8462. You have not answered my question. Do you think there are too many? Well; I believe two would serve the purpose as well as the four.
8463. You think then that they do serve some decent purpose in the neighbourhood of an establishment like Mort's Dock? Well, I think so.
8464. You would not get rid of them entirely? If I was a total abstainer I would not get rid of them entirely. I think every person has a right to an opinion as well as myself.

8465. Do you not think the presence of public-houses in the neighbourhood of a place like Mort's Dock, pernicious either in the interests of the employers or in those of the men themselves? No; I do not.
8466. You say there were five houses there, and that now there are four? Yes, there are four now.
8467. Within almost a stone's throw of the precincts of the dock? Yes.
8468. Is not the existence of so many houses a cause of some trouble to the men and their employment? Well, I do not think there are many men who visit those houses except at dinner-time, and men who come from a distance and have their meals there.
8469. Then as a matter of fact we must gather from your answer that the men do not go there to drink, and do not come back from the places drunk? Oh, no.
8470. Are the people who keep these houses to your knowledge reputable men? I do not know any of them.
8471. You do not go there yourself? No; I do not go there myself.
8472. You say you are a temperate man? I have been so all my life-time.
8473. Taking your glass occasionally, though not in a public-house? Very seldom; I generally have it at home.
8474. I should like to know whether you believe that the drink sold here is much adulterated, or is in a state fit to go into consumption? What I have been of opinion for many years is, that we should have a thorough inspection of the liquor sold by a publican.
8475. You think there ought to be a system of inspection, different from what there is at present? Yes.
8476. You do not agree with the present system of inspection? I think the material they sell ought to be inspected.
8477. So it is. You know the inspector has a right to go into any of the public-houses, and does go into them; and obtains samples from the bar, and has them analysed? I am aware they do it sometimes, but very seldom.
8478. It is frequently done. There have been a number of instances this year; and you may not know, but I will tell you that the results of this inspection have been, as a rule, in favour of the publican; that is to say, in favour of the genuineness of the liquor sold. In other words there have very rarely been found in the samples analyzed any of the adulterants mentioned in the Act. It does not therefore follow, I need not tell you, that the liquor inspected was fit to be consumed. It might have been immature, and it would have been probably just as pernicious to a man drinking it by reason of its immaturity, as by reason of its containing certain specified adulterants mentioned in the Act. For these adulterants the analysts analyze it, and not finding them they certify it to be free from adulteration. Now, from what you said just now, I gather that you think the inspection of liquor is not as vigorous as it should be? That is what I think.
8479. I should like you to explain, after what I have said to you, in what way you think the power of inspection should be extended? Well, I am hardly in the position to give you any idea of how it should be extended.
8480. You say you think there ought to be a rigorous inspection and analysis of liquors? I do.
8481. Evidently you think there is not now? I think there is not sufficient.
8482. Well you are, I may mention to you, like a good many we have examined who are of the same opinion, that the inspection is not sufficiently searching, but who are not prepared to say in what way it should be made more searching than it is; now, to go to another point. You seem, judging by what you have said, to be in favour of the existence of a reasonable number of public-houses? I think we have quite enough in Balmain.
8483. But with reference to other places, do you not think the number of public-houses in excess of the reasonable requirements of the inhabitants? I do.
8484. Both for the city and the suburbs? I do.
8485. How would you reduce them? Well, my idea is, that when the licenses expire they should not be renewed.
8486. That is to say, you would leave it to the licensing authorities, making it an instruction to them not to renew licenses not required? Just so.
8487. Giving them full discretion in the matter;—would you not be in favour of what is called local option? I am in favour of it now.
8488. That is to say, you would invest the people or residents in any given area with the right to say whether there should be any public-houses or not? Just so.
8489. Then suppose you carried out that theory in Balmain, would you allow the workmen at Mort's Dock to say whether there should be any public-houses or not there? Just so—they are a portion of the people.
8490. Yet you said a man should have the right to go to a public-house if he liked? I did not say that exactly.
8491. You said with regard to the public-houses near Mort's Dock that there could be no reasonable objection to a certain number of them, because you considered there should be no right to interfere with a man getting a glass of beer? Yes.
8492. But local option would interfere with that? I do not see how that would interfere.
8493. You told us you are in favour of local option? Yes.
8494. Whatever the result might be? Yes.
8495. Suppose it were resolved in the affirmative? Well, the majority must rule.
8496. The rest must be ruled by the result? Yes.
8497. And vice versa? Yes.
8498. Would you extend this local option beyond the sale of liquors in public-houses, or to the consumption of liquor throughout the area—that is to say, would you prevent the working-man or casual wayfarer from having a drink, and permit a man who has drink in his house to drink as he likes? That is in a private house.
8499. Yes, in a private house? A man is not supposed to sell liquor in a private house.
8500. Is your idea of local option limited to the sale of liquor? Well, I think we have a sufficient number of public-houses in Balmain; we have thirty-four to a population of 22,000.
8501. With a population of 22,000, and thirty-four public-houses, you think that local option, as addressed to that state of facts, should be—what? Should allow no more houses to be licensed at the present time.
8502. But would you not let them say in Balmain whether they should have any at all? Decidedly. I said that before.

Mr.
W. J. Gray.
5 Oct., 1886.

Mr.
W. J. Gray.
5 Oct., 1886.

8503. Then your idea of local option is that you should go radically to the bottom of the thing, and say whether there should be any at all? Oh, no; I do not think we could do without public-houses. They have tried it in many parts of the world, and it has been a failure.
8504. You do not think we could do without public-houses. But suppose a large number of people say they can do without public-houses by recording their votes to that effect, would you acquiesce in that? No.
8505. Would you let them say so? No.
8506. Then you are against local option? No; my idea of local option is that there should be no more houses.
8507. Then you are a limited local optionist, inasmuch as you would not have the houses increased in number? Just so.
8508. But would you not let the people say whether they should not be decreased? Decidedly so.
8509. Then it amounts to this: that in your local option creed you will allow the people to say how many houses they require, but you will not allow them to say "we require none at all"? Just so; but you cannot make people sober by Act of Parliament. If the majority are in favour of having public-houses they will have them.
8510. Mr. Hutchison.] Suppose the majority are in favour of not having them? Then I should be against that, because I believe there is a certain class who consider they require a certain amount of drink.
8511. President.] Your local option goes to a certain limit and it will not go any further? No. If I was a total abstainer I would not like to force my opinion down the throat of everybody.
8512. Mr. Hutchison.] Yet you are on Sunday closing? I am on Sunday closing. I have been in five divisions of the world, apart from this one, and I have seen more drunkenness in Sydney, in proportion to the population, than I have seen anywhere.
8513. Have you been in Glasgow and Liverpool? No; I have been in a good many parts in the north of the United Kingdom, but I come from the south. My friend outside comes from Glasgow, and he is a staunch temperate man, and I have no doubt he will be able to give you full particulars of what goes on in Glasgow, which bears a very bad name for intemperance. In large shipping ports you must always look for a very large amount of intoxication.
8514. President.] You have had thirteen years experience here? Yes.
8515. Do you think we are a more sober community than we used to be? Well that is a question I can hardly answer; since we have had a Police Court in Balmain, which sits three days a week, we have a number of drunks brought up there; but if they were brought up at the Water Police Court, as used to be the practice, we should hear nothing about them; so according to appearances there are more cases of drunkenness at Balmain than there used to be.
8516. But that does not deceive you? No.
8517. I think a fair criterion would be what you see and hear when you are off work and go about using your eyes and your ears; do you see or hear of more drunkenness now than five or ten years ago? No; I do not think there is much difference.
8518. Do you think it is much the same? I think it is much the same; I do not see much difference.
8519. Do you think more liquor is consumed privately now than was the case formerly? That is according to the population.
8520. No; I mean do you consider that there is more liquor consumed in private houses than used to be consumed in public-houses? That is a question I am not prepared to answer.
8521. Amongst artizans? I do not think so.
8522. Do you think they take home a large quantity of beer, for instance, for use on a Sunday? No, I do not think so. Mind I am speaking for Balmain.
8523. You would be able to tell if the men who came to you on the Monday had been having a carouse on the Sunday? I think I should.
8524. The mechanics under you require not only steady hands but steady heads? Just so.
8525. Then from using your eyes and ears you do not think that the new Licensing laws which are supposed to have increased the habit of drinking on the Saturday and the Sunday have had that effect? I do not.
8526. Do you think of any particular amendment in the Licensing laws which you consider ought to be carried out? I have not read them.
8527. You know what the laws are generally—that they are for the regulation of the liquor traffic; among your class, the intelligent artizan class, do you think there is any demand for an amendment of the law other than those I have indicated to you in connection with the Sunday opening? No, I do not.
8528. As I see you are an intelligent man I will ask you do you think the punishment for drunkenness what it ought to be—do you think a drunken man ought to be sent to gaol? No; I would serve them the same as in Russia—send them out and make them sweep the streets.
8529. Where is that done? In Riga; you see a lot of these characters, and they are not put into gaol; they are sent out into the streets with large brooms, in charge of soldiers, and they sweep the streets.
8530. Are those the fellows whom have been drinking vodki? Yes, but you do not see much drunkenness in Russia.
8531. But that would not do much good, would it—to sweep the streets in charge of a lot of soldiers? Well, it holds them up to public view. I think the stocks would do some good; it is a pity they were abolished.
8532. Mr. Colls.] Are the mechanics in your shop family men? Mostly family men.
8533. You say there are thirty-three houses over there? I think thirty-four.
8534. Are they houses for the accommodation of the public, or for drinking? Houses for the accommodation of the public.
8535. Anyone can get accommodation there? Yes. I think all in Balmain have accommodation—so many rooms set apart for the public.
8536. Anyone can get lunch there? I believe so, at a reasonable time.
8537. Have you ever known anyone to be refused lunch or accommodation? No.
8538. Country people could get accommodation? I believe so. Being a resident of Balmain I never go to any of the houses for accommodation.
8539. You have seen Balmain rise to its present state of population? Yes.
8540. Mr. Withers.] In your business, I suppose, you have a number of men connected with machinery, who are occupying very responsible positions? Yes.

8541. Are you, from your own knowledge, aware whether, as a rule, these men are total abstainers or very temperate men? There are a number of them total abstainers, but the majority of mechanics over there are very temperate men. They are men of families, pretty well all of them, and they have houses of their own. All their houses are not paid for; they are in building societies; but I would give credit to the men of Balmain as being as sober a lot as any I have worked with.

Mr.
W. J. Gray.
5 Oct., 1886.

8542. I suppose if there was the slightest suspicion of a man being tempted to take what is more than a fair amount of liquor he would not be entrusted with the care of an engine, or with heavy castings, or anything of that kind? Oh, no. There is a rule there that any man bringing liquor there, or found with it, shall be fined 10s., and for the second offence he is not employed again.

8543. Do any of the men have their lunch there at the dinner hour? Yes.

8544. Do they bring anything with them? They are not supposed to bring any intoxicant with them there.

8545. President.] Do you call beer an intoxicant? Oh yes, decidedly. I do not say that a man does not bring anything in his tin can, but it is prohibited at all hours.

8547. Do you think a moderate amount of drink, taken by mechanics employed by the day, is beneficial—do you think the stimulant has a beneficial effect upon them? I can give you my own experience. Sometimes we have to work over there all manner of hours, and sometimes at night. Especially in the early morning, after working all night, I like a little whisky and water. I speak from my own experience.

8548. I suppose, according to the rules of the establishment, not very many of the men have much liquor through the day? Oh no.

8549. What you have you have in the evening before going to bed? Yes.

8550. Do you think the men are better without it—that it is better for them to be kept without it during working hours? Well I do not know. I have a small quantity of beer during the working hours. I take a glass of beer, for instance, and I find that if I am walking up a hill it creates an appetite.

8551. Do you think it would be a wise provision to prevent a large body of men like those over there from having anything? Well if I could not control myself I would be a total abstainer altogether.

8552. But with regard to the general body of the men, do you think it would be a wise thing to allow them to have it? It would not do.

8553. You think the restriction on a Sunday is a proper thing? I do.

8554. And should be adhered to? I do.

8555. Mr. Roseby.] In some places they close the public-houses earlier on Saturday than on other days in the week—that is to say, at 7 o'clock on Saturday, in order to prevent men from squandering their wages on a Saturday night; would you favour the closing of public-houses at an earlier hour than now on Saturday? That is a question I could not answer.

8557. But do you think it a wise thing? Well, if a man wanted it he could get what he wanted before 7 o'clock.

8558. You do not think it a wise thing? No, I do not.

8559. Would you close the houses on election days? Yes, every one of them, and have the elections all on one day.

8560. You think there is a strong element of danger in the public-house business? Well, I do at election times.

8561. Ordinarily do you think there is an element of danger—different from the business of a grocer or an ironmonger, or anything of that kind? Well, publicans are like other people; there are a great many different classes of persons in the business. Some publicans when they see a man has had enough, will not give him any more; but there are others who would give him more.

8562. I do not mean as to the character of the publican;—is there not a danger in the business? Undoubtedly.

8563. Have you not known the best and brightest mechanics go to destruction through drink? Oh yes; and others besides mechanics.

8564. But it is often the case that some of the best of mechanics go to destruction through drink? Yes.

8566. You attribute that to the strict rule that no drink is allowed on your works? I do not think that affects young men after 4 o'clock, because if they wanted it they would get it.

8567. But the very fact of this rule being carried out on your works shows there is danger in the drink? No doubt; everybody knows there is danger when there is liquor flying about. Many a good ship has been lost at sea through it.

8568. Do you think a publican ought to be permitted to supply young persons with liquor? No.

8569. Do you think a publican ought to be allowed to employ girls as barmaids? No, I do not. I could have made a fortune years ago if I had taken a public-house, but I said no; I would not allow my wife or children to go into a public-house.

8570. You evidently thought there was danger in it? I know there is.

8571. You know that mechanics can perform the hardest labour without the use of stimulants? Oh yes.

8572. And you have known a large number of mechanics perform the most arduous labour without stimulants? I have.

8573. And you know a large number consider that drink is injurious and dangerous? Just so.

Mr. James Macnee called in, sworn, and examined:—

- Mr. J. Macnee.
5 Oct., 1886.
8574. President.] You are in the employment of Mort's Dock and Engineering Company? Yes.
8575. And you have been there how long? Somewhere about three and a half years.
8576. In what capacity? As engine fitter.
8577. I understand you are a total abstainer? Yes.
8578. You have a large number of total abstainers among the dock men? No; we have not a large number. They may number half a dozen altogether to my knowledge.
8579. But you have a large number of temperate men? Well, I never met with them as temperate men either in society or otherwise. We have there a worthy chief of the good templars, and he has a number who follow him, but I cannot say that there is more to my knowledge than half a dozen.
8580. What I mean is that out of the 430 men (which we are told is the number of men employed in Mort's Dock) the vast majority stand for temperate men, although they may not be total abstainers? Yes.
8581. No drunkards are allowed in the dock? No.
8582. And no drink is allowed to be taken into the dock to be drunk while the men are at their work? It is not.
8583. There are some public-houses in the neighbourhood of the dock? Yes.
8584. Do they do much mischief or not? I think upon the whole they do.
8585. I mean to the dock people. Do you think the existence of the public-houses near the dock is a source of trouble and danger to the workmen and the works? Yes, I believe it is.
8586. Do you ever see men the worse for liquor there? Yes; I have seen them coming out of the public-houses the worse for liquor.
8587. Have you ever seen them the worse for it, and disabled from carrying on their work through having been supplied with liquor? I could not say that they were incapable.
8588. Were they the worse for liquor? Yes, they were.
8589. Was the carrying on of their calling dangerous to them or to the works at that time? Any occupation which the men were engaged in was certainly dangerous.
8590. And all you say is that they were the worse for liquor, although you are not prepared to say that thereby any lives or property were endangered? No; I could not say that.
8591. You think that the public-houses in the neighbourhood of these works is a danger? I am sure it must be to the employer as well as to the employed.
8592. Do the men go out during the dinner-hour? Yes.
8593. And are they employed at night? Yes.
8594. They can go out at any time? No, but they would go into the public-house in the morning as they came to work.
8595. You do not know whether these men get drinks while going to work? I could not say.
8596. Do all the men present themselves in a sober state and fit for work? Yes.
8597. Then what is it you complain of; that they can get away during the dinner and other hours and get drunk? Yes.
8598. And that is the danger? Yes; and they take liberties which they are not allowed to take. They are not allowed to leave the dock on any consideration, but they might do it.
8599. Being a total abstainer, you would be in favor of closing public-houses in the neighbourhood of such works as Mort's Dock? Yes; I would be in favor of local option generally.
8600. Whether the result were to perpetuate the existing state of things or alter it? Well, local option people are so much divided in their opinions.
8601. They might vote to keep them as they stand or reduce or increase the number of public-houses? Yes.
8602. But whatever the result might be, you are in favor of local option? Yes.
8603. And in favor of granting it to the class you represent? Yes.
8604. Would you go further and extend it to the whole colony and allow any residents within defined boundaries to say whether they would shut the public-houses or not? Yes, I would leave it in the hands of the qualified ratepayers.
8605. You would not extend it. You would not allow Parliamentary electors to vote? No, I would restrict it to the ratepayers.
8606. Have you thought this matter out? Yes.
8607. Have you been in any other country? Yes, in England and Scotland.
8608. There is a great deal of drunkenness in Glasgow? Considerable.
8609. They have a Sunday-closing Act? Yes, the Mackenzie Act.
8610. Has that any effect upon drunkenness? Well, it is very badly carried out. I have seen batches of people going to Paisley and going in for any amount of drink.
8611. Do you notice any increase of drunkenness among the younger people? No; they are sober, intelligent young men.
8612. I suppose they attend all the improvement classes they can? A good many do.
8613. In a place like Mort's Dock do you see much actual drunkenness? Well, we have had a case or two crop up, but the men have been discharged.
8614. Is it not rare? Very rare.
8615. Do you think they drank bad drink, or was it drinking to excess? I should think it was through excess.
8616. Would you close public-houses earlier on Saturdays than the present hours? Yes.
8617. On Sunday, I take it, you would not open them at all? I would not.
8618. As a total abstainer, would you still further reduce the hours of doing business on the other days of the week? I would be glad to take anything in the right direction that the Legislature thought fit to give. Any reduction of the hours would be a boon, I think.
8619. Have you heard any complaints by the men of getting bad or adulterated liquors? I have heard them say that Colonial beer is worse than English beer.
8620. And with regard to the spirits, have they complained to you of the class of spirits supplied to them? I could not say anything upon that point.
8621. Has a case like this occurred:—A man has been suddenly found the worse for drink—a truthful man—and he said, "Well, I had a glass of whisky or rum (as the case may be), and I think I have been poisoned by it"? We have heard of such cases.
8622. Have they come under your notice? No.

8623. Mr. Roseby.] You think that a person is better and safer without drink altogether? Yes.
8624. And you think an indulgence in drink is a very dangerous indulgence? Yes.
8625. You have known a number of excellent mechanics go to destruction through drink? Yes, I have.
8626. Have you a family? I have seven children.
8627. And you want them to follow in your footsteps as far as total abstinence is concerned? Yes.
8628. You said you were strongly in favour of keeping public-houses entirely closed on Sunday? Yes.
8629. And you think the law ought to be made very stringent in order to keep them closed? Yes. I would like to take anything that the Legislature would give in that direction.
8630. Do you know that public-houses carry on surreptitiously on Sunday? Yes, I saw it in two houses last Sunday.
8631. Do you not think that a deplorable state of things? Yes.
8632. Have you known men who formerly worked in your dock go to destruction? Yes, there was one man who, when he was there, was a blue-ribbon man, and now, through drink, he is a dissolute man.
8633. Would you not raise the age at which publicans could supply liquor to people considerably above 16 years? Yes.
8634. What would you make it? 20 or 21 years. It would be a very good thing to make it 20.
8635. Have you noticed that on election days there is a great deal of intemperance? Yes.
8636. Do you think it would not be a wise thing to close public-houses on election days? Yes, it would be a grand thing.
8637. In fact you would hail anything with satisfaction that prevented people attending public-houses? Yes.
8638. Mr. Hutchison.] Then you would be a prohibitionist if you could get the principle carried out? Yes.
8639. As to drunkenness in Glasgow, after all, is it not generally confined to Saturday night? Yes; every Saturday in a fortnight.
8640. As a matter of fact Glasgow drunkards are not the greatest drunkards in the world? I could not give statistics, but they are pretty drunken, there is no question of that; but as regards any other portion of the world I have not taken any notice.
8641. Notwithstanding that the Glasgow people are so drunken is it not a fact that the Town Council have petitioned for the introduction of Sir Wilfred Lawson's Bill? Yes.
8642. And that no member has a chance to be elected for Glasgow unless he supports that measure? Yes, I believe that is so, too.
8643. How long is it since you left Glasgow? About three and a-half years.
8644. You were there when Cameron went up. Was not that the very first article in his principles? I could not say. There is no doubt that the first cry out was for prohibition, and it was one of the most popular cries of the day, but I have not just before my mind's eye the opinions of Cameron. I know that Stewart would have nothing to do with prohibition.
8645. It is just possible that you have been thinking about this question at home. Do you know about McLaggan's Bill that he proposed to introduce into Scotland alone? The name is familiar, but I do not know the Bill.
8646. Do you know that the Scotch members are going to agitate for a Bill for Scotland alone like Lawson's Bill? I do not know that.

Mr. Phillip Pemberton called in, sworn, and examined:—

8647. President.] You are in the employment of Hudson Brothers? Yes, for ten years.
8648. What as? As a sawyer.
8649. Do you use a machine-saw? Yes, of different kinds.
8650. Have you many men under you? Occasionally.
8651. I suppose it is a business which requires that the men engaged in it should be thoroughly sober? Yes, it takes a man all his time to watch himself.
8652. I suppose a slip is fatal? Yes.
8653. Are you a temperate man or a total abstainer? I am a temperate man by habit.
8654. That is to say, that you do not totally abstain from liquor? Yes, I do; but still in a case of emergency I do not object to take it.
8655. Then you are a temperate man, rather inclined to be a total abstainer than otherwise? Yes.
8656. You would only take it as a necessary stimulant, or in case of accident? Yes; I used to take it, and found I was better without it, and could get along better.
8657. I should like to have your opinion on that feature of the Licensing law which prohibits public-houses being opened on Sunday. First of all, I suppose you do not come here as the representative of anybody. You were merely selected by the firm as an intelligent artizan in their employment? Yes.
8658. I ask you whether you think the majority of the men in Hudson Brothers' employment would like the public-houses to be open on Sundays? I do not think they would.
8659. You are at the Redfern shops? Yes.
8660. How many are employed there? About forty or fifty. There used to be 400 or 500 before the Granville place was opened.
8661. However, speaking of those you know, and those with whom you have spoken from time to time, do you consider that the majority would be against the opening of public-houses on Sundays? Yes; I believe they would absolutely.
8662. And suppose it came to a vote during an election where one candidate was in favour of Sunday-opening, and another against it, would they vote for the opponent of the Sunday-opening? I think they would.
8663. Then you think that in Hudson Brothers' establishment, Sunday-opening is not assented to? Yes; I think that is so.
8664. Are the workmen contented with the ordinary hours of the week during which public-houses are allowed to be open, or would they desire them to be extended? I do not think so.
8665. Do you think they want to drink after 11 o'clock? No.
8666. Do you think they ought to want it? No, I think not.
8667. Would you shorten the hours of opening on Saturday? I think it would be a benefit to men's families if they closed at dinner-time on Saturday.
8668. Do you have instances of drunkenness at your works? Yes, occasionally.

Mr.
J. Macnee.
5 Oct., 1886.

Mr.
P. Pemberton.
5 Oct., 1886.

Mr.
P. Pemberton.
5 Oct., 1886.

8669. Do you think the employment of a sawyer creates a particular kind of thirst? No, I do not.
8670. Have you noticed any particular disposition to drink among apprentices? No, I have not.
8671. Then the men generally in your establishment are a sober lot? Yes, generally speaking.
8672. I suppose drink is not allowed on the premises? No, it is not, and a man is discharged if he is found with it on the premises.
8673. Do you believe in local option? Yes.
8674. Would you absolutely prohibit public-houses? Yes, provided the vote was against them.
8675. Would you give people the right of saying whether they would have them or not? Yes.
8676. About the Sunday dinner-beer, do you think that is a true cry or not? I believe it is a bonâ fide cry on the part of the working-man.
8677. Do you think they want their Sunday beer? Yes, they seem to say that they do.
8678. Then you think it is an honest cry, and not one made by the publican but a demand made by the men themselves? Yes, I think it is in the suburbs and the city generally.
8679. You would open the public-houses and supply them with what they want? No.
8680. Then do you think they get it? They can get it and do get it.
8681. But I mean legitimately. Could they not supply themselves on Saturday? Perhaps they could, but it is not as good as when they can get it on Sunday at the public-house.
8682. Then you do not think public-houses should be opened simply for the purpose of giving the working man his beer? No, I would not. It is merely a habit as far as my opinion goes.
8683. Have you heard much complaint about adulteration of liquor? I have from time to time.
8684. Have you heard any complaints lately that the liquor supplied over the bars is not what it should be? I have heard of it at several public-houses, and men have walked past one public-house and gone to another for that reason.
8685. Believing that the liquor is better there than at the one they had passed? Yes.
8686. Mr. Withers.] Has it come to your knowledge in any way that the wives of working men have become intemperate through the agency of the grocer supplying drink in their homes? I never heard that grocers could supply wines and spirits, and I have not heard of wives becoming intemperate.
8687. Do you think the system of "shouting" tends to excessive drinking? Yes, I do.
8688. Very seriously? Yes, I do.
8689. You cannot suggest any remedy for that? No, I think it would be a very difficult thing to get at.
8690. As a rule I suppose that mechanics where they remain steady to middle age go on to the end of time? Some drink to excess, but I think as an average thing if a man keeps steady up to middle age he does not then give way.
8691. Do you think that if men become landlords through the agency of building societies it induces them to become temperate and take an interest in their wives and their families? Yes, I do.
8692. I suppose you did not lose sight of that fact when you left off drink? No.
8693. Do you think that men who are employed in heavy work during the day are better able to work and feel better without drink? Yes.
8694. Do you think that applies to the majority of men? Yes; I believe a man is far better able to do his work if he does not take drink than the man who takes it.
8695. Have you had any dread of some of your fellow men getting too much drink and endangering not only their own lives but yours? Yes; there is always a danger when a man takes drink.
8696. I suppose that is strictly watched at your works? Yes; pretty well.
8697. They would not put a man on in charge of a steam saw if he became drunk in any way? No; if a man was found the worse for drink once he would not have a chance again.
8698. Mr. Roseby.] You think your views are the views of most of the intelligent working men with whom you are associated? Yes; I do.
8699. You know a number of mechanics who say that they are better without drink? Yes; and there are a number who take it and they say they wish they could do without it like me, and that they would be better without it.
8700. You think drinking is a very dangerous habit? Yes.
8701. Have you known a number of excellent mechanics who went to ruin, and who brought their families to destitution through drink? Yes.
8702. And you would hail with satisfaction anything that would reduce the tendency to drink? Yes.
8703. And you think the law should be made more stringent so that public-houses should not be allowed to be open on Sunday through the back door? Yes.
8704. I suppose you think it a dangerous thing for young people to take drink? Yes.
8705. You believe the law ought not to allow the publican to sell them drink? Yes.
8706. Do you think the law ought to allow young women to serve behind bars? No; I do not think it is the best place for them.
8707. Of course you would go in for abolishing upstairs bars? Yes.
8708. And the closing of public-houses on election days when there is so much drink taken? Yes.
8709. You believe that elections would be more orderly and purer if there was no drink flying about? Yes.
8710. Would you not rather send confirmed inebriates to an asylum than send them to gaol? Yes, I think it would be better.
8711. In answer to the President you say that you would be in favor of closing public-houses earlier on Saturdays? Yes. There are a great number of workmen who do not work after dinner-time and they get their wages then and perhaps very few shillings see home. Perhaps the man himself does not get home till Sunday.
8712. Mr. Hutchison.] Do you think that even with a large number of men who drink, if they had a chance of voting these public-houses out of existence they would vote them out of existence? Well I think there are a good many would, but as to the majority I could not say. I daresay the majority would for the sake of themselves and their families.
8713. Do you think that a large number of men feel that they are held by these drinking customs and injured by them and that if they had the power of voting them away they would? Yes; I believe they would.
8714. As to the Sunday closing, do you believe that if the working men were polled to-day that they would vote for keeping the houses strictly closed on Sunday? I believe that the majority would.

8715. Do you think it is a libel on the working man for anybody to come here and say that the working man clamours for opening on Sunday? I believe it is.

8716. Would he not be indignant if he were told so? He might be so.

Mr.
P. Pemberton.
5 Oct., 1886.

Mr. Henry Charlesworth called in, sworn, and examined:—

8717. President.] You are in the employment of Hudson Brothers, Redfern? Yes; ever since I landed in the colony two years and nine months ago from England.

8718. You are a sawyer? Yes, a machine-sawyer.

8719. Are you a temperance man? I am a total abstainer. I have not signed anything and do not believe in societies. I have not always been a total abstainer.

8720. Have you been in the habit of drinking as you choose? I have been a moderate drinker, and have taken too much sometimes.

8721. And now you have changed all that? Yes, and thank God I have good cause to say so.

8722. We are not so much concerned in the habits of particular persons as to try and ascertain what the opinions are of the general body of working men with whom you have associated. Now the first question we have to ask you is this: Do you think the majority of men in the employment of Hudson Brothers at Redfern are content with the closing of public-houses on Sundays? I cannot answer for them, but for myself.

8723. What do the men say to you—what is the general talk? Sometimes they think that it is not right, and that men ought to please themselves, and some say total prohibition. I say total prohibition.

8724. But those to whom you talk are not all total abstainers like yourself, and yet they are good workmen and men who do their work honestly. Now, with regard to your fellow-workmen who are sober, and yet take their glass of beer or spirits, are they content with the closing of public-houses on Sunday? I cannot answer that. I have never gone so far as that. They did not seem to want to go into that question. They know I am a total abstainer and joke with me on the question.

8725. Explain? Well, I will give you the explanation: Only last Friday my master sent me down to do some work at Mr. Tooth's; I had to go down Parramatta-street, where they were building a roof; the man I took to assist me went with me; Mr. Tooth is what is called a good employer, and there is so much beer for the men at noon; my man, when beer-time came, said, "Come along, dad;" but I said, "No; if you put a sovereign in it, I won't." When he came back I said, "Well, it has not made a man of you; you cannot do half the work you could before; if you had another glass you would be man enough to lie down and do nothing." A moderate drinker cannot do the same amount of work a sober man can.

8726. This drink you are speaking of now is taken in working hours? Yes. This man came back in 5 minutes, and went on with the work. I went to the tap, and had a swallow of cold water, as usual.

8727. And you felt better for it? Oh yes; and I felt a better man than the other, though he was a younger man.

8728. And he took—how much? He took a little more than a pint. It made him seriously stupefied.

8729. He would not then be a man to go on a roof? No.

8730. That brings us to the question of drinking in working hours by men working in the sun? They do it in the sun or out of the sun.

8732. Well, what is your reason? At Charnford, in England, I was overseer for eight years, while farming there, and one day the other overseer said to me, "Come and have a glass before we go for the order." But I said, "No, I will go for the order with a clear head." But I drank and got muddled, and when I was going to the field with a load of manure it was said there was a drunken man in the place. "Oh," it was said to me, "there is a drunken man in the place; you had too much last night." I said, "I had, but I will make it right." Then it was said, "You should be like me; sign the pledge." This man had been a thorough drunkard. He said, "I'll make an agreement with you for 5s." I was only a moderate drinker at the time, but I said, "Jim—done!" and it was done. I went to the missus to ask her for some tea, but she said she had no tea, "Have some beer." "No," I said, "I will go for some water;" and it was all through that bet with the drunkard. I was at that time very much troubled with "rheumatics," and, through the bet, I carried on the practice of not drinking anything, and I began to feel better, and then the "rheumatics" left me. From that time to this I don't know what the "rheumatics" are; the drunken man cured me.

8733. You are really a man who has been cured by a drunken man? Yes.

8734. Very well. You have been a total abstainer from that time? From that time.

8735. I presume you think it would be better for your fellow workmen to follow the same practice? I have always prescribed that remedy, but some of them—those who like the beer—laugh at me.

8736. Do you think the people here drink more than the people do in your country? Well, I know there is more drinking on the Sunday here than when it was prohibited.

8737. Do you tell us that there is more drinking here, where drink is prohibited on the Sunday, than in your country, where it is not? Than in my native land, where it is not.

8738. That is Leicestershire? Yes. When a man goes here to the public-house on a Sunday he is let in on the sly, unknown to the officers of the police force, and he will get three or four glasses down before he leaves, and it overcomes him suddenly. If he could take a glass in moderation it would not be so bad.

8739. They drink a large quantity in a short time? That is it. They gulp it down. I have seen them drunk at my door, close to Mr. Hudson's, when I have got up at 7 o'clock to light a fire.

8740. On a Sunday? Yes. I do not know where they have got it, but I have seen them reeling and quarrelling.

8741. Before breakfast? Before 7 o'clock on a Sunday morning, and I have never seen that in England. And they have been men who get good wages. There is not much money left on the Tuesday following the pay. We pay every fortnight. They drink, and then they are all rags and tatters; and yet they get good wages.

8742. Are these family men? Oh, yes. We have some total abstainers, and I have no difficulty in getting their version. Two or three have warned me. They have given me notice to prohibit it as much as I could.

Mr. H.
Charlesworth.
5 Oct., 1886.

- Mr. H. Charlesworth.
5 Oct., 1886.
8743. You say then now what they would have said? Yes; you must understand that there are a lot of men at Mr. Hudson's.
8744. How many? When I came there were 403, but there are not more now than about 100; many of them drink only moderately.
8745. You are speaking of the Redfern Mills? Of Redfern.
8746. You say that out of that number there are only a few total abstainers? Yes; as I can talk to about it.
8747. The rest are—what? I cannot answer for the majority.
8748. You know, I suppose, what local option means? Rather.
8749. Would you give the people the power to abolish public-houses? You mean to prohibit them altogether?
8750. Yes? I would prohibit them altogether independently of local option; I think they are the greatest curse in any land—prohibition by law I mean.
8751. Do you think there is much adulterated liquor in this Colony? I have never tasted it, I have never even smelt beer; I smelt a sup of brandy last week that was sent to a sick person; that is the only liquor I have smelt in the Colony.
8752. Mr. Colls.] What part of the city is it in which you see so much drinking going on on the Sunday? Redfern. I have seen them walk down Redfern in the morning, it is not a regular thing, but I have seen them do it.
8753. You reside at Redfern? Ycs.
8754. And that is where you see the drinking? Yes; I do not know where they get it from.
8755. Mr. Withers.] Do you think the system of shouting tends to excessive drinking? Yes.
8756. Very much, I suppose? Yes; what we call treating in England.
8757. I suppose as many as twenty men go in sometimes, and have a glass before they leave? They ask me to pay them for a shout; that is how I know it. I say to them, "If you had worked for me I would pay you for it, but not to shout."
8758. Are you aware whether many working men's wives have become intemperate through the grocer supplying liquor under the present Act? Am I aware what?
8759. Are you aware that the grocers can supply small quantities of drink? I do not know; they do in England.
8760. Are working men's wives, as a rule, temperate do you think? That I do not know; I never go anywhere.
8761. I suppose you often talk about this temperance question? If they begin with me I generally go in as fast as I can.
8762. You never heard any complaint from workmen of their wives or families getting drink from grocers? No; I did not know that a grocer's shop sold it.
8763. Do you think the working classes, as a rule, desire to have the public-houses open? Yes; but I never associate with even my own men; I am like what is called a new chum; I do not travel about; I am more domesticated; I am not troubled with beer-folks at home; my wife does not touch it.
8764. You spoke of seeing men on Sunday morning drunk;—taking the working men as a body, are they more temperate or drunken than they used to be? Well, I cannot say for this Colony; I am a new beginner; they are not so bad in England.
8765. Mr. Roseby.] Of course you know the condition of things about public-houses in England? A little bit.
8766. Have you noticed a difference between the condition of things in England and here; do you think we drink more here than they do at Home? Oh, ycs; the thing is there is more chance for the working men to get it here.
8767. Are there far more public-houses in proportion to the population? About the same.
8768. But you see more drunkenness than at Home? There is more money here to get it; there is drunkenness at Home.
8769. Your opinion is that we have far too many public-houses? Yes; I think so.
8770. Even considering those who take drink, you consider we have far too many public-houses? Oh, ycs, I think so. In Charnford they asked me about the local option, and I voted for it; Sir Wilfred Lawson was the man who brought the Bill forward; I signed my name there for the local option.
8771. You thoroughly believe in Sir Wilfred Lawson's principle of local option? I should go further. But I think it would be right in this way: I am a total abstainer, and if the publican sells the beer and makes so many intoxicated he ought to make them so at his own cost. It should not be that when a man drinks too much and is fined and cannot pay the fine the cost falls on the ratepayers. The publican ought to pay it. That would improve the local option. The publican would not then give a drunken man beer.
8772. You think the publican ought to pay the expense connected with the damage done by the drink? Yes, the same as in the case of a druggist who sells poison; he has to stand the lash of the law.
8773. Do you believe there are a number of the workmen who take drink who think there are too many public-houses? I cannot say that. If I had known I would have called them together and asked them. It shall be my duty to do so henceforth.
8774. You do not belong to any teetotal organization? No.
8775. You are simply personally a total abstainer? I am.
8776. And you think that public-houses are dangerous institutions? Decidedly.
8777. Both from your observation here and at home? Ycs.
8778. Do you consider it right to employ barmaids? I think it is an unfit place for any respectable girl to be in.
8779. I need not ask you whether you would close the public-houses on election days? They might be as well open on election days as on other days; but there is bribery with beer, no doubt. I have seen that done in England.
8780. You would favour, then, the closing of these houses on election days? Yes.
8781. And do you think they ought to be closed earlier on a Saturday than on any other day during the week? Well, I do not know. If you give them any liberty at all you should give them full liberty, I say. It would be curtailing the public-houses, and the men must pay their licenses.
8782. But you say the number of public-houses ought to be reduced? Yes, but not recouping the publican.
8783. Without compensation? Without compensation.

8784. Do you believe it is a dangerous business for the publican himself? Yes, I do.
 8785. Of course there are respectable men in the business? Oh, yes.
 8786. And men who rear large families? Yes.
 8787. But notwithstanding that you think it is a dangerous business for those engaged in the traffic? Yes. I would not have a public-house if you put me in free.
 8788. Mr. Hutchison.] Being a prohibitionist you go in for every possible restriction? Decidedly I do.
 8789. But you are very careful on one point—as to whether the working men would vote for that? I cannot say what their opinion is on that question; I have never sounded them.
 8790. Taking the working men generally, here and at home, do you think it is a fact that many who drink would be glad if they could not get it? I should say they would. It is a temptation. It is what is called getting into company which causes men to drink.
 8791. Do you think that much of the drinking we deplore is the result of frequent temptation to working men to drink—do you think the multiplicity of temptations leads to much drinking among working men—do you think the large number of public-houses do? I do not know, for there is many a man will go 2 miles to get a glass of beer if he wants one.

Mr. H.
Charlesworth.

FRIDAY, 8 OCTOBER, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,	A. HUTCHISON, Esq.,
G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.,	J. DAVIES, Esq., C.M.G., J.P., M.P.,
J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Richard Lorenzo Giles called in, sworn, and examined:—

8792. Mr. Hutchison.] What is your name? Richard Lorenzo Giles.
 8793. President.] You are from Goodlet & Smith's? Yes.
 8794. Mr. Hutchison.] Are you an abstainer? Yes.
 8795. Do you belong to any temperance society? Yes; the Independent Order of Rechabites.
 8796. You are a Rechabite? Yes.
 8797. That is a benefit society? Yes.
 8798. Are you familiar with the provisions of the last Licensing Act? No, not particularly.
 8799. You know that the law provides for entire Sunday closing? Yes.
 8800. I suppose you are aware that the law is largely violated? It is.
 8801. Would it be true to say that the working man, as such, is the violator of the law—primarily the cause? I think not.
 8802. Would it be true to say that the working man, as such, is clamouring for Sunday-opening? I think not.
 8803. Would you consider yourself a representative man? Of the working class.
 8804. Yes? Yes.
 8805. Now, in conversation in your shops, has it appeared to you that there is a cry for Sunday-opening again? No.
 8806. Not even for a portion of the day? No, I think not. Not as far as I know the working man in the place that I am, at any rate.
 8807. How many men are employed there? I am not quite positive, but there are over 150.
 8808. And you move amongst the men? Yes.
 8809. And are likely to know their views? Yes.
 8810. Is drink prohibited in your workshops? Yes.
 8811. Not allowed in? Not allowed in.
 8812. Are there any public-houses near your factory? Yes.
 8813. Do your men go out and get drink there? No, they cannot do that, not during working hours.
 8814. I suppose there are saws going in your place? Yes.
 8815. What is your particular branch? I am a joiner.
 8816. It would be considered risky to allow any man to come into these saw-mills under the influence of liquor? Yes.
 8817. Is it a regulation of the firm that no drink is allowed? I believe so.
 8818. Is there any strict rule against a man being inebriated on the premises? I do not know that there is any rule to prevent men coming in, but were he found so he would be immediately turned away.
 8819. President.] Are they permitted to bring in beer? No, nothing.
 8820. Mr. Hutchison.] Do many men remain on the premises during meal hours? The greater portion.
 8821. Do they have beer with them, or tea? Tea and coffee principally. There is provision on the premises to make that.
 8822. Then they are not even allowed to have beer? No.
 8823. Neither to fetch it, nor to send out for it? No.
 8824. President.] Have you had any accidents lately? There was one slight one, but nothing of any serious consequence.
 8825. Have you ever had any accidents traceable to drink? Not in our firm, that I am aware of, but there have been those who have gone from there; when they have gone away from there they have met with serious accidents through the drink.
 8826. You have nothing to do with the saws or planing machines? No.
 8827. Are you a working joiner or a superintending joiner? A working joiner.
 8828. Mr. Hutchison.] Where are your workshops? At Pymont, at the end of Harris-street.
 8829. Are there many public-houses near your place. I will put the question in another way;—do you think that in that locality there are too many public-houses? Yes.
 8830. Are you familiar with Sydney? Yes.
 8831. Do you think there are too many in Sydney? Yes, by far.

Mr.
R. L. Giles.
8 Oct., 1886.

Mr.
B. L. Giles.
8 Oct., 1886.

8832. How many do you think they could be conveniently reduced by? My own view is by the whole.
8833. You are a prohibitionist then? I am.
8834. Then you believe in local option? Yes.
8835. Would you give the people power by a majority to vote to shut up the public-houses in their midst? Yes.
8836. Would you compensate the publican? No.
8837. Then you are an out and out local optionist without compensation? Without compensation.
8838. Mr. Roseby.] You have had considerable experience as a mechanic? Yes.
8839. How long have you been in the colony? I came in 1874—12 years of ago.
8840. And you have been associated with a number of workmen during these years? Yes.
8841. Now do you believe that a man is better without the use of drink? I do.
8842. He would perform his work better and more satisfactorily both to himself and his employers? Yes.
8843. Do you consider that drink among workmen is an unmitigated curse? Yes.
8844. You have seen in your experience, have you not, some of the best mechanics over-mastered by drink? I have.
8845. You have known families brought to ruin and destruction by the father giving way to drink? I have.
8846. So you are strongly in favour of giving the people the power by local option to close these houses altogether? Yes.
8847. If these houses continue to exist do you believe they ought to be brought under very restrictive laws? Yes.
8848. You regard the use of drink as a great danger to the community? Yes.
8849. And I gather from what you say that the law to close these houses ought to be very restrictive? Yes.
8850. You know that law is now very frequently violated? Yes.
8851. Do you know that the law for Sunday closing is frequently violated? Yes, I do; I observe it every Sunday.
8852. Would you permit a publican to supply young people with drink—do you think it right that a publican should supply young persons with drink, as the law now permits? No, I do not.
8853. To what age would you raise the standard at which the publican could supply a youth with drink; the law now says 16—do you not think that is too young? Yes; I should say 21.
8854. In no case would you allow a publican to supply a child with drink for its parents or anybody else? No; because it leads them to drink themselves, as I often see.
8855. Would you permit a publican to employ young girls or women as barmaids in his house? No.
8856. Do you think it is a proper place for any respectable woman—to be found behind a public-house bar? No, it is not.
8857. Have you noticed whether many workmen—young men—have recently given away to drink? Yes.
8858. Has that habit increased since you have been in the Colony? Yes.
8859. You think it is worse now than you have ever known it to be in your experience? Yes.
8860. President.] Have you known that amongst your fellow-workmen, the young ones? Yes.
8861. Mr. Roseby.] Has it ever struck you that drink very frequently overmasters the very best and brightest of mechanics—the most intelligent, genial, and generous-hearted? Yes; and not long since.
8862. And hence you would hail with pleasure the suppression of that drink which is so disastrous to the workmen of the country? Yes.
8863. Mr. Hutchison.] Can you illustrate an instance when you say, as you did just now, not long since? One of the best mechanics in the employ of Goodlet & Smith.
8864. President.] What happened? He was off his work entirely.
8865. What do you mean by that? Staying away under the influence of it, and the firm not able to take him back again.
8866. Unable to continue his work, and when he came back unable to go on with his work? Yes.
8867. Mr. Hutchison.] Some time ago there was a very serious assault case in your works? That was at the old premises, but the same employ.
8868. Were you in the employ then? Yes; but had just been transferred to the new mills, which was done a few at a time.
8869. Are you then not familiar with the case? No.
8870. Mr. Withers.] Were you always a total abstainer? Yes.
8871. Never associated with persons who took wines or spirits moderately? No; I am a life abstainer.
8872. President.] You have never touched liquor? No.
8873. Mr. Withers.] You have never been thrown much in the way of persons who take wines and spirits in moderation? No; not much.
8874. You have not attended to any extent those demonstrations where there is an abundance of liquor? Well, I have seen during the holidays such places as Clontarf, and like that.
8875. Do you think you are, from your own observation, well able to judge of the effects of excessive drinking? Yes.
8876. Has it ever occurred to you that no good effects ever come as the result of persons taking liquor moderately, and as a rule regularly? I think not.
8877. There can be no question about excessive drinking, to all persons, individually, and the public generally, but do you think there are any good effects directly or indirectly from moderate drinking? I would say no; I think it is altogether a curse.
8878. Even in sickness you think it is a dangerous medicine? Yes; I believe there are other things that can be used in its place; I have never had it, and should never use it.
8879. President.] You think it is a curse from its results? Yes.
8880. And you think the results themselves are curses? I do.
8881. But if the community were a community of temperate people would you see any such results. You would probably alter your opinion then? I think not.
8882. Is not your mind made up from the worst cases you have seen;—if you can imagine a case where persons are entirely temperate in the taking of liquor, would you then think it was a curse? Yes; the drink itself is a curse.

8883. Why? Because of its effects.

8884. But there would then be no effects such as you see now. If men were temperate could you say liquor was a curse? Yes.

8885. Then I cannot understand why you reason so. If no one would be in gaol, if there were no lunatics, and if nobody were disturbed, how could it be a curse? It is a curse from its very nature.

8886. Are you not passing a vote of censure upon the higher powers? No; I do not think so.

8887. Mr. Hutchison.] Could you answer, as a representative Rechabite, if I put a question to you in connection with your Society; are you a representative Rechabite? I am one of the officers of the Order.

8888. The chief officer? I am now Past Chief Ruler.

8889. Has your society any statistics which contrast the life of men who do not drink with that of men who drink moderately? Yes, there are statistics.

8890. Can you give us the effect of them? It is only a day or two since I was reading some. Of course there are not statistics from our own society; and yet I may say there are, because the person who gives them is Dr. Richardson, and he has lately joined the Rechabites, that is, not in this colony, but it answers the same, the world round. He gives the particulars, and the difference between the length of life of those who take no drink whatever and those who take it moderately.

8891. You are referring now to the United Kingdom Temperance Society and the Rechabites? No, I am referring to a speech delivered by Dr. Richardson in connection with the Rechabites.

8892. Well, can you tell me what the actuary's statement is of the two columns—expected deaths among moderate drinkers and the expected deaths among total abstainers? I cannot tell you for a number of years.

8893. Then you have not got those statistics? No.

8894. Mr. Withers.] You think there is no good in wines and spirits, and never took them medicinally or in any other way? No.

8895. And you are not in a position to say what effect it has individually? No.

8896. You are not prepared to say how much stronger or more powerful a man you would have been by taking wines or spirits moderately? No.

8897. You have never indulged at all? No, never had any desire.

8898. I suppose you wish to set an example to your fellow men, because you see that excessive drinking has created such havoc among them? Yes.

8899. You sacrifice yourself to your fellow men? I do not consider it a sacrifice. I have lost no time through sickness, and I have found that those who have taken drink have lost a great deal of time.

8900. From your observation of and your acquaintance with your fellow men do you think that drink has an ill-effect upon the man who takes his glass moderately? The effect is not so perceptible upon the moderate drinker.

8901. Have you seen this practice of drinking grow upon persons who first used it moderately? Yes, on most of them.

8902. Do you think that the system of shouting is a very great evil among workmen? A very great evil.

8903. I suppose a large per centage of the earnings during the week go in this way? Yes.

8904. Have you seen that it has impoverished them very much? Yes, I have seen it.

8905. Have you heard of intemperance being introduced into families through the agency of the grocer supplying liquor? No, not personally.

8906. You stated that hotels were not proper places for barmaids to be employed. Do you think that the immoral influence on young women employed as barmaids is to be compared with the effect upon young girls in factories, where the sexes are mixed? Yes, I think it is worse.

8907. You admit that public-house bars are unsuitable places for women to be employed. Do you think that factories where women are employed and the sexes mixed are worse places for women to be employed? No.

8908. You are aware that in the hotel the public eye is on the barmaid, but that in factories they are shut out from the public? I think the bar is the worst because it has the evil effect of the drink.

8909. President.] How many of your fellow workers are moderate drinkers? I could hardly say.

8910. How many are total abstainers. Are there thirty there who are total abstainers? I suppose there are.

8911. And there would be perhaps 120 who would be either moderate drinkers, or perhaps drinkers to excess? Yes.

8912. Are there any men who drink to excess? There are.

8913. Is this fact known to the employers? It is.

8914. Have you ever seen these men going to their work the worse for liquor? Yes, I have.

8915. Are the Superintendents or foremen in the various departments allowed to let these men go on with their work? I have seen them when they are going from work.

8916. Sent away for the day or expelled? Yes.

8917. Were these men who gave way to drink good artizans? Yes.

8918. Have you ever voted under the present local option vote? Yes, I have.

8919. Can you tell us why there is so much apathy in going to the poll under the present local option law. You know that there are very few who go to vote. Do you know why that is so? No.

8920. Mr. Roseby.] I suppose there may be a number of total abstainers on your works without your knowing them? There may be. I would not like to say how many there are there.

Mr. John Akrell called in, sworn, and examined:—

8921. Mr. Davies.] What is your occupation? Engineer at Goodlet & Smith's.

8922. Are you a total abstainer? No.

8923. Are you what is called a moderate drinker? Yes; a very moderate drinker.

8924. Have you given the question of local option any consideration? Yes; and I give it my support as far as the ratepayers have power to say that they will have no more public-houses is concerned.

8925. And your vote has always been given in that direction? Yes.

Mr.
R. L. Giles.

8 Oct., 1886.

Mr.
J. Akrell.

8 Oct., 1886.

Mr.
J. Akrell.
8 Oct., 1886.

8926. Do you believe in the people having the power to control the traffic in intoxicating drink? Yes, to a certain extent.
8927. That is to say you would give the majority of the people power to say that a house shall be closed up? Yes; especially in the suburbs, where there is no great business, except from the people living there.
8928. Take your own portion of the city; would you give the electors of West Sydney power to say that they should not have any public-house in the electorate of West Sydney? I would not go to that length. In some parts of West Sydney there is a great traffic, and people want to go into a public-house to do business, and if you closed them up there would be no place to go to do their business.
8929. You would not create a distinction between public-houses and accommodation houses? Well, people generally go to public-houses. The publican generally provides for these business people. But where there is no congregation of business I would have full local option in force.
8930. Then you are not in favour of placing in the hands of the people the power to veto drink absolutely by a majority of votes? Not absolutely.
8931. Are you in favour of opening public-houses on Sundays? Well, my opinion about it is that it is a farce at the present time, and if you cannot close them then I would have them wide open. I would prefer to have them absolutely closed, but it is a farce at the present time. They are supposed to be closed but they are not; it is not the fault of the law but the way in which it is administered. I am in favour of entire closing on Sunday.
8932. Is there a great deal of drunkenness on Sunday, as far as you know? Yes; I have seen people coming out of public-houses on Sunday in a barefaced manner.
8933. Is there any great desire on the part of the working classes to have public-houses open on Sunday or not? I do not think so; I have not heard complaints from any large number.
8934. And you think that as a body they would rather have the public-houses closed on Sunday? Yes, I think they would.
8935. The working classes as a whole are a sober class, are they not? Yes, as a whole I believe they are, and much more so than they were twenty years ago, when I first came to Sydney.
8936. Take the demonstration on Monday for instance, how did the working classes conduct themselves? They were very sober.
8937. It was a great gathering? Yes.
8938. And you saw very little drunkenness during the day? Very little.
8939. President.] Suppose a petition were sent round among Goodlet & Smith's men for opening public-houses on Sunday, how many would sign it? I believe a large majority would be against it in the shop where I am working.
8940. Mr. Withers.] Are they moderate drinkers? Yes, and very temperate men; in fact a drunkard soon gets his discharge.
8941. Mr. Davies.] I presume you have taken notice of the vast difference between the present Licensing Act and the old law, and the change in the character of the people generally? Well, I think that less time has been lost owing to the early closing of the public-houses. More men got drunk later at night under the old law, and had less time to get sober in the morning.
8942. It has been a great advantage to the families of the men, and less time has been lost in drunkenness? Yes.
8943. You would not open the public-houses any later? No.
8944. Would you curtail the hours in any way? No; I think 11 o'clock is a reasonable hour.
8945. And what about the morning? I think that the present hour is quite early enough.
8946. You would not be an advocate for altering the hours of sale? No, I would not. I would advocate a similar system to that at Home, where they have early opening for market mornings at the markets. I would make an exception in those cases for the benefit of the people arriving early in the morning.
8947. President.] Would not that be a temptation to other people to go that way as they went to work? Not at 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning.
8948. But do they not keep open later in the morning? Yes.
8949. Then would they not be open to the 6 o'clock workmen? Well, it generally happens that men start away from home just in time to get to work, and if they went to work with any sign of drink on them they would very soon be discharged.
8950. Mr. Davies.] But if they want to get something to warm them? They can get it now.
8951. 7 o'clock is the usual hour for men to go to work? It is now.
8952. The houses only open at 6 o'clock? Some of them open at 5 o'clock. That is to say, that the law is not administered properly.
8953. President.] Persons connected with engines have to commence long before 6 o'clock? Yes.
8954. Mr. Davies.] Is there as much drinking and nobblerising among the working classes as there was in former years? Oh, no.
8955. How long have you been working for Goodlet & Smith? Four years; and sixteen years with Chapman.
8956. President.] As the result of your experience, are you able to say that the working classes, within your own knowledge, are more temperate now than they were in former times? Most decidedly. When I first came to the country you would not suppose that any working man had a house of his own, and now no matter how small the wages are you will find that working men are trying to get houses of their own, and they cannot drink and pay the extra money for houses.
8957. Is not that the married man you are speaking of? Yes, and the single man too. There are a large number of working men where I live at Balmain who own houses, and these men will vote for local option in order to protect their property.
8958. Mr. Withers.] You say they are very temperate men? Yes.
8959. What does that mean? They would take, perhaps, only one glass a day. Sometimes I do not take one in a month, and sometimes three a day if I meet some friends.
8960. And on Sunday? I never take it on Sunday.
8961. Do you think that mechanics and working men, as a rule, who go in for building societies and building operations do not "shout"? No; they think more about their homes and paying them off.
8962. Mr. Hutchison.] Do the working men talk about Sunday closing? Yes, they do. But only those who are regular tipplers.
8963. Were you ever in a public-house when the question came up? Yes.

8964. Did they speak for it or against it there? Well, the generality of the frequenters of the public-house advocate opening on Sunday.

8965. I understood you to say that one of your objections to giving full local option was on account of the accommodation furnished. Suppose ample accommodation could be furnished without the traffic, would you give the people the right to vote the traffic away? If accommodation could be supplied without going to the public-house it would be much better.

8966. In that case you would give full local option? Yes.

8967. Mr. Withers.] Do you think the wives of working men who go to these public-houses would prefer to see them closed on Sunday? They would sooner see total closing on Sunday.

8968. You do not think that many wives sympathize with this cry that the working man must have his beer? No; some of them have good cause to think otherwise. They would be long sorry if they were open. There is another crying shame under the Act and that is little girls being sent to public-houses for beer. If a new Act is introduced that should be stopped, and no publican should be allowed to supply children with grog.

8969. President.] Up to what age? They should not be allowed to serve children under 18. I have seen little things go to the public-house with a jug. I have seen them under 3 years of age coming out of a public-house and lifting the jug to their mouths to drink the beer. I think it would be a great thing if children were stopped from going to public-houses.

Mr. Robert Riley called in, sworn, and examined:—

8970. President.] Where are you employed? In Farmer & Co's.

8971. In what capacity? I have charge of the porters.

8972. What do your duties consist of; who are the porters there? The men who drive the carts.

8973. How long have you been in this employment? Since February, 1868, nearly eighteen years.

8974. Are you a total abstainer or a moderate drinker? That depends upon what is called a moderate drinker.

8975. You are not a total abstainer and do not belong to any temperance organization? No.

8976. But you are able to take a glass of wine or spirits as you think fit and at convenient times? Yes.

8977. Not of course in such a way as to allow it to interfere with your work? I have been in the habit of taking a little drink since I have been a boy.

8978. Did you take beer as a boy? No I do not take beer as a rule.

8979. I suppose you consider yourself a temperate man? I should think I am a very temperate man, but I am not a teetotaller.

8980. There is one thing we should like to know and that is whether the people you associate with require the Sunday-closing law to be in any way altered; in other words, do those people require drink on Sunday? I do not think they require drink on Sunday. I have been speaking to several parties that I have been keeping company with and their opinion is that Sunday should be kept as it is and that the public-houses should be closed.

8981. And are those persons with whom you have been associating of the same habit as yourself, that is temperate men? Yes.

8982. Are any of them given occasionally to excess? No.

8983. Then you think that all these people in your opinion express no desire to have the public-houses opened on Sunday? Not in the least.

8984. Would they so far as you know desire to see the hours shortened on the business days of the week, or would they like to have the public-houses opened after 11 o'clock? I can only give my own opinion of that; I should say that they should be shortened.

8985. What would you think a reasonable hour? I think it reasonable that a working man should be in his own house at 10 o'clock; he is not up to his work next day if he is not; I would not let the public-houses remain open after 10 o'clock.

8986. Then you think the effect of these public-houses being open until 11 o'clock is to keep the working man away from home? Yes, in a great many instances; it does not keep the better class of working men out of their homes, but many would be in their homes if it were not for the public-houses.

8987. Do you think that the working men with whom you associate are in favour of having the power of saying whether there shall be any public-houses or not in the areas within which they reside; are they in favour of the extension of controlling public-houses by local option? Yes; those I am acquainted with are in favour of local option and extending it still further.

8988. Have you ever voted yourself on the local option question? I am not aware that I have.

8989. Do you think so far as you know that the people have been enthusiastic in voting under the present local option law? I do not think they have.

8990. What is the reason why they abstain? A good many reason this way that whether they vote or not it will amount to the same thing, and very little notice is taken of it by the Government.

8991. Can you tell us whether the working classes, so far as you know, desire to have the scope of local option extended to the extent of saying whether they will have any public-houses in their neighbourhood or not? Yes, they would.

8992. Do you think, in addition to desiring to have the right to say whether there should be any, they desire to record their votes as to how many should be permitted? I would let them have that privilege myself. I believe we have about two-thirds too many public-houses.

8993. You think there should be some public-houses? Yes; I think a limited number of public-houses with proper accommodation for supplying food and drink is a necessity in towns; but I would not say so much about the suburbs. I do not think we should have any houses for the purpose of selling drink alone and that did not accommodate travellers.

8994. Then you think that they ought to be obliged to sell reasonable food and provide accommodation? Yes.

8995. Then you would be in favor of getting rid of the mere drinking shops that retail drink and have no accommodation? I would like to see them shut up.

8996. And you think two-thirds of the number should be dispensed with? Yes, I believe they are a disgrace to the community.

8997. I suppose you go to these places sometimes? Yes, every day of my life.

8998.

Mr.
J. Akrell.

8 Oct., 1886.

Mr. R. Riley.

8 Oct., 1886.

Mr.
R. Riley.
8 Oct., 1886.

8998. And you know so much about others that you would not go into them? Yes.
8999. Is much adulterated drink sold here? I am sure of it. I have called for drink in some places and would not drink it.
9000. How were you aware that the drink was pernicious? A man who has been drinking for a number of years is a judge of drink. I have been in a wine and spirit store for about twelve months, and I know when drink is good or bad.
9001. Do you think that this drink had been tampered with, or was only raw spirit of a bad kind? It had been tampered with.
9002. Not merely whisky which was too young? No, it was adulterated.
9003. What do you think they adulterate it with? I have not the slightest idea, but I know it was doctored.
9004. This publican where you got the bad spirit would have no object in hocussing you? No.
9005. Was the doctoring done by the spirit merchant or the publican? The publican does it in his own interest. A good deal of it is done in the wine and spirit store.
9006. Then you think that doctoring is practised both by the publican and the wine and spirit merchant? I am led to believe that from conversations I have had. I have been told that the process goes on.
9007. Do you mean from conversations you have had with persons in the employ of wine and spirit merchants? Yes, that they doctored the spirit.
9008. Have they told you what they put in? No; it is not a very nice thing to inquire into anyone's business.
9009. I suppose you know that the publicans in the city and suburbs do not observe the Sunday closing law? Yes, I am aware of that.
9010. I suppose that has come under your own notice? It has.
9011. On a Sunday when you have gone about you have found that the Sunday closing law is very considerably evaded? It is by two-thirds of the public-houses and perhaps more than that.
9012. Now, when they open their houses illegally on a Sunday do you think their reason is merely to do business, or do you think it is to supply the demands of customers, who, if they were not supplied would during the week-days go elsewhere, thereby damaging the trade of the publican who refused them liquor on the Sunday? I believe their object in opening their houses is to make money, to do business.
9013. Not to keep their custom together? They may have the twofold object in view, as I believe they have. Publicans are business men.
9014. Have you heard that these publicans say that if they do not sell on a Sunday to some of their good customers they do not see those customers during the rest of the week? No, I have not.
9015. Would you believe it—do you think it sounds like a true and good reason? It might be so with a few, but I do not think it would be so with the great majority of those who go in for drink.
9016. A man is refused on a Sunday, say by the publican who keeps the "Magpie and Stump"; he is refused, and he says, "Now I will go somewhere else for the rest of the week"? Some few might say it.
9017. Mr. Hutchison.] What class do you think it would be who would say that? The lowest class of labouring man.
9018. The soaker? The soaker.
9019. As a matter of fact the working man is not so good a customer as to be a weekly customer? Certainly not; he cannot afford it.
9020. I understood you to say you were in favour of local option, but that still there ought to be some public-houses left? Yes.
9021. Would you be in favour of a local option of this class: That there should be three questions on the ballot-paper: Shall there be any increase of the public-houses? Shall there be an increase and by how many, or shall there be none at all? and let the people vote on that ballot-paper? I would be favourable to that; I think that would be a very fair paper to submit; yes, vote any way they like.
9022. Mr. Roseby.] I suppose you have known a number of your fellow workmen go to destruction through drink? I have known some.
9023. The indulgence in drink generally, you have observed, has frequently had a very disastrous influence; it has not injured you personally, but you have noticed this? Yes.
9024. Have you noticed of late years many young men give way to drink, more than was the case in former years? Well, I could not say that I have; but I believe that drinking is on the increase.
9025. You think it is? I do.
9026. And your opinion is that the public-houses might very well be reduced by two-thirds? Yes.
9027. And you would give the people the power of closing them or keeping them on as they wished? Yes, give the people the right of saying so.
9028. Mr. Withers.] You said, in answer to the President in regard to the 11 o'clock closing, that you thought 10 o'clock was late enough, especially for working men to get home and keep proper time in the morning for their work? Yes.
9029. If that applies to men with families, men who have an attraction at home, do you think it applies more so to young men who have more abundant means and not so great an inducement to get home? I think it should apply more to young men.
9030. There is a greater danger of young men being tempted to keep out late of an evening than there is of men with families? Yes.
9031. Do you think the wives of men with families who visit hotels on the Sunday consider that their husbands should be allowed to get their dinner beer on Sunday; do you think the wives would consider it a hardship not to get the beer on Sunday? I do not think they would.
9032. You think it would make their homes more happy if they did not get the drink on Sunday? Yes, because if a man goes to the public-house he stays there.
9033. And it makes his home unhappy? Yes.
9034. You do not think this is much in this cry that the working men want the houses open on a Sunday? I do not think so. Speaking for myself if I never tasted a drop of drink I would not get it on a Sunday.
9035. And you think if the wives were polled they would say close the houses on a Sunday? Yes.
9036. And not only the wives but the children? Yes, and the children.

MONDAY, 11 OCTOBER, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,
J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.,

A. HUTCHISON, Esq.,
G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Charles Paul called in, sworn, and examined:—

9037. President.] What is your name? Charles Paul.

9038. What office do you hold in the Railway Department? Railway Station-master at Darling Harbour.

9039. For about how long have you been in the railway service? Twenty-one years and six months.

9040. In Sydney during the whole of that period? During the whole of the time.

9041. At the same station? No; I have been nearly seven years at Darling Harbour.

9042. For how long have you held your present office? Six years and some few months. I was at Redfern for nine years as goods foreman; the other portion of the time I was on the Redfern station.

9043. About how many men would you have had under your eye—the average number—during the last six or seven years; I am speaking now of railway employees? 100 a day would be a fair average for the whole of the time. Of course it is heavier lately; 150 now.

9044. Are the Government regulations very stringent in regard to the sobriety of the men? They are.

9045. Do they differ in accordance with the employment of the men; that is to say, are they the same whether the men are engaged about locomotives or are merely porters? There is no difference whatever. The rules are very strict.

9046. Are they allowed to take beer in the middle of the day—that is, with their dinners—and drink it openly? Any man who is caught going out would be immediately suspended from duty.

9047. Do they go out for it or do they bring it? A man is not allowed to bring any intoxicants with him.

9048. Then a man is not allowed to bring it with him for his meals, or to go out for it? No.

9049. Do they occasionally break the regulations; have you had occasion to bring their conduct before the Commissioner? Very seldom indeed; I do not think we have had more than one case for a long while, where a man has been reprimanded, and the Commissioner dismissed him at once.

9050. You have nothing whatever to do with the workshops? Not with the workshops.

9051. You are speaking entirely of the station? Yes, of what we call the general hands—the engineers and firemen, in addition to our ordinary staff.

9052. But you have nothing to do with the workshops? No.

9053. Do they work under the same rules in regard to bringing in intoxicants? One rule applies to all throughout the Department.

9054. That rule governs the Department, I presume, from the Traffic Manager or the head of the station downwards? Yes, and from the Engineer for Existing Lines, or the Locomotive Superintendent, downwards.

9055. And does that rule prevent them from going into a refreshment room, and getting anything of an intoxicating character? It is not so stated in the rules; but the officer in charge would see if they did, and would stop them.

9056. Then a porter or a guard is prohibited from getting a glass of beer at a refreshment room? Any of our employees are.

9057. For what portion of the Sunday are the employees at liberty—I suppose there are some always there on a Sunday? Well, our station is different from a passenger station; we have only the watchman on a Sunday.

9058. Then practically a large proportion of the employees are at home on a Sunday? Our staff numbers 150, and we have only four hands on during the Sunday—only the watchmen.

9059. Then the rest of the men are at home the whole of the Sunday? Yes.

9060. Have you been able to trace any accidents at this end to lapses on the part of the men in regard to sobriety—in not obeying the regulations of the Department? No, I do not remember any.

9061. Then the Departmental Regulations are, in your opinion, fairly complied with by the employees? Yes. Of course I have seen a good deal of it during the last 16 years, in which I have had charge of a large staff of men, since I was appointed goods foreman in the early part of 1871.

9062. So far then, as the liquor traffic, and the supposed increase in the intemperance of the community are concerned, you know nothing of it at the station? No.

9063. During working hours you see nothing of that kind? No; only, as I said before, we had indications sometime ago which made it necessary to deal severely with one man. In fact I never saw any sign of drink on any of our men; if I did I would speak to him about it.

9064. You do sometimes see it? Yes, but very seldom; a long time ago.

9065. Do you see much of the men when they are away from work? Not many of them.

9066. Do you come into contact with the men so as to know what their ideas are with regard to the closing of public-houses on Sunday;—are they prohibited by Departmental rules from going to a public-house on a Sunday? No.

9067. Do you know what the opinions of the men are in regard to Sunday-closing? I can only speak of our own men. There are decidedly a great number of men in favour of closing public-houses on a Sunday, because a great number of the men are teetotallers.

9068. That is, of keeping the law as it stands? Yes.

9069. When you say a great number do you mean a majority? Three parts of them.

9070. That implies then that there is a minority? Yes.

9071. And with regard to the minority, do you know what their opinion is? I am always moving amongst the men and I hear them talk—even those who seem to take a little at times—and they do not seem to be much in favour of having public-houses open on a Sunday.

9072. Then you seem to think that among the men who are inclined to indulge on a Sunday you have not seen a disposition to alter the law, so as to open the public-houses on that day? No.

Mr. C. Paul.
11 Oct., 1886.

- Mr. C. Paul. 9073. Have you heard, in the same way, any openly-expressed views as to the hours of keeping open on the business days of the week? Yes.
- 11 Oct., 1886. 9074. And as for yourself you are not discontented with them? No.
9075. You think that 11 o'clock is sufficiently late? I think it would be late enough.
9076. Are you a total abstainer? Yes.
9077. Do you belong to any organisation? Yes, I have belonged to the Total Abstinence Society for nineteen years.
9078. As you have disclosed the fact that you belong to an organization there may be no harm in asking you what your views on the subject of local option are although the particular purpose for which we wanted you here is to ascertain, as far as you can inform us, the general current of opinion among the employees at the station on the subject of Sunday closing of public-houses;—what are your views on the subject of local option? I have never thought of these things much.
9079. Do you think there is much adulteration of liquor. You might have known cases in which men have taken a small quantity of stimulant and were suddenly subdued by it. Have any cases of that kind come under your notice? I do not remember any.
9080. You have very few public-houses in your neighbourhood? Oh, there are plenty all round. There is one about 40 feet from the front gate, and there is the "Pier Hotel," about 60 feet from the side gate, and then there is the "Vicar of Wakefield," and the "Ultimo Hotel."
9081. Do they look forward for much business to the railway employees? I do not know. I know when I first went down we used to have a little trouble with them.
9082. Do you think there are too many houses? Yes; there are four close together.
9083. I do not mean for the public but for the employees? Yes, I think so.
9084. Do you think that the railway employees are pretty much attracted by the number of houses, and occasionally, when off duty going home, went there? They may do so going home but I do not know.
9085. Mr. Hutchison.] Would you very much prefer not expressing an opinion of local option? As far as I am concerned I am decidedly in favor of it.
9086. Have you any idea how the men feel on that particular question? I can only speak from what I hear amongst the men, and I know that there are a great number who are decidedly in favour of it.
9087. Mr. Roseby.] From what you have observed during your long experience in the Railway Department you regard the sale of drink as a very dangerous business? Certainly.
9088. And hence there are these rigid restrictions to prevent the men indulging in drink? Yes.
9089. Then, from what you say, you do not think it desirable to have refreshment-rooms along the line? Yes.
9090. You think there is a danger attached to it? Yes.
9091. If the heads of the Department had the power to stop it they would not allow them at all? I do not believe they would allow them at all.
9092. Then in your opinion anything that could be done to suppress the facilities for getting drink you would think desirable? Certainly.
9093. You do not think drink is necessary for a man engaged in most arduous labour? No, I do not think it is necessary.
9094. No matter how laborious the work is a man could do it better without drink than with it? Yes. I have seen it in the department where men worked laboriously for very long hours, and I have seen men who were total abstainers able to do the work better than those who were not. My experience for sixteen years is that the man who is a total abstainer can knock off fresher and go to work fresher in the morning than those who take drink, even moderate drinkers.
9095. You have known a number of men who have gone to destruction through drink? Yes, in my earlier years in the Department.
9096. The men now employed in the Railway Department are a very sober class of men? Yes, very different from what they were ten years ago.
9097. You consider that there are far too many public-houses now in existence? Yes.
9098. And you think something ought to be done to reduce the number very materially? Yes.
9099. If the men employed on the railways of the Colony were polled do you believe that a very large majority would favour closing on Sunday? I would not like to give an opinion, except as far as Sydney is concerned.
9100. A large number of the men with whom you have been associated during these years are now transferred to various parts of the Colony as station-masters, head porters, and other different positions. You have known hundreds of them probably? Yes.
9101. And you have a pretty good knowledge of their opinions on the subject? Yes, unless they have altered their opinions, I would certainly say that a large majority of them if polled would be in favour of early closing and reducing the number of public-houses to a minimum.
9102. And you believe in the principle of allowing the people to say whether they would have public-houses or not? Yes. A short time ago a person applied for a license at Ultimo and our men were very much opposed to it and the man did not get it.
9103. President.] I suppose the houses near the station are nearly all drinking shops? Yes.
9104. Are there no hotels worthy of the name where a respectable person can go and get lodgings? I would not recommend them to go there. I know there is one opposite the gate where one of our men died nearly six years ago, and after they had got all they could out of him they would not bury him.
9105. We have been told that people have to come all the way to Sydney from Redfern Station because they cannot get accommodation? I was referring to Darling Harbour when I was referring to there being too many houses. The public-houses are not so close at Redfern as they are at Darling Harbour.
9106. Mr. Roseby.] But as a citizen your impression is that we have far too many public-houses? Yes, far too many.
9107. You must have a very good general knowledge of the opinions of the men employed on the railway? Yes.
9108. You have mixed up with them for so many years? Yes.
9109. Being a total abstainer you would think one public-house too many? No, I am not a bigoted total abstainer.
9110. President.] Have you always been a total abstainer? No; when I first came to the department I used to have a glass of portor, but when I saw the effect of drink upon others I gave it up and have never felt the want of it.

9111. Mr. Withers.] Do you believe that the clamour which we constantly hear set up about the working-man's beer originates from bonâ fide working-men; that is to say, a man who is not a total abstainer; but who is sober and industrious. Do you think it is a libel on the working-man for them to be charged with wishing to have public-houses opened on Sunday? I certainly think it is a libel on the working-man, and that it is an agitation by men who are not bonâ fide working-men.

Mr. C. Paul.
11 Oct., 1886.

9112. It has been stated by a person who has been in the public-house business, that if the publicans were alive to their own interests, the best way to succeed in getting their houses opened on Sunday, would be to close strictly on Sunday, and that there would be such an outcry from the people, principally working-men, that the Government would be obliged to open these houses? I do not believe any such thing.

9113. Is the system of shouting carried on much amongst the men now? I do not think there is a great deal of it. There has been a great change during the last 8 or 10 years.

9114. What has brought about that change. Do you think the opportunity of getting homes of their own through Building Societies has brought that about? Yes, I think so. Before I went into the goods branch I was in the traffic branch up and down the line to Rookwood, acting as pilot, when I was continuously among the public, and with one or two exceptions we looked upon the men as very steady men.

9115. President.] You have been in the traffic branch but not of late years? Yes.

9116. Now, with regard to the passengers, do you think that visible intemperance has been decreasing among them of late years as far as you know? It is so many years since I was mixed up with the passenger traffic that I should not be able to give an opinion. There used to be a good deal of drinking amongst the passengers.

9117. It is said that the effect of the new Licensing Act is to induce people to take flasks of liquor, those especially who have long distances to travel, and that this is supposed to be a new institution, the result of the present Licensing law. Have you anything to say about that? I have never seen much of it. Of course the distances are greater than they were when I was in the traffic Department.

9118. Mr. Withers.] Do you know of cases in which working men have been put to terrible unhappiness in their families through drink being brought in with the groceries? I have not heard of any cases. I do not think so, so far as my experience goes.

Mr. Henry Clement Hoyle called in, sworn, and examined:—

9119. President.] You are employed in the Government Railways? I am.

9120. And have you been in that employ for some time? Nearly eleven years.

9121. In what capacity? Blacksmith at the Sydney yards. I am assistant foreman blacksmith.

9122. Do you belong to any temperance organization? No.

9123. Are you a total abstainer? Yes; this far that I never use stimulants, except as medicine. I never use drink otherwise.

9124. You never use drink at your meals? No; I never drank a glass of beer in my life.

9125. Do you consider that you know the feeling of the men in your department on the subject of closing public-houses on Sunday? Well, I can say, that as far as the men I am immediately connected with are concerned, opinion is pretty equally divided. Some consider that the closing on Sunday is more conducive to drinking than otherwise, because men have taken home drink on Saturday night for their Sunday dinner, and the temptation was so great that the drink was consumed on the Saturday, and more had to be obtained before the house closed. I know a personal friend of mine who was always accustomed to have his Sunday beer, and when the houses closed on the Sunday he purchased a bottle of beer, which was double the quantity he would drink under ordinary circumstances.

9126. Have you reason to believe that that is the experience of many; that is to say, that they are induced to take more liquor home or consume more in anticipation of the Sunday? I would not say that more drink would be consumed generally, but in some cases it is.

9127. You say that opinions are pretty well divided among the men of whom you have experience? Most of the men with whom I am personally acquainted are very temperate men. There are fifty-seven in the shop, where I am working, and about 250 or 300 come under my notice daily, and there are very few that drink.

9128. We understand from Mr. Paul that the regulations are very stringent? Yes.

9130. Have you known any accidents to occur on the works through drunkenness? No; I have only known the two cases to which I have referred of men coming on to the works under the influence of liquor. I am now speaking of the Permanent Way Department.

9131. Speaking for the Permanent Way Department you have said that there is a division of opinion as to the opening of public-houses on Sunday; are you not able to give us an opinion whether there is a preponderance of opinion one way or the other; are a majority in favour of some alteration of the law in the direction of opening public-houses on Sunday or are the majority the other way? As far as I have heard an opinion expressed in the works I think the men, being a temperate body of men, are indifferent as to whether they are opened or closed on Sunday; but opinion is very much divided as to the policy of keeping public-houses open or closed on Sunday.

9132. I suppose the men are aware that the law is very largely violated? Yes, that is a fact which comes under my personal knowledge every Sunday; I live opposite a public-house and I see it.

9133. Where is this? Buckingham-street, Surry Hills; I see them going in, and they have every indication of going in for drink from the clandestine way in which they go about it.

9134. How many have you seen? Three or four usually at a time; I have seen twenty or thirty going in there during the day.

9135. Supposing the Sunday closing were effective would your men take decided views on the subject for or against? Well, you see that whenever you do anything which a Briton considers to be trenching upon his liberties you make him a law-breaker instead of a law-abiding man. Now when a man has been deprived of his ordinary glass of beer on Sunday, he thinks that his rights have been infringed and you compel him to do something which the law says he shall not do; he then becomes obstinate and a law-breaker, who will get drink simply because he is debarred from his usual privilege by the law.

Mr.
H. C. Hoyle.

Mr.
H. C. Hoyle.

9136. When you speak for Britons, do you think that when their liberty is in any way interfered with that that of itself turns them into law-breakers? In the case of the liquor law I believe it does.
9137. Then you think the law is responsible for a great many drunkards? I think the law throws great temptations in the way of children.
9138. That is another point. You mean that children are served at the bar? No; I mean that drink is taken to different homes on Saturday night and the temptation is there before the children and before the wives.
9139. Do you know of your own knowledge that that has had a disastrous effect? No; it is a matter of speculation.
9140. But if you carried out your principle to the fullest extent the way to sober the Briton is to have free-trade in liquor? What I say is that coercion makes the Briton drink because it makes him rebellious.
9141. Do you state that it makes him drink on Sunday and violate the law when he would not otherwise do so? I believe the law does act in that way in many cases.
9142. That being your opinion as an ordinary citizen, you would oppose the Sunday-closing law? I believe if the public-houses were kept open for one hour on Sunday and that any offence of Sunday trading before or after that hour caused the forfeiture of the license entirely, it would have the effect of stopping Sunday trading.
9143. Is that opinion endorsed by many of your fellow-workmen? Yes; it is.
9144. Is it the general opinion that there should be an hour on Sunday during which the public-houses should be open? I could not say that; but I have heard that opinion expressed by a good many. I do not say it is a majority. As far as the majority are concerned they are indifferent. Not being drinkers they do not take much interest in the drink traffic, and are indifferent about the matter.
9145. Now suppose the law was rigorously enforced and there was no possibility of getting drink on Sunday, would that not be a still greater infringement of liberty? If the law were so stringent as to stop licenses altogether the irritation on the part of the Briton would be futile.
9146. Would not the clamour be greater? No, for he would be sensible enough to know that it would be no use clamouring.
9147. In speaking for yourself you say that you think one hour might be devoted to dispensing liquor on Sunday? Yes, and make the penalty for selling at any other time on Sunday the cancellation of the license.
9148. That points to the conclusion that you think dinner beer is an institution of the average Englishman and ought to be maintained? Yes; I think the average Englishman is a man who takes his glass of beer on Sunday and does not go beyond that.
9149. Is the favourite beverage among the workmen that you know, beer? Yes.
9150. That is Colonial beer? Yes; it is somewhat lighter than English beer and cheaper. It is most decidedly the favourite drink.
9151. Have you ever heard any complaints among your friends in the shop as to the quality of the beer or the liquor supplied to them? No.
9152. Not in the way of adulteration? No; I have heard the remark sometimes that one brewer is better than another, but I have never heard any complaints as to the adulteration of drink.
9153. Speaking on the question appertaining to the liquor traffic, have you ever heard the men express themselves in favour of the local option system? I may say that the majority of the men in our department are in favour of local option.
9154. Would they go to the extent of prohibition? No; I may safely say that the majority are against total prohibition.
9155. You know the present law. Do you think that people want local option extended or is it large enough for them? I think it is large enough for them and they think it should not apply to renewals.
9156. Nor to a stated number of houses? They think it should be left to the ratepayers to say whether there should be another house or not.
9157. Have you considered this matter yourself? I cannot say that I have given it very great consideration.
9158. I suppose you are aware that the holder of a license votes in the same booth with the local optionist? Yes.
9159. Do you not think that curious. Do you value such a vote as an expression of opinion? No; I do not, because he is an interested party.
9160. Do you not know that the voting has been singularly apathetic? Yes.
9161. And do you think that that is because the local optionist places no value upon it as an expression of opinion? Yes.
9162. And would you not go further and say that if there is to be any expression of opinion on local option it should be general and should be so extended as to permit the voter to give expression to his opinion? Yes.
9163. Your friends are not in favor of any extension of local option? No; they think that the present law is ample.
9164. Have you many public-houses in the neighbourhood of the workshops? There are about seven in the immediate neighbourhood of the railway-yard, and there are some as close as 20 yards from the gate and another 50 yards, and others about 100 yards.
9165. None of them are first-class hotels? No; unless you can call the old "Exhibition Hotel" a first-class hotel, and then there is the "Locomotive Hotel" in Regent-street.
9166. Is the nature of the work such as to promote perspiration and thirst? Yes; we have a large number of carpenters, but their building is very cool, and I do not think the work the men have to do increases thirst, but in the blacksmiths' shop it has decidedly that effect, and is terribly hot.
9167. And yet, speaking for them, you say that they are temperate men? Very much so. I know of only one man who lost any time from drink. I am now speaking of eleven years' experience. They are the most temperate body of men I have ever seen. There are not five men in the shop who are not struggling to get houses of their own.
9168. Mr. Hutchison.] Are you quite sure that the majority of men in your workshop are not in favour of extending local option? I believe I am.
9169. Would you be surprised to know that you are the first working-man that has said that? No, I would not.
9170. Do you believe that the majority are in favour of Sunday closing, if it could be strictly carried out? Yes.
- 9171.

Mr.
H. C. Hoyle,
11 Oct., 1886.

9171. Do you think that they would vote for strict Sunday closing if they had the opportunity? I could not say that. As I have already said, they have a feeling of indifference as it does not affect them.
9172. But if a vote were taken, how do you think it would go? I believe it would go towards closing.
9173. Do you think there are too many houses generally in the city? Personally, I do.
9174. Suppose the law allowed the reduction of the houses by a given number by the vote of the people, would you allow them to vote on that? Under certain circumstances. I think it would be unwise at the present time to take the trade from a number and give it to a few. Unless you reduce the traffic it would not do.
9175. Then you do not think that increased facilities for drink increases the traffic? No; I do not. I believe it must be done by moral suasion, either by means of fathers of families or temperance organizations.
9176. Are you aware that the temperance societies have been struggling hard, and find that they can do nothing unless the Legislature helps them by restricting the number of houses? I was not aware of it.
9177. Suppose prohibition were practicable would you believe in it? Yes.
9178. Can you see any better way of getting it than by the vote of the people in each district? That would be a fair way of getting at prohibition, but if it was extended in that way would it have a tendency to reduce the drink, or turn the trade to other houses. If it were practicable I would be in favour of it, but it is still my opinion that to reduce the number of public-houses to a statutory number would not have the desired effect. I would rather have prohibition than that.
9179. Mr. Rosby.] Nevertheless, Mr. Hoyle, you consider that the traffic in intoxicating liquors a dangerous one. You have known a number of people come to destruction through drink? Yes; I have known some.
9180. As far as you are personally concerned you know nothing of the drinking customs in the factories at Home? No.
9181. Practically you are a total abstainer? Yes.
9182. And personally you do not think that the use of drink by working men is a necessity? No necessity whatever.
9183. And the use of it at all is somewhat attended by danger? Yes.
9184. In fact do you not believe that drink is a curse? It is.
9185. As far as the principle is concerned you are in favour of allowing the people to control this traffic themselves? Yes.
9186. And I understood you to say that you believe if the employees in the Railway Department were polled they would vote in favour of keeping public-houses closed on Sunday? I believe if the opportunity were given to them they would vote in favour of closing public-houses on Sunday.
9187. Do you think that the establishment of drinking bars along our railway lines is a danger? I do not, provided that the sale of drink is limited, because I have seen an inordinate quantity of liquor carried in the carriages, and very often I have seen men intoxicated in carriages from drink which they had brought with them, and if they had been able to get drink along the railways they would not have taken so much.
9188. Do you not consider it dangerous in connection with our railways, and especially if any facilities are given to railway people to carry drink at all? The regulations prevent railway officials from entering these bars at all, although, I believe, often drink is carried in the brake-vans. Where they get it from I am not in a position to say. The regulations of the Department are that no railway official is allowed to enter the bar, except upon the order of the Station-master, or some other official, and then only on business.
9189. Then you regard this drinking by men holding responsible positions on our railways as a source of danger? A very great danger indeed.
9190. Mr. Withers.] How long have you been out of your apprenticeship? Since 1872.
9191. Have you noticed any improvement in the condition of mechanics during the last fourteen years? Yes, I have. I have noticed an improvement in their social condition, in their education, and by higher rates of pay than they formerly received, abundance of work, and greater increase in social comfort.
9192. What do you think has brought that about? Education, communication with one another in their various lodges and unions. That has brought about a healthy state of things. I have known men to wander about the street, but in consequence of these unions they have become better men.
9193. And you think all these surroundings have a tendency to make them more temperate? Yes.
9194. And more economical? Yes.
9195. And who really are the people who are asking that public-houses should be open on Sunday—surely not the respectable mechanics? I think not; I think it is a class of men who are no good to themselves or to anybody else—loafers, who have no fixed employment, no ambition, and no intelligence; they think more of the amusement of the tap-room than their homes; they are men of no education as a rule.
9196. President.] You yourself said that you would rather have Sunday opening? I think, under existing circumstances, it would be best; there would be less drink. Under existing circumstances I believe that one hour would be better than the present system.
9197. It will be necessary to make it clear that there are two classes of men indicated. You can understand a large section of respectable men being of the same opinion as yourself, and for the same reason? Yes.
9198. You would hardly like to describe them as loafers? No.
9199. Mr. Withers.] I wish to know the class of persons who are really clamouring for Sunday-opening, and whether you consider it a libel upon the respectable working-man to say that he has been clamouring for opening on Sunday? I understood you to ask me what was my opinion of those who were for opening on Sunday; you did not ask me what I thought of the men who were asking for opening for one hour on Sunday. I believe that opening for one hour on Sunday would do away with the breaking of the law; and if a publican opened beyond that his license should be taken away from him.
9200. President.] It is a kind of compromise with you? Certainly.
9201. Mr. Withers.] The class of persons who are now clamouring for Sunday-opening are loafers? Yes.
9202. And you think it is a libel on the bonâ fide respectable mechanic that they should be credited with asking for these hours of opening on Sunday? I do.
9203. You think the provident industrious respectable mechanic who pays ordinary respect to the Sabbath would be ashamed to be identified with the clamour? The provident respectable mechanic is a man who has no desire to have opening on Sunday or any other time, for the matter of that.

- Mr. H. C. Hoyle.
11 Oct., 1886.
9204. You believe that there are a very small class who clamour for opening on Sunday? Yes; I believe the majority of the men who are clamouring for opening on Sunday are men of improvident habits and reckless character, who think more of the allurements of the public-house than their own homes.
9205. President.] Do you think the publican instigates the clamour? I could not say that; I know respectable publicans who would not stoop to that sort of thing. Unscrupulous publicans may have something to do with it; it is my opinion the law has been very lax in allowing certain publicans to sell impure drink. If the law were carried out and Inspectors were sent to the hotels on Sunday, and if the publican was compelled to sell a certain quality of drink, it would ruin many of the low houses which are kept going by adulteration, and the abominable stuff they put into the drink.
9206. Is that opinion the result of conversation you have had with your fellow workmen, or have you come to that conclusion yourself? I know one case that came under my personal observation; I was in company with a man who went into a public-house, and only took one drink and fell down insensible.
9207. Was that lately? About twelve months ago; I have known a very respectable credible man go into a public-house and take only one drink, which seriously affected him; and I believe, from information I have got from the men, that the drink dispensed in the lower parts of the city is abominable.
9208. Had the publican any object in focussing the man you speak of? I could not say; I have been told by the men who have visited these low drinking houses that the drink is of the most inferior description; and although it may not be given for the purpose of focussing it has a very bad effect, and it would be impossible for these places to keep open if they were compelled to sell pure drink.

Mr. G. Smith called in, sworn, and examined:—

- Mr. G. Smith.
11 Oct., 1886.
9209. President.] You are in Cameron's Tobacco factory, are you not? Yes; I am engineer there.
9210. In what capacity? For the last ten years as engineer.
9211. Up to the time I suppose of the recent fire? Yes, and now in the new place.
9212. How many men have you had under your eye as a rule—the average number daily? About 170.
9213. How many would there be in the factory when in full work? About 230 men and youths.
9214. You have had under your eye then about —? About 170.
9215. Engaged in the various processes of the manufactory? Yes.
9216. Do you belong to any temperance organisation? No; I never took the pledge in my life.
9217. In habit what are you; are you an abstainer or a moderate drinker? A moderate drinker; if I were out I would take a glass of brandy as well as anybody, but I do not make it a habit.
9218. At any rate you do not take it at your meals or at any other regular time? No.
9219. We might call you then a moderate abstainer. Have you always been in this business? Yes, except that I am an ex-publican; I kept an hotel in Sydney.
9220. How long ago? In 1879, or just at the beginning of 1880, just before the Exhibition was burned down.
9221. Had you been long in that business? Between five and six years.
9222. Then in addition to your experience of men with whom you have been brought in contact at the workshop you have been yourself a publican? Yes.
9223. Do you think there is any desire on the part of the operative class to have the Sunday-closing law altered? I have proof positive from nine-tenths of the people I mix up with generally that they do.
9224. They want the law altered? Yes, nine-tenths.
9225. Would you put it then that so many as 150 out of the 170 you mentioned would be in favour of opening the public-houses on Sunday? I should say ninety out of every 100.
9226. I suppose that though you have been a publican your sympathy is not necessarily with publicans? No, I have no desire to sympathise with one class or the other.
9227. Do you think yourself that the closing of public-houses on Sunday is a mistake? I think it is.
9228. Do you mean in the interests of temperance? Yes, in the interests of temperance.
9229. Because that is the point? That is the point.
9230. And do you really think that people have been more intemperate because the public-houses have been closed to them on Sunday? I do, that more intemperance has been caused in the city and suburbs.
9231. You left the public-house business before the new Act was passed? Yes.
9232. Can you tell us how you come to that conclusion? Yes.
9233. Give us your reasons? I go round on Sundays and I see so much drunkenness on that day, so many persons hanging round hotels watching the police and waiting to get in, to an extent which never occurred during my personal knowledge when the houses were open on Sunday. Only yesterday I saw a dozen young men drunk in Foveaux-street, Surry Hills—a thing I had never seen before.
9234. Do you mean to imply that you find more drunkards in the streets now than under the old law? Yes, than under the old law.
9235. Would you be surprised if I told you that you were the first witness out of fifty or sixty who has stated that? I would not be surprised.
9236. Do you not think that you have noticed something which is very exceptional? No; I have taken a great deal of notice of this Act ever since there has been a talk about it. Since this Commission was formed I have watched it particularly, and from one end of the city to the other I have noticed more young men as a rule on Sunday led away to intemperate habits than I ever saw before.
9237. Are those persons whom we would call larrikins, or are they respectable men? I would not call them larrikins; they dress the same as anybody else; they are respectably dressed persons.
9238. You can tell larrikins when you see them? I should not say they were larrikins.
9239. Do you know any of your own people who have relapsed into drunkenness under this new law? I do, from Cameron's. I believe there has been more drunkenness caused in our own factory from the Sunday-closing clause than there ever was before.
9240. Do you not think, with regard to these twelve men in Foveaux-street, that your seeing them there in that condition was something exceptional? No; it is not the first time I have noticed the same thing.
9241. You tell us you have kept your eyes open since this Commission was appointed—that is eight months ago? Yes.
9242. That is to say, for the purpose of gathering facts? Yes.
9243. Did you receive any notice of being called? No; the paper I received was the first notice I had of it.
- 9244.

9244. Now, I suppose you are aware that the Sunday-closing was a concession in 1881 to a very strong expression of public opinion? Yes; I have some slight recollection of it. Mr. G. Smith.
9245. And are you prepared now to say, that in your opinion (and I suppose yours would be the opinion of a man representing many others) Sunday-closing has been a mistake—in fact worse than a mistake? In my opinion worse than a mistake, because it has caused a great deal of drunkenness among families that never would have come about before. 11 Oct., 1886.
9246. You have families connected with your establishment? Yes.
9247. And you think that this Sunday-closing law has absolutely created the intemperance which it was intended to diminish? Yes; I believe it has.
9248. Well, now you see the burden of proof rests very strongly with you and those who agree with you. So I must ask you again for more facts. You have given us one instance of twelve men—have you seen that sort of thing often? I have. It would be three or four Sundays ago when I was in Waterloo, and I saw on that occasion both females and men going along George or Pitt streets, and they were anything but sober, and the language used was anything but fit for people going to church or Sunday-school or anything of that sort, to hear.
9249. Do you notice any signs, or do you see any proof of what you say in your own establishment? Yes, there is great proof; many of them lose time on the Monday from this very cause; Monday is always, as a rule, a black day for us from this one cause.
9250. Are you speaking of the engineering department? No; of the factory generally; when I have charge of it, from one end to the other, and I am mixed up with them.
9251. I thought you were in the engineering department? Yes; but I keep my men under me for driving.
9252. Then you are practically the overseer? Yes. I do not actually have to go into the rooms to tell a man to do a thing, but if he does it wrong I check him.
9253. Then you are walking about the rooms always? From one end of the factory to the other.
9254. Mr. Withers.] You are overseer, like the overseer of a printing room—you have to view the different machines at work? Yes; just the same.
9255. You would have, for instance, a cutting machine for cutting tobacco, and twenty hands may be at the machine? I am responsible for that machine during the time it is cutting.
9256. President.] Have any accidents ever happened in the factory? Several.
9257. Do you attribute those at all to intemperance? In one case I can. In one case where a man lost his fingers, I believe he was under the influence of liquor—he had his fingers cut off. But I have had one case of a young fellow of 18 who got caught in the belt and was killed; I was taken up with him, and had my shoulder dislocated; that was just twelve months ago; from the carelessness of one man I lost one of my toes.
9258. Was that on a Monday? No; on Friday.
9259. But you do not connect that with intemperance? No; but you are asking if accidents happen.
9260. I mean connected with intemperance? I do not think any of those accidents were connected with intemperance.
9261. That is to say, the men were in full possession of their faculties? Oh, yes.
9262. Going back to what you have mentioned before. You say that nine-tenths of the persons you are connected with ask for Sunday opening? I do.
9263. Then I gather, you think it is a demand that ought to be granted? I do believe it.
9264. Do you think it would make men sober to be able to get drink on Sunday? I think if the public-houses were open on Sunday there would not be so much of this jug and bottle business carried home on Saturday night.
9265. I understand you to say the result of the closing of the business on Sunday is that the people consume a much larger quantity of liquor between the Saturday and Sunday? Yes.
9266. Does that demoralize them more or less? More, certainly.
9267. It makes them heavy and stupid? Yes.
9268. And makes them crave for more during the week? Yes.
9269. And I suppose they indulge that craving? Yes; I am positive of that.
9270. Do you not know that a very large number of public-houses are really available to the public on Sunday? Yes, I know that, though not from my own experience.
9271. Then practically they can get the drink on Sunday? Yes; and they go in there, and for fear of not getting any more they take one or two glasses too many.
9272. Then that is separate from the jug business—those who take too much by drinking it off the premises, and those who take too much by drinking it clandestinely? Yes.
9273. And you do not think that the law could prevent that? Not unless there were two or three policemen at each public-house door.
9274. You know as a matter of fact that the large majority of publicans violate the law on Sunday? Oh, yes.
9275. Those who have been here tell us they violate the law for their own protection—that if they did not supply their good customers on Sunday their good customers would leave them on the week day. Do you believe that? I do; I believe the majority would do so.
9276. You know something about the business? I do. No man kept the Sunday clause better than I did, for I usually went into the country; but I know I lost many a good shilling on the week days by keeping the people out on Sunday.
9277. They did not come back to you? They did not.
9278. Now, if the law were made more stringent—and I do not mean by keeping three policemen at each public-house door—but if the law were in itself more stringent, and there was less facility for the evasion of it, would not all those publicans be on the same level? I don't think so.
9279. You think there would always be some who would violate the law in order to get a monopoly of the Sunday drunkard? Yes; I believe if it was a question of hanging some of them would violate the law.
9280. Mr. Hutchison.] The publican? The publican I am speaking of now.
9281. President.] You mean hanging themselves, or their customers? If there was a clause in the law, providing even for hanging, you would still find some of the publicans would violate the law.
9282. Well, now, it seems useless to ask you any question about local option if you have those views? I would open every house that was called for if I had my views carried out.
9283. Then you are a freetrader. Now, you are an intelligent man; you are not here to give us nonsensical

- Mr. G. Smith. nonsensical theories; you are telling us on your oath what you believe, and you believe if everybody were allowed to open a public-house there would be less drunkenness? I do believe it; I believe if more houses were open there would be less drunkenness.
- 11 Oct., 1886. 9284. Then we have been going back. You have no sympathy with the public-houses or with the trade? No; the business was one that did not suit me; I was an engineer.
9285. And I suppose you left your wife in charge during the day? Yes.
9286. That is rather a rare instance, is it not? Yes; I believe many of the publicans get a liking themselves for the smell of the beer; they get a hankering after it.
9287. Mr. Hutchison.] I suppose there are a large number of juveniles in your employment? Yes, a great number.
9288. How many adults are there? About 200 or 250.
9289. How many Parliamentary voters have you? I could not tell that.
9290. Approximately? I should say about 150. What age would you take them from—21?
9291. Yes? There would not be that many; I should say about ninety.
9292. Then you think that eighty of those would vote for Sunday opening? Yes.
9293. Have you talked with them on the matter? No; not personally; but I hear them talk amongst themselves. They are always talking on something or other from a political point of view.
9294. Then you have caught their opinions? I have from their own unbiassed talk.
9295. Seeing that you are very pronounced in your opinions with regard to Sunday opening they may have toned their conversation to suit you? Oh, no; they do not talk to me once in twenty-four hours, unless on some particular business connected with their trade.
9296. They know your opinions on the subject, I suppose? I do not think so. I do not know that any-one knows whether I drink or not.
9297. I am not asking whether you drink or not, but with regard to your opinions? I do not think so.
9298. Mr. Withers.] There is a very distinct line between you and the operatives? Oh, yes.
9299. Mr. Hutchison.] Do you not think that the fact of your being in the trade has given you very strong prejudices in favour of the trade? No, I do not.
9300. Do you know you are the first representative working man who has told us there is a majority for Sunday opening? I fear it would go on the other side if a vote were taken upon it. I feel confident of it.
9301. There seems to be a little inconsistency in men who have taken up your position. You say that any amount of drink can be got in public-houses on a Sunday? In some.
9302. There is no difficulty in getting drink on Sunday? Not in some neighbourhoods. I have not tried it myself; but I judge from what I have seen when going about from one street to another.
9303. Seeing that there is no difficulty in getting drink on Sunday how is it so much is taken home? That is a point I cannot argue. The only thing I can consider is that what is taken home on Saturday night is consumed on Sunday, and then they find it necessary to get more. In one street on a Sunday morning—one of the back streets between the Park and Foveaux-street—I saw five females abusing each other at their doors, and if they were not drunk at the time I do not know who would be.
9304. Were these respectable working-men's wives? From appearance I should take them to be so. I should not take them from appearances to be loose characters.
9305. However you seem to be firmly persuaded that the working-man will have drink on Sunday, and that if he cannot get it by the public-house being legally open, he will either take it home on Saturday and drink more than he ought to, or have it clandestinely on the Sunday? I believe so.
9306. You have a very low estimate of the working man? I cannot help it.
9307. Mr. Roseby.] You do not think drink is a real necessity for the working-man? No; I think it is a mistake to think so.
9308. You take very little yourself? Very little.
9309. You have known a number of persons go to destruction through drink? I have.
9310. Have you known a number connected with your own establishment go to destruction through drink? Well —
9311. Have you had to dismiss a number through drink? I have.
9312. Have you noticed an increased amount of intemperance among young people of late years? I have; more so since this Sunday closing than before.
9313. But, from whatever cause, you have noticed a large increase of intemperance among young people? I have.
9314. Both male and female? I have.
9315. Do you not think the public-house business somewhat a dangerous business? From what I have known I do.
9316. You have known persons in the business go to destruction through drink? I have.
9317. And notwithstanding that, you are not in favour of restricting the traffic? I would be if it could be done; but as the law is it is doing more harm than good.
9318. If it could be made restrictive you would be in favour of it? I would if it could be, but it is impossible to get the publicans to be in favour of anything.
9319. Do you believe in giving the people the privilege of voting upon the existence of this traffic or not? Decidedly; I would give the people the opportunity of voting either way; I would not bias them any way.
9320. You think that is the people's right? I do.
9321. Mr. Withers.] What hours do the people work in the factory? Nine hours.
9322. Do you think six days in the week a sufficient number on which to work? I think so.
9323. Do you think it is fair then to those publicans who desire to have the seventh day to themselves to force them to open on Sunday? No; the Act never did force you to open on Sunday; it only gave you the privilege to do so.
9324. It places a man in a very invidious position if he does not open and the man at the other corner does? That is where the difficulty is. In the present state of the law I believe the Sunday clause would save a deal of intemperance if it could be made stringent.
9325. You have described a class of males and females who hang about public-houses; are those the persons you would entrust with a vote to make the laws of the community? No; I would not.
9326. You say the women are dissolute, and the same applies to the men you have described;—are they worth considering, except in the way of providing an inebriate asylum for them? Oh, yes; I think if they were clear of the drink, and allowed to take it in moderation, they would be just as good citizens as anyone else.
- 9327.

9327. But you say they are a class of men you would not trust with a vote? You asked that with regard to the women, not with regard to the men; I would not trust any woman who gives way to drink.
9328. Do you not think that to a large extent the same character applies to the men who hang about public-houses on a Sunday and give way to drink? A proportion of them.
9329. As far as I can gather from your remarks there are many respectable men who are in the habit of having a glass of ale every day, and especially on a holiday, with reference to whom there is a danger that when they go into a public-house on the Sunday they will take more than is good for them? Yes; and it becomes a serious matter with them; they take more than is good for them.
9330. Do you think the State should have some control over the public-house business—over the selling of spirits? Decidedly.
9331. But you think that every application should be granted? Not necessarily; I should consider more the character of the man than the house, which is not in all cases done.
9332. You would not be reckless of the character of the man taking the house? No, I think the important thing is to look after the character of the man.
9333. We have had persons in the trade who think it an insult for anyone to look after their characters? I think the characters of all should be canvassed.
9334. You think the business is such that the publican should be a respectable and honorable man? Yes.
9335. He might be a dangerous man if he is not a respectable and honorable man? He might be a dangerous man if he is not a respectable first-class character.
9336. And conspire to rob anyone and such like? Yes.
9337. I did not ask what nationality you are, Mr. Smith? I am of English descent, but I am a New Zealander.
9338. Do you think there is much drunkenness brought about in the homes of mechanics, through the agency of grocers selling drink? I do.
9339. There has been a good deal said about the bad influence of women being employed as barmaids;—do you think from your own observation in tobacco factories that the influence from the sexes being mixed together in factories is very bad? Well, no; they are not mixed very much; there is proper supervision.
9340. Is there proper supervision over morals and so on? Yes; I think you could walk the factory, and not hear an immoral word from anyone of the females there during the day.

Mr. G. Smith.
11 Oct., 1886.

Mr. John William Morris called in, sworn, and examined:—

9341. Mr. Hutchison.] Where are you employed? At Cameron Brothers.
9342. What is your position there? I am manager of the leaf department.
9343. How long have you been in the employment? About six years in the business altogether.
9344. Do you come into contact with all the employees? Yes.
9345. You mix up among them? Yes, I have to mix with them.
9346. Are you an abstainer, or do you drink moderately? I drink moderately.
9347. With regard to the question of Sunday closing, do you think the working-man as such wants the public-houses open on Sunday? Well, I am inclined to think that the majority of the working men are in favour of them being open.
9348. You think the majority in your factory would be in favour of it? I am sure of it in our factory.
9349. About what majority? Oh, I think three-fourths of them.
9350. Do you think from observation that applies to other working men—to working men universally through New South Wales? I would not say that universally. I believe two-thirds of the working-men do. From conversations I have had on different occasions and mixing among the working-classes, I believe two-thirds of the working-men are in favour of it. I do not say for all day on Sunday, but for a portion of the day.
9351. Do you think the working-men are clamouring for it? No, I do not.
9352. Then you do not think it would be true for any one to say that the working-men are clamouring for it? No, I do not.
9353. I am speaking of the bonâ fide working-man; they are obeying the law, but they require to have an hour on Sunday to get dinner-beer? That is my opinion.
9354. Do you think we have too many public-houses? No, I do not think we have too many public-houses, but I think we have too many of an inferior quality.
9355. Are you a believer in local option? No, I am not a believer in local option.
9356. Neither as it is now nor extended? Extended, I am a believer, but not as it is now.
9357. If a majority of the people in a given locality voted that there should be no public-houses, would you let them so vote and let the vote be effective? Undoubtedly.
9358. Mr. Roseby.] Knowing how things exist now and have existed for many years, do you not think the public-house business a very dangerous one to the morals of the community? Well, of course every person must admit that public-houses to some extent have a dangerous effect on a portion of our community; but, as a rule, I do not think that public-houses are dangerous to our community.
9359. Have you known a number of persons go to destruction through drink? I have known some.
9360. A considerable number, in your long experience? I have known several people.
9361. Have you noticed an increase of drinking of late years among young people? A very great increase.
9362. Do you not think that an appalling fact? Taking that view of it it is of course an appalling fact.
9363. You believe in the principle of giving the people a right to say whether public-houses should be in their midst or not? Yes; undoubtedly so.
9364. And if they are increased the people should have the power to say how many they will have? That is right. Of course I regard it this way: that if a public-house is a nuisance they have a right to say whether they will have it or not.
9365. To veto it? Yes, to veto it.
9366. You have known the public-houses to become dangerous to many? Yes; I have.
9367. And you have known some bright, intelligent workmen go to destruction through drink? I have.
9368. In fact some of the best-hearted men among the first to go to destruction from this cause? I have known that.

Mr.
J. W. Morris.

WEDNESDAY, 13 OCTOBER, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT, |

J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.,

A. HUTCHISON, Esq.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Edwin Cock called in, sworn, and examined:—

- Mr. E. Cock. 9369. President.] You are employed at Farmer & Company's? Yes; for the last twenty-five years.
- 13 Oct., 1886. 9370. How? I am in the Dispatch and Parcel Delivery office.
9371. In which capacity you have had opportunities of associating and conversing with your fellow-employees? Yes.
9372. Do you consider that you know, and can fairly represent, the views of Farmer & Company's employees? Yes; I think I may say all.
9373. How many men and women do the firm employ? Over 600, including the place in Kent-street.
9374. How many adult males would there be in that number? I should think about two-thirds.
9375. Do you think there would be 300? About that. The number fluctuates on account of business.
9376. As the business is of a very extensive kind, and occupies many branches, I suppose you have all sorts of tradesmen there? Decidedly.
9377. Do you consider that you know the opinions of these employees sufficiently well to be able to tell us what their views are upon certain subjects connected with the Licensing Law? Yes; I think I am in a position to do so.
9378. I suppose these employees will comprise within their numbers persons sometimes addicted to intemperance as well as total abstainers? Yes. There are not very many total abstainers.
9379. And do these people often lose a great deal of time? Indeed they do, and their situations into the bargain.
9380. With regard to the firm I suppose they have regulations of a very stringent character for the conduct of their employees? Yes, there are regulations.
9381. But have not they regulations such as they have in Government Departments and other places? No.
9382. And can an employee bring liquor with him? Not if they know it. It is not allowed, but still they go out and get it.
9383. I suppose they have tried regulations of that kind, and they have been failures? Yes; where there's a will there's a way.
9384. And people bring what they like? Not to the knowledge of the firm; but they send out for it and get it.
9385. And I suppose you see the results of that? Indeed I do.
9386. It is generally said that the class of workmen who are confined and have sedentary occupations are much more given to intemperance than those who have larger physical enjoyment? Yes; that is so.
9387. What do you ascribe it to? That men have not their hobbies as they have at Home. They have too much time on their hands, and they get into a habit which they cannot release themselves from.
9388. Is it not a fact that the same class of workmen in England are addicted to intemperate habits? Yes; but not to the same extent, and the climate has a great deal to do with it here.
9389. And do you think the climate induces them to drink? Yes.
9390. And to that extent you have some excuse for them? Yes, to a certain extent.
9391. Are you a total abstainer? Yes; I am bound to be for example's sake, and knowing the weakness of human nature.
9392. Have you always been a total abstainer? No; but I have been for thirty years.
9393. Are you connected with any total organization? No; they are too straight-laced for me. When I first came here I appeared on the Temperance platform, and they carried on to such an extent that I told them my friends at Home would put them down as raving madmen.
9394. Although a total abstainer, you say you could not belong to these Societies because something in their organization would offend you? No; it is not that, but I have no time to spend at their meetings. There is too much rude debate, and they talk against time. I belonged to a Benefit Society, but I could not afford the time; there is a waste of time, and I find I could work to better purposes elsewhere.
9395. You mean you could not afford to belong to them? No, but I had only limited time and I could not afford to devote it to them.
9396. Have you discussed the question of Sunday opening with any of your fellow employees? Yes; continually.
9397. Will you say with what result? I must say that taking the aggregate they are in favour of the public-houses being opened for a small portion of Sunday, because they are so partial to it; that is not all of them remember; others, like myself, would not have them open at all any day.
9398. Mr. Hutchison.] Do you think the bonâ-fide workmen, as such, if polled, would vote for Sunday opening? I do not think so.
9399. Then who are the clamourers for Sunday opening? The tipplers; if it were put to every man's conscience I think he would vote to close.
9400. Supposing a vote were taken all over New South Wales on the basis of the Parliamentary Voting Roll, what do you think the majority would be? For partial, if not total, closing.
9401. You yourself are decidedly in favour of absolute closing? Yes, at all times.
9402. Then you are a prohibitionist? Decidedly, because I can do without it.
9403. How do you think the workmen are affected towards full local option; do you think that if it were put to them as a direct issue without any side issues that they would vote in favour of closing public-houses? They would not on the whole; I think they would on Sundays.
9404. You do not think the working man is in favour of full local option? I do not, but I do not think they are fair judges. One half of these people are not capable of voting or judging, and not one half of our jurymen are fit for the box.
9405. You yourself are in favour of full local option? Decidedly.

9406. You think it is a fair measure to allow people to veto the traffic in their midst? Yes.
9407. Do you think you are in a position to judge of the voters' opinion on this local option question? No, I would not say that I am. I do not mix sufficiently with politics, and I can only give the results of those things.
9408. What do you think would be the result in your own shop even, taking the men who drink, if they were allowed the right to vote would they vote against it? I question it.
9409. Do you think they would vote for a reduction in the number of public-houses? Unquestionably they would do that.
9410. Then you think a workman would be in favour of a local option law something like this: That there would be three questions on the paper—one voting that there be no further increase in public-house; another that the number be reduced by a given number; and another that they be closed altogether. If they were allowed to vote on all these three questions, do you think that would be an acceptable Act? Yes, I think so, and I think the workmen would be in favour of it, and I believe they would vote to reduce the number.
9411. Do you think it is generally believed amongst working men that there are far too many public-houses? Yes, I do; and I believe it is seeing so many that leads them to drink.
9412. Would you give any compensation to the publican for the loss of his license by reason of the vote of the people? I would.
9413. Have you thought of the nature of the compensation? No; it is the first time I have been asked the question, and I have not thought of it. I think money would be preferable.
9414. Is the fact of your conceding compensation a compromise with yourself, or do you think that the publicans have an absolute right to it? I think that they have an absolute right to it.
9415. Mr. Eoseby.] You have had a very long experience in Farmer & Company's;—do you think intoxicating liquors necessary for a man to do his work satisfactorily? Certainly they are a great hindrance.
9416. You think he can do his work more satisfactorily to himself and his employers if he is a total abstainer? Yes.
9417. Have you known many who have gone to destruction through drink among the employees of the firm? Yes; I have known men and women who have gone to early graves, and I have known some women who have committed suicide through drink.
9418. Have you known young men to go to destruction through drink in that establishment? Yes, numbers.
9419. If these public-houses are to exist, I suppose you believe that they ought to be under very stringent and rigid legislation? Decidedly.
9420. Not only to curtail the number but the time at which they ought to be allowed to keep open? Yes; and I would prohibit them from serving the wives or children.
9421. The law now says publicans can supply children over 16 years of age;—is that too young? Decidedly; the age ought to be over 21.
9422. Have you known a number of young girls to become compromised by their indulgence in drink? Yes.
9423. I suppose you are opposed to young women serving behind bars? I am strongly opposed to that.
9424. Do you think it would be desirable to close much earlier on Saturday? Certainly; but these people who are addicted to drink would take in double the quantity.
9425. You would hail anything that would restrict the temptation to people to take drink? Certainly, because it is affecting me every day of my existence.
9426. President.] Do the employees in Farmer & Co.'s wish the liquor bars to be open on Sunday? They would vote to restrict it to certain hours.
9427. Do a large number of employees of Farmer & Co. approve of the Sunday prohibition law now in force? On the whole I do not believe they do.
9428. And do many of the employees in Farmer's go away late at night? No; I am the latest, and I go away at 7 o'clock.
9429. There are no late workmen? No.
9430. Then the public-houses on the business days of the week are open too late for them? In my opinion, yes.
9431. But in their opinion? In their opinion I believe they are not open too late.
9432. Do you think that they would be in favour of a reduction of the number? Yes.
9433. And in favour of a reduction of the number by local option? Yes; I think so.
9434. You are a total prohibitionist; have you been in any other country besides this? Only in England.
9435. You have not been anywhere where total prohibition is the law of the land? No; but I have had communications about it from a man in America in one of the States where they have total prohibition, and he said it was something astonishing to see how it worked. They have no police, no prisons, and no Magistrates. That man was formerly in Farmer & Co.'s. If the question were asked me what I think of the drinking custom here, I should say it is appalling.
9436. Do you consider that what you describe as existing in Farmer & Co.'s exists in similar establishments in this city? Yes.
9437. Do you consider that young men behind the counter share in the same misfortune of being addicted to drink? Certainly.
9438. Do you see signs of intemperance on these people? Yes.
9439. In the day-time? Yes.
9440. Then this must be seen by the customers also? Possibly so.
9441. And also by the responsible person, the shopwalker, for instance, and the employees themselves? Yes.
9442. But I should have thought that the duty of counter-assistant in one of these large shops is so responsible that a man could not fulfil it if he were under the influence of liquor? Oh, but some one else would do the work for him and shield him.
9443. Do the employees go out during the luncheon hour, or dine on the premises? They go out.
9444. Is not there a system of dining in Farmer's? No; Hordern's is the only place I know.
9445. Then you think that the facilities for getting drink are increased by going out, and could be diminished if the employees had dinner inside? Yes.
9446. Then you say that the habit of intemperance is a common one in this class of employment? Yes.

Mr. E. Cook.

13 Oct., 1886.

- Mr. E. Cock. 9447. Do you notice this amongst the women employed there? Yes.
9448. Have the women begun to take drink there? Decidedly; one died not long since.
- 13 Oct., 1886. 9449. In speaking of these people you are speaking of the elder people? More especially the unmarried ones, about 30.
9450. This establishment includes dress-makers and shopwomen of all kinds? Yes; there is no doubt the confinement is very trying.
9451. But there are other employments besides the draper's shop in which there is much confinement, and I have not heard that such employees are addicted to drink? But they are.
9452. Then it is not only the confinement? No; but a great deal of it is attributable to the confinement.
9453. I suppose no objection was taken to your being heard on behalf of the firm? No; they sent me.
9454. And I suppose no restriction was put upon what you said? None whatever; I was simply to say what I knew.
9455. What is the favourite beverage of the people you are describing; is it beer or ardent spirits? Well, they go in for beer, as a rule.
9456. Do you see any prospect of reformation; what do you look forward to, to legislation, or what is called spiritual or moral suasion? Well, I would like to see a better example on the part of parents; smoking unquestionably leads to drink.
9457. Do you know that some total abstainers are very great smokers? No; but smoking reduces the system to such an extent that depression sets in, and then a man turns to something to sustain him.
9458. Mr. Roseby.] Your long connection with Farmer & Co. and the nature of your duties give you special facilities for knowing the social habits of those employed in the firm? Yes; I have been in the different departments for a great number of years; and in the parcels department, where I have to do with all of them.

Mr. John Claydon Atkinson called in, sworn, and examined:—

- Mr. 9459. President.] You are in the Government Printing Office? Yes.
- J.C. Atkinson. 9460. What position do you hold there? I am a compositor.
9461. How long have you been there? I have been in the office twenty-nine years.
- 13 Oct., 1886. 9462. And I suppose you are on the permanent staff? Yes.
9463. Are you yourself a total abstainer? Yes.
9464. Have you been so long? All my lifetime.
9465. You have associated, of course, with all the employees in the Government Printing department? Yes.
9466. And know their habits and their sentiments intimately? Yes, of the permanent staff.
9467. I suppose that, as a body, compositors, readers, and men connected with machines, must necessarily be a temperate body, but not necessarily total abstainers? Yes; with respect to readers, the strictly mental character of their employment demands that they should be temperate.
9468. Will you tell us what you think is the predominant view held by the employees in the department in connection with the closing of public-houses on Sunday. Would they desire the law to be sustained, or in any way mitigated? There are a variety of opinions in regard to that matter.
9469. Can you speak as to the majority? I do not think so. We have a number of temperance men, good templars, and moderate drinkers.
9470. Could you state what is the predominant opinion? The general opinion is that they think the Act is really unworkable, and that they would rather see the houses open for an hour on Sunday—say, between 1 and 2—and that that would prevent a good deal of the drinking now carried on in private houses.
9471. Do they hold that opinion in the interests of temperance and not of self-indulgence? Yes.
9472. Do you think that men supplied with drink between 1 and 2 will be temperate for the rest of the day? Some of the men I have been speaking to say that men have been in the habit of taking home on Saturday night more than they would perhaps use were the old facilities in existence—that is, the public-houses open between 1 and 2.
9473. You say that they notice the existence of a habit of taking liquor home on Saturday in a larger quantity than they would take under other circumstances if they had been able to furnish themselves with it on Sunday? Yes.
9474. Do you think that observation is likely to be true? I do, and I believe it. I have seen men go with large jugs and take home these jugs full of beer; and these are men who I know only take their glass of ale for dinner.
9475. Were these men of intemperate habits? No; they were temperate men.
9476. Then do you conclude from that that they blame the law which compels them to lay in a larger supply? Yes; they say the law compels the public-houses to close on Sunday, and they cannot do without their dinner beer.
9477. You are aware that you can be supplied on Sunday now at a large number of public-houses? Yes.
9478. Do these men abstain from breaking the law on Sunday? Yes.
9479. You are sure of that? Yes; they say that they would not go into the public-houses on Sunday, and they lay in their supply on Saturday night.
9480. Do you see any signs on them on Monday of having taken too much? Not the men I mean.
9481. There has simply been then a larger consumption on their part without any signs of excess, and they begin the week none the worse? Yes.
9482. And it is your opinion that the Sunday prohibition might be relaxed? Yes.
9483. I suppose your men, besides discussing the Sunday opening question, discuss the question of the number of public-houses? Yes.
9484. Do not they think that they are greatly in excess of the requirements? Yes, they think they are one-third too many.
9485. What would be their way of carrying out a reduction, is it by local option, or would they like to have the power to reduce the number by their own direct vote? Yes; by their own direct vote.
9486. Do you hear many complaints of the adulteration of liquor? Yes; I have heard complaints in connection with both beer and spirits.
9487. And is that in reference to city and suburban houses? More in reference to small suburban houses. 9488.

Mr.
J. C. Atkinson.
18 Oct., 1886.

9488. Do you believe in the genuineness of these complaints? I do.
9489. Do you consider drunkenness a crime or a vice? I look upon it as a vice.
9490. Do you mean by that that it belongs to that kind of human failing that should be cured rather than punished? I think it should be cured.
9491. What do you consider an effectual mode of treatment? Moral suasion; and instead of sending these people to gaol I would send them to some kind of reformatory, because if you place them in gaol, say, for seven days, the only result is that as soon as they come out they go in for drinking, and are arrested again. It would be far better to put them in an asylum where they could be treated.
9492. Do you not consider that it would be a violation of the liberty of the subject to put men away for a period of six months or a year? No, and I give here my reasons: Where it would benefit a man I do not see that there would be any more injustice in enforcing a judicious system of restraint and compulsory confinement than there would be in the case of a person suffering from some infectious disease. Intemperance, we know, at a certain stage, is a disease, and if we do not hesitate at compulsory detention with the view to proper treatment in the case of a person suffering, but only in a different form, why should we allow false scruples to step in in the case of the drunkard? As such he is his own enemy, bringing endless trouble on home and friends, and a pest to society from the bad example he sets. Being so if there are any chances of redemption at all these should be availed of by a resort to extreme measures by compulsory detention in an Inebriate Asylum, from whence he might be restored an altered and better man.
9493. You would look upon him then as a temporary lunatic? Yes, undoubtedly, I should, where an absolute craving for drink makes him an irresponsible being.
9494. Do you consider that we as a community are capable of enduring a law which would send an habitual drunkard into a retreat whether he would or not, on the order of a Magistrate, for a period of from six to eighteen months? I think in the case of the habitual drunkard that we are, where the general interests of society and the drunkard himself are at stake. The law, when brought in, would do honor to its introducers.
9495. Can you mention any other reforms in the licensing system or the liquor traffic system which you think might be suggested? I think we ought to do away with barmaids, because their presence as such do not benefit our young men. There is a wonderful infatuation existing where there is a pretty and attractive barmaid, possessing more than ordinary conversational powers. This infatuation would not exist were barmen substituted. The attraction removed there would unquestionably be then less loitering about the bars, and, as a consequence, less drinking. Behind a public-house bar, subject it may be to low language from some foul-mouthed drunkard, is certainly not a fitting place for any young girl, and is not likely to add to her ideas of morality.
9496. Do you think it is right to sell liquor to people under 16 years? I would not allow any boy to be supplied with liquor who is under the age of 16.
9497. Would you allow him to be supplied with liquor and take it away? No.
9498. But would not that interfere with children being sent to the public-houses by their parents? Yes, and it would be better not to supply them because that is the age that a boy turns either one way or the other.
9499. How many men are there in the Government Printing Office? Men and boys nearly 400, if not more.
9500. How many of these do you think you represent the opinions of, in the answers you have given;—do you think you represent half? No, I do not think so.
9501. Have you thought much about the subject of local option? Yes, and I would give the people full local option, and give them power to say whether they would have public-houses or not.
9502. Do you think public-houses are required at all;—are you in favour of local option as a prohibition, as one form of abolishing the drink traffic? Yes.
9503. Would your object be to get rid of public-houses entirely? Oh, no.
9504. Then you are not a prohibitionist; you simply think there are too many by one-third? Yes. I would allow the people to say whether there should be a public-house in their district or not. For instance, there are too many public-houses on the Albion Estate, and if the people were asked to vote I believe they would vote to reduce the number. I will certainly say that they should have the power to vote to reduce the number of public-houses because there are too many of them, but we cannot shut up the present houses by local option.
9505. Then your vote would be to fix a certain statutory number? Yes.
9506. Then you are not in favour of local option in the sense of closing all houses in every locality? No.
9507. You would not be in favour of full local option, which simply means that the public shall have the power of saying whether there shall be any public-houses at all in certain areas? No.
9508. Mr. Roseby.] You have been a long time in the Government Printing Office? Yes.
9509. And have had long experience as to whether drink is necessary for workmen to discharge their duties efficiently, and you believe they would be far better in all respects without drink than with it? Yes, I believe they would be better without it.
9510. Are you in favour of allowing the people to have full control of this traffic as far as reducing the number of houses is concerned, and for everything to bow to the will of the people in this matter as in every other matter? Yes; I think the majority of the people ought to be allowed to carry out their will, the same as at municipal elections.
9511. President.] State what you would allow the local option vote to operate upon, and to what extent? I would allow the people to say whether there should be any public-house at all in a given area.
9512. Mr. Roseby.] Have you noticed whether a number of young men of late years have given way to drink? Not amongst those with whom I associate.
9513. You think there is an increase of intemperance of late years? Yes.
9514. Are you a native of the Colony? No.
9515. You have been in the Colony for a number of years? Yes; I was only 6 years of age when I left England.
9516. Do you think the Australian youths are more given to intemperance of late years than they were in former years? Yes.
9517. And do you think that intemperance is induced to a large extent in consequence of the facilities there are for getting drink? Yes.

- Mr. J.C. Atkinson. 9518. You stated just now that you are strongly opposed to the employment of barmaids, as they drag young men to ruin? Yes, and for the reasons already given.
- 13 Oct., 1886. 9519. You are not in favour of these upstairs bars? Oh, no; I am strongly opposed to them. To draw an analogy between public and private bars. If an evil exists in the former we may rest assured it is none the less deteriorated in the latter, and for this reason alone they should be discountenanced.
9520. Mr. Hutchison.] Provided the present law with regard to Sunday closing was fully in force, do you think the working men would willingly observe it—I mean the bonâ fide working men? No.
9521. You think they would not? No.
9522. You think if the working men were polled the majority would vote for opening for an hour on Sunday? I think so.
9523. What is your opinion. Would you open for an hour on Sunday? If I were a publican I would not.
9524. You said you were a total abstainer;—do you belong to any temperance organization? Not now. I did belong to one at one time.

Mr. Francis Edward Watson called in, sworn, and examined:—

- Mr. F. E. Watson. 9525. President.] You are engaged in the Government Printing Office, are you not? Yes.
- 13 Oct., 1886. 9526. Have you been engaged there long? I have been there for four years.
9527. Are you on the permanent staff? No; I am a supernumerary.
9528. A compositor? Yes.
9529. Do you think you know the opinions of many of your fellow compositors in the typographical department of the Government Printing Office in reference to this question of the liquor traffic? Well, I do, generally speaking.
9530. You have frequently exchanged opinions on the matter? Oh, yes.
9531. Now, on a matter upon which public opinion is considerably divided, viz., whether the public-houses should be opened for a short time on the Sunday, or whether the prohibition should be retained, what is the general impression amongst your fellow employees: would they be in favour of retaining the present law, or of altering it? Some are in favour of retaining it, but I think the majority are in favour of having the houses open; that is, for two or three hours on the Sunday; for instance, between the hours of 1 and 2 o'clock, or between 2 and 3, something that way, and then again at a later period in the evening, such as from about 9 or 10, because that enables them to have their beer for their dinner, and also for their supper. The majority of the men, as far as I know, that is speaking of printers generally, all take a little. Some of them take it more than others, but they all take a little.
9532. I suppose they are necessarily a temperate set of men, or would you say they were not? Generally speaking they are, though they have got a bad name.
9533. I have heard that readers have a bad name? Readers, if intemperate, would not be able to pursue their vocations, and printers are considered to be of very dissipated habits by the public.
9534. Then you think that some of the typographical class are a little addicted to habits of intemperance? Some of them. I do not say the whole of them. I think the majority of them are very steady people.
9535. As a body you think they would like to have a couple of hours given to them on a Sunday? I think so.
9536. And on the week days are they content with the existing law? I think so. With regard to the people employed in the day-time it does not matter to them.
9537. Many of them are up till as late as 3 or 4 o'clock? Many of them till daylight.
9538. Not Government printers? When the House sits late they are.
9539. And speaking for them you think they would like the houses during business days to be opened for a longer period than they are now? Well, they would. For instance, I think, with regard to the printing trade, that there should be something after the style they have in England. They have there what they call night-houses, and by applying they have the privilege of remaining open a little longer and supplying people like those connected with the morning papers with beer, and also, if they like, with bread and cheese and sandwiches.
9540. Do they sell all night? Oh, yes.
9541. When do they open? Some of them never close.
9542. That is, it is a continuous sale? Yes. I think too, with regard to the system they have now got, that the law would not be broken so much as at the present time if the old system were again in force.
9543. Were you here under the old system? Yes; I kept a public-house between seven and eight years.
9544. When the old law was in existence? When the old law was in existence.
9545. Do you think there is more consumption of drink through the operation of the new law, proportionately to the population, than there was under the old system? I think so, judging from what experience I have.
9546. Are you prepared to say that the reforms (as we hoped they would prove) in the Licensing Act of 1881, have operated the wrong way? I think so.
9547. And brought about a greater consumption of liquor? From what I have observed of it I think it has, because people now get it in another way. They get into a public-house—for of course people who are in the habit of taking drink on a Sunday know where a house is open—then, instead of getting one drink and going away until a later period in the day, they sit down, and some of them get intoxicated before they leave the house. Then they go home and sleep and go at it again in the evening, whereas, if they had the means of getting it by going in and out they would not sit down in the place and continue drinking. They say, "If we do not take now what we want we will not be able to get it again."
9548. But do you not think that the fact that they are able to get in at all is owing to some considerable infirmity in the law? I do not know that.
9549. Supposing the law were made as stiff as it could be, and were enforced stringently, do you think there would be this kind of drinking which you have described? Yes.

9550. It is said that you can on any Sunday get drink in three-fourths of the houses in the city and the suburbs;—do you believe that? I cannot speak from experience upon that, but I know there are numbers of houses, and if I wanted a drink I could go round and get it both in Sydney and the suburbs.

9551. But it is your honest belief that more liquor is consumed in these houses on the Sunday now than was consumed in old times when they were open? I think so. In fact I have heard a publican boasting that he sells more liquor on one Sunday than he does during the week, that is Colonial beer.

9552. Saturday included? I suppose so.

9553. Was the Saturday's jug business, which we understand to be very large, included? Yes.

9554. Would you believe him? I had no cause to doubt him.

9555. It was not a silly boast on his part? I do not think so. I also heard the police accuse him of making that statement.

9556. I suppose the publican in that instance was the keeper of a suburban hotel? No, down in Lower George-street.

9557. Mr. Hutchison.] Did he confess it before the policeman? No, but I heard the policeman telling him that he had been making that boast. I heard him say he had sold a hogshead and a half on a Sunday.

9558. President.] He got rid, then, of about 75 or 80 gallons? Yes, somewhere about that. I have seen persons in this house sitting down; in fact they do not go into the bar; it is done in the kitchen. You go down the lane into the kitchen, and the drinks are brought to you.

9559. Was this man ever prosecuted under the law? Not that I am aware of, but he might have been. Even now if I go into certain houses I find the parlour is set apart; no drink is seen, but you can get your drink if you want it. You sit down and drink what you want, and the glasses are immediately taken away, and you wait for more to be brought in.

9560. We have been told by publicans that if they do not open on Sunday they lose their business on the week-day? Well, a falling off of custom would take place.

9561. That is, a man who was refused drink on a Sunday would not go to that house on the week-day? That is the fact.

9562. Then if the public-houses were really only drinking shops, it might end in the ruin of the trade;—do you think that is a bonâ fide statement? I think it would be the case.

9563. You would not suspect this statement to be instigated by the pecuniary interest of the publican to sell what he could? I think if a man has a public-house and does not sell on the Sunday, the people will go off during the week to where they are in the habit of getting it on the Sunday.

9564. Do you not think there are a number of public-houses in excess of the requirements? Yes.

9565. How many? That is a difficult question.

9566. Do you not think the suburbs have more than the city in proportion to population? Yes.

9567. You think that they ought to be reduced in number? I think the brewers are to account for that greatly; I am positive of it.

9568. When you had a house it was not a tied house? No, I was not married to Tooth; that is the expression, either married to Tooth or Toohey, or some one else.

9569. Then you think the brewers' system, or system of brewers' houses has increased the number of public-houses? I think it has.

9570. Has it inflated the value of good wills? This new Act has done so.

9571. Because of local option reducing the number? That is it.

9572. If the brewer did not make any advance do you think the good-will would be as valuable as it is? There would not be so many people looking for houses.

9573. Would there be as much competition? I do not think there would.

9574. A man gets an advance from the brewer, and if he did not get that he would have to provide his own money, and the house might not then be taken? Yes.

9575. Do you think that worse grog is supplied under this system, when the publican, we are told, is obliged to put up with inferior spirits and beer from the brewers? I think the quality of the beer sold now is much inferior to what it was some years ago.

9576. How long back? About seven years.

9577. You remember the time when Colonial beer was exceedingly poor stuff? That is years and years ago.

9578. But you think it was better seven years ago? Yes; first of all, the Castlemaine came into the market to compete with Tooth; then Toohey came into competition. The beer was far superior to what it is at the present day.

9579. With regard to the supply of other liquors, do you think the brewers' system encourages or compels the publican to take worse liquor than if he supplied himself? No; I do not think that, because he knows the brands, and if he is any judge of it he can get it.

9580. You do not think inferior liquor is put upon a publican because he has a tied house? No; I do not think so.

9581. Do you believe liquor is much adulterated now, or sophisticated or counterfeited? It may be counterfeited. I have known the forging of brands to be done in the city; the supplying of inferior liquor in the city under certain brands, and the putting of capsules on.

9582. Have you known liquor to be doctored? I cannot say anything about that; I have heard people say such things are done.

9583. I mean made up by essences? I cannot say; I have heard of such things.

9584. Do you think there is much low, immature spirit in consumption in the city? I could not answer that.

9585. You know what I mean? Yes; the spirit itself.

9586. You think there are too many public-houses? I do.

9587. How would you reduce them;—are you a local optionist? No; I am not.

9588. Would you reduce them by any form, by the vote of the people? I should think the people.

9589. Do you think there should be a statutory number, according to the population? I think that would be a better way of going about the matter.

9590. Or do you think there should be an increased license-fee? If you raise the license-fee I think it would compel them to supply an inferior article. I think if you had a sliding-scale with regard to some of the houses it would be better, such as, for instance, with regard to the large houses about town, some of which have twenty or thirty rooms; or even if you adopted a plan to issue what they call beer licenses.

- Mr. F. E. Watson. 9591. Would you be in favour of beer licenses? Yes; it used to work very well some years ago.
9592. Do you think it ought to work well now? I think so.
- 13 Oct., 1886. 9593. Do you know anything about the Colonial wine licenses? I only know they are in existence, but I think there is a deal of adulteration in regard to wines.
9594. Do not you think that in these wine-shops spirits are sold? Well, I do not think so. I have seen this, that they use a great deal of spirit in the wine; but there are only two or three wine-shops that I have been in—Bouffier's and Inglis', I think.
9595. Have you been in any upstairs bars? I have.
9596. What do you think of them? Well, I think they are anything but decent places for the resort of young men.
9597. Are they kept by women? As far as my experience goes they are.
9598. Do you think an upstairs bar a necessity for a decent public-house? I think not.
9599. Would you abolish them? I would, decidedly.
9600. You think them immoral resorts? They are.
9601. Mr. Roseby.] I suppose with reference to the various questions submitted to you by the President, you have found a variety of opinions among the workmen with whom you associate? I have.
9602. So much so that you can probably hardly give a pronounced opinion so far as others are concerned. Do you know the general opinion upon this question of those employed in the Government Printing Office? You are speaking in regard to the majority, I suppose.
9603. Yes; do you talk these matters over with the majority of your fellow workmen? Well, I have in a kind of banter; in the printing office there are what are called temperance men and non-temperance men, or beer drinkers and non-beer drinkers, and I have heard a good deal of chaff going on.
9604. Do you not think with reference to the liquor traffic that everything should bow to the will of the people, that the people should have a voice in saying whether there should be a certain number of public-houses or whether there should be any at all; that the people themselves should decide this matter? That would be by way of a majority.
9605. Yes, a substantial majority? Yes, but majorities are rather arbitrary at times.
9606. But supposing the majority were in favour of closing the public-houses, would you agree that compensation should be paid to those in the business? Decidedly not, because that would be selfish. It is not because the minority wish to have a glass of beer that you should deprive them of it.
9607. Do you think that drink is necessary? I think beer is; I do not mean Colonial beer, but malt liquors.
9608. You mean English beer? I think it is.
9609. You know a number of workmen in your office who do not touch beer at all? I know a few.
9610. Do you think they injure themselves by not drinking? If you take the beer drinkers and the non-beer drinkers, I think the former look the most healthy class of people.
9611. Do you not think the liquor business a very dangerous one to the morals of the community? I do not think so, because it is this way. If liquor cannot be obtained in a legitimate way by going to the public-houses, persons could go to a chemist and obtain from him the spirit, and make up the liquor themselves.
9612. Have you been in a place where there are no public-houses? No.
9613. So you do not know how things are where no public-houses exist? No; I have heard a number of fairy tales about these things where it is said to exist.
9614. But you cannot speak from experience? No.
9615. Have you noticed that young men are given more to drink now than in former years? I do not think so.
9616. If it is not a dangerous business do you think it is a harmless business, that it does no injury to the community; do you think that the public-houses do an injury to the community? I do not think so.
9617. Do you know whether drink has any connection with the crime of the country? I should think not. A good deal is put down to drink in regard to crime, but I do not think so, because people in their sane and sober moments do more harm than others would do.
9618. And you are an ex-publican? I am.
9619. Mr. Hutchison.] Were you in business in the city? I was in South Sydney, in what I consider one of the worst neighbourhoods in the city; I was down in Macquarie-street South.
9620. President.] Have you observed the practice which is adopted here, as in all English communities, of punishing the drunkard by sending him to gaol if he cannot pay a certain fine, and that the man so punished is none the better for his punishment, but goes back to his drink again, and again gets into gaol? Yes.
9624. Now, have you ever thought seriously about the desirability of altering the system of treatment entirely, and instead of punishing the habitual drunkard let the State try and reclaim him? I have. My reason for it is this: I find that some men are given to drink more than others, and it is like a mania with them; and if they were to be taken up and treated as lunatics I think you would be able, perhaps, to cure them.
9622. I will ask you a further question: suppose, by some misfortune, it happened to you to become an habitual drunkard, that you were proved to be an habitual drunkard, and that in consequence your personal liberty was restrained for a period of from six to eighteen months, until you were certified to have been cured? I would not object, because I would consider it beneficial to me.
9623. Do you think that such treatment, if carried out, would be a deterrent against drunkenness; people now know that it is 20s., or seven days for drunkenness, and they pay the 20s. or undergo seven days' imprisonment. Suppose they knew that, in consequence of their drunkenness, they would be taken from their families and kept a year or eighteen months, do you think that would deter them from intemperance? Well, some it might, but others it would not. Some acquire a taste for the drink, and it is difficult for them to give it up; whereas if they were taken from it, and find they would be kept from this stuff by that means, they would give it up; by being where they can get it they will have it. As for fining them and sending them to gaol, the moment a man comes out if he has the money he goes to a public-house and gets drunk again.
9624. And if he has not the money, but can find a mate, he will get the money from him? Yes. And there is another mistake, and that is the practice of getting a pick-me-up, which carries them on for a little, and then leads them to go and get more drink; I know it from my own business. If these persons were taken away away from temptation, and put somewhere, I think, by care and looking after them, you would be able to bring them round. As it is, when they do feel inclined to get straight they get a little money together and then meet with a pal, go out and have a drink together, and then get into the same old state again.

9625. Do you think that a transaction like this would be endured by this community—an habitual drunkard is brought up by a policeman before a Stipendiary Magistrate, he is proved to have been convicted thrice within the period of a year, the Magistrate treats him as an habitual drunkard, and orders him into seclusion to one of these retreats for nine months? That would not do.

9626. You see I am giving you your case now? For instance, a man may be brought up three times in a year and still not be an habitual drunkard. I know men now, and one man in particular, a reader, who has what is called a periodical. During the week he never touches drink, but as soon as he is done on Friday evening he commences. He is drunk to a certain extent on the Friday night and on the Saturday night, and on the Sunday he pulls himself together and goes to work on the Monday morning.

9627. And that is not an habitual drunkard? No; I would call an habitual drunkard a man that is never sober.

Mr.
F. E. Watson.
13 Oct., 1886.

Mr. William Hannon called in, sworn, and examined:—

9628. President.] Have you been any time in the Government employment? I have been twelve months in the Tramway department.

9629. What is your occupation there? Car-cleaner.

9630. Are you a total abstainer? No.

9631. I suppose you are what is called a moderate drinker? If I feel inclined I take it, and if I do not I may go a month or two months and take nothing.

9632. And then on the other hand? I may walk in and take something if I meet a friend.

9633. Do you think it is a great hardship that the houses are closed on a Sunday, speaking for men in general? I do.

9634. Do you feel it a hardship for yourself? No.

9635. Do you think that for the public in general it is a hardship? I do think it is a hardship.

9636. You think they ought to be open for a certain period during the Sunday? Yes.

9637. And what period do you think would be sufficient for moderate men? I should think a couple of hours in the afternoon.

9638. During the dinner-hour, I suppose, after Church? Yes, after Church.

9639. Between 1 and 3? Yes, that would do.

9640. Would you open them again? No, I would not open after that.

9641. You know I suppose, that a man, if he feels inclined, can get into many of these houses now and get a drink on a Sunday; and still you would open them? Yes.

9642. What they do now illegally you would let them do legally? Yes; that is it.

9643. Do you think the closing of public-houses on the Sunday leads to much drunkenness? Well, I think it leads to a great deal more than if they were left open.

9644. Do you think the people that go in there illegally, knowing it is illegal, drink more than they otherwise would? I feel sure they do.

9645. Then you think it would be a reform in fact to open the houses on a Sunday? I think so.

9646. That is to say, it would check intemperance? Yes, that is my belief.

9647. Do you think that is the opinion of the majority of the men in the Tramway Department? I believe it is in my own opinion.

9648. But the men in the Tramway Department—the drivers and men connected with the engines and the cars must be a very sober, respectable body of men? The majority of them are.

9649. They would not hold their situations if they were not? No.

9650. You still think, then, that taking them as a body, they would like the public-houses open for a certain number of hours on a Sunday? I believe in my opinion they would.

9651. Do you think there is much bad drink sold now? Yes, I do; a great deal.

9652. Is it bad whisky, bad rum, or bad beer, or bad brandy? The whole lot.

9653. I suppose you think you can tell good liquor from bad? I think so.

9654. By the effects on you? By the taste.

9655. Do you think that the spirit or liquor which is sold is too new, or do you think it is counterfeited stuff? I think it is adulterated.

9656. You mean that some stuff is put into it? That is what I mean.

9657. It is not water you mean? No.

9658. It is something else? I believe so.

9659. What do you believe it is—is it something to make you thirsty? I do not know so much about that, but I think this way, that they cannot afford to sell the liquor for the money, and then they adulterate it.

9660. Do you think that it is inferior liquor—new liquor, which is sold, that often does people harm. You know that young rum and young spirit of every kind is very bad for any man—that the more crude it is taken the worse it is? Yes.

9661. Do you not think that it is as much that as it is putting anything in it; they buy the cheapest liquor? I am aware of that.

9662. Do you think there are too many public-houses? I do.

9663. Do you think we could do with half of them? I think we could do away with a third.

9664. How would you reduce them in number; would you let the people vote to reduce them? I would leave it to the majority.

9665. In wards, I suppose—in municipalities? In municipalities.

9666. Do you think that liquor is now supplied to people of too young an age; do you think that persons of 16 years of age ought to be served with liquor over the bar? I do not think so.

9667. What do you think the age ought to be? 20 years.

9668. The person ought to be a man? Yes.

9669. Mr. Roseby.] Have you spoken to many of your fellow workmen about this matter? I have only spoken to one of them, just showed them the form I got.

Mr.
W. Hannon.
13 Oct., 1886.

- Mr. W. Hannon. 9670. But with reference to the opinions of your fellow workmen, have you ever asked for their opinions on these matters; do you know the opinions of your fellow workmen? Well, only by associating with them; I have never asked them for their opinion.
- 13 Oct., 1886. 9671. So with reference to the opinions of your fellow workmen about Sunday closing you have never obtained from them an expression of opinion? No.
9672. President.] That which you have said is not the result of conversation with them; it is only your own opinion? Yes.
9673. Mr. Roseby.] You do not think drink is a necessity, do you? Well, no, I do not.
9674. You think a man can do his work quite as satisfactorily without as with it? Perfectly.
9675. You have known a number of workmen go to destruction through drink? I have.
9676. Have many men been discharged from your works in consequence of their drinking habits? Not many, to my knowledge.
9677. None? There might have been one or two, I could not say that; there might have been half a dozen.
9678. How long have you been in the colony? I am a native.
9679. Have you not noticed that of late years young men are given more to drink than in former years? I think so.
9680. You see more young men drunk now than used to be the case when I was a lad and when you were a lad? Yes, I think so.
9681. And you think we have far too many public-houses? I do.
9682. And you think the quality of the liquor sold in a great many of these houses is very bad? In very many of them.
9683. Do you not think the public-house business a very dangerous business? Not if conducted on a right principle.
9684. As conducted now do you not think it is a dangerous business? As some of them are.
9685. As many of them are? As a few.
9686. Do you think it desirable that young women should sell drink behind a bar? No; I am thoroughly against that.
9687. Do you think that upper bars ought to be tolerated that are presided over by females? I think the system of having females behind bars ought to be done away with altogether.
9688. You do not think it a proper place for females? No, I do not.
9689. You think the licensing of public-houses ought to be in the hands of the people? Yes, I do.
9690. Would you not go further; if the majority of the people in any ward wished to close the houses in it would you not allow them to do so? If they could show sufficient evidence that they were improperly conducted I would be in favour of that.
9691. Do you not think that in these matters, as in others, everything should bow to the people, that is, if a ward or district wanted to close a house that they should have the privilege of doing it? Not unless they could bring some charge against the places of not being properly conducted.
9692. I understand you that with reference to Sunday closing you do not know the opinions of your fellow workmen; and what you have said are only your own views? Only my own views; it is only a matter of my own opinion.

FRIDAY, 15 OCTOBER, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,	A. HUTCHISON, Esq.,
J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.,	T. COLLS., Esq., J.P.
G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. John Long called in, sworn, and examined:—

- Mr. J. Long. 9693. President.] You are a storeman, I understand, at Lassetter & Co's? Yes; foreman of the bulk store.
- 15 Oct., 1886. 9694. Have you been long in that capacity? Not very long in that capacity.
9695. But in Lassetter & Co.'s employment you have been some time? For fifteen years, or about fifteen years.
9696. Are you intimately acquainted with the workmen there? Yes, with the whole of them in that department.
9697. You mean in the store department? Yes.
9698. But not acquainted, then, with the others? Well I know everybody there; but I know the men employed about where I am personally, and, in fact, I know most of their habits. Most of them have been there a long time.
9699. Is the list of employees very large;—how many men do the firm employ? About 200 men and boys.
9700. Are any women employed? No women.
9701. They have one or two places of business, have they not? Well, they are all connected. They are pretty near—there is just the crossing of a street between them.
9702. When you say about 200 you mean all their establishments? Yes, including Riley-street, where they have part of an establishment.
9703. Are you a total abstainer? A total abstainer.
9704. Do you belong to any temperance or abstinence organization? None whatever.
9705. Have you been a total abstainer continuously? Continuously for eighteen years.
9706. Now, you are well acquainted, you think, with the opinions of your fellow-workmen, and those with whom you come into contact in your employment at Lassetter's? Yes.
9707. With the men with whom you associate you are, of course, constantly in the habit of conversing? Yes.
9708. And on subjects like the liquor traffic? Yes; it very often comes up in conversation during the dinner-hour, and when we have time to spare.
- 9709.

9709. Well, this Commission is endeavouring to ascertain the views on the liquor traffic and the licensing laws of the artizan classes, and the persons employed in the large establishments in the city? Yes, I understand. Mr. J. Long.
15 Oct., 1886.

9710. That is why you are here? Yes.

9711. Now, the first question I shall ask you is, whether, in your opinion, there is any reasonable demand made amongst the employees with whom you are acquainted in Lassetter's employment, for opening the public-houses on Sunday? I do not think so.

9712. Have you heard that subject broached? I have.

9713. Of course you are aware that the public-houses have been closed during Sundays for some years, or supposed to have been closed? Yes.

9714. Are you also aware that the prohibition has not been effective—that is to say, that a great number of the houses remain open? Yes.

9715. Or, at all events, if they do not have their doors wide open, they admit people and supply them with drink on a Sunday? Yes.

9716. That you know? Yes.

9717. From your own knowledge? I know it from my own knowledge.

9718. Many people think that a despotic Act of Parliament compels them to break the law? Yes; I understand.

9719. A section of the community says, "We are compelled to be breakers of the law by reason of this prohibition;" however, among your employees, what view is taken of that question? Well, the majority of them are for closing all day on Sunday; but there are a number of them, I believe, who would like to see the houses open for an hour or two during the day.

9720. Now, you have told us you are a total abstainer. We are not therefore going to discount your opinion; but we are going to ask you whether the majority of the intelligent employees in Lassetter and Co.'s are inclined to ask for a relaxation of Sunday prohibition or not—is the majority in favour of a limited opening of public-houses, or does the majority approve of the existing law? I think they approve of the existing law.

9721. You think so? Yes; the majority of them—that is, of the men I am acquainted with. I do not know the views of all; but I am more intimately acquainted with the working men.

9722. It is the opinion of the intelligent, temperate drinker we should like to have. It is not the opinion of the few sots, nor is it the opinion of the systematic total abstainer, because we know very well what that opinion would be; but it is the opinion of the average temperate man in your employment that we want to get at? Yes; I should not allow my opinion to be narrow-minded in any way. I offer it in a broad way.

9723. Your people are never employed on a Sunday? Oh, no.

9724. It seems reasonable enough when it is so stated—that is, that men ought to have the means of getting their Sunday beer on Sunday. When so stated it seems difficult to contend against that with a temperate man; but you know the Legislature has thought otherwise, and closed the houses on a Sunday. The question is, is the intelligent majority content to abide by that closing or not? They are, for this reason, so far as I am concerned. There are fourteen men in the department who get their living by manual labour; six are total abstainers, two are moderate drinkers, and two others, who would make ten, are for closing on a Sunday. The other four I am in doubt about their opinion, for I never asked them.

9725. You are speaking in reference to the store department? Yes.

9726. Do you happen to know the opinion of any other people besides the men in the store department? Well, I have the opinion of my neighbours where I live at Waverley.

9727. But with reference to the employees in the department? Well, no further than a little chat together, but not much on that subject.

9728. When this law was passed, was it received with general acquiescence? Oh yes, it was generally.

9729. Then you think that Lassetter & Co.'s employees, as a whole, are not against the Sunday prohibition? I think, as a rule, they are not.

9730. They are in favour of it? The majority of them are.

9731. Now, with regard to anything you know outside your employment, what is your opinion—(you say you reside in Waverley)—what is the opinion you have gathered as a resident? As a resident, I believe the people are in favour of keeping the houses closed on a Sunday—that is, in the locality I live in.

9732. Amongst your friends and fellow-workmen are you cognisant of any movement to open the public-houses during any time on a Sunday? No.

9733. Is there any agitation or expressed desire to obtain an amendment of the law in that respect? I never heard of any.

9734. Then you think there is an acquiescence in the law as it stands? I do.

9735. Then you think it would be a backward step to open the public-houses now;—would it do any good? I do not think it would—not a bit.

9736. One reason is, that men ought to have by law what practically they get against the law. The law is ineffective now. The publican supplies the drink. A man, if he likes, and knows how to go about it, can get his drink on a Sunday? Yes, I know that.

9737. Well, how does the matter present itself to you, when I put it in that way. If, practically, they can get their drinks—that is to say, hold the law in derision—would it not be better to make that legal which practically they carry out now? Well, you would have to make it legal for them to open all day; for, if you stated any hours for them to be open, you would find the law broken during other hours.

9738. That is to say, if you give them two or three intervals of an hour each, they would violate the law, you think, and keep open for certain persons who might have a certain watchword—that they would practically keep open all day? I know it for a fact.

9739. That they break the law? I know it. I knew it when the old law was in operation, from my own experience.

9740. Tell us what your experience has been? Well, before I went to Lassetter's, I was employed at Mr. Cunningham's printing office, in Pitt-street, to assist in putting up a lot of machinery. I was assisting to put it up, and they wanted it put up on a Sunday; and, though I do not like working on a Sunday, I had to do it. About 11 o'clock on that day we adjourned to a public-house across the road. We had no difficulty in getting in, and we all had drinks there.

9741. What time was that? 11 o'clock.

- Mr. J. Long. 9742. Before it was open? Yes. They drew the beer as we wanted it, and I think other people were inside in another room.
- 15 Oct., 1886. 9743. Did you have any other experience? Well, I do not know; I have not a very good memory.
9744. Then you infer that what they did then they would do now? Yes, I think they would. I had a good experience of public-houses before, when I was in a situation as night-watchman at Lassetter's, and before this Act came into operation. I then saw the effects of public-houses, and the effects of early closing.
9745. And how did they strike you? That it was a great boon to the public by closing the public-houses at the time they did. When the public-houses were open, the streets were never clear up to 8 o'clock in the morning—in fact they were never so. The houses in the streets in my round would relieve one another all night long.
9746. Suppose you heard a witness say there was more drunkenness since the passing of the new law than there was before? I could hardly credit it. There may be more drunkenness, but not in public. My experience has been, that there was a wonderful change when the new law came into operation.
9747. Suppose you were told that the working classes will drink; that, though they are prohibited from drinking on Sunday, they nevertheless get admission to public-houses on that day; and, when there, that they drink twice as much as when the houses were open? I believe there is some truth in that. I think there is a possibility of that, because they hurry up and take as much as they can in a very short time.
9748. That is exactly what we are told? Oh, yes; I think there is something in that.
9749. Would not that class belong either to the habitual drunkard, or to the sot or soaking class? I think it would.
9750. Would not that class be always the class that would violate the law? Always.
9751. Or be accessories to the violation of the law? Yes, night or day—while the houses were open, or while they could get it.
9752. Do you think the fact of public-houses being open on a Sunday, besides supplying the wants of the intemperate classes, would act as an incentive to drinking on the part of the temperate classes? No, I do not. I think if a man is temperate he can pass by the public-houses, or he can keep a bottle in the house; and, if he is a temperate man, he will not take more than he wants.
9753. And you see no harm to the temperate classes by the public-houses being open during a portion of the Sunday? Oh, yes I do. Well, if you could confine it to the temperate classes alone, but it is the surroundings which I look at. You cannot open the public-houses without admitting everybody. You cannot open the public-houses for the temperate classes only; and the consequences would be that you would find men rolling out of the public-houses and knocking up against other persons, and against children going to Sunday-school, or against old ladies, as I have often seen.
9754. You think then, that the large balance of opinion, as far as you know, is against the opening of the public-houses on Sunday? I do.
9755. Do you think the balance of opinion is also against a return to the old hour of 12 o'clock on the week days? Very nearly everybody, I think is against that.
9756. Do your people go very early to the establishment, or go away late? They do not go very early. They have gone away late lately, but they do not generally.
9757. As late as 11 o'clock? Very seldom.
9758. Then the public-houses are open long enough for their purposes? Oh, yes.
9759. They do not go to work before daylight? Not before 8 o'clock.
9760. Now, what do you think about the number of public-houses in your own suburb, Waverley; do you think there are too many, too few, or enough? Well, there are two going up now, and one was opened the other day. There are quite sufficient.
9761. That is where you reside? Yes, quite enough.
9762. Now, going to and fro between your place of employment and your residence, I suppose you have noticed that there is a large number of public-houses? Yes.
9763. Do you think they are in excess of the reasonable demands of the people? I do.
9764. And ought to be reduced? I think they ought to be reduced.
9765. Would you allow any public-houses at all;—do you think they are a necessity? They are, to some extent.
9766. Taking the community generally, do you think the public-houses are a necessity? Yes; a few, under certain restrictions.
9767. You think they ought to be reduced in number? I do.
9768. Do you think they ought to be reduced by the direct vote of the people, or by fixing a statutory number, or how? By a fixed vote of the people.
9769. That is what we call local option—you agree with that? I do.
9770. You would then let the local option vote diminish this number;—by what process, by stating how many there ought to be for each thousand of the population, or by voting directly against those that ask for public-houses, or how? I think there ought to be some limit. There ought to be a certain number of public-houses, according to the population.
9771. Do you mean the resident population? The resident population in any locality.
9772. And do you think more than the ratepayers ought to vote;—would you give a vote to more than the ratepayers? I think the residents and the ratepayers.
9773. The Parliamentary voters? Yes.
9774. That is to say, the residents, apart from the owners of property? Yes; I think they ought to have a voice in the matter.
9775. Have you seen much destitution, dismissal from employment, and similar trouble caused by intemperance amongst the classes that you have been mostly acquainted with? Yes; I can say this, that all the men in our department who have had to leave, or have been dismissed, the cause has been traceable to the drink, and nothing else. There are not many that have been discharged. As a rule, they are very temperate men, though they are not total abstainers; but, in the cases of those that have been discharged, the cause has been traceable to drink, and nothing else. And as to destitution and misery, I have seen that in my own family—through it and nothing else.
9776. In your own family? Well, I do not mean my own wife and children; but amongst my relatives—distant relations, though closely related on my wife's side.

9777. Do you hear many complaints of the retail of bad liquor amongst your friends? Yes, I do.
9778. It is a subject then of complaint, that inferior liquor is supplied to them? Yes; in fact, when I was watchman I used to hear of it as I passed the public-houses at the corners. I used to hear there of the bad liquor that was retailed out, and how quick it took effect on men.
9779. Now as to those men who were discharged, do they swell the ranks of the habitual drunkard—I mean do they come before the police courts, get convicted of drunkenness in public places, and sent to gaol? No; I do not think they come under that.
9780. Do you think, then, that after losing their places, they get employment again, and turn over a new leaf? No; it seems to have that hold of them that they cannot shake it off. I was speaking to a man who was in our employ, only the other day, and he said, "Long, only for lifting my right hand so much, I would have been with you to-day." That man was given many chances, but he would not alter.
9781. The craving for drink was too much? Yes.
9782. Mr. Rosoby.] From your extensive knowledge of working men you do not think drink is at all necessary for a man to do his work satisfactorily, and, in fact, he is better without it? Oh, I am positive he is better without it, as a rule.
9783. Apart from those actually in the employment of your firm, you have known, as an old citizen, numbers of people go to ruin through drink? Oh, yes; a great many.
9784. If these public-houses are to be open in the community, you believe they ought to be under very stringent regulations, do you not? Yes, I think they ought to be.
9785. You say the present early closing in the week is a boon to the community? It is.
9786. Would you close them still earlier—do you think 10 o'clock better than 11? No; I think that would make men more liable to break the law. People going to concerts and other such places would be bound to go to the public-houses before going home.
9787. Would you be in favour of closing them earlier on Saturday, as in Canada, where they close them at 7 o'clock, so as to give the men a chance of spending the night with their families? Well, I think it would be a benefit to the working classes to close them at that time.
9788. Do you think it would be a wise thing if they were closed entirely on election days? Yes, I do; because many men are influenced by them on those days.
9789. I think I understood you to say that you are thoroughly in favour of local option? Yes.
9790. Full local option? Yes.
9791. Have you noticed whether there has been an increase of drinking among our young people in Sydney—it has been so stated;—have you noticed it amongst young men of late years? No; I have not noticed it myself.
9792. Do you think publicans ought to be permitted to give children drink for their parents, or to supply children under any circumstances? Certainly not.
9793. Do you think they should be permitted to employ young women or girls on the premises? I think not. Barmaids are a great inducement to lead young fellows away.
9794. Then, I gather that you think the greatest trouble we have in the community is the drink? Is the drink.
9795. Mr. Hutchison.] With reference to your very pronounced views, are you quite sure that your own adhesion to the temperance cause does not induce you to come to these opinions? No; I have studied the thing.
9796. Then you are quite sure you are correct when you say that, so far as you know, the entire community, both the working men at Lassetter's and where you live, are in favour of strict Sunday-closing? I believe so.
9797. You stated to the President that public-houses are necessary;—did you mean drinking shops are necessary? Not the low public-houses; but I believe an hotel ought to be in a suburb, or something like that, in case of sickness in which stimulants are required, but in very rare cases.
9798. But you are in favour of giving people the right to vote in regard to the public-houses? I am.
9799. President.] Have you ever exercised your right in the case of the local option vote? I have.
9800. I suppose you have noticed that there has been a singular apathy among the people at these times? Yes, I have.
9801. To what do you attribute that? I really cannot tell. I cannot explain myself exactly; but I think people come to the conclusion that those in favour of it are bound to carry the day without going to the trouble of voting for it; because, if it was the other side, there would be some pressure brought on the people to get the local option vote reversed, as in East Sydney.
9802. Do I understand you rightly, that the people abstain from voting because they think they are bound to win? I think so.
9803. Would not that be a very curious reason; they have a franchise given them, and they do not exercise it;—is not that a very curious reason? Well, I think if there was a chance of losing, there would be more energy put in it, and more persons would vote; but they seem to take it for granted that they are bound to win. That is my opinion.
9804. Does not that leave the poll entirely to the drinkers, and to those interested in public-houses? Of course it does; but I think if there was a movement made in that way it would wake them up.
9805. Do you not think the publicans would vote local option;—you know that the publicans now when they vote vote local option as it secures them a monopoly? Yes; I know that.
9806. The publican hardly votes conscientiously? I understand.
9807. Is the local optionist therefore content with the publicans vote? I think they are.
9808. Do you see what I mean: At present, as the law now stands, the publican is interested in voting against the multiplication of competing houses? Ah, I understand.
9809. The present local option is against new houses and removals. It does not touch renewals, only the opening of new houses, and the removal of licenses from one place to another. Do you not see that the publican is interested in voting "No," that there shall be no new houses and no removals. Is it your opinion that the local optionist is content with the publicans' vote, knowing how that vote will be used;—you know I ask you this question, because you stated that you vote, but you saw that there had been a great apathy in the voting; you explained that apathy by stating that your party knew they were going to win the day;—did they know they were going to win the day in consequence of the adhesion of the publicans? Well, I do not think many of them would understand that. I did not understand it until you explained it.

Mr. J. Long.
15 Oct, 1886.

- Mr. J. Long. 9810. But you do see it now? I do see it now.
 9811. No publican would vote for more public-houses in his district? No.
 15 Oct., 1886. 9812. Do you think a system of local option of that kind is reasonable;—you are a total abstainer, and you and the publican in your ward are found voting the same way? Yes.
 9813. Does not that seem strange? It does.

Mr. James Gordon called in, sworn, and examined:—

- Mr. J. Gordon. 9814. President.] What is your name? James Gordon.
 9815. And you are employed in Lassetter & Co.'s? Yes.
 15 Oct., 1886. 9816. As a blacksmith? Yes.
 9817. How long have you been employed there? About fifteen years.
 9818. You remember then the old Licensing laws in this Colony? Yes.
 9819. When there were certain hours on Sunday during which the public-houses were open, and when, on business days, they were open until 12 o'clock at night? Yes.
 9820. Do you think the prohibition against Sunday trading has been beneficial, or do you think it has not? I think there is more drinking now than when the houses were open for a certain time in the day.
 9821. Will you say why you think so? There is a house close by where I am, and we were never annoyed by anybody coming there when the houses were open on Sunday, and now we are annoyed every Sunday.
 9822. Where is this? Forest Lodge. There are two or three places there, and they are all the same.
 9823. Suppose that house were open during certain hours on Sunday, do you not think there would be the same annoyance? No, because they are perfect strangers who go there; and I believe, if the public-houses were open all over the city, these people would stay nearer home.
 9824. Then you think it is only here and there where publicans disobey the law, and it is where they do so that people crowd to the place? I do not know that.
 9825. How many public-houses are there in your neighbourhood? There are three or four.
 9826. Do they all open on Sunday? I believe they do.
 9827. And yet there appears to be a kind of rush to the one near your place? I say that because it is at my own door.
 9828. Do you see many people go there on Sunday? Yes.
 9829. Have you seen fifty? I believe there would be that number sometimes, but not always.
 9830. Has this publican never been prosecuted? Not that I know of.
 9831. Are there any police in the neighbourhood watching the public-houses? Yes.
 9832. And how, then, has he managed to escape? I do not know; that is a mystery.
 9833. I suppose you have no doubt that the people who go there do so for drink? Not the slightest.
 9834. And yet the publican escapes punishment? Yes.
 9835. Are you a total abstainer? No.
 9836. You take an occasional glass when you wish? I take a glass when I think it does me good, and when I think it does not, I do not take it.
 9837. Do you think the public-houses ought to be open for some time on Sunday? Yes; a very short time. I do not think there would be as much drinking as there is now if they were. A man would not make a beast of himself as he does now.
 9838. You think that if the public-houses were open a certain time on Sunday a man would not make a beast of himself? I do.
 9839. Say, for instance, you know John Smith, who works next door to you, and that he is one of those unfortunate fellows who have a craving for liquor, who is always thirsty, and on Sunday he must go and get his liquor; he goes now, and, because the houses are shut, when he gets in, he drinks more than he would if they were open? I think he drinks more at one time.
 9840. Do you think the publican supplies worse liquor now on Sunday than if the houses were open on that day? I could not tell you.
 9841. Do you think it would be more likely to make a man drunk? I do not think so.
 9842. It is the same liquor? I should think so.
 9843. However, you think a man who goes to the public-house on Sunday drinks more than he would under other circumstances? Yes.
 9844. Do you know it of your own knowledge? No.
 9845. You suspect it? Yes.
 9846. You have seen men coming out with the appearance of having drunk heavily? I have seen them going in perfectly sober and come out about a quarter of an hour afterwards almost drunk.
 9847. Is it beer that they chiefly drink? I do not know.
 9848. You yourself do not patronise public-houses on Sunday? No; if I want anything I keep it in my own house.
 9849. How long do you think the public-houses should be open on Sunday? An hour in the middle of the day, and one hour at night.
 9850. Between 1 and 2 in the middle of the day? Yes.
 9851. And at night? Between 8 and 9.
 9852. Then your idea is to supply the temperate man with beer at dinner and supper? Well, both temperate and thirsty.
 9853. You would not open the public-houses in the interests of sots, would you? No; because they would get it whether the houses were open or not.
 9854. You would open the houses for the purpose of enabling a man to get beer, to be drunk off the premises or on them, as he likes? Yes.
 9855. You were acquainted, of course, with the old law, when the houses used to be open for so many hours on Sunday? Yes.
 9856. Do you not think the appearance of the streets is very much improved by the new law, particularly in regard to there not being so many men rolling about drunk, and so many men frequenting the public-house corners? Well, from what I see at home, I think there is a lot more; and many of them are strangers to the place altogether.
 9857. Do you notice that in the city or in the suburbs? Only at home. Sometimes, when I come down into the city, I notice it.

Mr. J. Gordon.

15 Oct., 1866.

9858. Is not the evasion of the law practised more in the suburbs? I do not think so.
9859. Are not some of the decent houses in the city open on Sunday? Yes; I have seen some of the best houses open on Sunday.
9860. During the operation of the new law? Yes.
9861. How long ago is it since you saw those houses open? Eighteen months or two years ago.
9862. Was that down at the Haymarket? No; in Oxford-street.
9863. Latterly you have not seen that? I have not been up there lately.
9864. Do you not think there are too many public-houses? Yes, of a class.
9865. Of a low class? Yes.
9866. Do you not think they ought to be reduced by some form of legislation? Yes.
9867. Would you let the people have a voice in reducing them, or would you let the Legislature do it? I would let the people have a voice.
9868. Would you let residents in a given locality have a voice in some such form as by local option? Yes; we have had that once tested at an election, and each time we have won it.
9869. Have you voted on those occasions? Yes.
9870. Then you take an interest in it? Yes.
9871. Do you think the vote ought to extend to the renewals of public-houses? If it was a worthy house.
9872. All you can say by your vote now is that there shall be no new public-houses and no removals. Would you like to answer a third question when voting, whether there shall be any renewals of existing licenses? If it was a respectable house I would renew it.
9873. You are not a prohibitionist? No.
9874. You think public-houses ought to exist? Yes.
9875. In a reasonable number and under stringent regulations if they are well-conducted? Yes.
9876. Do you think the trade of a publican is one that must necessarily be carried on? Yes, I do.
9877. Then your vote would be to reduce them to a certain number and getting rid if possible of the improperly conducted houses? Certainly.
9878. Do you think there is much adulterated and spurious liquor sold? I do; a lot of it.
9879. I suppose in your own person you occasionally suffer? I never drink it.
9880. But you have seen persons who have suffered? Yes.
9881. Do you think they suffer from bad liquor? Yes; in one case I was certain of it.
9882. Was it taken on Sunday? No; on a holiday. I was out shooting with a friend, and he went into a public-house and got some rum, and it nearly killed him.
9883. Was that all he had that day? Yes; he was never out of my company all day.
9884. Was that in the suburbs? Out in the country.
9885. Whereabout was it? It was up on the Illawarra line.
9886. Far from Sydney? Hurstville.
9887. Long ago? Last Queen's Birthday twelve months was the day we were out.
9888. And you think that that man was made suddenly drunk? Yes.
9889. By something impure or deleterious in the rum? Yes; something that ought not to have been there.
9890. But you would not suppose that the publican would put it in for the purpose of hocussing a man he never saw before? Well, I cannot tell you.
9891. You do not think a publican has any desire to poison his constituents? Well; some I think have,—not poisoning.
9892. But of supplying them with bad drink? Yes.
9893. Cheap, raw, new rum? Cheap; I do not know whether it is old or new rum, but I believe it is done.
9894. Simply to make money; the worse the spirit is the further it goes? Yes; and I believe houses of that kind ought to be put down, because I think it is in the inferior houses such a thing is done.
9895. You know a publican can supply liquor to people of 16 years of age. Do you think that is a fit age at which persons should be supplied with liquor? No, I do not; they ought not to be allowed to supply them at 16.
9896. Do you think a publican ought to be prevented from supplying anybody with spirits or liquors unless the person supplied is an adult? I think they ought not to be allowed to do it. I think there is a great mistake in supplying youngsters in Sydney as now.
9897. You would fix the age higher? Yes.
9898. At what age? I think a young man ought not to be supplied with spirits, unless he is 18 or 20 years of age.
9899. I suppose you have seen a good many of your fellow workmen reduced to destitution by intemperance? Well, in my present employment, I have not.
9900. But you have known many men who have drunk themselves into ruin? Yes, plenty of them.
9901. I suppose you have known men who have been so addicted to drink that they could not pass a public-house; do you think that when a man has arrived at a stage like that, he ought to be taken care of in some way? I think he ought to be taken care of in some way—put into some sort of reformatory, for he is a nuisance to himself and to everybody else.
9902. First of all, in his own interest, would it not be a merciful thing to take him away from temptation? Yes.
9903. And treat him while away so that he should be returned to society as much as possible a reformed man? Yes.
9904. And secondly, in the interest of society itself, would it not be a merciful thing to take him away and return him to society a respectable member of it? Certainly. I think a man ought to be taken away from temptation if it is possible to do so. The worst of it is that no one takes any notice of it.
9905. Would you think it a very dreadful thing to put such a man into an inebriate retreat or institution for six or nine months? No. I think it would be a charity. There are plenty of men who, when they get a taste of drink, cannot keep away from it.
9906. Do you not think the working classes as a whole would revolt against the proposal of such a law as that? I do not think the sensible part of them would.
9907. The question is this: when you have got an habitual drunkard, he either drinks himself to death or

- Mr. J. Gordon. or his family into ruin and destitution, or else, if he is found drunk under certain circumstances, or aggravates his vice by committing certain other offences, he is taken to gaol, in which case he is punished by imprisonment if he cannot pay his fine. I ask you whether you think a system of treating the drunkard as an irresponsible agent would not be better, and perhaps even more economical than the present system of treating him as a criminal? I certainly believe it would be better. I know of an instance now of a young man, a friend of mine, who about four years ago was a sober steady man. He took to drink, and I believe if there had been a reformatory to put that man in he would not have come to the end he did. He ruined his family, and at last drowned himself. He was found in a waterhole in the George's River, and I believe he went there to drown himself. He was in a good business, and he drank himself almost to a pauper, and then drowned himself.
9908. Do you think a man of that kind could be rescued by curative treatment? I think he could. I believe he was a man who could have been saved if there had been a place to which he could have been put. He was never locked up in his life, and yet he drank till it killed him.
9909. Then you think the artisan class would consent to be deprived of their personal liberty for the end in view I have mentioned;—that is, their reclamation? Yes. In the case I referred to, if I had been asked to put this man into a place of that kind I am sure it would have been for his benefit.
9910. Mr. Colls.] You mentioned that a friend of yours took some rum and became suddenly ill; what quantity did he take? I do not believe he took a glass of it.
9911. What effect did it have on him; was he paralysed, or did he vomit? It seemed to knock him off his legs, and make him stupid about an hour and a half after he took it.
9912. President.] Did he take it pure? No, with water.
9913. Mr. Colls.] With regard to the house near your place that you have alluded to, has the publican ever been convicted? No.
9914. Has any notice been taken of it? Notice has been taken of it, but there have been no convictions.
9915. President.] Has he been prosecuted? No.
9916. Mr. Withers.] On that question about the rum, I don't think it was made clear whether the man was simply drunk or purged? He was made drunk.
9917. Were there any ill effects afterwards? Well, he went to sleep, and you could hardly wake him up.
9918. Did he complain of the effects next day? No.
9919. Do you think the rum was overproof? I do not know about that.
9920. It might not have been adulterated? Well, whatever it was, it knocked him off his legs, and unless it was adulterated it ought not to have had a result like that.
9921. With regard to apprentices. When I was an apprentice there was a very great restriction in the indentures that boys were not to visit tap-rooms under any circumstances. Do you think that is in indentures now? No; I think indentures are greatly altered from what they were in my time.
9922. You think that is ignored now when boys are bound to masters? Yes.
9923. But you think that is a very important clause? I do. Apprentices ought not to be allowed to visit tap-rooms on any pretence whatever.
9924. They should not be sent for men's beer or anything of that kind? No.
9925. And you think that should be embodied in the indentures now? Yes.
9926. You served a long time, did you not, in the Volunteers in No. 2 Battery? Yes; about sixteen years.
9927. Are you in the Volunteers now? No.
9928. Did you ever notice any ill-effects at that time on members of the force through drink? Yes, I have.
9929. Persons coming on drill the worse for liquor? Yes.
9930. Do you think it is safe to the other part of the detachment in artillery practice for any person to be under the influence of drink? If I belonged to a gun, and saw a man under the influence of drink, I should place him under arrest for safety.
9931. And that has been done? I have done it myself.
9932. Have you heard any instance of working men's wives getting beer from the grocer's? I do not know an instance, but I have heard of it.
9933. And drink introduced into the family in that way? Yes.
9934. Do you think the system of "shouting" is as prevalent with the mechanics now as it used to be? I do not think it is as much now, for the times are not so good, but that is the only thing that keeps it back.
9935. Do you think men have become more economical, and take more interest in their homes during the last five or six years, and before the present depression? No, I do not.
9936. Have they been more extravagant? Yes.
9937. In the way of drink? Yes, on Sunday. I think they drink more on Sunday than they did when the houses were open.
9938. Do you think the agency of the building societies has been of good effect in keeping men from excessive drinking? I do not know. I have not had a chance of having anything to do with them.
9939. Do you not think that provision being made for these men by the societies in the way of homes has made men to some extent temperate? Well, it has a certain amount of check on a man to keep him from spending the money that he has to pay into the society.
9940. On a limited wage he could not provide money for both, and you think the balance after paying the society would go to the man's house and his home? Yes, it ought to do so.
9941. Mr. Hutchison.] Suppose Sunday closing could be made by law absolutely successful, would you be in favour of it? Yes.
9942. You would be in favour of it if the law could be maintained? Yes, but I don't think it could be.
9943. Do you think it is the bonâ fide working man who wants the public-houses open? Well, I think the working man does want it.
9944. You have told us it is strangers you have seen go into the public-houses? Yes.
9945. And that a quarter of an hour after going in they have come out drunk? Yes; not drunk, but nearly drunk.
9946. Do you think these persons are respectable working men or persons belonging to the class of the loafing drunkard? I think some are the loafing drunkard.
9947. Then do you say that all the houses should be open for the loafing drunkard? No, I do not say that; there are others also to be considered.

9949. If the law could be maintained for all Sunday as strictly as on the other days, would you not prefer Sunday closing? Certainly. But I would prefer the houses to be opened two hours in the day now, sooner than see the people gather about the houses as they do. Mr. J. Gordon.
15 Oct., 1886.
9950. That is a compromise. But you would rather see the Sunday closing if it could be made effectual? Yes.
9951. Do you think the bonâ fide working men are with you on that point? Yes.
9952. Did you say you would be in favour of allowing the people in a locality to vote as to whether there should be any, or how many, public-houses in a given locality? Certainly.
9953. You are prepared to allow the people that vote? Yes.
9954. President.] As to whether there should be any at all? No; not any at all; but I mean the same as I voted last time—whether there should be any more houses.
9955. Mr. Hutchison.] Suppose you lived in a locality, and there were twenty applicants for public-houses, would you allow the people to vote on those twenty applications, and no one to be licensed who had not a majority of votes cast in his favour? Yes.
9956. You would be in favour of that local option? Yes.

Mr. Richard Snell sworn and examined:—

9957. President.] Are you in the Tramway Department? Yes. Mr. R. Snell.
15 Oct., 1886.
9958. What is your occupation? Car-cleaner.
9959. Have you been there some time? Between four and five years.
9960. Do you associate much with employees of a similar character to yourself? Nothing more than just working together.
9961. One reason why we want you here is to get you to speak, if you can, on behalf of the tramway employees, not the guards or the engine-drivers, but those who have to do with the cars afterwards—the car-cleaners. There must, I suppose, be a great number of them—how many? About twelve or fourteen.
9962. Is that all? I think that is all.
9963. Where is your work? In the Bridge-street yard.
9964. Do you work very late at night? Till half-past 10.
9965. What I wanted you to give us, if you can, is the opinion of that class of employees, the car cleaners, in reference to the opening of public-houses on the Sunday. You know they are closed now? Yes.
9966. Do you think that it is a hardship, and do they think it is a hardship? Well, I have heard a few of them say if the houses were open a couple of hours on the Sunday it would be a deal better, and I have heard others say if they were open a couple of hours it would be worse than now—that there would be more sneaking-in during those couple of hours than there is at present.
9967. Were you acquainted with the state of things when the houses were open five years ago? I remember them being open.
9968. Then you think your fellow workmen, or some of them, are of opinion that if the houses were opened it would be only the old state of things again—that people would be sneaking in, as you say, during the prohibited hours? Just so, as they say they are at present. I have heard people say that you can get into almost two out of every three public-houses in Sydney.
9969. Do you think people take more drink when they go to a public-house illegally than they would otherwise? I think they take it quicker. Perhaps half-a-dozen chaps go into a public-house; one treats the lot, and another does the same, and so it goes round.
9970. Then you think there is a great deal of "shouting"? Yes. One will say, "Fill them up again," and another says the same, and they drink it off so quickly that they are almost tipsy before they come out of the place.
9971. That is beer generally, I suppose? Generally beer.
9972. Do you think it would be beneficial to revert to the old state of things, or to open the public-houses for an hour or two, or to retain the law as we have it? Well, I am blest if I know. If they were open for a couple of hours people would be sneaking in just the same; they would want more just the same.
9973. And you are puzzled? I am puzzled.
9974. Or which would be the best? Or which would be the best.
9975. Of course you know that quite two out of every three public-houses supply drink on the Sunday? Almost.
9976. Do you not think there are too many public-houses in Sydney? Yes; by a third. It would be a deal better if there were a third less.
9977. Have you heard that in many low public-houses very inferior liquor is supplied? I have heard people say that in some houses they go into they would not know what they were drinking compared with what they get in other places.
9978. Do you mean that the whisky and the brandy are the same or not? One would be so much better than the other—so much nicer.
9979. In some places the drink was inferior? Yes; in some places you ask for a drink, and get it, and you go to another place and call for a drink, and you would not know what they were giving you.
9980. So different? So different, one from the other.
9981. Do you mean that you would drink different brands of good liquor, or that one liquor was inferior to the other? That they would drink in one place more than the liquor, or something like that.
9982. Seeing that you think there are too many public-houses by one-third, how would you propose to reduce the number; what do you think your fellow-workmen accept as a way of reducing the number of public-houses; what plan would they adopt—do you think the people themselves ought to have a vote in it—would you let them vote? I am blest if I know how to think about it.
9983. You agree that there are too many, and you think they ought to be reduced; well, now, how would you reduce them? Well, I would reduce them if I had my will, and improve a great many of those low, filthy places about town.
9984. Do you mean that the magistrates should refuse the renewals of their licenses—is that the way you would do it? Well, yes, I think that would be as good a way as any, to have them kept by more respectable men.
9985. Have you ever voted in the local option vote, when the local option vote has been taken; where do you live? I live out in Surry Hills.
9986. Very well; there has been a local option vote? I never voted in it. 9987.

- Mr. R. Snell. 9987. Are you a ratepayer—do you pay rates for your house? No; I think the landlord does.
- 15 Oct., 1886. 9988. Do you consider that you ought to have a vote by reason of your being a resident and a householder, and if you had such a vote would you exercise it with regard to this matter of reducing the number of public-houses? Yes.
9989. Would you have sufficient interest in the question to go to the poll and record your vote? Yes, I would.
9990. Do you think the people, the residents in any given area, in any given ward or district, ought or ought not to have the right of saying how many public-houses there ought to be in their district? Well, yes; I should think if they thought there were too many they should have the right to say so.
9991. To reduce them? Yes.
9992. I suppose you have seen some men made destitute by drink, have you not? Yes; go into a public-house after they get their wages, and then go home without a penny; drink every penny they have in their pocket, and would not go home then if they could get more.
9993. These are not men in your department? No.
9994. But others you have known? Others I have seen and known.
9995. When a man becomes an habitual drunkard, do you not think it would be a good thing to put him away somewhere and treat him as we treat lunatics—I mean by careful, watchful treatment—rather than punish him by putting him in gaol. Suppose you were given to drink, do you not think it would be a good thing to be put in an asylum for six months and by that time be restored so that you could get your living, rather than you should be put in gaol or fined? Well with some it would and others not. They say, "Oh, what is it—locked up for six months—it is nothing", and they go on again.
9996. Do you think some people think very lightly of six months in gaol? Oh, yes, I think so; some people think nothing of it.
9997. I suppose you have heard of people who have been fined and sent to gaol dozens of times through drink? Oh, yes.
9998. And who have been no better for it, but rather worse? Oh, yes; as soon as they taste the drink again they want more.
10000. Are you at work very late in the cleaning department? Half past 10 o'clock on the evening shift.
10001. You think the public-houses are open sufficiently late at night? Yes, plenty.
10002. I suppose the regulations of the department are very stringent with regard to men giving way to intemperance? They do not have any drink on the premises.
10003. They do not allow any drink on the premises? No.
10004. Mr. Colls.] How long have you been in the Colony? Before I can remember.
10005. Have you always been an abstainer? No; I take a nobbler or two sometimes during the day. Perhaps I go eight or ten or twelve months and never have a drink, and perhaps I may take two or three some days.
10006. Mr. Withers.] I suppose you have been upwards of forty years in the Colony? Yes.
10007. Are you of any trade? Well, I am blest if I know whether it could be called a trade or not. I was apprenticed to horsemanship and veterinary and to do with horses.
10008. President.] Do you mean a farrier? No; a jockey. I was bound at one time to Mr. Henry Reeves in Maitland.
10009. I understand you have never been apprenticed to any trade. Were you long connected with the jockeys and the racing fraternity? Yes.
10010. From what time—from 15 years up to 30 perhaps? From 10 to about 20.
10011. Are the jockeys as a rule a temperate body of young men? No.
10012. They are not all abstainers? Very few.
10013. What do you think it is that tends to lead them into excessive drinking; are they led into it in any way by their duties in connection with horses; can you give us from your own knowledge any cause for their being an intemperate body? Leading such a sporting life, and meeting so many different people, they say "Come in and let's have a drink."
10014. Their employers would rather that they were temperate men? Oh yes.
10015. If they give way to drink they become incapacitated from riding? Yes.
10016. Do you think that many of the accidents with racehorses are attributable to drunkenness? No; the jockeys are quite sober when they ride, but after the race is over and they make a win they drink greatly.
10017. What have you been engaged in as a working man since you left horse-racing? I was a drover, and then I was a long while at Mr. O'Brien's, at Tattersall's, where I used to rent the billiard-table, and then I was coach-driving.
10018. Mr. Colls.] I suppose you have not ridden many winning horses? Yes, a great many.
10019. Mr. Roseby.] Then, in the variety of occupation you have had and your long experience in the colony, you have known a great number of persons go to destruction through drink? Oh, yes.
10020. You think the public-house business a very dangerous business? Very.
10021. And do you think the public-houses ought to be kept under very stringent regulations—that they should be very strictly kept? Yes, very.
10022. You are in favour of closing the houses altogether on Sunday? Yes.
10223. And you believe that is the opinion of the majority of your fellow-workmen? No, I think the majority would sooner have them open for a couple of hours.
10024. You have talked to a number of them about this matter? I have heard them talk about it; I have not spoken to them.
10025. You do not think drink is necessary, do you? No.
10026. Have you noticed whether of late years a number of young people are giving way to drink more than in former years? They mostly all do, generally.
10027. Young people? Yes.
10028. More so than formerly? Yes, I think so.
10029. Do you think young women or girls ought to be allowed to serve drink behind public-house bars? No.
10030. I think you stated to the President that you believe the people ought to have a voice in saying whether they should have the public-houses or not? Yes.

MONDAY, 18 OCTOBER, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,
J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.,

A. HUTCHISON, Esq.,
G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. William Liston called in, sworn, and examined:—

10031. President.] You are employed in Dixson's Tobacco Factory, are you not? Yes.
10032. And have been for some time? Well, I have been there for years.
10033. How long? Since Mr. Dixson, the old gentleman, commenced business in Scotland; and I have been with him since he commenced employment here in 1862. But I was in the country before that.
10034. However, you have been in Mr. Dixson's employment, in connection with the tobacco factory, ever since he began business? Yes.
10035. You came with Mr. Dixson? No, I did not come with him; he came before me. I followed him out here.
10036. Are you connected with any temperance organization here? No, I never belonged to any of those; but I do not drink.
10037. You are an abstinent? I do not take anything at all, unless I am ordered it by the doctor.
10038. What is your position in Mr. Dixson's factory? Well, I prepare the work for the men, and serve it out to them. My part of the occupation is what you call caseman. I case the leaf down, and prepare the leaf so that the men can work it.
10039. How many employees has Mr. Dixson? Well, I daresay about 160—boys and all.
10040. Are there any females in the factory? No females.
10041. Boys and men? Boys and men.
10042. Now, our object in calling you to give evidence is principally to be informed what the views of the operatives engaged in such industries as that of Dixson & Co. are, on subjects connected with the drink traffic. Can you tell us, first of all, whether Mr. Dixson's employees have more incentives towards intemperance than any other class of people;—is the business of a tobacco factory likely to encourage or to induce habits of intemperance—are the employees a temperate class? Well, the greater portion of them are. We won't have any drunkards in our place. We won't encourage it at all. If any of our men are given to drink we do not keep them.
10043. It is said that some tobacco factory operatives are much given to intemperance;—do you believe it? I do not.
10044. Not in other factories? Well, there may be in the other factories, such as Cameron's. They may have men who are given a little to drink, but I believe there are plenty of men in Cameron's who are steady, sober men. I cannot answer for all, but I can answer for a great many of them I know.
10045. You do not think, then, that they make up a bad average;—you do not think the majority of them are given to intemperance? Oh, no. I do not think you will find three men in our factory who are. I do not say they are teetotallers, but they will not take more than one glass perhaps in a week, perhaps not in a month—not in the whole establishment. A great many belong to the Sons of Temperance, and a great many to the Blue Ribbon Army. I can vouch for Mr. Dixson being very greatly against drunkenness.
10046. Have you very stringent regulations against bringing any drink to the establishment? No, there is nothing of the kind. It is left to themselves. There are no regulations or anything of that kind.
10047. But they understand? Yes; they understand that they will not be kept there if they drink.
10048. Having told us of the general feeling that obtains amongst the operatives in Dixson's factory, can you tell us whether they demand any alteration of the liquor laws? No.
10049. Do you think they are in favour of the prohibition of the drink traffic on the Sunday? Well, I do not think there is one in our establishment who upholds the Sunday drinking at all. I have heard those from this part of Sydney, I have heard those from the country, those who live at Burwood, and I have heard those who live at Newtown, and the whole of them are against the Sunday opening of public-houses.
10050. So, whether they are abstinents or moderate drinkers, they are all in favour of the existing law? Yes.
10051. They do not want, in the neighbourhood of their residences, the public-houses to be opened? No, they do not. They do not hold with drinking on the Sunday at all. A great proportion of our men say, that if they want a glass for their Sunday dinner they should provide themselves with it on the Saturday night.
10052. You know something of their habits, and I suppose some of the men you know intimately? Yes.
10053. Do you think the habit of providing for themselves on the Saturday night induces them to make rather too ample a provision for the Sunday? I do not think so. I can say for one man I have known for years, that he never takes anything all the week; but he provides himself with a bottle of ale on Saturday night. He likes a glass for his dinner on Sunday. If he does not provide himself with a bottle on the Saturday night he won't bother about it.
10054. That is to say, he does not want the public-houses open for his sake;—he gets his bottle of beer before hand? Yes; he takes it home on the Saturday night.
10055. Do you think that is the custom? That is the custom. It was his custom in England too.
10057. I am speaking of the majority? Yes, the majority.
10058. Do you think the majority is a large one; out of the 150 or 160 employees you have, do you think 100 are in favour of retaining the existing law. I am sure of that; and very temperate men. Where I work now I have got a young man with me. I brought him there from school, and he has been twenty-two years with me, and he never tasted liquor in his life.
10059. Have you always been an abstinent man? No; if I were ordered a glass, as I was when I had the fever, I should take it. I was ordered brandy by Dr. Gilman, and I took it; and when I was getting better better he ordered me to take a glass of ale daily, to keep my strength up; and I took it for a considerable time, until I found I was strong and able to go to work again.

10060. You are a Scotchman, are you not? Yes.

10061. Sometimes we have heard of Scotchmen who have been given to excess and have become total abstemious afterwards;—you do not belong to that class? No.

10062. Well, I suppose you have frequently seen great family disaster and ruin caused by drink amongst the employees of your present master? No, I never experienced it there, except once. A boy I had was working with me, and I was informed he did not take all his wages to his mother; and I made it my business to go and inquire whether it was the case that he did not give up his wages. The boy was a steady boy, and took nothing himself, and I took a little interest in the matter. But when I went to see his mother I am very sorry to say she was too "fu" to speak to me. I found out that the father was as bad. The boy told me afterwards, "If I was to give all my money to them, I would go hungry before the week was out." What could I do or what could I say? I took the boy, of course. I could not do any more. There were two of the boys in the factory. They were pushing boys, and got on in spite of their father and mother. That was the only case that came to my knowledge, although I know that there are plenty of families ruined through the drink.

10063. That you have seen? Yes; what I have seen and experienced.

10064. But whilst you have been in this employment you have not seen much trouble coming to the employees through drink? There has not been much trouble. I know one man who was discharged from us through drink.

10065. The work in a tobacco factory is not, I understood you to say, an avocation—a calling—which tempts people to drink? Oh, no; there is nothing there to tempt people to drink.

10066. I mean, not that there is drink on the premises, but is there anything in the nature of the work to tempt people to drink; there are some employments in which men are always sober, and others in which men are given to intemperance; in other words, that the drinking habit is found to be present in some employments somewhat stronger than it is in others; but there is nothing, you say, in the working or manipulation of tobacco to induce drinking; I suppose you make figs and cakes? Yes.

10067. No cigars? No. If there is anything in the factory which tempts a man to drink, it must be me, because I prepare all the work.

10068. If there is anything in the tobacco it comes through you? Yes, because I prepare it. I must be the man.

10069. And you are not? No.

10070. Well, you have been a long resident here, and I suppose you do not think public-houses ought to be increased—do you? No; I think there are too many.

10071. You think they might be diminished then? I do; a great deal.

10072. Do you think public-houses are at all necessary? Oh, yes. There are a great many public-houses I am against; but I am not against an hotel for the accommodation of travellers who go to the country or come from the train, or anything of that kind, that they may have some place to go to for refreshment. I am not against the drink altogether.

10073. Then I suppose your view is, that if people would only be moderate you do not think there would be any outcry against the drink, supposing the drink were the honest liquor that it ought to be? I do not think there would be.

10074. But people are not moderate, and you think that perhaps the publicans are not what they should be; consequently you would like to see the public-houses reduced in number? Yes.

10075. You think there are too many? I think there are.

10076. How do you think they ought to be reduced in number? For instance, I have heard—I do not know whether it is the case or not—that some publicans would actually serve a boy with drink if he went to the bar and paid his twopence. I think a man like that is not the man to keep a public-house and encourage children.

10077. I suppose you have heard of publicans vending liquor that is not what it ought to be? Quite so. I live at Burwood. There are public-houses there but not many; but if a man was dying there for a glass on a Sunday he could not get it.

10078. You think that at Burwood they keep the law? Yes.

10079. In Burwood a man cannot get any drink on a Sunday? They won't give it him.

10080. And we are told there are only two public-houses there? Yes.

10081. Then I suppose you are satisfied with the public-houses near your own residence? Oh, yes. I approve of a man if he thinks in his conscience that he requires a glass of beer, taking it; but he should content himself with that.

10082. You have heard of the local option vote? Yes.

10083. Have you exercised your vote? Oh, yes.

10084. You exercise your privilege when there is an opportunity? Yes.

10085. Are you a believer in local option? I do believe in it in a great measure. I do not think it is a right thing that licenses should be granted to certain individuals to open public-houses where they are not required—where the neighbours do not wish it. If they think there are sufficient public-houses in the neighbourhood I think that ought to be quite enough.

10086. Taking the case of the principle of local option, as applied to Burwood, would you think that local option should be extended in such a way that Burwood should be left without any public-houses? Oh no; but I mean to say there are quite enough of them, without any more, to supply the borough.

10087. It appears there are two. Do you not know that the advocates of local option demand that it shall be committed to them to say whether there shall be any public-houses or not. Now, supposing they voted "No—none," the effect of that vote on Burwood—if there were the necessary majority—would be to abolish all the public-houses, and Burwood would be without a public-house until such time as the local-option vote was taken again—three years, we will say. Now would that be a result that would be satisfactory to you? Oh, yes. I would not care whether there were any public-houses there or not. I would not care if there were not any in the country, nor would any of my family.

10088. But a little while ago you said you thought a public-house was admissible, on the ground of its supplying travellers—people of moderate desires—with refreshment or food. It is not on the question of food I am speaking now, because there could be houses of refreshment, and houses that simply provide food; but, taking the houses as now established, do you think the public-house is a necessity or not? Well, I think myself, as far as my voice goes, as I told you before, I do not care if there was not a public-house in the country. But then I am only one. If it came to a vote in Burwood against any public-houses at all, there would be three to one against it. Burwood would do away with them altogether, I think.

Mr.
W. Liston.
18 Oct., 1886.

10089. Then are there bad public-houses in Burwood now? No, they are very respectable. They would not give you a glass if you were dying for it on a Sunday. I know by the case of a woman who took bad, and the doctor came and ordered her a glass of wine immediately. I was the man the doctor ordered to get it, but I could not get it. I went up the road to get it, in my shirt sleeves; but they would not give it to me. They are respectable public-houses. There are men—respectable working men—men who work with the pick and shovel in the burning sun—whom I believe a glass of ale would not do any harm, provided they were satisfied with that; but there is no moderate drinker. One who goes from one to two, and from two to three, is not a moderate drinker. When I was landed in 1847 in this country—when there were prisoners at Newcastle, prisoners at Blackheath, and prisoners at Port Macquarie, and when Queensland belonged to us—were our gaols and asylums in the state they are in now? No; and I venture to say, with regard to our asylums and gaols, that in nine cases out of every ten, drink is at the bottom of it. I read the papers at night sometimes, when I go home, and I see that the state of the country is something frightful with regard to what comes before the Police Magistrate on Monday morning through drunkenness. In 1846 and 1847, when the country was full of prisoners, you would not see such drunkenness. Now, the women are apt to be worse than the men. You cannot go along the streets here without coming across women—I say girls, not women—the worse for drink.

10090. You have noticed that? Yes.

10091. Do you not think that since we passed the Licensing Act, five years ago, there are many less cases of drunkenness in the streets? Yes; but though there are a certain number of respectable publicans who will not serve people when they ought not to have it, there are others who will. Regarding Sunday, I have heard that there is a good deal of drinking carried on on Sunday. They watch the policeman; they watch anybody in authority; and they give the signal, and the glasses are snatched up, and they are off. Of course I do not mean to say I never drink. I am giving you my opinion.

10092. But you have no hope, I see, for the moderate drinker? You know I put myself down for a moderate drinker, for I do not take anything at all, unless the doctor says I am to.

10093. If it were ordered for you by a doctor you would take it? Oh, yes.

10094. You would make a wry face, but you would take it? I would take anything at all that was ordered when I was sick. I have had it in my power to swim in drink. I was in one place where I was allowed a gill of rum a day, but I never touched it; and so was every man in the British Army.

10095. You were a soldier then? I was.

10096. I suppose you saw a good deal of drunkenness in Scotland in your time? No; I was too young when I came away to know much about it. I left Scotland in 1841. I was in Dixon's before that; and then Mr. Dixon left me there, and came out.

10097. You know nothing of Glasgow? I have been there; that is all.

10098. But you saw nothing of drunkenness in Scotland? I was too young to notice. I know this much: In Edinburgh, say from half past 10 o'clock to 11, you could hardly get along the streets, and from 11 to 1 you would see no one. If you saw two boys playing in the streets they would be locked up. Nothing of that kind on a Sunday in Scotland. I will tell you what I remember once seeing in Scotland when I was a boy. There was a place like our Domain, called the Meadows, in Edinburgh, a kind of racecourse, and a regiment of soldiers coming to Edinburgh, one of them was caught walking on this racecourse on a Sunday whistling, and he was apprehended, and got sixty days for it. Now that is Edinburgh for you. As for Glasgow I cannot say anything about it.

10099. Mr. Withers.] With regard to apprentices do they bind the boys employed in your factory—are they indentured for a term of years? We have no apprentices there now. We used to. We have not had any for years.

10100. They are just taken on day work now and then? Yes, just day work.

10101. How long is it since you left off binding them? Upwards of twenty years; because the boy that I brought from school I brought there for an apprentice. He would have been bound, but Mr. Dixon altered his mind, and said he wanted no more bound apprentices.

10102. From your own observation do you think that lads, ranging from 15 to 20 years of age, are more drunken now than when you first came to the Colony? I think they are going more the other way now than they were then—more inclined to get the drink now, when it is in their power, than they were at that time.

10103. How long is it since you first came into Mr. Dixon's employment in Scotland? I think it would almost take the old gentleman to say. I could not exactly tell you.

10104. It is forty years I suppose? I went with Mr. Dixon from Mr. Robertson's, when he was about 20 or 25 years old, before he was married. I went to Mr. Dixon between fifty and sixty years ago. Do you remember one time in Scotland two men, called Burke and Hare, who used to commit murders? Well, I was a little boy then, and I was with Mr. Dixon then.

10105. In the old country? In the old country.

10106. President.] I suppose you are about 60 years old? Oh, more than that.

10107. Mr. Withers.] You resided in Surry Hills for many years? I resided there for eighteen years.

10108. About sixty years ago you had under your observation lads being brought up to the tobacco manufacturing business? Yes.

10109. How are those lads to be compared with those of the present generation? I never thought of anything of the kind.

10110. Are our boys more temperate? Among the tobacco-boys in the old country drink was out of the question.

10111. Then, what is the cause of the boys here being different? It is the parents.

10112. How do you account for it being the parents? Because it is the drink, and setting bad examples, and sending the boys for drink to the public-houses.

10113. How is it that the parents become so lax in their morals here, seeing that many of them come from home, where they are not so;—do they get too much money here, or what? It is not the money, I think, because I know that the liquor is different here. It takes more effect on them.

10114. President.] Is it the relaxing climate? It may be. I do not know.

- Mr. W. Liston.
18 Oct., 1886.
10115. Mr. Withers.] Do you think the children become more precocious here? I do not know.
10116. You say it is the parents fault? Yes; in nine cases out of every ten it is the parents fault that the rising generation takes to drink.
10117. Our object is to get at the cause of the excessive drinking, especially with regard to the young. You have stated that there is more drunkenness amongst youths now in your business than was the case fifty years ago;—that is very useful information? I do not know the reason, unless it is the bad examples put before the rising generation which make them go to the drink when very young. One little thing draws on to another.
10118. You yourself have not visited the public-houses much;—you do not know much of their habits? No.
10119. You can give no account of the degradations that go on in some of them sometimes? No. I may want a glass, and if I were to say to my son, "go and get me a pint of beer," and he sees me drinking it, and I hand it to the Mrs., and he sees the mother drinking it, he will say, "what is good for the goose is good for the gander," and it would go from one to another. I have only one son and two daughters; and they have never been inside a public-house bar, and never put the drink to their lips in their lives. As for my son he says he would like to see all the breweries in the country burnt down.
10120. President.] How old is he? He is twenty-four, and my eldest girl is a married woman. She belongs to the Blue Ribbon Army, and her husband never drank in his life. My daughter's husband is a wheelwright. His father carried on the wheelwright business, and kept an hotel. He reared his family in the hotel, and not one of that man's family ever tasted the drink in their lives, although they were brought up in the public-house all their lives. The son said to his father, "I am going abroad to settle down." "Well," the father said, "if you do I won't give you any money." "Well," the son said, "I don't care; I will go to Australia, and if I succeed I will settle down. I intend to earn my living with my ten fingers, and not over the bar, to take the bread out of the children's mouths, as you have been doing." That is my son-in-law. He is not two years in the country, and look what a fine business he has got through it. He has got his eldest brother out, and now he is sending home to bring one of his father's apprentices out; but if he had drunk where would he be?
10121. Mr. Hutchison.] You believe that the people should have the right to stop all public-houses if they so wish it? Oh, yes; they should have a right to stop them. I think it is a very wrong thing to put up a public-house against the people's wish—when they say they do not want it.
10122. Mr. Roseby.] You do not employ girls in your factory? No.
10123. Do you think that girls or young women ought to be employed at public-house bars? Oh no.

---

Mr. William Sharp sworn and examined:—

- Mr. W. Sharp.
18 Oct., 1886.
10124. President.] What is your employment in Dixon's factory? I am foreman in one of the departments.
10125. And have been for some time? Nearly two years.
10126. You know the last witness who has just gone out? Yes.
10127. Although you have been there only two years, I suppose you have some considerable familiarity with the habits of the employees there? With the hands—yes.
10128. Do you think there is anything in the nature of the work, or the avocations in a tobacco factory, that induces intemperance? I do not think that there is.
10129. You have not noticed it then in Dixon's place? No.
10130. I ask you, because we have been told by others, speaking for tobacco factories, that there is a great deal of intemperance visible at times amongst the operatives? Well we have had cases where men have had to be discharged on account of drunkenness; but I do not know that that arises through their connection with a tobacco factory.
10131. The work is sedentary, is it not? Yes, partially in one or two departments.
10132. And therefore like the work of tailors and bootmakers? Well, not so much sitting. Most of the men in my department are very active.
10133. We were told by the last witness that very little intemperance is ever seen in Dixon's establishment? There is no sign inside, because we do not allow it.
10134. But that the workmen themselves are very rarely found addicted to the use of it? Taking them altogether, I should say they are as steady a lot of workmen as are to be found in a factory almost anywhere. Of course you find drunkenness almost anywhere—that is, men who occasionally get drunk.
10135. You have only men and boys in the establishment, and about 150 in all? Only men and boys, and somewhere about that number.
10136. The last witness told us that a large majority of your employees ask for no alteration of the Sunday prohibition law, that they are content with the law as it stands, that they want no liquor themselves on a Sunday from the public-houses, and that if they are inclined to drink they take it home, as a bottle of beer, on Saturday? I do not know what his means of ascertaining the opinion of the men may have been. I have not taken any steps to ascertain, but have just asked a few of the leading hands. There has been no meeting; but according to my experience the opinions of the men are considerably divided. I ask one, and he is of opinion that public-houses ought to be closed on Sunday; and I ask another, and he is of opinion that they ought to be open for a short time, say an hour, at each end of the day.
10137. An hour in the morning? He actually said an hour in the morning, an hour at noon, and another at night.
10138. Then you say opinion is divided on this subject? I believe it is.
10139. What is your own opinion? My opinion is, that they are better closed on Sunday.
10140. I suppose the notion present to those who would like to have some opening of public-houses on a Sunday is, that they should be able to get their beer for dinner and their beer for supper? I believe that is the idea. One of them made the remark that a man ought to be allowed to get his beer for his Sunday dinner. I answered that by saying that the working man could take his bottle on Saturday night and get it filled, and keep it for his Sunday dinner. I believe that is done in many cases in the district where I live.
10141. The reply to that is, that the beer is apt to get stale or flat, and another remark, made on behalf of the working man, is, "Why should not the working man be able to get what the rich man can get?" A rich man draws from his cellar but the working man cannot, and why therefore should he not be able to buy?

I do not see why the working-man cannot go without it on a Sunday. I can, and I am not a teetotalter, and I do not keep a cellar. I go without, and I am satisfied with either drinking water or a cup of coffee, or some thing of that sort.

Mr.
W. Sharp.
18 Oct., 1886.

10142. In the course of conversation with these men has it ever occurred to you to point out to them that if the houses were open for one or two or three hours on a Sunday they would probably remain open very much longer? Well I do not know how it would be if Sunday opening were adopted; but I know in the old country, where I came from, they were open part of the day on Sunday—from half-past 12 to half-past 2, and from 6 to 10 at night.

10143. Was that in Manchester? No, Bradford; and as a rule the keepers of the places were very strict in closing the places to the minute.

10144. And the police enforced the rule stringently? Very stringently I believe.

10145. Have you left England long? A little over three years.

10146. Do you consider there is more drunkenness here than in the town in which you lived, in Bradford? I do, a good deal; especially on a Sunday—when the public-houses are supposed to be closed.

10147. Well in that case it would apparently be in the interests of temperance to open them? Well I do not know that that follows. I should say it would not. I think the police are not sufficiently active on a Sunday in enforcing the law. I should adopt some more severe means of punishment for those who break the law.

10148. Do you mean the publicans or the customers? I should punish both, but the publican more severely than the customer. I have just moved from a street in the Emore District, where I was unfortunate enough to live opposite a man who, five Sundays out of every six, managed to get drunk; and when he got very drunk he was almost mad. He went out in the morning before breakfast and he would come home fresh. He would be out again before dinner, and come home drunk; and by night we had the greatest rows. He would often turn his wife out and make noises in the house as if he was breaking up the furniture. Now, that he did Sunday after Sunday. I should say that five Sundays out of six it occurred regularly.

10149. You think the police are to blame here? I do not think they are sufficiently vigilant.

10150. You know there is a difference between the law in this Colony and that in England, not only in regard to closing but in regard to the enforcing of the law against law-breakers; you see in England if a person is found in a public-house he has got to show that he is there for a legitimate purpose? Yes, I believe he has.

10151. Have you noticed that there are many more public-houses in the city and suburbs than you think necessary for the requirements of the people? I should say there are double the number that are required.

10152. Do you think there are double the number here that there would be in such a town as Bradford—that is, proportionately? Well, I don't know.

10153. Bradford is much larger than Sydney? Well it has a population of 220,000.

10154. Then it is double the size of Sydney? It may be, but I do not think the public-houses are so thick in Bradford as they are in Sydney.

10155. Do you mean relatively or actually? Actually within a given area and relatively in proportion to population.

10156. That is to say, taking 100 yards in Sydney you will find more public-houses than you will find within the same distance in Bradford? Yes.

10157. But the traffic is larger in Bradford than Sydney? No, it is not. I was astonished to find the amount of traffic in the streets when I came here, seeing that the population is less here than in Bradford.

10158. When the operatives are in the streets in Bradford the traffic is very great? Yes.

10159. Have you discussed the question of the number of public-houses and excess of public-houses with your fellow-workmen? No, I have not.

10160. You are of opinion that they are too numerous;—how would you reduce them? I do not know how licenses can be dealt with. I suppose that when a man once gets a license, and he conducts his business properly and does not break the law, he has a right to keep that license.

10161. Practically here they do not disturb an old license. As to new licenses that depends upon the local option vote; and if that vote is against the new licenses there are none granted in that area. We are very much exercised in this country, as you perhaps know, about the question of reducing the public-houses by local option. A great many advocate that mode of bringing the vote of the people directly on the subject. What is your opinion;—would you be in favour of a local option vote, which would mean that the people should say by voting for three years, whether there should be any public-houses in any ward or municipality? I do not suppose any vote of the inhabitants of a ward could have any effect upon the public-houses there.

10162. What is claimed is the extension of local option? I think the people of a district have a right to say whether they will have public-houses in that district, or whether the number should be limited, but I do not think I would give the power to a mere majority to say we will or we will not have a public-house in this district.

10163. Do you think public-houses a necessity within certain limits as to number and good conduct? I think so. I should be rather puzzled, perhaps, to give any satisfactory reason; but I have an impression that they are a necessity to a certain extent.

10164. Have you ever heard any of Sir Wilfred Lawson's lectures? I have heard him speak.

10165. It would of course be on temperance? Yes.

10166. Of course you know he is the great advocate of a Permissive Bill? Yes.

10168. We are none the less satisfied that you have not studied it, or had any discussions about it, because we want to know as well as we can the untutored opinions of people about it—of people in large industries like Dixon's; and your opinion would be valuable, because you have recently come from England. We do not often get such witnesses who have been connected with these large establishments? No; it is not often a recent arrival can jump into a position such as I jumped into at Dixon's—I had a friend there.

10169. Do you look upon drunkenness as a vice or as a crime? Well, I should think it is more a vice than a crime.

10170. I think in England you have no inebriate asylums except a few, where people go of their own accord; there are none where a man can be sent for treatment for habitual drunkenness? I do not know any in Yorkshire.

10171.

- Mr. W. Sharp.
18 Oct., 1886.
10171. I suppose Yorkshire people are in no need of any such asylums? Well the people there are just a medium sort of people.
10172. I suppose the great homes of drunkenness in England are Liverpool and Manchester? Liverpool I think is worse than Manchester, and Glasgow is not a very good place.
10173. Have you been in Glasgow? Only as a visitor.
10174. You say you are not a total abstainer? No.
10175. But of that class called moderate drinkers? Moderate drinkers.
10176. Have you had occasion to complain of the class of liquor supplied in this Colony? Well, as a rule, when I get any, I do not drink the liquor made in the Colony.
10177. Then you are not a Colonial beer drinker; when you ask for beer you ask for English beer? Yes.
10178. Have you had occasion to take other liquor; do you know whether other liquors are adulterated? I think they are diluted.
10179. You think there is water put in? Yes; but when I go for anything I go to a respectable place and get a respectable sort of thing.
10180. But I suppose you are aware there are some public-houses here little better than drinking dens? I do not know.
10181. Now, to go back again to the view entertained by the hands of whom you are foreman, you say opinion is very much divided? Yes.
10182. Am I right in concluding that the opinion is equally divided, or nearly so, between those who would have a limited opening on a Sunday, and those who would retain the closing on Sunday;—is opinion about equally divided? I do not know. I have not taken steps to ascertain what the general opinion is, but I should say the majority of the men would favour a short opening on Sunday.
10183. But the majority of intelligent men whom you know to be temperate men, what would their opinion be? I could not say.
10184. But you say the general opinion, so far as you have been able to ascertain it, is a divided one? It is.
10185. You, yourself, you said, have no disposition to see the houses open on Sunday? None whatever.
10186. You think the man who wants his beer can get it on a Saturday? Yes.
10187. Or, if like you, he can do without it? Yes, if he likes to practise a little self denial.
10188. Do you think the employment of barmaids, where you have noticed it in England, is reprehensible; in the great saloons in England barmaids are employed, are they not? Yes; and pretty barmaids when they can be secured.
10189. Do you think that has a demoralizing effect? I think it has, but I see no reason why a respectable woman should not be employed in a bar, if she can keep her respectability; but I would not allow one of my daughters to serve in a bar.
10190. You think the temptations are sufficient without those of a bar? Yes.
10191. Mr. Withers.] Were you in the same line of business before you came here? No; I was never in a tobacco factory before that of Dixon's; I was in the worsted manufacturing trade, making women's dress goods; I do not know of any place nearer than Liverpool where tobacco is manufactured in England.
10192. Were the same proportion of young persons employed where you were employed before? Ours were mostly adults, but women chiefly, and, in spinning, girls from 14 to 16 years of age.
10193. Were they as temperate a class of people as the people you deal with now? Well I have not much dealing with women here, because we have none.
10194. What is your opinion generally of the conduct of the public-house business in this colony as compared with other places you have seen. Taking a view of the whole business, especially in the city and suburbs, what has been your impression since you came to reside with us; do you think it is carried on with sufficient strictness? I do not think sufficient care is taken to preserve the morals of the people, as in the Old Country. I was in New Zealand for about twelve months before I came to Sydney, and in Dunedin I found very much the same sort of life as in Sydney, though on a very much smaller scale; but drunken people can be there readily met with on a Sunday, although the public-houses were closed as they are here.
10195. Do you think the hotel-keepers here are not up to the standard of men that ought to be licensed? I am not sure of that; I do not know.
10196. You think there are too many houses? I think so.
10197. If it came to a question of reducing the houses, which class of houses do you think it would be most beneficial to the public to abolish? I think what we used to call in England the gin-shops, where people go and stand at the bar and drink. In most of the respectable houses at Home, people went and sat in comfortable rooms, and they generally were acquainted with each other, and they would talk over trade and other matters; but very few were places like those in Sydney, where one has to stand at a bar and keep drinking.
10198. No other accommodation for you? No other accommodation for you.
10199. It has been stated that the higher class of hotels tend more than the others to encourage young men to drink; it has been stated here by a witness that he regarded the higher class of houses as most likely to initiate young men into drunkenness? The effect of the higher class of hotels would be on a higher class of men. I do not think the effect would be very different—that is to say, the higher class hotel would have the same effect upon the higher class of men, men of respectability and education, as the lower class hotel would have upon the lower class of men, who have had no education, and occupy a lower position.
10200. You do not think they graduate into the other hotels after being initiated into the higher hotels? I do not think so.
10201. What do you think of the hours of closing through the week? That is 11 o'clock at night: Well it is quite late enough.
10202. Do you think 10 o'clock would be a reasonable hour at which to close every day in the week? I think it is quite late enough; it would be for me, at all events.
10202. President.] Is Saturday-night wages night in Bradford? No; that is Friday.
10204. Mr. Withers.] You think 10 o'clock is late enough for a man to leave an hotel in order to get home and get up in the morning? I think 10 o'clock is quite late enough.
10205. Do you think the system of "shouting" among the people of this country is out of proportion to what it is among persons in England? I believe there is a great deal more of it in the colonies than in the old country.

Mr.
W. Sharp.
18 Oct., 1886.

10206. How do you account for that? I do not know, unless money is more plentiful here.
10207. The age for supplying youths, under the present Licensing Act, is 16; do you think the age should be extended? I think no one ought to be supplied under 16 years of age. I do not know whether I should extend it at all.
10208. What about girls and young women; would you make any distinction with them? That is a question I have never much thought about; I hardly know how to answer it.
10209. Mr. Roseby.] You do not consider drink necessary for a man to discharge his duties connected with hard work? No; I do not.
10210. You think a man can do the hardest kind of work satisfactorily, perhaps better, as a total abstainer than as a drinker? Well, he would do it no worse.
10211. You have not had a long experience in the colony? No.
10212. But you have seen a good deal of the disastrous effects of drink? Yes, and read of it of course.
10213. From your observation you have noticed a number of people go to destruction through excessive drinking? Yes; a very large number. I have the misfortune almost every morning to see the police van, near the railway station, taking away the people who have been arrested, and I should say that most crimes arise from drink.
10214. Do you think a larger number of young people give way to drink here than in the old country? Yes.
10215. Both young men and young women? Yes.
10216. And in this matter do you not think everything should bow to the morals of the people? Yes; I think so.
10217. I think you said the people, by a considerable majority, ought to have the power of closing these houses if they think it necessary? I should think if a very large majority of the people in a district said they should have no public-houses in the district there should be none. But I would not give the power to a mere majority.
10218. With reference to reducing the number of public-houses, would you give the power to a bare majority? Yes; I would give the power to limit the number to a bare majority.
10219. You do not think there is any general desire on the part of the law-abiding people of this country to have the public-houses open on a Sunday? Well I do not know how that would be if the people were canvassed generally, but I should say that amongst the most intelligent part of the community at all events the inclination would be to have them closed on a Sunday. I should think so.
10220. You know that the law now is in that respect very considerably violated? I believe it is, so far as my own observation has shown me.
10221. And do you not think that the Sunday trading now in the public-houses has a very demoralising tendency? I do.
10222. In some places in Canada they close the houses on Saturdays, not at 10 but at 7 o'clock, so that workmen shall not squander their wages on Saturday nights. Do you not think such a law would be desirable here? No; I do not think the law-makers ought to impose upon the liberties of the people to that extent. I think a man ought to have some liberty to get in reason what he wants in the way of drink.
10223. But you would close the public-houses at 10 o'clock? I would.
10224. Would you close them altogether on election days? I believe closing them on election days would have a very beneficial effect on the people. You would see a great deal less drunkenness on election days than we have seen; at all events in the old country. There was a movement on foot there some time since to close the public-houses on election days, but I do not know that it ever came to anything.
10225. Mr. Hutchison.] Who moved for that in the House? I am not quite sure.
10226. Was it the Hon. Mr. Shirley? I do not remember a statesman of that name.
10227. Mr. Roseby.] You do not think a man is in a proper position to give an intelligent vote when he is intoxicated, as many people are on election days? No, I do not believe he can be.
10228. Mr. Hutchison.] You believe that if Sunday-closing is made effective it is the proper thing? Yes, I do.
10229. Do you think now that if a vote were taken in the community for Sunday-closing, and provision was made that the law would be observed, the vote would be in favour of Sunday-closing? Well, I am not prepared to say.
10230. I will put the question in another form: Do you not think that, to some extent, the permission to open is a compromise;—it is offering something so as to secure ultimate Sunday-closing. Do you not think that is what is meant by giving them an hour or two hours on a Sunday? I do not know that I quite understand you. Do you say that the object of those who advocate an hour or two hours' opening on a Sunday is to have the houses more effectually closed on a Sunday?
10231. It is to obviate the open violation of the closing on a Sunday? Oh! perhaps it is.
10232. You say that you consider public-houses are necessary;—is that by virtue of the drink sold in them, or do you consider that houses of accommodation are necessary? Houses of accommodation are certainly necessary.
10233. Could they not be provided without drink? Yes, entirely, in some places.
10234. Is that what you meant? No. I believe that a large number of the people desire to have drink, and I do not see, so long as they do not break any law, why they should not have provision made for them to get drink.
10235. Suppose a law was passed giving this power:—In a given municipality there are twenty public-houses, and they seek a renewal of their licenses; suppose the names of the applicants connected with those twenty houses were printed in a schedule, and the people were allowed to vote on that schedule in that locality, striking out the public-houses they did not wish licensed, and only allowing those who received a majority of votes to get licenses, would that be a fair ballot, and would you agree to that? That would be giving the power to reduce to a mere majority. Well I think I should be in favour of a mere majority having the power to say how many public-houses they would have in a certain district.
10236. You see the difficulty is, how are we going to reduce them. I submit this as a solution; would you agree to that; do you think it would be a fair local option test? My opinion is that a vote of the inhabitants of a better class district might have the effect of closing the worse houses, but in a lower class, and perhaps more populous district, the probability is that some of the best and most respectable houses might be closed, and the bad houses preserved, and therefore such a plan can hardly be considered satisfactory.
10237. Do you know Saltaire? Yes.

- Mr. W. Sharp.
18 Oct., 1886.
10238. There is no drink there? There is no public-house there; but then the property all belonged to the late Sir Titus Salt.
10239. Do you think the people suffer through having no drink? Not at all.
10240. Do you know a more elegant little place in all England? I do not.
10241. What is the population? They keep in Saltaire about from 4,000 to 5,000 workers at the mill, and the population would be about double that number.
10242. President.] Such an experiment as Saltaire has never been repeated, for obvious reasons? I do not know of any other place.
10243. Mr. Hutchison.] I suppose you know it is a fact that a grocer in Saltaire began to sell very questionable temperance drinks, and that Sir Titus had the drinks analysed and stopped their sale? I do not know that. I was just going to say that between Saltaire and Shipley, which is a distance of only a mile, there are several public-houses. There is one building on the nearest land to the Saltaire property.
10244. President.] With reference to your answer to Mr. Hutchison's questions on the subject of reducing the public-houses by local option vote to a stated number;—suppose the number were twenty, and the local optionists determined to reduce them to ten, is it not possible that the votes might retain not the best but the worst houses? Yes, it is quite possible.
10245. Would it not to some extent depend upon the popularity of the publican and the number of persons he could get to vote in his interest? I dare say there would be a good deal of canvassing.
10246. What I mean is this: It is a way of reducing the number, but without reducing on the merits? I see what you mean.

WEDNESDAY, 20 OCTOBER, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,	T. COLLS, Esq., J.P.,
J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.,	A. HUTCHISON, Esq.,
G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Enoch Talbot called in, sworn, and examined:—

- Mr. E. Talbot.
20 Oct., 1886.
10247. President.] What is your name? Enoch Talbot.
10248. You are employed in the factory of M'Murtrie, Kellermann, and Co.? Yes.
10249. What is the nature of your employment in the factory? A maker-up of boots.
10250. Are you merely one of the hands? I am one of the hands. I used to be over the boys at one time, but I turned it up because I could do better at the bench.
10251. Then now I suppose you work at piece-work? Piece-work.
10252. How many persons are employed in the establishment? I could not tell you the number.
10253. Are there a couple of hundred? More than that I should think. There are some putting up or making boots for finishing, and of these there are fifty or more.
10254. I do not know whether you are at all aware why we wanted some such person as you here? Only from Mr. George M'Murtrie, who told me what he thought the paper I received was.
10255. We want to know directly, and not at second-hand, what are the views of the men employed in manufacturing works on certain subjects connected with our Inquiry as a Commission. That is why you are here. Now, first of all I will ask you whether you yourself are an abstainer or whether you are a moderate drinker? An abstainer.
10256. A total abstainer? Yes; I never drank in my life except when I took a drop of rum once in gruel as medicine. I do not know the taste of anything else.
10257. Do you belong to any temperance organization? No; I did at one time, but that was only when I was a young lad, over eighteen years ago. I belonged to No. 1. I was in it for about two years, and I left it because I did not think it a good thing to belong to.
10258. Why? Because some of the members that belonged to it used to drink.
10259. Are you speaking of a Friendly Society or a Temperance League? Of the Sons of Temperance. I belonged to them over eighteen years ago.
10260. You left the Sons of Temperance because some of them were not sons of temperance? I do not think they were. I was not satisfied with them, and I paid up and left.
10261. But there are temperance organizations that are not composed of sons of temperance? I do not belong to them.
10262. There are temperance societies, as, for instance, the Blue Ribbon Society and Local Option League, and others; but you belonged to a friendly society called the Sons of Temperance? I did at one time.
10263. And left it for the reason you have mentioned? Yes.
10264. Was that a suspicion of yours, or did you know that your suspicions were well founded? I could not say now as it is a long time ago, and I was very young.
10265. But you have had a suspicion of these sons of temperance ever since? I cannot say that. I must have had at that time. I left and joined some other benefit society which I thought would be better.
10266. Did you join a benefit society? Yes; I joined the Oddfellows afterwards.
10267. They are not a temperance society you know of course? Yes; they do as they please.
10268. How long have you been in the employment of M'Murtrie, Kellermann, and Co.? I think I went there about May or June previous to the International Exhibition.
10269. That is about six years ago? I think it is.
10270. Are you a native of the Colony? Yes.
10271. Have you always been connected with the boot industry? Yes; I worked at Alderson and Sons.
10272. You were apprenticed there I suppose? I never was bound, but I served my time there.
10273. You have been connected with the boot business [then for many years altogether? More than twenty.

10274.

Mr.
E. Talbot.
20 Oct., 1856.

10274. Is it a fact that the journeymen bootmakers are as a class not famous for habits of temperance, or is that a calumny? I could not say. I think the majority of them drink.
10275. Then as a class they are not temperate men. You think the majority of them drink? I think so; I can only of course speak for the room I am in.
10276. Is there much intemperance in your shop; do your employers have to turn men away, or do the men lose much time through intemperance? Not a great deal. The employers will not stand it; they will pay the men off if they do not attend to their work.
10277. Is there any reason why bootmakers should be more addicted to drink than others? Not that I know of.
10278. It is a very sedentary employment, is it not—you sit a good deal? We do not sit at all, we stand at the bench.
10279. At all events there is a great deal of confinement? Yes, you are in the one position until you come out, just in the one small square up to dinner or tea time.
10280. Then although it is not a sedentary occupation it is one of considerable confinement, inasmuch as you do not use your limbs? No, only our arms and chest. We go through very much the same action as when sitting down, only that we stand.
10281. With regard to your fellow workmen there, I suppose you associate with them a good deal, and that you know their views and opinions? I could not say that, for I never asked them their opinions. They pretty well all know, however, that we are coming here on this business to-day.
10282. What is their opinion with regard to Sunday closing;—do they as a body object to that, or are they in favour of it? Well we have never put it to them as a body. There are only one or two we have asked and they have different opinions.
10283. Do you think you would be justified in saying that in your establishment there is a wide spread difference of opinion on this subject whether the public-houses should be closed on Sunday or not? I think there is a difference of opinion whether they should be closed or not.
10284. I should like to know what the opinion of your fellows is? I can only tell you the opinion of two I have spoken to; they work at the same bench.
10285. Do you know their habits? Oh no. I am a married man and have a large family, and I do not go out of a night. I live at home.
10286. You have been six years there, and of course you know the habits of the majority of your fellow workmen, and therefore you had better tell us. It is not what you have seen of them, but it is the general character they bear—you know what that is, and you can tell us if you will? I have come here to tell you what I know.
10287. I will ask you this question again: As a workman in this factory can you not tell us what the prevalent opinion is on the subject of Sunday closing? No, I could not answer in that way. I can only give you the opinion of two I have asked about it, for it will not pay me to run over the shop to ask them about it.
10288. Then you have no communication with one another? Not to run over to them; we sing out to them occasionally.
10289. After work do you not see many of your fellow workmen? Well, seldom; for I go home.
10290. Then you do not chat with them? Only those who go home with me, and they are steady men.
10291. Are the majority of the men in this employment very steady men? Yes, I think so.
10292. Have they any stringent regulations in the factory against drink, or having drunken men there? Yes; no one can take drink there.
10293. Do any of the men lose any of their time on Monday in consequence of a little excess on Sunday? Very few; Mr. M'Murtrie will not stand it.
10294. What are your hours there? From 8 to 6, and an hour for dinner.
10295. On Saturday? From 8 to 1.
10296. Then if you know nothing about Sunday-closing, I suppose you know nothing of what the opinion of your fellow-workmen may be with regard to the week-day hours during which the public-houses are open. We are anxious to know whether there is any well-grounded desire among the great body of workmen for a change of the law, and we ask men like you to come and tell us? I can only give you the opinion of those I have spoken to about it.
10297. Very well. Speaking for yourself, you think, I suppose, there are too many public-houses about? I think we could do with less.
10298. Where do you live? Shepherd-street, Darlington.
10299. Are you speaking for the place you live in, or for the city generally, or for the suburbs? Generally.
10300. How many do you think we could do without; have we twice as many as we want? I could not say that.
10301. However you would reduce them considerably? Yes, I think there are too many; but that is only my opinion.
10302. Do you hear the men complain of having bad drink? I have heard them say they have had bad drink. When I see them of a morning they have said, "I have a bad head-ache; they gave me bad drink there last night." Of course I never tasted it, and do not know.
10303. You have heard that which has given you to understand there has been some inferior liquor supplied to them? Yes.
10305. You know the complaint is that you never have your boots in the time they are promised; your bootmaker tells you that he cannot depend upon his men, and he generally gives them for the first two or three days of the week a very sad character? I have heard that from a child.
10306. I have never heard of a bootmaker who gave his men a good character; but whether that be the case in factories or not I do not know. I should think if there was any demand for Sunday-opening we should find it among the journeymen bootmakers. Can you tell us whether that is so, or throw any light upon it? No; I could only give you the opinion of the two chaps I spoke to this morning.
10307. Well have you ever voted in the local option vote? No.
10308. Have you ever given your vote for local option; you know what local option is, I suppose? I have heard them talk of it; I do not take much interest in it.

- Mr. E. Talbot.
20 Oct., 1886.
10309. Are you a ratepayer? No.
10310. Did you know you had not a vote? No; I know that tenants who do not pay the rates have no vote.
10311. Then you do not vote? No.
10312. Would you vote if you had a vote? I do not know.
10313. You say you take no interest in it? No.
10314. On this other subject of voting I suppose you have strong ideas on temperance and public-houses; if you had a vote would you be so apathetic as not to use it; suppose you had a vote would you take the trouble to go to Darlington to vote? I might.
10315. And if it were to reduce the number of public-houses would you exercise your vote? Yes, I would, if I thought there were too many public-houses in Darlington.
10316. Probably being an abstinent you think there ought to be no public-houses? No, I do not think that.
10317. Do you think public-houses a necessity or not? I will not say that.
10318. Are they such a convenience to the public as to be a sort of necessity? Yes; I think a man can use it and abuse it.
10319. Then you are in favour of a limited number of public-houses well conducted? Yes.
10320. Then if you had a local option vote you would employ your vote to reduce the number and improve the character of those that we retain? Yes.
10321. Mr. Colls.] Are you foreman of the establishment? No.
10322. And you never heard the men express their opinions about the drink traffic? Only the two I spoke to this morning. There is so much machinery in our shop that you cannot talk.
10323. Are there any females in your establishment? Yes; but not on the same floor.
10324. Do they leave at the same time as the men? Yes.
10325. How many females have you? I could not say.
10326. Have you 100? I do not think so.
10327. In the part of the city in which you reside do you think there are too many hotels now? Well, I do not think there are, not in the part I am living in.
10328. If you were told there are 830 public-houses in Sydney, would you think there are too many? I think there are too many now. I do not know the number.
10329. Do you think there are many badly conducted? I think many might be conducted better.
10330. Mr. Withers.] You served your time at Alderson's? Yes.
10331. Were you apprenticed there? No; no boys were bound, but he kept us longer there than if we were apprenticed before he put us on our own hook.
10332. Were there any restrictions at Alderson's with regard to the boys to prevent them from drinking or entering public-houses? No.
10333. During business working hours you were restricted of course? There was no drink allowed in the place at all.
10334. That applies equally to men and boys? Yes.
10335. There was no special provision for the lads in regard to drinking habits? No.
10336. I suppose the majority of the men were temperate drinkers? Yes, to the best of my recollection. I have been away from there about six years.
10337. With regard to the boys of 15, 16, or 17 years of age, were they, as a rule, abstainers, or were a reasonable portion of them given to take a glass occasionally? I can only speak of my time when I was a boy and give my own opinion. I do not think they knew the taste of drink any more than I did.
10338. You have a good many lads under your observation now where you are working, have you not? A good many.
10339. Do you see anything in the habits of the boys in your class of work different from those boys at Alderson's? No; I think they are just as temperate.
10340. Are the boys, where you are working, now indentured? Some are, I believe.
10341. Do you think any reasonable proportion of them are? I could not answer that. At the making they are.
10342. Are you aware whether there are any restrictions in the indentures against their entering public-houses or taking drink during their apprenticeship? I could not say.
10343. Provided it is not there do you think it would be a wise provision to have that enforced in the indentures of all lads now. In olden times, twenty or twenty-five years ago, there was a special clause prohibiting a boy from entering a public-house on any consideration;—do you think it is necessary, provided that clause is not in the indentures, to have it embodied there? I do not know.
10344. In order to prevent them from acquiring the habit of drinking too early? I think it would be a wise plan to prevent them drinking too early, if that would stop them.
10345. Do you think the system of "shouting" is more prevalent now than formerly? I could not say.
10346. Do you think men are becoming more provident now than in years past? That I could not answer.
10347. Do you think many men are getting homes of their own now under the facilities offered them by building societies? Yes.
10348. Do you think that has a tendency to make men drink less? Yes, I think so.
10349. You think they have a greater interest in the State, more inducement to go straight home than otherwise? Yes, I think so.
10350. Mr. Roseby.] Have you not known a number of persons engaged in your factory go to destruction through drink? I could not answer for any.
10351. You do not socially mix up with the employees then? No, I do not.
10352. You are a family man and go to your family without mixing up much with the workmen? Yes.
10353. And you can give us only your own opinion? That is all.
10354. You are in favor of keeping the public-houses closed on Sundays? Yes.
10355. Did you say you are in favor of the principle of letting the people have the power by vote of saying whether they will have public-houses or not? Do I think it should be left to the majority of the people?
10356. Yes, to decide whether they should have public-houses or not; have you ever thought of the matter at all? No, I have not.

10357. Then perhaps you could not give a pronounced opinion? No, I could not.
10358. Do you think the public-house business a dangerous one to the morals of the community—that it is not a good school of morals? It is not.
10359. If public-houses exist do you think they ought to be kept under very stringent regulations? Yes, I do.
10360. Are you in favor of having the houses closed earlier than now on week-days? I think 11 o'clock a very reasonable hour.
10361. Would you close them altogether on election days when people are so excited? I could not answer that.
10362. It is the case in some places that they close them on election days? In some places, too, they throw them open.
10363. Is that a good thing to have the public-houses open on election days? I could not say that.
10364. You are not connected with any temperance organization? No.
10365. Did I understand you to say that most of the persons in the lodge you belong to were drinkers? I was speaking not of the majority but of one or two.
10366. Because there were one or two who you thought were not loyal to their principles you left them? Yes.
10367. But you do not think drink a necessity for a man doing his work? I do not drink, but I do not think that a man should be deprived of a glass of ale. If I thought a glass of ale would do me good I would have it.
10368. Mr. Hutchison.] Do you know of your own knowledge that these men associated with you as sons of temperance drank? No; it was my opinion at the time.
10369. Now it cannot but be that you have formed some opinion as to what the working men as a whole think about the Sunday closing; what do you think the workman's opinion is on Sunday closing or on Sunday opening; if they were given a chance to vote how do you think they would vote? I could not give you their opinion.
10370. What do you think they would do? I can only give you the opinion of two I spoke to this morning.
10371. And their opinions are different from each other; can you not form an opinion from conversing with the men? No, I could not. When the question has come up they all seemed to have different opinions, so I could not form an opinion on it.

Mr.
E. Talbot.
20 Oct., 1886.

Mr. Charles Ernest Smith called in, sworn, and examined:—

10372. President.] You also are a workman at M'Murtrie, Kellerman, & Co's? Yes.
10373. Are you in authority there, or are you a bench-man? Just a bench-man, working at the bench.
10374. About how many employes have you? Taking them all through, I cannot say, but on our floor I should reckon there are from fifty-five to sixty. There may be more; I do not think there are less.
10375. But collectively—could you not give us the whole number;—are there 200? I think there are more, including the women and boys.
10376. How many women and boys are there? It would be only guesswork for me to say.
10377. A third? Of women and girls there might be fifty.
10378. And boys? About fifteen boys, or perhaps twenty.
10379. How long have you been in the employment? About four years now. That is this time; taking it altogether I have been about seven years.
10380. Have you been apprenticed to the work? No, never apprenticed. I learned the trade at Alderson's.
10381. Then you were at this trade some time before going to M'Murtrie & Co.? About twenty-one years.
10382. Always in this Colony? Always in this Colony.
10383. Are bootmakers somewhat addicted to the use of stimulants? Not more than other workmen I think; I think they will compare very favourably with other workmen.
10384. Then it is a calumny to say they drink as a class? Yes, as a class. I am one of those men who when they leave the workshop go straight home.
10385. You are not a total abstinent? No; I am a moderate drinker.
10386. That is when you want a drink you take it without going to excess, and know when to stop? Yes.
10387. Let us suppose that the majority of your companions are of the same kind; not total abstinent but taking their glass of beer, or if need be their glass of spirits or wines, and knowing when to leave it alone; looking upon them as a class of that character what do you think their views are with regard to the closing of public-houses on a Sunday. Do they consider the closing of those houses an undue violation of what is called personal liberty, or are they content with it in the interests of sobriety and morality? You will find the men vary. Some like myself, as moderate drinkers, would like the public-houses closed on Sunday.
10388. Are you one of that sort? Yes, I strongly protest against the opening of hotels on the Sabbath.
10389. In that protest of yours do you think the majority of your fellow workmen join? I really think if I took the majority in the shop, right through, they would be in favour of opening. I sounded some of them, and some would say, well, they thought the hotels ought to be opened on the Sabbath.
10390. Did they give any reason? Some say they do not think it is right for the working-man to do without his beer on the Sabbath. That is, some of them; but I think they are pretty well equalised, taking them right through the shop.
10391. The working-man can get his beer now, can he not? The man that wants his beer can get it very easily.
10392. But some men would not like to be parties to a violation of the law; some men would like to have it by right, not wrongfully. At present a man to get his beer on Sunday, if he does not belong to a club, has to get it wrongfully? There is this—a man may get it on Saturday night.
10393. But the answer to that is, that it is stale on Sunday? But I have spoken to some who say it is not stale. They get it and put it into one of those stone jars, and keep it that way.

Mr.
C. E. Smith.
20 Oct., 1886.

- Mr. C. E. Smith.
20 Oct., 1886.
10394. Have you ever used your local option vote? I have.
10395. May we ask how you have used it? I have always voted in favour of local option.
10396. Do you think public-houses are too numerous either in the city or where you reside? I do; but where I reside there is only one.
10397. Where is that? Summer Hill; and I think that is quite sufficient.
10398. As to the city and other parts, do you think public-houses are too numerous? I do; I think there are too many.
10399. Are you of opinion that the local option vote is sufficient as it is now, or would you extend it? I would extend it, I think.
10400. In what way; to prevent renewals? Something like this: At the present time, if I understand it, a publican is allowed three chances. That is, if he is fined to-morrow he pays his fine, and still goes on in the same hotel. Well I would object to that. I think if a publican is fined once it should be sufficient to cancel his license altogether; I do not think he is fit to have an hotel.
10401. But how would you bring the local option vote to bear on that particular class of publican. How would you bring the vote of the people to bear on a particular man? Could they not pass a law in Parliament to bear on that?
10402. But local option is not Parliament? No, it is the voice of the people. Of course you must get a majority of the people in favour of it, and then they would put men into Parliament who would soon pass a law in favour of it.
10403. That is very well in its way, but that is not what the advocates of local option want. One section of them, who are not full and absolute local optionists, want to have the renewals subjected to the vote of the people, and others would put the question of public-houses or no public-houses absolutely before the people and a majority of the people? Well I would myself always vote to do away with an hotel. For instance, in the borough where I live, if they were going to increase the hotels, I should vote against them.
10404. You say there is one there. Can the people sustain that one; do they require it? I think they do.
10405. Then you would not submit the bare question of public-houses or no public-houses to a majority of the people, because you seem to think that some public-houses are an absolute necessity? Yes, I think some are a necessity.
10406. But you say the judge of the necessity should be the people? Yes, it should go by a majority.
10407. Then, suppose in a municipality 500 voted against having any public-houses, and 480 voted in favour of them, would you prevent the 480 from having any public-houses at all. I ask you that question because I want to see whether you want to go by a bare majority or by a substantial majority? Well I would let the majority carry the day.
10408. Of course you see what the result would be? You would have no hotels in that borough.
10409. A man would have to take a long walk for a drink? That may be.
10410. But you would be content to take your chance? I am content to take my chance with the rest of them.
10411. Have you heard many complaints of the character of the drink vended in the city and the suburbs? I have had a little rum, and have left it for a day or two, and there have been little pieces of tobacco at the bottom of it. I have tasted it; I am not one who uses tobacco, and therefore I know it.
10412. Have you heard many complaints to the same purport from others? Yes.
10413. That was absolute adulteration? Yes.
10414. And do you not think that water is freely put into liquor? Yes, water is freely put into the rum.
10415. Have you heard that the spirits retailed here are often very new and raw—not sufficiently aged? Yes, some people complain of that. I have heard men who drink it to excess complain that they have had one or two, as they say, in a certain hotel and it has made them sick, though they could go and drink five or six at another place without the same effect.
10416. Do you believe them? Yes.
10417. It is often said that a man who is given to drink is never given to truth;—do you believe that? No; many men who drink are very truthful.
10418. Understand me: It is said that men who drink to excess never tell the truth with regard to their particular habits; two or three of their drinks may mean twenty or thirty;—do you believe that? No; I think many of them are truthful.
10419. With regard to intemperate men—would you believe that they are very intemperate when speaking on the subject of intemperance? Well, of course; men who drink to excess will try to make you believe that they do not drink to excess.
10420. However you say that these men have complained to you of the bad quality of the liquor? Yes.
10421. And you believed them? Yes.
10422. In your experience have you, in addition to the instance where you observed the tobacco, found the quality of the liquor inferior? Well I am not to say a good judge of liquor. I drink moderately; but I would not like to call myself a judge.
10423. Now, suppose it should be your misfortune to take to immoderate drinking, because it is often said that the moderate drinker runs a risk of becoming an immoderate drinker? Yes.
10424. Have you heard that? Yes; I have heard that.
10425. Suppose by some misfortune you, from being a moderate drinker, became an immoderate drinker, would you consider that you were barbarously treated if you found that the punishment of your offence of immoderate drinking took this form: that you were sent for treatment for six or nine months or a year to an inebriate asylum? Well of course I should have to work myself into that position before I could answer that.
10426. Consider yourself a drunkard; that you are proved before some magistrate to be a drunkard, and the magistrate orders you away for treatment for six or nine months? I do not consider that man would be badly treated if he were sent away for medical treatment; I think that would be doing him a good turn.
10427. Then you do not think the community would at all complain of the alteration of the present method, the present method being to send the drunkard to Darlinghurst Gaol amongst pickpockets and thieves and others of that sort? You are speaking of a man who would be gone in the head?

10428. No, I am not? Oh then, I think he would be badly treated if he were sent away for six or nine months.
10429. I am speaking of an habitual drunkard: Say it is his fifth or sixth time of being drunk; he is taken up drunk, and instead of being sent to Darlinghurst Gaol it is proposed to send him for six or nine months to some place where he would be restored—reformed? I would not like to see that.
10430. Then you would like to see him sent to gaol? I would rather see him treated as he is now.
10431. He is now sent to gaol? Yes, or fined; he pays a fine.
10432. But if he does not pay the fine he goes to gaol—do you not think that a degradation? Well, it is this way: A number of such men may have families depending on them. A working man may go and get drunk, and then not touch it for some time. What is that man's family to do for twelve months if he is sent away?
10433. It is evident you do not understand what I mean by habitual drunkard. I do not mean a man who gets drunk every six or nine months, and then pulls himself together and maintains his family; I mean the man who becomes a regular sot, loses his situation, and then is picked up in the streets and sent to gaol? Well I know men who get drunk on a Saturday, who get drunk weekly, yet at the end of the week they have always something to draw. That helps to sustain their families; but if a man of that kind were taken away from his family altogether, what is to become of the wife and children? They get a little from him now, but if he were taken away that would be taken away. If the Government or some institution were going to support the family while the husband is away I should say send him away for three months.
10434. Then your objection is on the score of the family; if a man had no family there would be no objection? No.
10435. If there were means of supporting the family whilst the man was in gaol would you say take him? Yes; I would say send him away for three months.
10436. For the same reason you mention, you would prevent a lunatic from being taken up? But in the case of a lunatic he may make away with himself or with some others.
10437. But is not a drunkard a lunatic? Some of them.
10438. And would you not take them away for some time? If the Government would make provision for their families. I know men who get drunk once or twice a week; I would call them habitual drunkards; but at the end of the week they have a certain amount of wages to take home, and that helps to sustain the family. I know men who may come to work, and be rather crooked, but at the end of the week they have something to draw, and they do not get the sack; but if they do they go somewhere else, and they have always something to keep their children out of the poor-house.
10439. There is a great deal in what you say; it is a difficulty no doubt; but if you could get over that difficulty? If you could get over that difficulty, and have the children looked after.
10440. You see nothing despotic or tyrannical in having that power exercised? Not if provision were made for the wife and family while the man was away.
10441. Do you not think the fact that the man might be taken away for that time would deter him from giving way to habits of excess? Well some men it would but others it would not. We have seen men go to gaol—habitual drunkards—and as soon as they come out of gaol you will see them drunk again. I have known men sent to gaol for months at a stretch, and the few pence they have when they come out have caused them to go to the public-house. I know one case in particular of a man who went to gaol for six months. He was boozed when he went in, and when he came out it was all the same.
10442. Mr. Colls.] Was he a married man? He was a married man.
10443. Who kept his family during the time he was in? Well, he had sons; but it often happens that the children are small, and there may be as many as six of them.
10444. Mr. Withers.] You have been over twenty years at the same business? Perhaps twenty-four or twenty-five years.
10445. Were you apprenticed in the ordinary way? No.
10446. Are many lads apprenticed? Very few.
10447. Do you know whether there are any restrictions put on them with regard to entering public-houses or taking drink? No; I do not think there are any apprentices in our place; there may be a few instances.
10448. You do not think there is any supervision of that sort by the firm over these lads, or with regard to their morals generally? No, I do not think so.
10449. Were the lads where you were working before fairly temperate? I believe they were.
10450. Have you noticed a greater tendency to drink among the lads now? Yes, some of them. I should fancy the boys when I was a lad were better than the boys are now; they were not so fast as the boys are now; they seemed a quieter lot of boys.
10451. Do you think drink has anything to do with it? I have never seen any of the boys under the influence of drink.
10452. President.] You mean at the factory? Yes.
10453. Mr. Withers.] You do not think drink has had anything to do with bringing about the alteration you notice? No, not among the boys; I do not know how they have been brought up.
10454. Have you ever heard your fellow workmen complain of drink finding its way into their homes through the grocer supplying it? No, nothing of that sort.
10455. You have stated that the bootmakers in the factory are a very temperate body? They compare favourably with any other body.
10456. Are they a temperate body of men? I think the majority of the men compare very favourably with any other body of workmen.
10457. Do they take an interest in politics? Some of them take a great interest in politics.
10458. You stated that you recorded your local option vote? Yes, in favour of local option.
10459. In favour of restricting the number of houses? Yes.
10460. And in favour of renewals being granted? Renewals of licenses—new hotels you mean?
10461. President.] No. You mean to renew those who have got licenses at the present time? I would renew the licenses to respectable men, who have not been charged under the Act with selling drink on the Sabbath.
10462. Mr. Withers.] Did you vote in favour of increasing the number? Of decreasing the number.
10463. Any more public-houses—you said "no" to that? Yes. 10464.

Mr.
C. E. Smith.
20 Oct., 1886.

- Mr. C. F. Smith. 10464. And you are in favour of renewals? Yes.
 20 Oct., 1886. 10465. Mr. Roseby.] You have known a number of the best workmen go to destruction through drink? I would not say the best workmen.
 10466. It is often said that the best workmen go to destruction through drink? I would not say the best workmen take to drink; as a rule they take very little.
 10467. But you have known a number of workmen go to destruction through drink? Yes.
 10468. And ruin their families? Yes.
 10469. Do you object to young women being employed at bars? Yes, I object to that.
 10470. Mr. Hutchison.] I understood you to say you would be in favour of allowing the people to vote on the whole question of drink or no drink in their midst? Yes, I would take the majority for it.
 10471. You are living at Summer Hill, where there is only one public-house? Yes.
 10472. Are you aware that there have been efforts made there to get another? Yes.
 10473. As the law now stands, even after the vote is recorded against an increase, the Magistrates have a discretionary power to grant licenses. Would you object to that? I object to that; I think they ought to stand by the voice of the people.
 10474. And an applicant should not be allowed to come again and again? No; I would only give him one chance; and a man who continues selling drink on the Sabbath I do not think is a fit man to have an hotel. I know a case where there was a man always on the watch at a telephone.
 10475. President.] A telephone? Yes; a man would be upstairs, and when a policeman came he would speak down the trumpet.
 10476. Mr. Withers.] Under the present law, though the local option vote is taken every three years, any person desirous of building a house with special accommodation in a special locality can apply to the Resident Magistrate, and if the building has a certain number of rooms the house may be licensed. Take Surry Hills, for example. Notwithstanding the vote has been taken there declaring that no more houses are required, any person getting up an elaborate plan and specifications, showing, say thirty rooms for a house in a particular locality, if the Magistrates consider the house necessary they have the power to grant a license? I would not give them the power after the voice of the people—after the people had objected.
 10477. Mr. Hutchison.] I do not remember whether the President asked you this: Have you any idea what the view of the working-men generally is on the question of local option; do you think the working-men are in favour of local option? Taking the working-men as a body I think they are in favour of it.
 10478. Of having a whole voice on this question? Yes, I think so.

Mr. William Graham called in, sworn, and examined:—

- Mr. W. Graham. 10479. President.] You have been for some time in the employment of the proprietors of the Sydney Morning Herald? About twenty-four years.
 20 Oct., 1886. 10480. As a compositor? As a compositor.
 10481. I suppose a very large number of men are employed there? Yes; there are over eighty compositors on the Herald besides fifty on the Echo and Sydney Mail.
 10482. I suppose compositors, machine-men, readers, and others there would be over 100? Considerably; about 250.
 10483. Are you a total abstainer, or a moderate drinker? I am a moderate drinker; I take a glass of ale occasionally.
 10484. We are anxious to know what is the prevailing view in the large industrial and manufacturing establishments in the city with reference to several questions lying within the scope of our inquiries as a Commission. One of them is what the prevailing view is with regard to the closing of the public-houses on the Sunday, which you know to be the present law. What do you think the prevailing view amongst your fellow-workmen is with regard to that subject—the closing of public-houses on the Sunday? Last night, in my discretion—but I should first say I am the Father of the Chapel.
 10485. What is the Chapel? The men form themselves into a companionship, and one over them conducts their meetings. Last night I thought I would obtain an opinion from the men, and I called them together. There were some fifty of them present, and I put this question to them: What was their opinion with regard to the opening of public-houses on Sunday; and I was surprised to see it was almost unanimously in favour of the public-houses being open for certain hours on a Sunday.
 13486. How many might there have been present on this occasion? About fifty, I dare say.
 10487. Compositors? All compositors.
 10488. I suppose most of these men live out of town? No, very few of them.
 10489. They live in the suburbs? Yes.
 10490. Most of the men live in the suburbs now? Yes, I think so.
 10491. Is there any part of the Sunday during which these men are at work in the office; necessarily we know that compositors have to do certain things in order that Monday's paper may be printed; does the compositor come to work before 12 o'clock on Sunday night—has he to work at any time on the Sunday, supposing the Sunday to begin at 12 o'clock on Saturday night and to end at 12 o'clock on Sunday night? Yes, he must come at 5 o'clock on Sunday night to get his work prepared.
 10492. Then he must come on Sunday? Yes. The work of the paper commences at about 7 o'clock in the evening, and he must come a couple of hours before that.
 10493. Then, I presume, he works right on into the night? Yes; sometimes until 4 o'clock.
 10494. Is that the reason of this general consensus of opinion: is it not that the compositor recognizes or rather feels the want of some establishment being open at which he can get refreshment after his work is done, or as he is coming to it, if he comes a long way? Or at supper-time.
 10495. At present he has either to do without that refreshment or get it on the sly? Get it on the sly—yes.
 10496. And then you think perhaps he feels it is better for him to get it legally than to get it illegally? Yes, I should think so.
 10497. No respectable man likes to be a willing lawbreaker;—do you think that the reason I have mentioned is why the compositors as a body wish to have the public-houses open on a Sunday? I think it is that they would like to have their refreshment.
 10498. As they are engaged in exceptional work? Yes.

10499. Suppose they did not have such exceptional work would they require the houses open on a Sunday—suppose they had no work to do? I could not say.

10500. The opinion you have got is —? Is a fact I obtained.

10501. Their opinion as they are? Yes, not my personal opinion.

10502. What is that? Well, I never go out on a Sunday to a public-house, but I know others do.

10503. But you go to your work on a Sunday? When it is necessary.

10504. You think, I suppose, that your opinion is a rational one? I think so. They think it would be better to have the houses open for an hour legally than to have to go in illegally.

10505. But would it be possible to keep the houses open to suit the compositors without keeping them open all night on a Sunday? I could not say.

10506. You are speaking of men who would be at work from 5 o'clock on Sunday evening until 4 o'clock on Monday morning, who need their supper, and perhaps refreshment after their supper—say those who go home at 2 or 3—what I say is without keeping the houses open all night you could hardly furnish those compositors with the refreshment they might consider necessary for them? I do not think the compositors in the office as a rule, look for much of that kind after their work is done.

10507. Do you think having the houses open between 7 and 8, or between 8 and 9, would be sufficient on Sunday? It would be only for a small percentage of the men, because the great bulk of the men do not go out, it is at supper-time they require refreshment.

10508. Would they require the houses open between 1 and 2, or during any other hour in the middle of the day? No, not more than anybody else.

10509. You refer to the city houses not the suburban houses? No.

10510. Have you ever exercised your local option vote? No, I have not; I should be in favour of it.

10511. Would you be in favour of extending local option—are you a ratepayer? No.

10512. Not in a municipality? No, I have no rate vote at all.

10513. Have you any opinions with regard to the question of local option? No; I think it is a very desirable thing that the inhabitants should have a voice in regard to the number of public-houses in their neighbourhood.

10514. As a class, I suppose, the typographers are very temperate? Well I think they are, I could not say they are not.

10515. Have you heard any complaint of the kind of liquor vended near your office? I have often heard men speak of the liquor as bad, but I cannot say where it came from.

10516. I suppose when you asked the question you did of your fellow workmen you did not ask about the hour of closing on business days—11 o'clock? Well, I did ask them that.

10517. What did they say about that? They thought the hours might be extended half an hour at night.

10518. That is to say, half-past 11? Yes.

10519. Is that the time they get away? They seldom get away at that hour.

10520. But it would be to enable them to get some refreshments at half-past 11? Yes.

10521. Was that the prevailing opinion—the opinion of the majority? Yes.

10522. Is 11 o'clock the supper-time of the men? Yes, but we altered the hour since the closing at 11 to a quarter to 11.

10523. Mr. Withers.] You stated that you were surprised to find the men were in favour of opening the public-houses on Sunday? Yes, such a very large majority.

10524. I was curious to know what created the surprise—had you heard them conversing about the matter before? Yes, and the men were so different that I thought there would be more variety of opinion among them.

10525. You have young men I suppose among the printers—men verging on manhood, as well as others who are family men? Yes, young men and married men.

10526. Do you think the majority of them would be young unmarried men? No, I do not think the majority would be.

10527. Have you any reason to suppose that the minority on the question of Sunday opening would be the men of more mature years? Yes.

10528. And in all probability men of families? Yes.

10529. Men who have settled down in life? Yes, and men who have formed opinions. But taking them altogether I have a very good opinion of the body altogether.

10530. Taking them altogether, you think they are men of independent thought, and men who take an interest in the general community? Yes.

10531. But you think the minority are men with families, and, if possible, more thoughtful than the others? Yes.

10532. Are persons engaged in your calling as temperate, as a body, as other men? Yes, I think so. Of course there are exceptions.

10533. You do not think their business leads them more than any other class of employés into a desire to drink? I think it does.

10534. The nature of the calling, and the irregular hours? Yes; the wear and tear of mind and body leads to the necessity for some stimulant.

10535. In other words, considering the temptations, they are more temperate than other bodies of workmen? Yes, possibly so.

10536. Mr. Roseby.] I suppose you think that the opinion expressed by your fellow workmen was more in the way of studying their own interests than those of the whole community; they were looking at the matter from a personal point of view? When I come to think of it I think every man would have voted personally.

10537. Did I understand you just now to say that you think the liquor traffic ought to be subject to popular control—that is, that the people generally ought to have a voice as to whether public-houses should exist or not;—you are in favour of that principle? Yes, I think so.

10538. Do you think this habit of drinking in public-houses a dangerous one? I do; I think it a most pernicious habit.

10539. And you have known a number of persons in your avocation go to destruction through drink? I have known a number of workmen go to destruction through night-houses.

10540. Have you known some of the best workmen go to destruction through these habits? Yes, in some cases.

Mr.
W. Granham.
20 Oct., 1886.

10541.

Mr. W. Graham. 10541. Are you in favour of the employment of barmaids? Not if it could be obviated; I do not think it is a proper place for a young woman—to be behind a bar.
 10542. You think the language and other characteristics of a public-house bar are such that it is not a proper place for a young woman? I do, but I do not see how it can be obviated.

20 Oct., 1886.

Mr. William Dunshea called in, sworn, and examined:—

Mr. W. Dunshea. 10543. President.] Are you also a compositor employed in the office of the Sydney Morning Herald? Yes.
 10544. How long have you been there? About forty-three or forty-four years.
 10545. Are you in charge of any department? No.
 10546. Are you a total abstainer? No.
 10547. I suppose you are what we call a moderate drinker? Well, I do not like that term; I am temperate.
 10548. You do not like the term moderate drinker? I do not think it applies; I can either take a drink or leave it.
 10549. I suppose the employment of a compositor is rather a peculiar one in this respect; that the hours of work are very long, and that the work is very wearying? Very wearying indeed.
 10550. And therefore a compositor would naturally look for perhaps more refreshment than persons of ordinary avocations? Yes.
 10551. Then one would expect to find a good many of them become very temperate men, and some who were moderate drinkers become addicted to drink? It has that tendency, no doubt.
 10552. But as a class we are told they are very temperate? They are temperate as far as the Herald office is concerned.
 10553. I suppose generally they are a very temperate class? Well taking into account the nature of their occupation.
 10554. In spite of the temptation? Yes.
 10555. I suppose they have to go out and get what they require? Yes.
 10556. I suppose on the subject of Sunday prohibition there is a difference of opinion among your fellow-workmen? There is a decided difference of opinion.
 10557. Are they in favour of the present law or against it? Against it, I think, as regards the restrictions.
 10558. What is their opinion with regard to this matter? On account of having to go to work on Sunday they would like the magistrates to give them a special permit to afford them an opportunity for getting refreshment at 11 o'clock at night, the time at which they leave off work for half-an-hour.
 10559. Do you mean give them a permit to open the houses generally? To give them an opportunity of getting refreshment at 11 o'clock. That is the hour at which we stop for half an hour for refreshment. What I mean is this: You might have noticed during the time this new Bill was under discussion in the hands of Sir Henry Parkes, Mr. Garrett observed that he thought it would be right to give printers and gardeners an opportunity of having the houses open for their accommodation.
 10560. But that was to have the houses opened generally? Mr. Garrett mentioned printers and bakers and gardeners, and Sir Henry Parkes replied that that might be left to the discretion of the magistrates, and that he would make some provision for it, but no provision was made.
 10561. An effort was made to have later licenses, but that was defeated, as it would have left the houses open to Jack, Tom, and Harry, and everybody? I would not have that.
 10562. But you mean to let special individuals from the nature of their occupations have an opportunity for getting needed refreshment? Yes.
 10563. That means licensing certain to get refreshment. You see how difficult that is. Would you have it done for certain houses? I would have the men to ask for a certain house to be open in the neighbourhood in which their work lay.
 10564. And to compel the house to be open? The proprietor would consent; you would first obtain the consent of the proprietor.
 10565. I am beginning to see what you mean; that on the application of the proprietor, backed by a certain given number of men having night occupations, they should have the privilege of having a house that would be named—it may be one or more houses—in a certain neighbourhood, open during certain hours of the night? Yes; not for hours but for one hour; we would give an hour.
 10566. Do you not see that what would suit the typographer might not suit the gardener? Then I would put the gardener under a new rule. Those men are on the road all night, and without shelter.
 10567. Those men can get nothing now, as the law stands, either on the Sunday or any other day after 11? No.
 10568. You think these men are fit objects for compassion? Yes; I think from the nature of their occupations both classes are.
 10569. Then you would say that to suit the gardener coming to market some place near the various markets should be opened for him? Yes.
 10570. And some place near the printing-office for the printers? Yes.
 10571. Are there any other class of persons who work long hours? There are bakers, but they are not large in number. The law should be in regard to numbers. If there are only some few it does not matter much; but where there is a large body of men, and they are compelled to be at work night and day—and in the case of the compositor there is the mind to be exercised as well as the body, and some leniency should be shown for that reason—I should look upon them as a special class, and because of their special employment there ought to be special legislation.
 10573. I was going to say that if it were not for the permit the house would be crowded out? No doubt.
 10574. All the refuse from other places would go there and hang about till morning? Yes, exactly. I wish to avoid getting what is wanted illegally. If a house were opened as I say, it would be almost on the same level as a man belonging to the Athenæum Club.
 10575. President.] Can the men get liquor at 3 or 4 o'clock? No; but before this law was passed I could name houses where you could get in at all hours. Now, going home at all hours of the night, the whole city city is at peace, and the new law, under those circumstances, is highly beneficial to the whole community. So that the law, as in existence, if properly carried out—it is carried out in regard to the night—but if it was carried out as regards the Sunday it would be wholly beneficial. But then it is not carried out. I have repeatedly, on a Sunday, noticed dozens of men coming out of public-houses, but the policeman is in uniform, and he sees nothing. What I would suggest is that special constables, without uniform, should be on duty to detect crime; that the doors of a public-house should be left open to a common constable, as well as to a sergeant, to enable him to get in.

10576. Mr. Withers.] Take the bakers. Of course they are a class of men distributed very much more than compositors. Suppose the Legislature afforded means for supplying refreshment to any large establishment like the Herald office, or suppose bakers were provided for, do you not think it would be a hardship on the publican for him to be called up at 3 or 4 o'clock in the morning? But I say that the publican must make the application in connection with those who want to get refreshment at that hour.

10577. Mr. Roseby.] If this special arrangement you speak of could be made, do you think the majority in your establishment are in favour of having the houses closed on Sunday and early in the week? I rather think that they would be.

10578. You yourself are in favour of keeping these places closed? I am, but I do not represent the opinion of the majority of the men.

10579. Are you in favour of giving people generally the control of this traffic? Decidedly.

10580. Do you think respectable young women ought to be employed behind a public-house bar? By no means; except perhaps, it may be, in the case of a father of a family bringing up children. And I would not have any of those upstairs decoy places.

10581. You are strongly opposed to them? Yes.

10582. Mr. Withers.] Are the lads in the Herald office bound as apprentices? Yes.

10583. Bound for a term? Yes.

10584. Is there any supervision, approaching paternal supervision, with regard to their conduct in relation to drink? Oh, I think so. In my experience for a number of years, they are very abstemious.

10585. Is there any clause in the indentures with regard to drink? Oh, yes; if there is no direct clause the meaning is embodied.

10586. Have there been many cases of lads who have grown up under your observation going astray afterwards through drink? No; as far as my knowledge is concerned, young fellows who have been brought up in the office have, on the whole, turned out to be very steady men.

10587. There have been very few who have gone astray? One or two; I might mention half-a-dozen, perhaps, in thirty years.

10588. You consider that, I suppose, a very small per centage? Yes.

10589. Mr. Colls.] I suppose you have heard a great deal of upstairs bars? Well, I have not had great experience of them. I have been told, and occasionally have gone in myself. I have seen and heard sufficient to induce me to believe that many of those public-houses would have had to close if it were not for this means.

10590. Would you be in favour of the bars being on the basement floor? Yes, under proper supervision; and also that clubs should not be allowed to be attached or connected in any way with public-houses.

10591. Would you have the same supervision over the printers as Mr. Graham has, or another kind? It is this way: There is in all large printing-offices what is called a chapel. It is just the same as in the Legislative Assembly, and they choose their head or speaker. We make our own laws, and the father of the chapel is elected half-yearly to make any representations in the name of the printers to Mr. Fairfax or others. He yesterday got the opinion of the men on these subjects. I expressed my opinion then, and express it now. I do not come here as a delegate.

10592. Mr. Graham said he was surprised to find such a large majority in favour of Sunday opening? Yes.

10593. Do you think the men in favour of Sunday opening were a majority of those of the most mature years and thought? No; I think the notice for us to attend here was so short that it could not be laid before the men and considered properly. A vote was simply taken. It was not properly "Are you in favour of so and so," and then voting, but it was "Hold up your hand."

10594. A fair number of the men were present? Yes.

10595. A full meeting? Not quite a full meeting.

10596. Did the minority represent what might be called the family men? I should hesitate to say. But I would like to qualify the answer to that. That is to say, when the meeting was called, the hour for commencing work was near, and the thing was hurried through and not argued. Usually before any decision is come to we express our opinion before a vote is taken, and in this particular case the vote was taken without discussion.

10597. President.] If there had been more deliberation do you think there would have been a different vote? I do not think so, but it might not have been so unanimous. They want this special privilege, and they will have it at all hazards.

10598. Mr. Withers.] I would like you to say whether the minority were men of more mature years and habits than the others, and settled down? I should say the younger portion of those present exhibited more desire than the older portion.

10599. The younger members of the body were in favour of opening the public-houses on Sunday? Yes.

FRIDAY, 22 OCTOBER, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,
T. COLLS, Esq., J.P.,
J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.,

A. HUTCHISON, Esq.,
G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.,
S. H. HYAM, Esq., J.P., M.P.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. John Davidson called in, sworn, and examined:—

10600. President.] You are in the employment of Mr. Flood, at Blackwall Stores? Yes.

10601. What is the nature of your employment? I am a wharf labourer; I do general work in connection with the lightering of wool.

10602. Have you been long in this employment? Four years.

Mr.
W. Dunshea.
20 Oct., 1886.

Mr.
J. Davidson.
22 Oct., 1886.

Mr.
J. Davidson,
22 Oct., 1886.

10603. How many men are employed, on an average, at Mr. Flood's? About 200.
10604. Is that the average? Yes.
10605. Is that all through the year? In some portions of the wool season we have over 300, but the average is about 200.
10606. I suppose their hours of work are limited to daylight; they do not work at night? Yes, we work a great deal at night; sometimes all night and all the following day.
10607. In shifts? No, right through.
10608. One man doing the work continuously? Yes.
10609. I am asking you this in order that we may know whether this particular class of labourer has a more exhausting occupation than is usual? Yes, I think they have.
10610. Have you had any opportunity of discussing the question of Sunday closing with your friends? Yes, very often.
10611. Shall we be right in supposing that you in any way represent the general opinion of Flood's employés? I think so.
10612. Are you yourself a total abstainer, or are you a moderate drinker—that is to say, do you take refreshment when you wish it? Yes, I take my drink; I am not an abstainer.
10613. Do you think that the opinion of wharf labourers in the same employ as yourself is in favour of the present law, which closes public-houses on Sunday, or would it be in favour of a relaxation of that law? I should say it would be in favour of a relaxation; I know the men are not in favour of the present law.
10614. Give us your own opinion, and, if you can, the opinion of the majority of your fellow-labourers? I think the law is a mistake because, in the first instance, a great deal of drink is got into homes on Saturday nights where there are families, and I think that is an injury to those homes. The drink is got in for Sunday. Many men, finding that they cannot get drink on Sunday, take too much on Saturday.
10615. I suppose you know that if you are so inclined you can get drink on Sunday? Yes, I am sure of it.
10616. Do you think the men would rather have the right to get the drink legally on Sunday? I think so.
10617. Do you think that is the opinion of the majority of the temperate men, the really moderate drinkers, in this employment? Yes, I do.
10618. We have been told that if a publican refuses drink on the Sunday to a customer, that customer in the future nearly always avoids that publican—not only on the Sunday but on every other day—and that the publican's business therefore suffers? Yes, I believe that is true.
10619. Is that the sort of thing you think you would do yourself? I believe it represents the views of the men as a rule.
10620. That is to say, that if the publican will not serve the men on Sunday, they leave him alone on the other days of the week? Yes.
10621. Do you think that is so to a large extent? To a very large extent.
10622. You think that if a publican were law-abiding then it would be at the risk of ruining his business? Well it would do him an injury.
10623. Then you say the majority of your people wish the houses to be opened for some hours on Sunday—for what hours? I should say from 9 to 11.
10624. That is before Divine Service? Yes, and from 3 to 4.
10625. That does not allow the labouring man to get his supper beer, that is if he takes beer at supper? I think the labouring man generally uses beer for the midday meal, between 12 and 1.
10626. Do you find fault with the closing at 11 o'clock on other days of the week? On Saturday night only.
10627. In what respect? I think the hour might be extended to 12 on that night.
10628. Do you think that, with this extension, there would not be a desire for further extension on the part of those who frequent public-houses? I could not say. No doubt some would require a further extension, but I think the change I have named would be satisfactory.
10629. And these changes are really asked for in the interests of temperate men who rarely exceed? Yes.
10630. You recognize the fact that the law should be made, not for the sot but for the temperate man? Of course for the temperate man.
10631. Do your men go very early in the morning to their work? 6 o'clock.
10632. Do they complain that the houses are not open early enough? Some may do so but I think they are open quite early enough.
10633. Do you think it is reasonable that a man should require a stimulant before his breakfast, say at 5 or half-past 5, before going to his work—do not you think that stimulants at that hour would rather disqualify him for his work, especially if it were upon heights or dizzy places? I do not think a drink at that hour is necessary.
10634. Then you think that the hour of opening is sufficiently early? Oh, yes.
10635. Are you well acquainted with any other countries outside of this Colony? I know Victoria, and I know the interior of this Colony. I have been a miner.
10636. How long is it since you were in Victoria? Seven years.
10637. Do you think the licensing system of Victoria, with which you were acquainted, kept the people more sober than the people are kept here by our Licensing law? I could not say that I saw any difference.
10638. I suppose you saw a great deal of Melbourne? I have seen it only for short periods, a fortnight, three weeks, or a month at a time.
10639. Were you among the wharves? No, I was not working. When I was in Melbourne I was there only on short visits.
10640. Speaking on behalf of your class do you not think that there are too many public-houses? Yes, too many inferior public-houses.
10641. About the wharves? I think there are too many in Lower George-street and at Miller's Point.
10642. I understood you to say that there were too many inferior houses? Yes.
10643. Then you would reduce the houses and raise the standard of good conduct? Yes, and of good accommodation.
10644. Have you heard many complaints of the character of the liquor retailed at these places? A great number.
- 10645.

Mr.
J. Davidson.
22 Oct., 1886.

10645. What is the nature of these complaints? Do people complain of the liquor being adulterated or of its being too new? They complain of its being adulterated—the rum and beer principally.
10646. Do you think that only the rum and beer and not whisky are adulterated? I could not say. I think that stuff is sold which is not rum at all, the other kinds of spirit are mixed with it.
10647. And is the favorite drink of the wharf labourer rum and beer? Yes.
10648. And it is in these drinks that they detect the inferiority? Yes, the quality varies very much according to the houses.
10649. Have you noticed any cases in which strong able-bodied men have been taken suddenly ill after drinking? After heavy drinking.
10650. But I mean in consequence of his having been supplied with a moderate quantity of adulterated or inferior liquor? I have noticed cases in which men have become intoxicated after taking one or two drinks.
10651. Were they temperate men? No, they were in the habit of taking their drink.
10652. You have noticed bad effects immediately traceable to inferior liquor? Yes, I have known it to create a great thirst.
10653. Are the rules against the taking of liquor in your establishment very stringent? Yes, we do not believe in it.
10654. It is dangerous to the wharf labourer that he should be engaged in work while under the influence of liquor? Yes; he not only endangers his own life but the lives of other men.
10655. So that you have very stringent regulations on the subject? Yes; a man is not allowed to bring drink on to the premises.
10656. And if he is seen under the influence of liquor he is sent home? Yes.
10657. I suppose a number of the wharf labourers have been sailors? Yes.
10658. They are mostly mariners, are they not? Yes.
10659. Then we gather from you that the wharf labourers as a body would ask for a relaxation of the Sunday prohibition law to the extent of having the houses open two hours in the morning and one in the afternoon? Yes.
10660. You do not work on Sundays? Occasionally.
10661. This relaxation would be for the houses where they resided, and as a rule they reside out of Sydney do they not? They are scattered all over Sydney; they live in Balmain, Leichhardt, Newtown, and other suburbs.
10662. The alteration of the law which they require would have effect in the suburbs mainly would it not? No; I should not say that it would apply to one particular section; you might say that it would embrace Sydney and the suburbs. A great number of the wharf labourers live in Sydney.
10663. Are many of your class occasionally in the hands of the police for being intemperate? A few, but not many, having regard to the numbers of the men; I should say not more than in any other class.
10664. Do you consider them, as a whole, a temperate class? Yes, I do.
10665. Are there many total abstainers among them? A good many.
10666. About what proportion—one-fourth? Not one-fourth; I should say about one-sixth.
10667. So that in your employment you may have fifty? We have not fifty.
10668. How many do you think you have? I do not think we have fifteen in our employment, but there are two or three temperance lodges in other parts of the wharves and they have a number of members in other employments. The wharf labourers as a class comprise about 2,000 men.
10669. I suppose you are a union man? Yes.
10670. Is it not a part of your rules that you have no benefits in sickness or any other contingency arising through drink? The union is not a benefit society in cases of sickness.
10671. Do you belong to any benefit society? Yes, to one.
10672. And have they not adopted a rule such as I have mentioned? Yes; for instance, if a man meets with an accident through drink he receives nothing.
10673. How will you reduce the number of public-houses in Sydney—are you a local optionist? I do not agree with local option; I think the publicans ought to be recompensed to a certain extent.
10674. How would you reduce the number of public-houses? Would you hold that a vote of the people could act directly upon them by way of reduction, or would you have the number reduced in some other way? I think it should be reduced by measurement, that is to say, by distance.
10675. You mean that the houses should not be of a less distance from one another than so many yards? Yes.
10676. I suppose you know Lower George-street? Yes.
10677. Is there not one place where nearly every house is a public-house? Yes; there are a great many houses at Miller's Point, two of them adjoin one another. There are four or five close together in one spot. There is another place in Campbell-street, near George-street, where there are six or seven hotels close together.
10678. Would you not like to have a vote in the reduction of those houses, or would you leave it to the licensing authorities to reduce them by ensuring that there were no houses within a certain distance of one another? I should like to have a vote as regards the measurement of the distance.
10679. You know that men are often punished by being sent to gaol for being drunk in the streets? Yes.
10680. Many men finding themselves unable to pay a fine go to gaol for so many hours or days. Do you think that is a reasonable kind of punishment for a man to endure? No, I do not.
10681. Now, suppose that it were your misfortune to be an habitual drunkard, and suppose it were the law that habitual drunkards should be taken from their families on the order of a magistrate, and, instead of being sent to gaol or fined, should be sent to an asylum or retreat for treatment for periods varying from so many months to perhaps even a year? I should be strongly in favour of that.
10682. Have you thought anything about it? I have.
10683. Do you think that the labouring classes would not resent such an interference with their personal liberty as is implied in sending a man away for six months? I do not think there could be any very great objection because such a drunkard as you described is of no benefit to any one, he is a nuisance to his neighbours and he is of no use to his family.
10684. But there is this objection, what is to be done with the family while he is away. Suppose he is the bread winner, how would you get over that difficulty? If he is the sort of man you describe he would be of no benefit to his family.

Mr.
J. Davidson,
22 Oct., 1886.

10685. We have been told there are many men who get drunk periodically, that is to say, from Saturday to Monday, and who earn sufficient during the intervals to sustain their families. Have you known cases of that sort? Yes.

10686. Don't you see that there would be a difficulty in dealing with these cases in the manner I have described? There might be.

10687. How would you propose to get over such a difficulty? I believe the family might be treated with by the employer.

10688. Then you would work a man during his confinement? I would make him support his family by work while he was in the Asylum.

10689. That would be if he were able to get work. A wharf labourer could do only ordinary manual work for instance, and there might be no other work available for him? That is so.

10690. Still you think the difficulty as to the family might be got over? I think the man might be punished, and at the same time kept to his work to a certain extent.

10691. Mr. Hutchison.] Are you quite sure that you express the opinion of the majority of the wharf labourers in Sydney when you say that they desire the Sunday opening of public-houses? I was speaking only of the employes at Flood's.

10692. Have you taken any means to ascertain the opinions of the men? I have heard what I say stated among so many.

10693. You guessed that there was a majority in favour of the step? I never counted them.

10694. But from hearing it said so often, you verily believe that a majority would like the Sunday opening? I do.

10695. You are strongly in favour of that step yourself? Yes.

10696. Do you know any good reason why those persons who take home drink on Saturday night should necessarily debauch their families? I don't know that they would necessarily do any injury, but the children get to the drink, and I think the practice causes a man to take more than he really would if he were permitted to go out and get a glass when he wanted one on Sunday. He takes home two or three quarts on one Saturday night, and on the following Saturday night he wants more, and so it goes on. His friends come round to see him on Sunday, and his home becomes a regular drinking house instead of a private dwelling.

10697. How much of that is theory, and how much actual knowledge? I have seen it, so that I know it exists.

10698. You know of some men who are, so to speak, groaning under this trial? They think very little of it. A quart or two of beer is nothing to them.

10699. According to you the men drink more when they can only get drink at certain periods than they would drink if they could obtain the liquor at all times? Yes, but I was thinking chiefly of the habit of drinking on Sunday.

10700. If a man takes too much on Saturday what guarantee have you that he will not take too much on Sunday if the houses are open? We have a guarantee to this extent, that the men would not be in the habit of going to these places in secret to get drink, as they do at the present time.

10701. You think it probable then that because they are restrained they kick against the restraint? Yes, and when they get into a place on the quiet they drink more than they would do if they were allowed to go in openly.

10702. Do you think a downright sober man would do such a thing? He would not go into a public-house at all.

10703. You call yourself a downright sober man, I suppose? No, I don't.

10704. I refer to men who take a drop of liquor because they like to do so, and who do not abuse it. Do you think that class of men violate the law on Sunday. Do you not think the men who do so are those who are given to soaking? Not altogether, I believe.

10705. You believe the sober, moderate drinker allows himself to be overtaken on Sunday from the fact that he is obliged to obtain drink on the sly? Yes; I believe he takes more when he takes the drink on the sly than he would take if the public-houses were legally open.

10706. Why do you suggest that the public-houses should be open between 3 and 4 on Sunday afternoons? It is the middle of the afternoon; a great many persons go for a walk on Sunday afternoon after dinner, and the working-classes have their dinner early.

10707. You think that if the number of public-houses is to be reduced, you would like to have a vote on the question? Yes, as regards the distance.

10708. Of course that pre-supposes that the people in a given locality will vote on the public-houses which are in that locality? I would not confine it to one portion of the city.

10709. Then you want an Imperial Act to fix a certain distance? Yes; that is what I mean.

10710. Are you in favour of the people having a vote to say whether there shall or shall not be any public-houses; and if the majority say they will have none, are you in favour of effect being given to their decision? I don't think a majority should rule in any one locality, because some localities would have more public-houses than others; there are so many different classes. Some localities would like to have a public-house every other door, and I should not care to see that state of things. I would apply a general rule to the whole city.

10711. Suppose a ballot-paper were placed in the hands of a voter in a given locality with these three questions:—1. Shall there be any increase in the number of public-houses. 2. Shall there be a decrease; or, 3. Shall there be no licenses granted at all. The community is to answer any one of the three questions; do you think that would be a fair ballot-paper? No; I believe in there being no further increase, but I would not agree to the question with reference to the reduction.

10712. Providing the houses were shut up, with compensation, do you think the three questions I have named would be fair? I think not.

10713. Have you ever been in the drink trade? No.

10714. What induced you to form your opinion with reference to the opening of public-houses later on Saturday night? I have gone round town late on Saturday, and I have seen a lot of butchers' and other shops open. These persons are compelled to work late; and when they have ceased working they are unable to obtain a drink; they are often working after 11 o'clock.

10715. Do you think that drink is very essential to man's life and comfort? If the Government grant licenses

Mr.
J. Davidson.
22 Oct., 1886.

licenses for the making of beer, and for the distilling of spirits, I don't think that persons should be punished for using it.

10716. But supposing none of these licenses were granted, do you not think it would be a gain? The drink would be made privately if you did that.

10717. Would it be a gain to the community? No; I don't think it would be a gain.

10718. You think that would be less gain than there is by the making, selling, and drinking of alcohol? I don't know that there is much gain; I think that the good and the evil about balance.

10719. You think that there is as much good as there is evil? Yes; I think there is quite as much good among those who drink, as there is in the temperate section of the community.

10720. Mr. Roseby.] You do not think that drink is really necessary to enable a working-man to do his work? No.

10721. Have you known many working-men—good-hearted fellows—who have gone wrong through drink? I have known a few.

10722. How many years have you been here? Twenty-seven.

10723. Have you known many young men go to the bad through drink? Yes; I knew a few in the Albury District were ruined through drinking Colonial wine.

10724. Not lumpers and wharf labourers? The lumpers I have known who have gone wrong through drink have been chiefly hardened old men. They have been at sea during the greater portion of their lives, and you may say that they were thoroughly lost. I have known a few of these persons go quite wrong through drink.

10725. There are not many young men engaged in your work I suppose? No; a man requires to be thoroughly set and strong.

10726. As you want to limit the number of public-houses, I suppose you regard the public-house business as being a dangerous one? To a certain extent.

10727. You regard it as being different to any other kind of trade? In the case of other trades competition does good.

10728. But you think that in the drink trade it does not? No.

10729. Do you not think that the more facilities persons have for taking drink, the more they will take? No; I should not say so.

10730. Why do you wish to lessen the number of public-houses? So that the class of house may be improved, and there may be better accommodation.

10731. Do you mean accommodation in the shape of food and that kind of thing? Yes; and also in regard to beds.

10732. Mr. Withers.] You have a Wharf Labourers' Society;—is any liquor admitted during the deliberations of that body? Not that I am aware of—not in the union room. If it is done at all it must be done slyly.

10733. I suppose it is a rule that the office-bearers are fairly temperate men? Yes.

10734. It would be a disqualification to them if they were found to be intemperate? Yes; if they made any mistakes they would be dismissed.

10735. Unless they were popular men? No; I think they would be dismissed under any circumstances.

10736. That has not occurred I suppose? I knew a man who used to take too much, who was at one time one of the delegates.

10737. Do you hold your meetings at an hotel? No; at St. Bridget's schoolroom, Kent-street.

10738. Is there not an office in connection with the Seaman's Union? There is a room in the Sydney Marine Benefit Society's hall which we use as an office.

10739. Have you heard many men complain about their wives becoming intemperate? Yes.

10740. By getting drink from the grocer's? No; not from the grocer's. The complaints I have heard on this head were against the publicans who gave them drink. In many cases it is given to the children.

10741. Do you think it right that an infant or a growing child should be sent to a public-house? I am greatly against a child going to a public-house for drink, a female child especially.

10742. You think there should be a provision in the law to prevent persons under a certain age from entering the bar of a public-house under any pretext whatever? Yes.

10743. Do you not think the age at which drink is supplied to young persons is fixed too low? Yes, I think it is.

10744. Would you extend it? Yes, I would make the age from 18 to 20.

10745. And would you make the age different as regards the other sex? Yes, I would make it 25.

10746. Mr. Colls.] What part of Albury were you staying at? I was working at the 9-mile diggings near Albury.

10747. Have you not heard of the people there drinking something else besides Colonial wine? I am not aware of it.

10748. Have you not heard of white spirit being sold? A spirit was sold which some of us used to call croton oil.

10749. In what part of the city are you living? Near Francis-street, Park-lane, near Hyde Park.

10750. Is there much drinking on Sunday in that neighbourhood? Very little.

10751. Then how do you judge of the extent to which the law is broken on Sunday? By going out for a walk on Sunday morning towards Woolloomooloo, Moore Park, and Pymont.

10752. Have the houses near the wharves more than one bar, or are they confined to one? A few of them have two bars.

10753. If you had been a publican you would not have been ashamed to answer any questions which have been asked here to-day, and you would not have been offended? Not in the slightest.

10754. Mr. Withers.] Do you think the wives and growing up children of the men, who desire to have the public-houses open on Sunday, would vote in favour of it if they were polled? I could not say.

10755. Do you think that the majority of the men who would go to the houses on Sunday would return to their homes in such a condition as to contribute to the happiness of the family circle—I am referring now to the class of persons who must have a little drop on Sunday, and who think that they cannot possibly be without it? I believe it would be a benefit to have the houses open on Sunday.

10756. But do you think that the wives and families of the men who would desire to frequent the houses on that day would not prefer that they should be closed? I don't think so. If a man is inclined to get drunk

Mr.
J. Davidson.
22 Oct., 1886.

drunk he will do so, there is no doubt about that, and many women would prefer a man going out on Sunday and getting a drink when he required it, to his having a lot of people in the house drinking up the large quantity of beer which he now gets in on Saturday night.

10757. You think that if a man had his glass of beer on Sunday he would be more sociable and contented—you think that that is the point of view from which the wife would regard the question? No, not exactly that. I think she would prefer the opening of the houses on Sunday to the getting in of the drink on Saturday night.

10758. Do you not think that, in spite of the alteration of the law enabling him to get drunk on Sunday, the working man would also get it in on Saturday night? I don't think so.

10759. Mr. Colls.] Has it come to your knowledge that any wives have taken to drink in consequence of liquor being brought into the house on Saturday night? Yes; I know of one case.

10760. Mr. Hutchison.] Are you a married man? Yes.

10761. Mr. Hyam.] Do you not think that the habit of taking grog home on Saturday night has caused women, who would otherwise have been sober, to become intemperate—that is to say, they get into the habit of taking drink by degrees until they become absolutely intemperate? Yes.

10762. Do you recollect the provision of the old law with reference to the opening of houses on Sunday? No.

10763. Do you find that you generally get bad grog in the inferior houses in Sydney? I believe in some cases it is always so.

10764. And you get a far better kind of liquor you think at the larger hotels? Yes.

10765. Are you a fair judge of liquor. I suppose you know when you get a good glass of beer or a bad glass of grog? I imagine so.

10766. It has come to your knowledge that bad liquor is sold in the city? Yes.

10767. Very indifferent liquor? Yes it is.

10768. Do you find that the teetotallers at Flood's work as well as the moderate drinkers? I do not think the total abstainers are so good.

10769. You think the moderate drinker is the better man of the two? In cases where I have worked side by side with total abstainers I have found that as a rule they are not as good men as moderate drinkers.

10770. It is your opinion that when a man is tired out, say with working in the hold of a ship, a glass of grog is a good thing for him to take as a sort of pick-me-up? I would not say that it would be of much benefit to him, but I don't think it would do him any injury. I see no reason why he should not take it after work, but I don't like the idea of his taking it during work hours.

10771. I am brought into contact with wharf labourers daily; I employ some of them. My business lies on the wharves. You know I suppose as a matter of fact that there is a great temptation for wharf labourers to drink, especially when ships are discharging liquor upon the wharves and the gaugers are about. You know I suppose that the liquor is frequently left there and that there is every facility for obtaining what is called a cheap drink sometimes. Having regard to this circumstance do you think that the wharf labourer is inclined to drink more than any other class of labourer? The men who go round with the gauger are not wharf labourers.

10772. But the wharf labourers are tempted to drink, and you think that considering their temptation they are moderately temperate? Yes, as a rule the men who hang about the gaugers are not wharf labourers.

10773. But the bonâ fide wharf labourers could as soon obtain a drink from these gaugers as could any of the other men to whom you refer? In many cases they could wade in it, so to speak, if they chose.

10774. They have also other opportunities of drinking; for instance they are frequently shouted for if they care to take a drink. You find I daresay that this is a common occurrence? Yes, and I think they withstand the temptation very well.

10775. Your knowledge of the wharf labourer induces you to believe that he is as temperate as most labouring men or mechanics? Yes, on the average he is.

10776. Do you think that drink is on the increase or on the decrease among the working classes? I don't think it is on the increase, I believe it remains about the same.

10777. President.] Do you think the labouring man takes more or less liquor according as times are more or less prosperous? I don't think so.

10778. You think there is a general average? Yes, but I understand that bushmen as a rule take more drink when they have plenty of money.

10779. What class do you consider is open to the greatest temptation to take liquor? I should say the wharf labourers.

10780. What class gives way most to the temptations of drinking? I noticed when I was among the miners that they were very much given to drink; miners and smelters I think give way most.

10781. Do you refer to coal-miners? No, to alluvial and quartz-reef miners.

10782. Mr. Hutchison.] And it is your deliberate conviction that a man who is a total abstainer is a worse man than another? That is not what I said. I said that when I had been working side by side with them I do not find them as good men as others.

Mr. George Sayers called in, sworn, and examined:—

Mr.
G. Sayers.
22 Oct., 1886.

10783. Mr. Hyam.] You are a wharf labourer? Yes.

10784. Where do you work? At Mr. Flood's.

10785. Have you been there long? About seven seasons.

10786. Are you a constant hand or an occasional hand? An occasional hand.

10787. Are you a total abstainer? No.

10788. You take a glass now and then? Yes, I do.

10789. You do not find that it interferes with you in any way as a working man? No; it does not affect me in any way.

10790. Are you married? No; I am single.

10791. Are you aware of the fact, that in consequence of public-houses being closed on Sunday workmen who like their glass of grog are in the habit of taking it home on Saturday night for use on Sunday? I know that they do.

10792.

Mr.
G. Sayers.
22 Oct., 1886.

10792. And are you aware that in consequence of this habit of taking home grog the wives acquire the habit of drinking with their husbands? Yes.
10793. Women who were otherwise temperate have perhaps become fond of liquor? Yes.
10794. You are in the habit of visiting public-houses occasionally to get a glass of grog? Yes.
10795. Do you think that some houses sell better grog than others? Certainly.
10796. Have you ever come across any inferior liquor? I am not much of a judge as to whether the liquor is good or bad, so long as it is wet.
10797. I suppose there are total abstainers working in the same place as yourself? Yes.
10798. Do you know any of these men personally? I know one.
10799. Is he a good workman? Yes.
10800. He can do a good day's work with any one, and yet he never takes any grog? Yes.
10801. Suppose you had been at work all day and were knocked up, would you consider a glass of grog or a glass of beer when you knock off work as being beneficial or injurious? I do not think it would be injurious.
10802. Do you think it does you good? Yes.
10803. In what way? When I have been wet through I have sometimes taken a glass of brandy, and I think it has done me good.
10804. But I am talking of fatigue after a hard day's work—do you consider that a glass of grog is beneficial then? Yes.
10805. Do you think that the wharf labourers as a rule are temperate men? A number of them are drunkards.
10806. Confirmed drunkards? Yes.
10807. Do you think that the habit of taking drink has increased or decreased lately among working people? I think it has increased.
10808. You think some of the working people are not so steady as they used to be? Yes.
10809. Mr. Hutchison.] What is the general opinion of the lumpers with whom you are acquainted as to the Sunday opening. Suppose a vote were taken, do you think the men would be in favour of opening the houses on Sunday? I think so.
10810. For any particular hours? Well, say from half-past 12 to 3 o'clock; from after dinner to about church time.
10811. You are quite sure that that is the feeling of the majority of the lumpers? Yes, I think so.
10812. Have you talked with them at all about the matter since you knew that you were coming here? I have said nothing to them.
10813. Do you think that there are too many public-houses? A great many too many.
10814. Would you let people in given municipalities vote for the reduction of the number? Yes, I think I would.
10815. Would you take the vote of the people as to whether the houses should be closed altogether? I should not like to shut them up altogether.
10816. You would like a few to remain? Yes.
10817. Supposing there are 800 in the city and suburbs, would you consider 400 enough? Plenty.
10818. Do you think that drink is essential to your being able to work? No.
10819. But you enjoy a glass? Yes.
10820. Mr. Roschy.] You consider a public-house business a dangerous business? I do.
10821. You have known many men go to destruction through drink? Any number.
10822. You think there has been an increase of intemperance among workmen of late years? Yes.
10823. Have you known any young men go to the bad through drink? I think that most of them who do so are young.
10824. Do you think that the age at which young men can be supplied with drink is too low? A great deal too low.
10825. At what age do you think they should arrive before they can obtain drink at a public-house bar? I think not before they are 20 years of age.
10826. Do you think young women should be allowed to serve behind bars? No.
10827. You do not think they are fit places for respectable women? No.
10828. You do not think that children should be supplied with drink for their parents? No.
10829. You would not allow a child to enter a public-house under any circumstances? I would not.
10830. And if public-houses exist they ought to be held under very severe restrictions, and to be very closely watched? Yes.
10831. Mr. Colls.] To whom do you refer when you refer to young men going wrong through drink? Not to any class of young men in particular.
10832. You do not allude to young men who are working do you. I suppose you allude to the larrikins? Yes.
10833. Have you a favourite house to which you go to obtain your drink? No.
10834. You take it as it comes? Yes. I have no particular house.
10835. How long have you been in the Colony? Since 1868.
10836. Have you been upon the wharves ever since? I have been at sea.
10837. President.] Have you ever had any complaints from your fellow workmen as to their having been intoxicated suddenly? Yes, I have heard some of them say so.
10838. By reason of the character of the liquor supplied? Yes.
10839. Do you think that their becoming intoxicated was owing to the quantity or to the quality of the drink? More from the quantity I should think.
10840. Do you think that it is the practice in the houses down by the wharves to supply the men with bad drink? I believe that in plenty of houses they do so.
10841. I suppose the wharf labourer knows when he gets good drink? Yes.
10842. And he goes to the houses where he gets it? Yes.
10843. You work very late hours sometimes, do you not. Sometimes day and night? Yes, when we are busy.
10844. Do you think the hour of 6 o'clock in the morning is early enough for the houses to open, so far as the convenience of the wharf labourers is concerned? Plenty.
10845. Do you think it is right that they should be supplied with liquor as they go to work. Do you think they want it? No, I do not.
- 10846.

- Mr. G. Sayers, 22 Oct., 1886.
10846. Do you think it does a man good to have a glass of rum in him when he is up attending to a chain or something of that sort? No, I do not.
10847. You do not think it is necessary for the sake of the wharf labourers that the houses should be opened earlier than they now are? No.
10848. Do you think the houses should be opened later at night for the supply of liquor to men of your class when they are fatigued by working late?
10849. I suppose they sometimes work as late as 12 o'clock. Should they be supplied with liquor after 12? No, I do not think so.
10850. You are not allowed to take liquor on the wharf premises? No, that is not allowed.
10851. I understood you to say that you thought it not a bad thing to take a little liquor after work? Yes.
10852. And you often work later than 12 at night? Sometimes all night.
10853. Mr. Colls.] Can you get your beer on Sunday? I have often tried, but I have not been able to get it.

MONDAY, 25 OCTOBER, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,
J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.,

A. HUTCHISON, Esq.,
G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Daniel O'Connor called in, sworn, and examined:—

- Mr. D. O'Connor, 25 Oct., 1886.
10854. President.] You are in the employment of Anthony Hordern & Sons, at the Haymarket? Yes.
10855. In what capacity? As an assistant.
10856. At the counter? Yes.
10857. In what department? In the Manchester department.
10858. How long have you been there? About five years.
10859. Are you yourself personally a total abstainer? I am a teetotaller.
10860. Belonging to any association? The Sons of Temperance.
10861. How many are there in the employ of Messrs. Hordern at the Haymarket? I should think we have 400 at least.
10862. Do you mean on the average day by day? I could not say exactly, but I should think there would be about 400.
10863. What are the hours of employment? From half-past 8 in the morning until 6 o'clock at night.
10864. Every night? Excepting Saturday; the hours are then from half-past 8 o'clock until 10 at night.
10865. Do the employees have their meals on the premises? Yes.
10866. If they wish it they have beer? No.
10867. It is not allowed? Not on any account.
10868. They are not allowed to take any liquor on the premises? Yes. Any person found bringing in liquor or taking liquor during work hours is fined, and after several fines there is the penalty of instant dismissal.
10869. Are not the men allowed to go out? Not for the purposes of obtaining drink. They may go out for some particular business of their own. They can get leave to go out occasionally.
10870. I am told that you sell almost everything at your establishment at the Haymarket? I think so. We sell soft goods, hardware, boots and shoes, bedding, crockery, glass; in fact almost everything.
10871. The work of a salesman is, I suppose, rather of a sedentary character? It is.
10872. Taking them as a whole do you consider the employees a sober class? In our establishment I consider that they are sober. Of course there are a few exceptions, but as a whole I think they are very steady.
10873. Do you consider that as a class they require special privileges or treatment at the hands of the Legislature in regard to the Licensing law; are the hours of opening early enough for their requirements? Plenty.
10874. Are the public-houses closed too early for them at night, or is the hour of closing suitable? The public-houses are open hours after they leave their business.
10875. There is no hardship then in the 11 o'clock closing hour so far as your employees are concerned? I do not think so.
10876. And what would be true of Anthony Hordern & Sons would be true of the other large establishments of the kind? I think so.
10877. Of Farmer's, for instance? Yes; all houses giving the same employment.
10878. Have they the same hours at these places? I think they have different hours in the other shops; I fancy they leave between 1 and 2 in some of the other places. I do not think they take lunch on the premises.
10879. There is nothing in an establishment of that kind requiring any alteration in the existing hours of closing public-houses? I do not see how there can be.
10880. As you know, we are not supposed to allow any drink to be sold on Sunday. Is there any reason why, in the case of the employees of Anthony Hordern & Sons, there should be any relaxation of that law. Is the nature of a shopman's employment such as to induce him to require stimulants on a Sunday? I do not think they are necessary. I know I do not require them myself, and I do not see why others should.
10881. I suppose you have been for a long time a total abstainer? About twelve or thirteen years.
10882. Do not you think the climate here is sometimes so relaxing as to make people resort to stimulants? I was at one time under that impression, but I have since found that I could do without them.
10883. When you were under that impression did you give way to it? Well I used to take my glass.
10884. But now you find that you are better without it? Yes.
10885. And you do not find that the climate has such an effect upon you as to make stimulants requisite? No.
10886. I suppose a great many of your people are in the habit of taking stimulants? Yes.
10887. And does it necessarily follow that when taken in moderation spirits disqualify them for the performance

Mr.
D. O'Connor.
25 Oct., 1886.

- formance of their duties? I have peculiar ideas upon that point. Some men would call six glasses drinking in moderation, others would call two glasses drinking in moderation, but I do not think they are competent to transact their business as it ought to be transacted if they take even two glasses.
10888. If a shopman were to take half a pint of English beer with his dinner would you think him disqualified? I do not think it would disqualify him if he took his drink with his meal in that way.
10889. Or if the same man took a glass of good Colonial wine under similar circumstances would that disqualify him? I do not think so.
10890. Then, although you are a teetotaler you believe that there is such a thing as temperance in liquor, that is to say, not temperance according to the capacity of a man's stomach but real temperance? I think a man is better without even one glass taken in the way to which you refer. I think he would be better up to his business if he did not take that glass.
10891. You find good employees who have been accustomed to have their midday glass of beer or wine? Yes, men of that description have often come to us.
10892. But you think they would be better without that glass? Yes.
10893. Have you not met with people who are able to take one glass and then abstain from taking any more? I do not think I have. I have frequently noticed that if a person takes one glass he wishes to get a second. I have found that to be the case. There is a kind of craving which increases.
10894. Would there not be a craving on the part of those who have been accustomed to take liquor in that way if they were to take none at all? Yes, for a time.
10895. Have you an excess of public-houses in the neighbourhood of your establishment? Yes, I think there is no necessity for half the number. The houses are a very short distance apart from each other.
10896. At too short a distance for the requirements of the traffic? Yes, there are too many for the traffic.
10897. Do you consider a public-house in that part of the town to be necessary—you know you must take the average of the community; they are not all teetotalers? I think it is necessary to have plenty of accommodation as regards food and bedding.
10898. But you do not think it is necessary to supply drink? No.
10899. This being your opinion, how would you reduce the number to what you would consider a fair proportion? I should like to see a fewer number of small houses and more better class hotels.
10900. By what means would you obtain them. Do you believe in local option? Yes.
10901. Have you a vote now? I have.
10902. Have you exercised it? I did not do so the last time.
10903. But you are a believer in local option? Yes.
10904. Then you would reduce the number of public-houses to the limit you think necessary by means of local option? Yes.
10905. Do you lose many of your fellow employees through intemperance? Since I have been there they have lost a good many.
10906. Do you think 10 per cent.? I do not think so many. Hardly 5 per cent.
10907. Sometimes they lose their time do they not? Yes. They have opportunities of asking leave to go away for a day or half a day. If a man is away from business his time is stopped.
10908. Do they often lose their time on Monday? It is not often on Monday. The men are always obliged to be there on Monday. It sometimes happens on Saturday.
10909. Have you noticed an increase in the habit of intemperance among females in your employment? I could not say; I have not observed it.
10910. What do you think is the opinion of your employees with reference to the closing of public-houses on Sunday? I have not heard them say, but I believe that they would wish to have it done.
10911. That is to retain the existing law? Yes.
10912. They do not want the houses opened? I think not.
10913. Can you also say whether they require any alteration in the hours on the business days of the week? No.
10914. Mr. Hutchison.] In addition to giving people power to reduce the number of public-houses in a given locality, would you also let the majority say whether any public-houses should or should not exist? I would, undoubtedly.
10915. Mr. Roseby.] You are an old citizen? Yes.
10916. How long have you been in the Colony? I went to school with the Right Honorable W. B. Dalley. I afterwards went to Victoria, and remained there some years.
10917. As an old citizen, have you noticed an increase in intemperance among the young people of the community, not only at Hordern's but generally? I have, unfortunately; I have seen a great deal of it.
10918. Do you not think that publicans should be prohibited from supplying persons with drink until they reach mature age? I do; it would have been far better if that had been the law in the past.
10919. What age would you fix? About 18 I should say.
10920. You think that a majority of the employees of Anthony Hordern & Sons would favour absolute Sunday closing? I have not talked with them upon the question, and I cannot speak definitely as to what their views may be, but I do not think the whole of them are in favour of keeping public-houses closed altogether on Sunday.
10921. Do you think that most of the employees of Anthony Hordern & Sons would like to have the houses opened on Sunday? I am afraid so.
10922. Do you mean for their dinner beer, or something of that sort? That is a question I cannot answer.
10923. Have you discussed this question with them? I hear them speaking about it at the dinner-table almost every day. Some of them would like to have the houses open all day long.
10924. But the more moderate of them? I suppose they would be satisfied if the houses were open for a part of the afternoon.
10925. Mr. Withers.] I suppose the class you refer to would not object to the houses being open all night long? No.
10926. Mr. Roseby.] But I am speaking of the majority of the sober, well-thinking employees of Anthony Hordern & Sons? I think the majority are not in favour of keeping the houses closed on Sunday.
10927. Do you think publicans should be permitted to employ young women as barmaids? I do not think it is right to the women. There are evils attached to it.
- 10928.

- Mr. D. O'Connor.
25 Oct., 1886.
10928. I suppose you regard drink as a terrible curse to humanity? I do.
10929. From your long experience and observation you think the public-house business is a dangerous one? I do.
10930. You think that the law dealing with public-houses ought to be very restrictive? I do.
10931. Do you not think it would be well if the houses were closed earlier than 11 o'clock at night? I think it would be better if there were no public-houses at all.
10932. Speaking in the interests of the moral well-being of the community, do you think it would be wise to close the houses earlier than 11 o'clock? I do not see what you would do by that. If you were to close the houses at 10 o'clock they would still sell drink.
10933. But was it not wise to change the hour from 12 to 11? I think it was very wise.
10934. Then would it not be wise to close the houses earlier still? I do not know, there are so many interests to be considered.
10935. Do you think it would be wise to close the public-houses altogether on election days? I think so.
10936. You think it would prevent a great deal of corruption and stupid voting? I think it would stop it in a certain measure.
10937. What do you think of the general conduct of the public-houses now, compared with what it was twenty years ago? I have been away from Sydney a long time, but, speaking of the last twenty-three years, I think there has been a great improvement in the hotels; I think there is a decided improvement.
10938. In accommodation? Including all that sort of thing.
10939. What do you think of the drinking habits of the draper's assistants as compared with their drinking habits twenty years back? Comparing them as a class with what they were then I think they are very much improved.
10940. Do you think the shortening of the hours of labour has tended to give them to some extent more interest in their homes? I think it has had a slight influence in that way.
10941. Seeing that drapers have very long hours, it has occurred to me to ask you whether they resort much to picnicing on Sunday, and, if so, if there is much drink consumed by them on these occasions? I do not think Sunday picnics are carried out among the draper's assistants to any great extent. If they go out in small parties I suppose they take their hamper with them.
10942. Has it ever come to your knowledge that drink has been introduced into homes through the agency of grocers, and that wives and the young members of families have thereby become addicted to intemperance? I have never known such a thing.
10943. It would be a detriment to a draper's assistant in a respectable establishment like yours if he were to have the smell of drink upon him in business hours? It would be very objectionable.
10944. It would prejudice his prospects of promotion? It would affect his position, because it would be very unpleasant to customers.
10945. You have said that a number of persons of your own acquaintance are in favour of having hotels opened on Sunday for a limited period; do you think most of the wives of these men would vote for it? I imagine that three-fourths of them would say "No."
10946. And would that apply to the growing-up, intelligent children? I think so.
10947. I suppose you think they are entitled to an opinion on a question of this kind? I think the wives ought to have some persuasive influence over their husbands.
10948. Have you any apprentices in connection with your business? None under indenture.
10949. You have a number of lads? Yes.
10950. Is there anything approaching paternal supervision over their drinking habits when they have a disposition to drink? There is no opportunity for young people to drink there, unless they bring the drink in themselves.
10951. If they give any signs in the morning of having taken any drink over-night I suppose it would go against them? I have never noticed anything of the sort among the young people.
10952. President.] Do you think the enforced abstinence from beer or other stimulant during business hours has a tendency to make the draper's assistant resort to public-houses after these business hours? I think it has. Directly he leaves the shop he makes straight for the public-house.
10953. Mr. Hutchison.] Would that be the class who would be likely to go to a public-house then even if they got their beer for dinner? Yes.

Mr. Robert Melhuish called in, sworn, and examined:—

- Mr. R. Melhuish.
25 Oct., 1886.
10954. President.] You are an employee in the establishment of Anthony Hordern & Sons, at the Hay-market? Yes.
10955. You have been there some time? Five years.
10956. In a responsible position? I am a draper's assistant, but I have had charge of a department at times.
10957. Are you well acquainted with your fellow-employees? Yes, with those in the same department as myself.
10958. We are anxious to know what the prevailing opinion is among the intelligent shopmen and shop-women employed at Hordern & Sons on certain subjects within the scope of our inquiry. Do you think that the employees of Hordern & Sons acquiesce in the Sunday closing? I do not think the majority do.
10959. You think the majority would like to have the houses opened? Yes, at a certain time.
10960. At what time? About the same time as in England—that is, from 1 to 3, and from 6 or 7 till 10.
10961. Are most of your employees English? I could not say.
10962. Do you think their habits have been formed by residence in England? The principal portion, I should say, but I could not vouch for it.
10963. Have you any reason to think, from your conversation with them, that their opinion is what you have stated it to be? That is how I came to know it.
10964. You have not conversed with them immediately before coming here? No; I knew nothing about it until Saturday night. What I have just told you is the result of my own thoughts, and conversations I have had with a certain portion of the men.
10965. Are they not as a rule a sober class? They are.
10966. We have been told by a previous witness that drink is rigidly prohibited at Hordern's? So it is.
10967. Do you think the prohibition of drink during the business hours of the establishment makes the employees employees resort after business hours to the public-house; does he as a matter of fact go there? As far as my knowledge goes, those who are in the habit of taking a glass of beer are no sooner out of the place than they go and have one.

Mr.
R. Melhuish.
25 Oct., 1886.

10968. Perhaps they would indulge that propensity whether they had drink at Hordern's or not. Suppose these men had a glass of beer at their lunch, or a glass of Colonial wine, or some not very intoxicating beverage, do you think they would still resort to the public-house afterwards? I think they would.

10969. So that you think that the total abstinence from intoxicating beverages enforced by the firm has not effect one way or the other upon them? It has an effect in one way; they know that if they go out to take a glass of ale they are liable to be dismissed.

10970. Whether there are signs of intoxication upon them or not? Just so; if they are only caught.

10971. It is a rule which they are bound to observe? Yes. Possibly, in some cases, they would not be dismissed; it would depend upon who they were. When I had been in the employ of the firm about 18 months I was myself caught going out to get a glass of ale. I was spoken to about it, but that was all.

10972. You were told that you had violated the rule? Yes.

10973. And I suppose the rule is made, not in the interests of the employees but in that of the customers? I could not say for what purpose the rule was made. I do not see in what way it is a benefit to customers.

10974. Suppose there were no such rule, and that a man saturated himself with beer, would he not be inclined to be disagreeable to the customers. He might be serving ladies? I think that no employers would countenance it whether the laws allowed drink or whether they did not. I have been employed in large houses in London, where we were allowed as much ale as we chose to drink for dinner; but no one was allowed to be tipsy in business for all that.

10975. Perhaps there is some difference in the climate which makes the beer or other liquor which is taken have an effect more rapidly than in England? I cannot see that. Hordern's at the Haymarket and Hordern's at Brickfield Hill are the only two houses I know of where the employees get their meals on the premises. All other employees in the soft goods line go out and get their lunch. If they like to get one or two glasses of ale for their dinner they can get it. In England the employees live generally on the premises.

10976. Have you been to Whiteley's or Shoobred's? Whiteley's was not in existence in my time. I was speaking just now of Tarn's, at Newington Causeway. We lived on the premises, and were allowed a glass of beer with our meals. The firm supplied it.

10977. The other firms here, you say, allow their employees to go out? Yes; I think that if a man is inclined to indulge in liquor, he will have it in spite of anything.

10978. But Hordern & Sons prevent him from having it on the premises? They do.

10979. Would the majority of whom you speak, as being in favour of Sunday opening, consist of temperate men? I am taking the majority of the people altogether, I would not limit myself to Hordern's; I would go outside of Hordern's.

10980. Do they feel any relaxing effects from the climate in summer time? There is no doubt of it, I think; I know I do myself.

10981. Do you think that that sensation suggests some kind of restorative or stimulant in the nature of alcohol? I myself have been used, ever since I can recollect, to have a glass of something when I felt inclined for it. I was brought up on a farm in the old country, where cider was our beverage; I could help myself to it when I felt inclined. When I went out into the world afterwards if I felt inclined to take a glass of ale I have always taken it; I continue to do so up to the present time. If I were to go without it I think I should find the want of it. I do not think I should carry on business well without it.

10982. Your hours are from half-past 8 to 6? Yes; Saturdays excepted.

10983. During all these hours you have to abstain from liquor? Yes; from the time I go in till the time I come out nothing passes my lips.

10984. Having been five years in this establishment, you are of opinion that the climate of the country is such as to suggest a stimulant to persons who feel its relaxing effects, especially if they have been accustomed to take their glass of beer? Certainly.

10985. You see no harm in taking drink in moderation? I do not; I enjoy it in moderation myself, and I would not deprive any other man. I am sure I feel a better man than I should feel if I went without my glass of beer.

10986. While you have been in Hordern & Sons have you seen many cases of dismissal for drunkenness? I have.

10987. Have they been numerous? I have known a good many; I could not say how many. They employ from 400 to 500 men, but these dismissals will occur at all places.

10988. Do you think the draper's assistant as a rule is in the habit of taking more than is good for him? Certainly not; I consider them as respectable and as well educated a class of men as you could find.

10989. And you think that there is nothing in their occupation which would induce them to take too much? They have a great deal to put up with; they have a great many tempers to please.

10990. There is a good deal of mental and physical exhaustion? There is.

10991. And a good deal of handling of goods? Yes.

10992. And you think a good antidote for all that sort of thing is a glass of beer? I speak for myself. Some say a glass of water will revive them quite as much.

10993. Do you not think that there are too many public-houses in the neighbourhood of Anthony Hordern & Sons' establishment? Yes, I think there are far too many.

10994. Then you would be inclined to reduce them in some way? I think so; but not by local option. I would appoint a Commission to see that they did not sell deleterious drinks.

10995. Do you not agree with local option? Not as it is. It is not local option. I have occupied a house for four years under a landlord. I have no vote, because the landlord pays the rates.

10996. If you liked you could pay the rates? I could, but I do not know whether I shall stop in the house.

10997. If you were on the lists as a voter you would be a local optionist? As far as prohibiting the opening of more public-houses in neighbourhoods in which they were not wanted is concerned, I certainly should.

Mr.
E. Melhuish.
25 Oct., 1896.

10998. Then, as far as the reducing of the houses where they are in excess of the wants of the people is concerned, you would be a local optionist? Well I should not like to see a man ruined by the closing of his house.

10999. But you say you have too many houses in the neighbourhood of your establishment? Yes, and the most vile liquor you could find. I have not been into a house near Hordern's for months. I never could get a glass of anything fit to drink. I am speaking of ale.

11000. Do they dispense Colonial ale there? Yes, and English ale. I do not care for the English ale on draught, it is too strong.

11001. And you are not acclimatised to Colonial wine? I do not drink Colonial wine.

11002. You think the liquor retailed is an inferior kind? It is.

11003. Do you think it is adulterated? I think a great deal of it is.

11004. And although you might be a local optionist if you were on the roll, you would hesitate before abolishing any premises because you would not like to ruin a man? Certainly; it would be unfair to do so. These men have bought the good-will of a business, and it would be unfair to close their houses without compensation.

11005. Then you are not a full, but what is called a limited, local optionist? You can put what construction you like upon what I say.

11006. I suppose in England there is no system by which an habitual drunkard can be reclaimed except by his own free will? I could not say. It is over twenty years since I left England.

11007. You have seen a good many men ruined by drink? Not many to my knowledge. I have seen some.

11008. Were they your friends? I have never seen one of my friends ruined by drink.

11009. But you are aware of the fact that some people are ruined by drink? I am, but it is their own fault.

11010. Suppose it were your misfortune to proceed from moderate drinking to immoderate drinking, and to become an habitual drunkard? I cannot suppose the case at all.

11011. But suppose it were your fate, do you consider that the right course to pursue would be to confine you in an asylum or a retreat for inebriates, or to send you to gaol? Send me to the retreat by all means.

11012. Do you think the sending of a man to a retreat or to an asylum is an undue and improper interference with his liberty, if he is proved to be an habitual drunkard, wasting his means and otherwise conducting himself so as to be a nuisance? I do not think so. If he were a nuisance you would send him to a gaol, and it would be far better to send him to a retreat.

11013. Then you think a reformatory system is far better than a system of punishment? Certainly.

11014. Mr. Hutchison.] Supposing that Parliamentary voters were all entitled to record a local option vote, and that equitable compensation were allowed to the public-houses which were shut up, do you think that the people should have a right to vote upon the question? Certainly they should.

11015. But you think the publican should be compensated? Yes; but I would say, at the same time, that you cannot make people sober by Act of Parliament.

11016. Putting compensation out of the question, do you consider that the majority of the people are as able to deal with this matter as are the magistrates? Quite as able, I think.

11017. Do I understand you to say that most men leaving your establishment at night go straight to the public-house? Not most of them, but a great many.

11018. Would it be fair to say one-half? I should think about one-half would go and have a glass of beer. I do not mean to say that they go direct to the public-house as soon as they come out of Hordern's, but the chances are that they will have a glass of ale before they get home. I refer now to the principal proportion of those who are not total abstainers. Nearly all the total abstainers are as a rule men who have been drunkards.

11019. Do you refer to Hordern's employees? No, I mean throughout the community.

11020. Why do you think they are reformed drunkards? I am judging from my own experience.

11021. Do you think you are as likely to know as much about total abstainers as men who mix up with them and who are constantly in their society? I am speaking now of men whom I meet in every-day life. I have met hundreds of them. I simply give you my opinion for what it is worth.

11022. Do you think you are as likely to know a larger number of total abstainers in Sydney than I know? Perhaps not. I formed my opinion from men I have met and from what I see in the newspapers.

11023. Do you not consider, that, mixing up as much as I do with total abstainers, I am more likely than you are yourself to know whether your opinion is correct? There are few men I have met in the way of business, who are total abstainers, who have not been hard drinkers. There are exceptions; I have met with men who have never tasted drink in their lives, and as they have never tasted it they have never wanted to taste it.

11024. You think the majority of respectable people desire the public-houses to be opened on Sunday? I could not say the majority of people, because there are a number of people in Sydney who can go to their clubs at any time and get what they require.

11025. But the number of artizans and working-men? Taking it in that way, I should say yes.

11026. Your opinion then extends beyond the employees at Hordern's? Yes.

11027. Mr. Roseby.] Do you not regard intoxicating drink, as it is now used in the community, as a great curse? If it is used properly it is not, but if it is abused it is a curse.

11028. But I say drink as it is now used? To a great many it is a curse.

11029. You have known a great number go to ruin through drink? I cannot say I have known a number to do so.

11030. Do you not regard the public-house business as a dangerous one? Certainly not.

11031. Do you think it is harmless? I do not see any harm in it.

11032. Do you think young women should be employed as barmaids? I have never considered the question. I do not see any harm in their being employed there.

11033. Do you not consider that drink has a great deal to do with the crime of the country? Very likely it has.

11034. Have you noticed in your reading that it has? I have noticed that a great many things are imputed to drink which should not be imputed to it.

11035. Have you observed whether more young people have lately given way to drink? Yes. I have noticed that a great many young people have done so.

11036. Mr. Withers.] Do you think it right that public-houses should be licensed? Yes, I think they should be licensed, and I would also exercise some supervision over them, so as to ascertain that the drink they sold was not deleterious, and that the houses were conducted properly. I would fine a publican heavily for serving a man with drink when he was already intoxicated.

11037. You think the publican's character should be inquired into before he has a license, for the reasons you have mentioned? Yes.

11038. Then you think that if the publican were not a respectable man he would be a very dangerous man to society? Yes, because he could poison a man, or next door to it. There are certain spirits into which you can put anything; you can put anything into rum and it will absorb it. I have heard a good many persons say that publicans are in the habit of putting tobacco into rum; that surely is not fit for human beings to drink. I think there should be quite as much supervision, if not more, than there is over the milkman.

11039. You think that too much supervision cannot be exercised over the drink? Just so.

11040. Do you not think that 93 per cent. of the prisoners in gaols is an excessive proportion to be there directly or indirectly through drink? I should never have thought the proportion was so large.

11041. I suppose you know that the supervision of the drink traffic and the maintenance of the excessive drinkers is a heavy item to the State? There is no doubt about it, but if the publican were to vend a good article there would not be so much crime in consequence of its consumption.

11042. Do you think that the wives and the growing-up children of the men who would like to have the public-houses opened on Sundays, would vote for having these places opened if they had a voice in the matter? I think the majority of the wives would, that is to say the wives of the men who get their wages weekly or fortnightly, and I will tell you why. These men go out on a Sunday morning ostensibly for a walk, and they sneak into a public-house and remain there. If the door were open and they could go in and go out as they pleased, they would have their glass of beer and continue their walk. As things stand now, when they get inside they find several other men there and they are prevailed upon to stay. One of the friends of the man says to him, "If you go out you may not be able to get in again," and he stops on and drinks.

11043. Mr. Hutchison.] But why would he not get in again? Because when he gets out there may be a policeman there, and you must be pretty well known in order to be let into a public-house on Sunday at all.

11044. Mr. Withers.] And the man who goes out of one public-house may not be so fortunate as to get into another public-house? Just so. If you go into the suburbs on Sunday morning you will find ten, twelve, and perhaps fourteen men waiting about in some places endeavouring to ascertain whether the publican is at home and whether there is a chance of getting a drink.

11045. Mr. Hutchison.] At what hour of the day is that? It happens at all hours of the day. You may see it in every direction, if you go to Surry Hills, Redfern, Eveleigh, Newtown, and other suburbs. Under the old Act the public-houses were allowed to be open at a certain time, but the police did not keep such a strict supervision as they do now; the side door was almost invariably open. You might go in and find a couple of gentlemen drinking some beer, but you would never see a man drunk. In those days persons would take a glass of liquor and would go out, and they would not return to the place.

11046. Mr. Withers.] At what age do you think a youth should be supplied with drink by a publican? I do not see very well how you can draw the line.

11047. The age provided by law is now 16. Do you not think that it should be 18? I do not see where the benefit would come in. Depend upon it the youths would get the drink if they wanted it.

11048. Do you think the age of 18 would be high enough? I could not give you an opinion upon that point.

11049. Mr. Hutchison.] You think there was less drunkenness under the old Act than there is under the new one? I do.

11050. The streets do not indicate it? I suppose the people who have had too much stay in the house till dark, or manage to get home somehow; but from what I have read of statistics I have come to the conclusion that the drunkenness has increased.

11051. Mr. Withers.] Do you not think it is an advantage that those who are given to excessive drinking on Sunday are not now a nuisance to law-abiding people. Under the old Act you might see them reeling about in the streets? I never saw them reeling about in the streets in any numbers while the old Act was in force.

11052. Did you not notice them in the vicinity of public-house doors? I have never stayed at a public-house door to see who was drunk and who was sober, but I do not remember noticing any drunken persons.

11053. Mr. Hutchison.] How do you come to know that drunkards are now to be found in public-houses on Sundays, and that they are carried home after dark? I have gone into houses myself. I have seen men drunk there, and I have gone in hours afterwards and I have noticed the same men still there. It seemed to me that they had been there all the time.

Mr. Jeremiah White called in, sworn, and examined:—

11054. President.] You are Corporation labourer? I am.

11055. Are you employed regularly? Yes.

11056. Have you been so employed for many years? I have been here a little over four years.

11057. Do you work in the streets? Yes.

11058. What is the nature of your work? Metalling, ballasting, and work of that kind.

11059. Are you a total abstainer? I am.

11060. Are there many such in the employ of the Corporation? I do not think so.

11061. Have you been always a total abstainer? I have not.

11062. The law has closed public-houses on Sunday—do your fellow-workmen object to that? Some of them do, I believe.

11063. Do not you think that there are too many public-houses in the city? I do.

11064. Would you like to have a voice in the reduction of the number? I have. I pay my rates and I have my vote.

- Mr. J. White.
25 Oct., 1886.
11065. But would you like the vote extended so as to enable voters to say whether there should be any, and what number of public-houses in a given area? I should.
11066. Do you think the hours of opening and shutting public-houses are suitable for men of your class? I think they are open quite early enough and that they shut quite late enough.
11067. And you think the existing law should be preserved on Sunday? I do.
11068. Do you think drunkenness is a crime or a vice? I think it is a crime.
11069. Then you think it deserves punishment? In a good many cases it does.
11070. Do you think that drunkenness is a crime in the sense in which an assault is a crime? I do not think it is; the two offences are different—drunkenness seems to be a habit.
11071. Do you not think then that drunkenness would be better treated in some retreat, or asylum, or reformatory, than in gaol? I do not quite know.
11072. Supposing it were your misfortune to become a drunkard, would you not be better pleased if the State put you in some temporary seclusion till you reformed, than sent you to gaol? That is according to circumstances. If a man had a family it would be hard to take him away from them.
11073. But supposing you had to work at the asylum, and that the proceeds of your work went to your family, would not that be some alleviation? That would be better for the family, certainly.
11074. And if you returned to your family a sober and healthy man, able to work, would it not be better than putting you in gaol half a dozen times, thereby bringing you into contact with the most vicious persons in the community? I do not think there is much good in sending a drunkard to gaol; I think he sometimes gets worse.
11075. Mr. Withers.] Is drink admitted at all among the Corporation labourers during work hours? It is not permitted. Drink is taken at times, but it is not allowed by the authorities.
11076. The rule is not strictly carried out? They cannot carry it out, because there is no one there to see whether the men observe the rule or whether they do not.
11077. Have you been employed continuously in one part of the city? I have been in this part of the city, but lately I have been employed at Pymont and Ultimo.
11078. I suppose that some of the labourers working with you desire to have the houses opened on Sunday? Some of them would like to have them opened, I believe.
11079. Do you think their wives would like it? I do not.
11080. And I suppose in many cases the children would be sorry to see the houses opened? I think some of them would be very sorry. Some men I know take very little to their wives and children.
11081. Mr. Roseby.] Do you believe that the majority of workmen in the employ of the Corporation are in favour of local option? From what I hear them say they are not.
11082. But you yourself are? I am.
11083. President.] I suppose you have found a good many of your way of thinking? Yes, a good many.
11084. Have you noticed many men fall out of the ranks and go to the bad through drink, losing their positions? I have now and again, but not very many. I have seen several.
11085. Mr. Withers.] Working in the streets in the summer time I suppose creates a great thirst? Yes, but I think cold water is better than grog.

Mr. James Davis called in, sworn, and examined:—

- Mr. J. Davis.
25 Oct., 1886.
11086. President.] You are a pick and shovel man in the employ of the Corporation? I am.
11087. Have you been in their service long? Over twenty years.
11088. Continuously? Yes.
11089. Road-making? Yes; and pipe-laying, and other works of that description.
11090. You have seen a large number of men in the employ of the Corporation during that time? Yes.
11091. So far as you know, are many of these men given to intemperate habits, and do they lose their situations in consequence? I have known many to do so.
11092. From the nature of their work have they any temptation to indulge? Yes. You may say that the public-house is always in front of them.
11093. You yourself are a teetotaler? I am.
11094. Have you been so always? Not always.
11095. Then you have found that, notwithstanding the hardship of the work and the nature of the climate, it has been better for you that you should remain a total abstainer? Far better.
11096. That is to say that you are in a better condition for doing your work? Yes.
11097. Do you think that it is the prevailing opinion of your fellow-labourers that the public-houses should be open on Sunday? I believe it is. I hear men say that if the public-houses were opened on Sunday there would not be the same temptation to get drunk, and that men would go in and get a glass of beer and then go away.
11098. Do you think that an honest statement; was it an expression of feeling or of opinion? I think of feeling.
11099. Do you think that if the houses were opened there would be less drunkenness? I wish they were not open at all.
11100. You remember the old Licensing Act, Driver's Act, as it was called, under which the public-houses were opened for a portion of the Sunday; was there more drunkenness then or less than there is now? I could not answer that question, I did not observe the drunkenness under the old Acts as compared with the new.
11101. But you say that a large number of your fellow-workmen think the houses should be opened on Sunday in the interest of temperance? Yes. In the locality in which I live I can see a number of men hanging about the public-houses anxious to get in, and when they get in you may wait a long time before you see them come out. As a rule when they do come out they show signs of drink.
11102. When they get in you think that they drink more than they would drink if the houses were opened to them? Yes; they say to themselves, "While we are in we might as well stay in, because when we get out we may not have a chance of getting in again, let us make the most of our opportunity;" whereas if the houses were opened they would take a glass of ale and pass on.
11103. That is your opinion as a result of conversation with themselves; that is their own confession? It is.

11104. Apart from your views as a total abstainer, do you consider that there are too many public-houses in the streets of Sydney? I think there are too many for the reasonable wants of the people.
11105. You are a local optionist? I have not meddled in these matters, but if I were a ratepayer I would exercise my privilege of voting.
11106. Do you consider that the reduction of the number of public-houses, where they are in excess of the public requirements, should be effected by the vote of the people or by some other authority? I think by the vote of the people, by the residents of the neighbourhood.
11107. Do you think that a large amount of inferior drink is vended in the city? Yes.
11108. You have reason for believing that from what other persons tell you? Yes, and when I have been taking drink I have always found that the effect of it was to make me sick. If I took a little drink over-night I would be unable to take a mouthful for two or three days afterwards. It would be then some years before I would touch it again.
11109. Suppose you were a drunkard would you think yourself a fit subject for a reformatory or a gaol; would you think that you ought to be punished or that you ought to be reformed? If I were a drunkard I should think that I ought to be reformed.
11110. Even if your personal liberty were interfered with? Yes.
11111. How about your family? That is another consideration. A man with a family has no right to be a drunkard.
11112. But I am supposing that he is a drunkard? Well if you took him to a reformatory you would to some extent be dealing with the wife and family as well as with himself.
11113. But suppose the man could be made to engage in an occupation or to turn the work of his hands into money, could not the family have the money earned by him in the reformatory. If he were in gaol you know the State would not give his family anything? If a man were to labour in a reformatory and could give his wife and family the proceeds of his work, after deducting what it would cost to support himself, I should say that it would be a fair thing.
11114. Suppose it were not enough, do you think it would be a great hardship, when the man had a wife and family depending entirely upon him for support, if the State were to pay something to them during his detention? Well in one sense it would be a hardship, but in another it would be a blessing. You must remember it is the poor industrious labourer who helps to supply the State with funds, and that is where the hardship would come in, you would be making him work indirectly for the support of the family of an idle man.
11115. But the State gets £30 a year from every publican in exchange for his license? Then I think the State should be liable to that extent for the support of every drunkard in detention.
11116. Mr. Hutchison.] I understand you to say that in the interests of temperance you think that it would be better to open the houses for a short time on Sunday? I do.
11117. That is because the law is openly violated I suppose? Exactly so.
11118. But suppose Sunday closing could be made effective, would you not rather have it? Undoubtedly, if it could be made effective.
11119. You would open the houses then in order to prevent clandestine drinking? That is my idea.
11120. Mr. Roseby.] Do you consider drink a great curse to the community? I do, indeed.
11121. In your experience in the employ of the Corporation, have you seen many men go to ruin through drink? I have.
11122. Have you noticed whether of late years young men have been giving way to drinking more than they used to do? I have noticed that young men are more addicted to it than they used to be when I was young, about thirty years ago.
11123. How long have you been in the Colony? Twenty-eight years.
11124. Do you think publicans should be allowed to supply young people with drink? The present age is too young; I think a man should be 20 or 22 years of age before a publican should be allowed to serve him with drink. He would then have some common-sense.
11125. Do you think young women should be employed as barmaids? I do not think a public-house bar is a proper place for a female.
11127. In the interests of the morals of the community would it be wise to shut the public-houses even earlier than 11 o'clock at night? I could not give an opinion upon that point. I see a great alteration in the conduct of persons in the streets since the houses were closed at 11 o'clock instead of at 12. I think the change was very beneficial.
11128. Do you think it would be wise to close them altogether on election days, when, as a rule, there is so much drinking? I have seen some elections in Sydney when you could scarcely see a sign of liquor in any man, but on other occasions they have all been lopsy-turvy with drink.
11129. Mr. Withers.] How long have you been a total abstainer? For the last five years. Before that, if I were to take a drink at night it would have such an effect upon me that I would not touch another drop for another year or two.
11130. Do you think a moderate amount of drink is of any benefit to a man who is engaged upon heavy work? I do not think it is a benefit. I have had some very heavy work to do in connection with pipe-laying. If I were to take three or four pints of beer, and it had excited me or made me half intoxicated, I should, perhaps, do twice the amount of work in that day.
11131. But would the next day's work be a fair one? It would not; the system would be exhausted. It would be several days before I would be able to do a fair day's work again. I think that if a man had no drink at all he would be better able to do his work. I have seen men take a glass or two a day, and that, perhaps, would not affect them in the way in which drink used to affect me. Perhaps they would not become so exhausted unless they became fairly intoxicated; but in any case I think that, taking things all through, they are better without any drink.
11132. Have you observed whether, under the old Act, the men lost much time before breakfast, as compared with the time which they lose before breakfast under the present Act, which closes the houses earlier

Mr. J. Davis.

25 Oct., 1886.

Mr. J. Davis. earlier at night? I could not say. In referring just now to the beneficial effects of the closing of the houses at 11 o'clock, I meant to say that it had made an improvement in the traffic in the streets at that hour of the night.

25 Oct., 1886.

WEDNESDAY, 27 OCTOBER, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,	T. COLLS, Esq., J.P.,
J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.,	G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.,
A. HUTCHISON, Esq.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Henry Ford called in, sworn, and examined:—

- Mr. H. Ford. 11133. President.] You are in the employ of Dalgetty & Co.? Yes.
11134. What are you? I am the foreman of the lumpers.
11135. Have you been always engaged in that capacity? I think I am the oldest hand there; I have been there close on five years.
11136. I suppose you have constant occupation? Yes.
11137. How many men are employed by Dalgetty & Co., on the average, as lumpers? About 300 a week; sometimes we have 700 a week, but 300 would be the average.
11138. That is in the wool season? That is taking the average right through.
11139. Our object in asking you to come and give evidence before this Commission is, that the Commission, before they report, may be thoroughly well acquainted with the views on the liquor question entertained by the working men in the various industries of the community; first of all, therefore, I would ask you are you a teetotaller? I am.
11140. Have you been always a teetotaller? Not always; but I have never gone to excess.
11141. You are a teetotaller by conviction? Yes; a staunch teetotaller.
11142. I suppose the lumpers as a rule are not? Most of them are not.
11143. I suppose that during the working hours it is necessary in your occupation above all others that a man should be sober? Yes, I should think so.
11144. I suppose that in discharging a ship's cargo a lumper is frequently in as dangerous a position as a man could be in? Yes, you may say that either of the stores or of the ships. We have some very dangerous machinery in the stores.
11145. A slip would often be fatal to a man, perhaps to several men? Yes.
11146. Lumpers I presume then during their occupation are a sober lot? Yes, I can speak very highly of those I have under me.
11147. We might expect from their different habits some being teetotallers and some not, that opinions among them would differ upon such a question as prohibiting the sale of drink on Sunday, but do you think the lumpers as a whole acquiesce in the existing law? Some do and some do not. I have spoken to several on this point; some would have the houses closed altogether on Sunday and others would rather have their drop of beer on Sunday.
11148. Are those who are content with the present law chiefly of the teetotal class? Yes, and some of the moderate drinkers.
11149. How do you think the balance goes? It goes very heavily on the side of drinking.
11150. That is, in favour of opening public-houses? Yes.
11151. How long does the lumper work? Ten hours in summer and eight in winter.
11152. And the Sunday prohibition only affects him at home? That is all.
11153. Do they live in town? They live in the suburbs close down to where they work.
11154. Then Sunday opening for them would as a matter of fact mean the opening of houses in the suburbs? That is so.
11155. I suppose as a matter of fact you know that drink can be obtained by them on Sunday if they choose? I know several houses at which drink can be obtained and am sorry to see it.
11156. If they could not get it do you think they would be still more clamorous for it? Yes, I think that they would. I think they might supply themselves on Saturday night.
11157. Some do that now I believe? I do not think many, if any, of the lumpers do so.
11158. They go to the public-houses on Sunday and get it? They get as much as they can drink on Saturday night, and they get what they can on Sunday.
11159. Do you think the habit of going to the public-house on Sunday tends to make these men drink to excess on that day? I do.
11160. Have you formed any opinion as to Sunday closing in the way of such alternatives as these:— (1) either the law must be made more stringent by making it impossible, except with the certainty of punishment, to supply liquor to men on Sunday; or (2) it must be relaxed in the interests of temperance:— which do you think ought to be done? I think that if the houses were open, say from 1 to 3 o'clock, on Sunday, and then closed again, the requirements of a number of people would be satisfied. If that were not done I think it would be better to close the houses altogether and not give the publican a second chance.
11161. Which of the two alternatives would you adopt? I think I would close the houses altogether and if the publican were caught serving I would take his license away from him.
11162. You do not think the houses ought to be opened? No, but on the other hand it might be said that if the houses were open from 1 to 3 and then closed again, men would not go in and drink as much as they do at the present time. Now they go into the houses on Sunday and drink to such an extent that they do not know when to stop.
11163. Have you noticed the effects of that drink upon them on Monday? I have in several cases, and have had to discharge several men through it. I have known some of our men to be paid on Saturday as much as £4 or £4 10s. I have seen them reeling about the street on Sunday drunk, and on Monday morning they would come down to me for a little money to help them through.
11164. Are those men with families? Yes.
11165. There is only one way of accounting for the loss of the money; they must have got into a public-house house and have been "shouting" continuously during Saturday evening and Sunday? Yes, I have watched them go away from the pay-table and go to the hotel at the corner, and sit there drinking till all hours. I live on the wharf, and from my place I can frequently see what goes on at some of the hotels in the neighbourhood.

Mr. H. Ford.
27 Oct., 1886.

11166. You think that if the public-houses were rigidly closed on Sunday there would be a large supply taken in on the Saturday night—which of the two evils do you think would be the worse? I think it would be best to close the houses altogether on Sunday, because not many of the lumpers would turn to and bring home jugs of beer on Saturday night. I do not think they would think of doing such a thing.

11167. You think they would do without it on Sunday? I am certain they could do so if they tried. It only wants a trial. They would soon get over the want of it.

11168. In what direction is most of Dalgetty's business done;—is it towards the Central Wharf? Next to the Central Wharf. We have one wharf at Parbury's, Dawes' Point, and the other is next to the Central.

11169. Are there a large number of public-houses near you? Yes, I objected to one being opened there a short time ago—the "Cheshire Cheese."

11170. Did the objection prevail? Yes, on two occasions I went up and stopped the license.

11171. I suppose the house is really not required? No, there are too many there already.

11172. Do you find that the men go out much to refresh themselves? No.

11173. Do you think that when the lumpers are going to their work at 6 o'clock in the morning it is their custom to call at the public-house? Yes.

11174. Is it the common custom? Yes, I know plenty of them who call at "M'Bride's," and at the "Lord Nelson."

11175. Is that because they cannot get breakfast at home? No, it is what they call their "morning."

11176. It is before they have their breakfast, then? Yes, they go to breakfast at 8 o'clock.

11177. Some of them have said that sort of thing steadies the nerves? Not unless they have been drinking heavily over night I should say.

11178. Do you not think the public-houses are open a little too soon for these men in the morning—would you keep the hour at 6 o'clock? Yes.

11179. You see no objection to it? No, I have never seen a man come down intoxicated in the morning. They go in and get their glass, but I have never had to find fault with them through it. Sometimes they have taken too much at the dinner hour, and I have noticed it, and called them out of the ship's hold.

11180. It seems to me that considering the hot sun at some times of the year the taking of rum or ardent spirit must be always dangerous to men working under the tackles? I should think a glass of beer would do them more good.

11181. But as a matter of fact it is not so much beer as what is called "hard stuff" that they take? That is mostly before the breakfast hour. They generally take spirits then because they do not care about the beer lying in the pipes all night.

11182. They do not believe that the publican washes out his pipes? No.

11183. You say that there are too many public-houses in your neighbourhood? Yes, too many close to the wharf. There is "M'Brides," the "Lord Nelson," the "Hero of Waterloo," the "Hit or Miss," and there is another next door to it of which I forget the name.

11184. Are there no wine-shops in your neighbourhood? None.

11185. Saloons? No.

11186. As to the excess of houses, how would you reduce the number? I would certainly reduce them; there are three next door to one another at the end of Windmill-street. I think that if two of them were taken away there would be quite sufficient accommodation.

11187. Do you think the men working in your place ought to have a voice in the reduction of the number? I think they should have a say in the question.

11188. Do you think the lumpers would vote if they had a local option vote? I could not say; some would and some would not.

11189. Have you a vote? I have not.

11190. If you had a vote would you vote? I would.

11191. Do you think it would be a proper thing to reduce the houses in the particular locality in which you reside by a vote which would be directly aimed at their reduction? Yes, I think so.

11192. For example, supposing you were to say how many public-houses there should be? I think the houses should be a certain distance apart, and that so many should be taken away.

11193. But supposing you destroyed those houses, do you think the publicans ought to be compensated? Yes, I think so.

11194. Then you do not think a public-house is a public nuisance? Not altogether.

11195. You evidently think, although you are a temperance man, that some are required? I have not to work so hard as I used to work; I have to use my head now.

11196. You think that if men work with their hands they require a stimulant? I think they do.

11197. Although a temperance man, you think that a man who works all day in various forms of hard manual labour requires some restorative or stimulant? I think he does.

11198. Do you hear the men complain about the character of the liquor sold to them? Yes; I have heard them complain of the spirits and the beer. I have heard them talking to one another as to where they get the best drink, and so on.

11199. Have you heard them complain of becoming suddenly almost insensible after a glass of liquor? No; I have heard them say that such and such a house sells better liquor than another.

11200. Do many men in your employ fall out of the ranks through drink? Not many; I have discharged several, but not many; I am very lenient with them. I often tell them a couple of times that the best thing they can do is to keep steady and knock off drink; and then if they do not do so I discharge them. I always give them a second chance; it does not do to be harsh with the good workmen, and there are many good workmen who take their glass of liquor.

11201. Many of the men under you have been mariners? Nearly all of those on the wharf have been mariners; those in the stores, however, are shore hands.

11202. While mariners I suppose they have fallen into the habit, as many sailors do, of drinking? Yes. I have been a sailor myself, and I know what it is.

11203. It was a habit when you were at sea? It was.

- Mr. H. Ford. 11204. And you would not be surprised at wharf labourers being inclined to take a little, but you would be surprised at their being total abstainers? Yes; if they were to knock it off altogether I should be.
- 27 Oct., 1886. Although I am a teetotaler I do not believe in these men who have to work so hard knocking it off.
11205. Do you think it is a necessity? Where they work so hard I think it is.
11206. Have you not total abstainers among your body? Yes.
11207. Do they do their work as well as the others? Yes, I find that they do.
11208. Then it would appear that drink is not a necessity with the men? All men's constitutions are not alike.
11209. If A can do without it it does not follow that B can? No; some men require stimulants and others do not.
11210. I suppose some men would pine for it if they did not get it, and would not do their work? I could not say.
11211. Mr. Colls.] Many men under you, I suppose, are family men? A good many.
11212. Are they a religious body, generally speaking? No; rather the reverse.
11213. That is to say they do not attend church at all? I think I know about four who attend church.
11214. Are the houses in your neighbourhood well conducted houses? Yes. I have never seen anything amiss, except the jugs going in on Sunday, and such like, but at the other end of Windmill-street I have heard some great rows going on at night.
11215. You know the difference between a drinking house and a house of accommodation? Yes.
11216. Would any of those houses near you accommodate any families or travellers? I do not know. There is accommodation in all the houses for travellers, I think; I know they take boarders.
11217. The men could get their luncheon there if they chose? Yes; there are dining-rooms in the hotels, and in the boarding-houses close by.
11218. Do many of these houses have two bars—a threepenny and a sixpenny bar? I think the "Lord Nelson" is the only one.
11219. Where are they? On the lower floor.
11220. You have heard of the starting of private clubs in order to get drink on Sunday; are there any round your way? Yes. One drinking club used to be held in the "Lord Nelson." They call it the "Buffaloes."
11221. And they can get served there on Sunday? I could not say if it is so now or not, but when I used to go there to an Oddfellows' Lodge I know that the "Buffaloes" were in the habit of meeting there.
11222. And at that time they could be served on Sunday? I dare say; no doubt they could. I know that some of my own men have joined the "Buffaloes" lately. They have told me about it, and of the spree they have had on Sunday night. I have told them that if they carry on like that they will not be fit for work on Monday morning. The men to whom I refer joined last week; I found it out, and spoke to them about it. I know that the wife of one of them took to liquor also, and I took the liberty of going to her and speaking to her about it, because I was sorry to see a young woman in that condition. She turned a staunch teetotaler, but when her husband used to go to these Sunday meetings she broke out again.
11223. Some of the men appear to earn large wages? Yes; I see the pay-sheet every week, and I know what they earn. Some of the men are paid as much as from £5 to £5 10s. a week. They are paid overtime, 1s. 6d. an hour.
11224. They work late hours? Last Friday they were working all night.
11225. Do you consider that it is necessary for these men, when they are working so late at night, to have their beer? I think it is.
11226. Did I understand you to say that they took beer for breakfast? No; they call in at the public-house on their way to breakfast, and I think they take it then.
11227. Mr. Withers.] What is the average wage of the men? We employ a lot of weekly hands, and their wages run from £2 10s. to £3 5s.
11228. A lot of casual hands are included in the 300? The hands sign for from six to twelve months as a rule, and the casual hands come on by the hour as they are wanted.
11229. But the 300 men do not average anything like £5 a week all through the year? I should say the average would be about £3 10s., including overtime.
11230. I suppose nearly the whole of your men are living under landlords? Yes.
11231. Do you hear them talk of making homes for themselves through building societies? No.
11232. I suppose a large number of them are birds of passage? They are; they go away in the winter time.
11233. You think that a proportion of the men would prefer having the houses open on Sunday. Do you think that the wives and children of these men would vote for that? I do not think they would.
11234. Do you think they would be much opposed to it? I know several families who would be glad to see their father sitting at the Sunday dinner table. I know that they do not do so.
11235. Do you not think that these persons should be considered in the framing of a new Licensing Act? I do not believe in a woman having anything to do with a man's affairs. I like him to be the master.
11236. But the women are interested in the welfare of the country, are they not? I dare say they are, but every man should have sufficient sense to know what is good or bad for himself.
11237. President.] But would you allow women a local option vote? I would not mind that.
11238. Mr. Withers.] Is there much "shouting" now among the men as compared with years back? I could not say; I do not hear them talk about "shouting" or anything of that kind very much.
11239. You think they are more economical in their drinking habits than they used to be—I refer to the moderate drinkers? Yes.
11240. What do you think is the cause of that? Perhaps they are getting more enlightened, and so becoming more steady than they used to be.
11241. Do you think the trades unions are inducing them to take a better interest in the community and in the country? That might be so.
11242. As a body they take an interest in politics? Yes.
11243. Mr. Roseby.] Are lumpers and men who work on the wharves connected with some union? There is a wharf labourers' union.
11244. Are the union meetings held in any public-house? I do not think so; I think they are held in the school-room in Kent-street.
- 11245.

11245. How long have you been in the Colonies? It is about eleven or twelve years since I came out the last time.

Mr.
H. Ford.

27 Oct., 1886.

11246. How long have you been a teetotaller? For close upon two years. I was a teetotaller for five years, but I was taken very ill and the doctor ordered me a little whisky. I drank the whisky for a time and when I recovered I joined the teetotallers again.

11247. And you say that a number of men employed by the firm are teetotallers? Yes.

11248. Good Templars, like yourself? Yes.

11249. I think you said you had always found that these temperance men do their work quite as satisfactorily as those who drink? Yes.

11250. Do I understand you to say that drink is necessary for a working man? It is in some cases. Some men have a weaker constitution than others, and if they did not get a little stimulant they would not be able to do their work.

11251. Do you not think it is a habit? I could not say, but I firmly believe that a glass of beer does not do a working man any harm as long as he confines himself to a little.

11252. You have known drink do a number of your workmen a great deal of harm? Yes, but then they went beyond the mark.

11253. And you have known them go to ruin in consequence of it? Yes.

11254. Do you not think working men would be better without drink altogether? You would be crippling one by way of curing another.

11255. You think that some persons would be crippled without the use of drink? I do not say that, but I think that, in the case of a man who takes a moderate quantity of liquor, you would be taking away his luxury for no other reason than to cure a man who makes a beast of himself.

11256. Do you not think drink as now used in the community is a great curse? I believe it is.

11257. Does it not bring a number of families to misery and ruin? Yes.

11258. Do I understand you to say that the people should have a voice as to whether public-houses should or should not exist? I do.

11259. Do you think that publicans should be permitted to employ young women as barmaids? I do not.

11260. You do not think a public-house bar is a proper place for a young woman? I do not.

11261. Have you noticed that a number of young fellows have of late years given way to drink? Yes.

11262. More than in former years? No, I could not say that. I have travelled all round the world. I have been in China, Burmah, America, in the East Indies, in fact all round.

11263. In any of the places you have visited have you seen drinking habits as bad as those which you see in Sydney? I have.

11264. Where? In the East Indies, in Calcutta, and in Bombay. In America perhaps it is not so bad.

11265. Where have you been in America? To New York, Quebec, and Montreal.

11266. And in these cities did you see such drinking as you see in Sydney? I think there is not so much difference. I put the heavy drinking in the East Indies down to the hot weather; and there the hotels are kept open all day on Sunday; you can get a drink whenever you please.

11267. But I suppose they are all one class of people who drink, that is to say, they are all Britishers? I have seen a great many natives the worse for liquor; they can take a bottle of stuff and drink it off, and one glass of the same stuff would have knocked some of our people over.

11268. Mr. Rosby.] You believe the community would be better if the houses were closed altogether on Sunday? Yes.

11269. Do you not think the publicans ought to be prohibited from supplying young people with drink? I do.

11270. What age would you fix? I think between 17 and 18.

11271. You think 16 is too young? I do.

11272. Mr. Hutchison.] Suppose a man had never commenced to drink, would it not be better that he should not start? If he did not start he would never know the taste of it, and he would never wish for it.

11273. You think it is a deprivation to take it from the man who is used to it? Yes, providing he drinks in a moderate manner.

11274. You do not think the lumpers as a class are desirous of having the houses opened at 5 o'clock in the morning? No doubt many of them would like to see the houses open all night. I do not think the majority would wish to have the houses open at 5 in the morning.

11275. It has been represented to us that they are clamouring for it? I do not think they are. Of course when the men come to work in the morning at 6 o'clock the public-houses are supposed to be closed, but they go in by the side door as they do on Sunday. They must get it before 6, because they have to be at the gates at 6, when they are opened, so that I may put them to their work.

Mr. Henry Becket called in, sworn, and examined:—

11276. President.] You are in the employ of Dalgetty's? Yes.

11277. Have you been there long? Three and a half years.

11278. What is your occupation? A foreman labourer.

11279. You are, I suppose, in constant communication with the men under you? Yes.

11280. And you hear a good deal perhaps of their views with regard to the liquor law? Yes.

11281. Do you think the majority of them are desirous of having any alteration in the law with reference to Sunday? Yes.

11282. Do they complain of the present law in that respect? They have raised objections to it. I have heard a few express the opinion that the houses should be opened, but I think the majority would be for having them closed.

11283. Are you a total abstainer? Yes.

11284. I suppose the number of total abstainers among the lumpers is not great? No.

11285. The majority are not hard drinkers? No.

11286. Moderate drinkers? Yes.

11287. You think that the majority of them, including both the drinkers and the non-drinkers, desire the law to remain as it is on Sunday? Yes.

Mr.
H. Becket.

11288.

- Mr.
H. Becket.
27 Oct., 1886.
11288. I suppose you know that they can get drink on Sunday now if they choose? Yes.
11289. Do you think that they would like to get it without violating the law? I should think so. I think myself that the opening of the houses on Sunday would be better than the present illegal traffic.
11290. I suppose you know that many of the men drink too much when they get it illegally? Yes.
11291. Have you heard complaints of the character of the liquor? They say that it is, as a rule, "served up" on Sunday.
11292. They have to drink it in a hurry then? Yes.
11293. Are there not too many houses in your neighbourhood? A good many.
11294. Are they well conducted? Yes, as a rule, they are very orderly houses.
11295. Taking the houses within 200 yards, by how many would you reduce them? I think you could take away five or six. I am living in Windmill-street, opposite Dalgetty's store. There is the "Lord Nelson," the house at the other corner kept by Brown, the "Hit or Miss," "M' Bride's," and others.
11296. You think that the more public-houses there are in a neighbourhood like that the more risk there is to the men's sobriety? Yes.
11297. How would you set about reducing them if you had your way? I think it might be left to the householders in the different wards.
11298. You would give them a vote? Yes.
11299. Then you are a supporter of local option? Yes.
11300. Have you a vote now? No.
11301. I suppose that is a privilege you would like to have? I should.
11302. Would you exercise it if you had it? I would.
11303. Suppose you reduced the houses by some number through a local option vote, do you think the publicans should be entitled to compensation? I do think so.
11304. Do you think the public-house is a necessity? Yes, to the majority of the population.
11305. But, speaking in a more limited manner of your own people, you think they could not well get on without public-houses? I do not say that.
11306. You think they could do their business without drink at all? Yes.
11307. How long have you been a teetotaller? Nine years.
11308. Were you a sailor? Yes.
11309. I suppose you were not then a teetotaller? I never was much of a drinker; I never went in for "highway debauchery," as they call it. I had a home at both ends—in the Colonies and at London.
11310. I suppose that the fact of the sailors, as a rule, not having a home at both ends is a reason why they are led to excess in drinking? That is just about it.
11311. And the incentive is a public-house? Yes.
11312. Have you ever heard complaints from your men about the quality of the drink served to them? No; I hear some say that they prefer Toohy's to Tooth's, and so on. I have heard them speak about the quality of the beer on Sunday; but as a rule I think there are not many complaints.
11313. I suppose you find that the moderate-drinking man is able to do his work fairly well? Yes.
11314. Perhaps the teetotaller does his work quite as well without requiring a drink? Yes.
11315. You do not think the nature of the work or the nature of the climate makes drink a necessity? I do not think so; I have talked two or three moderate drinkers out of it entirely.
11316. Do you find it easier to talk a moderate drinker, or an intemperate man, out of drinking? A moderate drinker.
11317. I suppose no drink is allowed on board vessels, or in the store at Dalgetty's? No, they have to go out for it.
11318. Have you visited many sea-port towns in the course of your life? About 200.
11319. Do you think that Sydney is much given to intemperance as compared with other places which you have visited? No; I think Sydney is quite as good in that respect as any other Colonial port.
11320. But how does it compare with the other sea-ports? In most of those places the sailors remain among the sailor population.
11321. You have been in America? Only in the southern portion.
11322. How does Sydney compare with Valparaiso? There the British seaman goes ashore with a month's money with the express purpose of spending it upon a booze.
11323. Does he not often do something like that here while the ship is in port? Very seldom. They are working on board ship the whole time. The firemen of all the large boats are about the only seamen you would see drunk in any numbers.
11324. They do not employ coloured firemen on the Orient line? No, it is all white labour.
11325. Do you lose many men in your employment through drunkenness? We have lost two at Dalgetty's indirectly through drunkenness; Kenyon, who was supposed to have been killed by Rock, was one of our men; another man (Kennedy) fell down in a passage in his house and was suffocated while under the effects of drink.
11326. Mr. Colls.] What is the mode of punishing drunkenness in the different parts of the world to which you have been? A slight punishment, 48 hours' confinement, or something of that kind.
11327. Similar to our own punishment? Yes, in most parts.
11328. Mr. Roseby.] Have you noticed that there has been a great reform among the sailors of late years? Yes; I was brought up in Blackwall, and the class of men who ship there now, compared with the class who used to ship there, are very much better. There are not so many drunken feasts as there used to be in former days. I think there are more married men; they seem to have settled down more, and there has been a great reformation.
11329. Numbers are teetotallers? They are.
11330. They belong to temperance organizations? Yes.
11331. Do you think there is as much drinking in the other Colonial ports as in Sydney? Yes, in Adelaide for instance.
11332. Then you think we are not much worse than our neighbours? I think that if anything we are a little better.
11333. Have you noticed a number of young fellows give way to drink lately? I have.
11334. More than in former years? Yes; in our neighbourhood it is not the grown-up men so much as youths from 18 to 20 who cause the trouble. It is chiefly the larrikin tribe.

11335. Do you not think that liquor should not be supplied to those young men by the publican until they have arrived at years of maturity? I think I would fix the age at 18.
11336. Do I understand you to say that a number of men employed by your firm are like yourself—teetotallers? Yes.
11337. Do they work as satisfactorily as those who drink? Yes; and you can always depend upon a man who is sober. Almost the whole of the accidents which occur on board ships, at least four-fifths of them, are caused by hardly anything but drink;—it is a question of carelessness originating in drink.
11338. Then you regard drink itself as a great curse? I do; in our line.
11339. And you have known a number of men go to ruin through drink? I have.
11340. Do you say that you believe in the principle of local option? I do.
11341. Do you think publicans should be permitted to employ young women as barmaids? I do not.
11342. And you think we have far too many public-houses in proportion to the wants of the community? I do.
11343. Do you belong to any temperance society? To the Independent Order of Good Templars.
11344. Mr. Hutchison.] Are many sailors Templars? Yes.
11345. Is it because of the peculiar masonic nature of the society that so many sailors join—do you think it has something to do with the reformation among sailors? You see when a man is on shore, a stranger having nowhere to go to, he can always find a means of passing his week day evenings if he is a Good Templar.
11346. By being a Good Templar and getting a pass-word he can always find friends in any town; do you think that that has had something to do with binding sailors to temperance? A great deal.
11347. You think that if the law could be strictly maintained, Sunday closing is in itself a good thing? I do.

Mr.
H. Becket.
27 Oct., 1886.

Mr. Charles Collins called in, sworn, and examined:—

11348. President.] You are in the employ of Smith's Albion Tailoring Company? Yes; I have been there three years.
11349. In what capacity? As a journeyman.
11350. You are a temperance man? Yes.
11351. Is it not an unusual thing for journeymen tailors to be teetotallers? It is not an ordinary thing.
11352. We have been told that among the journeymen tailors there is a good deal of intemperance; is that or is it not true? There is.
11353. Do you think that any of that intemperance arises from the closing of the public-houses on Sunday; do you think the men go to the public-houses on Sunday, partly to violate the law and partly to indulge in the habit, and that they there take too much, and so do not get to their work on Monday; does that often occur? I have not seen many cases of that kind.
11354. They do not lose their time in the early part of the week? Not very often.
11355. Do you hear them complain much about the public-houses being closed on Sunday? Greatly.
11356. Then we shall be right in concluding that the journeymen tailors as a body would like to have the houses open at some time on Sunday? I have heard a few remark that, but I do not think that as a body they wish the houses open on Sunday.
11357. What is your own opinion; it is said that there is a good deal of drunkenness caused because the houses are closed and because men stop in them drinking secretly? I would have the public-houses closed on Sunday.
11358. Have you always been a teetotaller? Yes.
11359. How many journeymen do you employ at Smith's on the average? About twenty.
11360. They do not work on the premises? Yes, they work on the premises, and any overtime which they do at home must be given to them by some other employers.
11361. Have you a local option vote? No.
11362. Do you think that if you had the vote it would be a privilege which you would exercise? Yes.
11363. Do you not think there are too many public-houses about the town? I do. There are not many near us in George-street, but taking them altogether I think there are far too many.
11364. Would you have them reduced by the local option vote? I would to a certain extent.
11365. Do many men get dismissed from Smith's in consequence of intemperance? No.
11366. You have been in no other employment in this city? No.
11367. Mr. Colls.] Are you a native of this colony? Yes.
11368. In what part of the city do you reside? Forest Lodge.
11369. Are there many hotels there? Not many.
11370. Is there much drinking there on Sunday? Not much.
11371. Mr. Roseby.] Have you noticed that of late years young men have given way a great deal to drink in this country? No.
11372. Perhaps you are so confined by your business that you have not much opportunity to observe what goes on outside? I do not see very much; I am a great deal at home.
11373. Do you think there has been much reform of late years among people in your trade? Yes.
11374. To what do you attribute it; do the men belong to temperance organizations? Not that I know of.
11375. You think that there are far too many public-houses? I do.
11376. And to what extent would you reduce them; do you think that we could do with one-third the number? I do.
11377. You do not consider drink necessary for any working man? I do not.
11378. You think he is better without it? He is.
11379. Have you known a number of people go to destruction through drink? I have not.
11380. Do you regard the drink traffic as a very demoralizing and dangerous one? I do.
11381. Do you think young women should be employed at public-house bars? I do not.
11382. You think it is not a proper place for a respectable young woman? I think it certainly is not.
11383. Do you think that publicans should be allowed to supply children with drink for their parents or for anyone else? No.
11384. Mr. Hutchison.] Would you be favourable to allowing the people in a given locality to vote for the closing of the whole of the public-houses there, if they saw fit to do so? I should not object to it.

Mr.
C. Collins.
27 Oct., 1886.

11385.

- Mr. C. Collins.
27 Oct., 1886.
11385. In what part of Forest Lodge do you reside? In Cross-street.
11386. Are there any public-houses near you? There is M'Inerney's, 400 yards away.
11387. Is there much violation of the law there do you think? No; I think not.

Mr. James Williams called in, sworn, and examined:—

- Mr. J. Williams.
27 Oct., 1886.
11388. President.] You are an employee in Smith's Albion Tailoring Company? I am.
11389. Have you been there long? Ten months.
11390. I suppose you have been in a similar employment before in this city? I have not been in the Colony long.
11391. What is the nature of your occupation? The military business.
11392. As a superintendent? No; as a journeyman.
11393. Working at the shop? Yes.
11394. From your experience of the views of your fellow-workmen, do you believe that they are content with the present law closing the public-houses on Sunday? I think not.
11395. You think they would wish for a relaxation of that law? Yes.
11396. I suppose you have spoken to them on the subject? I have not, but I know their views.
11397. Do they object to the hours of opening and closing on the business days of the week? Not at all.
11398. What is your own view of the alteration of the law on Sunday—do you think it is desirable in the interests of the community generally? I think it is desirable. I think we should find less drunkenness on Sunday than we do now.
11399. Of course you are aware that at the present time persons find no difficulty in obtaining drink on Sunday? They do not as far as I can see.
11400. You think they have a right to obtain legally that which they now obtain illegally? Yes.
11401. Is it your view that a man should be able to get what he wants on Sunday? Within certain hours.
11402. What hours? Almost the same as in London. There the houses are open from 1 till 3 and from 6 till 10, but I think here it would be sufficient if they were open from 6 to 9.
11403. Did you come straight from London to this city? Yes.
11404. Do you think this community is more given to intemperance than are English communities? I cannot say that it is, but I am certain of one thing, that the drink here is not nearly so good as the drink at Home. I think there is no doubt but there is a great deal of poison in the drink here.
11405. I infer from your answers that you are not a teetotalter? I am not.
11406. You are a moderate drinker? I have a glass sometimes, but then I may go a week and have none.
11407. Do you think the liquor dispensed here is bad? I think it is vile.
11408. Are you speaking of the beer, of the spirits, or of the wine? Principally of the beer.
11409. Do you think it is poisonous? I do.
11410. You are comparing it perhaps with some very good English beer? No, with no particular beer in England, but I have heard from very good authority that there is a very strong poison in the Colonial beer.
11411. You have not suffered yourself from drinking it? I have felt ill effects from it.
11412. How does it affect you? It seems to stupefy the head very sharply without interfering with the legs. I think it has a maddening effect, so to speak, before it should have.
11413. You are speaking as a moderate drinker; is that the result of drinking two or three glasses of beer? If a man were to take two or three glasses a night for any length of time, I think he would be very soon overtaken by lunacy.
11414. What was the name of the substance which it was represented to you was put into the beer? I was told there was strychnine in it.
11415. You know that strychnine is very expensive? I suppose it would not be so using it as they use it.
11416. You yourself have not felt the effects which would be produced by strychnine from drinking the beer, have you? I have, that is to say, when I have indulged in it a little too freely. I have found that a sort of numbness has come all over my body, and I believe it takes the same form with every one.
11417. Mr. Colls.] How does it affect your tongue? The tongue is dumb.
11418. President.] Have you heard the same complaint from your fellow workmen? Yes, from one or two who speak openly.
11419. Has it ever occurred to you to tell the Inspector of this? I was not aware that there was an Inspector. If there are any I do not think they make the best of their time.
11420. Have you found much complaint among the tailors as to the character of the spirits vended here? No, speaking for myself, I cannot say, because I do not take more than half a pint in a twelvemonth.
11421. Were you long in London? I spent almost all my life there.
11422. In what part? I was sixteen years at Woolwich, and I was afterwards at Victoria Park.
11423. The ordinary beer-house was in vogue in your time? Yes, and it is so still.
11424. What license do they pay? It used to be dependent upon the inhabited house tax, but I think it is increased now.
11425. Are there any large number of people in this community who would wish to have the quality of the beer raised, and who would like to have beer-houses specially? I cannot say, but I do not think there are many who would care merely for the establishment of beer-houses.
11426. You do not think the English beer license would improve the beer? I do not think so, and, considering the profit they get out of the spirits, I think they ought to be able to sell first-class beer.
11427. But they cannot make it, therefore they import it; that being so it must be strong beer? The beer they import is not the beer the working man can afford to buy.
11428. Taking the journeymen tailors as a class would you consider them as a temperate class; it has been frequently said, you know, by the master tailors that the getting out of work is delayed because certain men have been drinking—that excuse is often offered? I have been in several shops, and I find that the men differ very much. At Smith's the men are almost all teetotalters during the day, whatever they may take afterwards.
11429. But we should not be far off the truth in supposing that the journeymen, as a class, very often exceed? I have worked for the best military firm in the world for sixteen years, and you could not find a steadier class of men in any shop, I do not care where you go for them. The men invariably attended to their employers' interests; but it was frequently said, by way of excuse, that certain men were out drinking. That was the only way in which they could put the customers off. 11430.

11430. Mr. Hutchison.] But did not the men object to it? Well there seemed to be no help for it. The employer would come to you, and he would say: "You must put aside that work, and take up so and so. The customer is very cross, and I have been obliged to say that you were out on the booze." I have often heard an employer say that to the men.
11431. President.] Then you think that that excuse is a mere pretext? Yes.
11432. In all these English Colonies we punish a drunkard by sending him to gaol if he cannot pay a fine? I do not think a drunkard should be sent to gaol for a first offence.
11433. Does not the relapse of drunkards occur in London as well as here? Yes.
11434. Does it not occur to you that the subsequent punishment rests upon the wrong foundation, and that the habitual drunkard should not be punished so much as reformed;—has that occurred to you? It has.
11435. Do you think that when it is proved that a man is a habitual drunkard, and that, if he has not been convicted before he is at all events, wasting his substance in drink, and leaving his family unprovided for, the State should have the right of sending him to a reformatory until he is wholly restored? I think so. There is something of that sort at Home, which they call a hospital for inebriates.
11436. Now let me ask you, as an intelligent man who has seen a great deal of the world, whether you think the community would rebel against a law which so interfered with personal liberty as to allow a magistrate to send persons away to a reformatory for six months? I do; I think it would be obnoxious to them.
11437. But, nevertheless, you think it would be good for the persons themselves? Yes; but it would be objectionable in cases where there were wives and families.
11438. But when the man sent away had sufficiently recovered, through the agency of good treatment, I suppose he could work; and if, for instance, he were a journeyman tailor, his work could be sold, and the proceeds sent to his family? I think that is a very good idea.
11439. Do you think that under those circumstances the detention of a man would be considered by the working classes as an outrageous violation of liberty? No.
11440. Mr. Colls.] You are married? Yes.
11441. Where do you live? At Woollahra.
11442. Are there many hotels there? My place is in the centre of about five.
11443. Would you call them hotels or drinking-houses? Hotels.
11444. Can they accommodate anyone? I should think so.
11445. Is there much drinking on Sunday in that neighbourhood? I could not say.
11446. You have not had an opportunity of judging? I see drunken men about, and that is why I came to the conclusion that it would be well to open the houses on Sunday.
11447. Mr. Roseby.] Do you not think there has been a considerable reform among the tailors, as a class, of late years, through the agency of various temperance organizations? Yes, I must say that there has been.
11448. Nearly all the men in your shop are teetotallers, you say? I said during the day; that is to say, that if they go out for dinner they will take nothing. They do not drink until they have finished work.
11449. Do you think the people should be empowered to say how many public-houses should exist in a given locality? I think so.
11450. Then you believe in the principle of local option? Yes.
11451. Have you a local option vote yourself under the present law? I do not know.
11452. Do you not think the Parliamentary voters as well as the ratepayers should have a voice in this matter? I think so.
11453. Do you think there is more intemperance in this city, in proportion to the population, than there is in London? I do not think there is. I put down a great deal of what I see to the inferior quality of the drink.
11454. But, from whatever cause, do you notice more people drunk here than you used to notice in London? Only on Sunday; and I think that is because the houses are not open, to enable people to get their dinner and supper beer.
11455. Would you allow the Sunday opening privilege to be in the hands of the householders? I would.
11456. Do you notice in the suburbs, and in Sydney itself, that there are more young men giving way to drink than there were in London when you were there? I have not noticed it.
11457. Do you think that publicans should be allowed to supply young persons with drink? I do not think that they should be supplied with drink at a public-house until they are over 18.
11458. Do you think that the publican should be allowed to employ young women as barmaids? I do not.
11459. Have you known a great number of persons to go to ruin through drink? No, I have not.
11460. Do you regard drink generally to be a great evil in the community? Not if it is properly used.
11461. But as it is used? I do not think it is an evil.

FRIDAY, 29 OCTOBER, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,	J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.,
T. COLLS, Esq., J.P.,	G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.,
A. HUTCHISON, Esq.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Captain Adams called in, sworn, and examined:—

11463. President.] You are the captain of the steamer "Newcastle"? Yes.
11464. You have been a long time in command of steamers of that kind? Twenty-eight years.
11465. We wish principally to have your evidence in regard to the opportunities for intemperance which are afforded to passengers upon the steamer you command. Do you consider that there always has been

Mr.
J. Williams.
27 Oct., 1886.

Capt. Adams.
29 Oct., 1886.

Capt. Adams. a greater or less amount of intemperance on the steamships in consequence of the bar? I hold a packet license, and have provided my own ship during the whole time I have been in command. I cannot say that I ever saw any excessive drinking on board. I have never allowed any, and if there has been any, which I very much doubt, it has never come under my observation. What we suffer from is not from persons getting drunk on board the ship, but from their getting on board in a state of drunkenness; in fact it takes more of my time to look after these people and keep them in order during our short trip than it sometimes does to navigate the vessel.

29 Oct., 1886.

11466. So that, from what you say, the reproach connected with so many intemperate men landing at your place of destination is put upon the ship, whereas it ought to be put upon the people themselves? That is exactly the case. In many instances the people bring grog on board with them; I have seen even saloon passengers bring flasks of brandy on board with them. Of course, on a ship like the "Newcastle" there are hundreds of passengers travelling who never see the bar, they never come into the lower saloon in which the bar is situated.

11467. Of these hundreds do you think many bring their own stores of drink with them then? I think the larger proportion of them, if they take anything at all, bring it on board with them; they do not get it on board the ship.

11468. You think that a number of these persons do their drinking independently of the bar? Yes; I provide my own ship, and I always insist that order shall be kept in my saloon. No person who is the worse for liquor is given any drink. One great grievance under which we labour is that the gentlemen who come on board at night to see their friends off, and who would not upon any consideration go into a public-house even if they had an opportunity of doing so, are prevented from having a parting glass of wine or grog. If they get it the law is broken, because, according to the Act we cannot serve them until we are away from the wharf. Besides that, there are a number of gentlemen who come on board some time before the steamer leaves. They may be very moderate drinkers, but nevertheless, they like to have their glass of grog before turning in at night, and if they wish to turn in before 11 o'clock they have to go to bed without their grog, or the law is broken.

11469. Do you think that is why the flasks are brought on board? That is one of the ways in which I account for it.

11470. At what time does your vessel leave? At 11 o'clock.

11471. That is the time at which the public-houses close? Yes, but they are open during the time my ship is lying at the wharf. They can sell, and I cannot.

11472. You have to get away from your moorings, do you not, before you can sell? We sell when we get under weigh. My instruction to the chief steward and to my servants is not to sell alongside the wharf. If they break the law they must take the consequences, that is to say, if I were held responsible for their misdoings, and had to pay a fine, I should make them pay it back. We do not sell for any length of time, my bar is often locked up before 12 o'clock, and if we are prohibited from supplying any drink between the wharf and the Heads we might just as well be without a license.

11473. If any passengers bring friends with them then you will not open the bar for them? If we were to do so we should do it illegally, and I will not run any risk. I know that there are private detectives who are always looking after the matter very sharply. I do not mind their being on board the ship, because, as I have often said, I do not live by a glass of grog, and it is not likely that I am going to incur any risk in order to sell one. I think it is particularly hard that gentlemen who come on board early, and who want to go to bed, cannot get a glass of grog before they turn in.

11474. Of course you know the reason for this particular provision of the law? I know the reason very well.

11475. It is generally supposed that the ships' bars would be turned into a kind of public-house, and that many persons would go on board to get drink, especially at a time when the publicans could not sell? Yes; but the gentlemen to whom I refer would not think of going into a public-house. They come down to see their friends off, or, as I say, to go to Newcastle themselves. In either case they may want a glass of grog, and as they cannot get it on board the ship they have to do without it. They would no more think of going into a public-house to get it than I would think of doing so.

11476. Do you think no means can be devised of supplying only the passengers; are there no means of knowing who are the passengers and who are not? Yes, that distinction could be made, and it ought to be made. I think the bar should be open for half an hour before the vessel sails for the supply of liquor to bond fide passengers and their friends.

11477. Are there many persons who take a glass of grog under those circumstances, not for the sake of the glass itself but for friendship's sake? There are many cases, I think, in which a man, if he could not drink with a friend, would not drink at all.

11478. Do you think the taking of spirits before going to sea is of any value medicinally; does it prevent people from getting sea sick? That is a matter of opinion. I think it is a question of what the people think themselves, because there is, in my opinion, a great deal of imagination in sea sickness. No doubt some people take a little brandy and water; they feel satisfied that they will not be ill in consequence, and they are not ill, or if they are ill they think they are not so ill as they would have been if they had not taken the brandy and water. I have known ladies take porter and oatmeal, some of them have a bottle of champagne and take a mouthful when they begin to feel squalmish. In most instances these are persons who would not take a drop of anything under other circumstances.

11479. Considering the matter in the interests of temperance alone, and we have not to consider it in any other light, do you think that this prohibition against the supply of liquor before leaving the shore could be beneficially relaxed? I think so.

11480. In the interests of temperance? I think so, because if a man knows that he can get a good glass of grog on board the ship he would not stop at a public-house bar when he was coming down, and drink perhaps several glasses of probably inferior liquor, ending up perhaps by bringing a flask on board with him. The persons who do this kind of thing roll and howl about the deck like maniacs. I have seen them sitting there all night with the grog alongside of them. Of course they obtain no more when they get on board the ship, but I think that if many of them knew that they could obtain a glass of grog when they did get on board they would not take so much before they came.

11481. To what class do these persons belong? Generally to the steerage passengers.

11482. But there are a great many decent people travelling in the steerage? Yes.

Capt. Adams.

29 Oct., 1886.

11483. Have you a steerage bar? Yes.
11484. Do you supply threepenny drinks as well as sixpenny drinks? Yes; we do forward, but the class of liquor is just the same.
11485. Do you supply beer as well as wine and spirits? Bottled beer, but not beer on draft.
11486. We have been told here that a great deal of the pilfering and thefts which have been notorious in connection with the Hunter River boats of late years is in some measure owing to intemperance? There has been none of it on board my ship.
11487. But you have heard of it? I have.
11488. We want your opinion. We are told that this pilfering owes its origin largely to the fact that some persons are intoxicated, or are more or less intoxicated, and therefore present a very good shot for the light-fingered gentry? That is very likely; if a man is incapable of taking care of himself he is at the mercy of any rogue who might come into contact with him.
11489. And it has been stated that these persons oftentimes drink themselves boozey on board the ship. I did not ask whether they had drinks at the bar, or whether they brought their own liquor on board. Of course if they brought their own liquor on board we think you would be in no way compromised? I can interfere if they commit any disorder, but I cannot interfere with their drinking their own liquor.
11490. Do you think these larcenies are traceable to the habit of drinking indulged in on board the steamers? In most cases which have come under my knowledge they have arisen from a different cause. There may be a few solitary cases of the kind you name; I have known steerage passengers to come on board the steamer in a state of intoxication, having been robbed of their money beforehand. In some cases perhaps they have drunk all their money, and are not aware of the fact. They afterwards find that they have no money with which to pay their passages. I am aware that the thefts which have taken place have taken place under quite different circumstances, and apart from the question of drink.
11491. There is no doubt about the robberies; ladies and some of the District Court Judges have been robbed. I suppose you have a large assemblage of persons on board your steamer every night, and I do not know whether these robberies are in excess of what you would expect from such an assemblage. I suppose you have sometimes as many as 300 passengers? We average from 100 to 150 every night; I have three watchmen who are always on the look out for this kind of thing; one of these is on the upper deck, and one is on the main deck; and then there is the chief steward, who is up all night in the cabin. Steerage passengers are prevented from coming aft, and if either of these watchmen see a man walking about the deck they follow him up and see who he is. Then again, the officers on the bridge take notice of what goes on on the upper deck. Of course we get all sorts of persons on board, and it is very hard to preserve discipline among them in such a short passage. The officers have often to go down and chain up refractory persons, but these persons are not drunk from the effects of the liquor which they have obtained on board the ship. As you are probably aware, the powers of masters of ships running on the coast are very limited; we are greatly hampered from the want of power to act in various cases.
11492. Do you think that anything could be done to get rid of the evils you are describing? I think so; the ship is sometimes turned into a regular pandemonium, and if we confine it to the fore end it is often as much as we can do. At race times especially this is the case. We have the three-card men and others of that class on board, and they are most difficult persons to deal with. There is generally a mob of thirty or forty of them, and they set you at defiance. You can bring the whole ship's company out, and even then they will set you at defiance. All that you can do is to limit the nuisance as much as possible till the passage is over, unless one of the men should go to a certain extreme, and in that case we take him in charge and hand him over to the police. But this class of persons is generally very clever, they know just how far they can go and when they are within the limits of the law. On one occasion within the last three months, one of these men going up to Newcastle had a satchel with him, such as they generally carry on their backs. He said to the cabin steward when he came on board, "Take care of my satchel." The steward took it and hung it up in the pantry away from every one else. He then went out and locked the door, and he was not away from the place all night. He has been with me seven years, and I have every confidence in his honesty. I have had opportunities of proving it. When he handed the bag back to the man in the morning he said that £3 had been taken out of it, and that his mate had seen it in the bag, and knew that it was there when he handed it to the steward. I went into the matter fully, and I was perfectly satisfied in my own mind that no three sovereigns had been taken out of the bag at all, and that it was a kind of "try on." However, the steward had to pay the money, because the man's mate was ready to swear that he had seen it in the bag, and it was a question of two oaths to one. I was satisfied in my own mind that the steward had been had, and that a trap had been laid for him. I mention this to show you the kind of men we have sometimes to contend with. If any of that class of men were to get into the after part of the ship, where in hot weather passengers might be sleeping with their doors or windows open, they would think nothing of putting in an arm and taking a vest or anything else of which they could get hold, if they had an opportunity to do so.
11493. Do you take any objection to the enactments of the Licensing Act relating to packet licenses? Only as regards the restriction of which I have already spoken.
11494. Do you take any objection to the provisions of the amending Act, which casts upon you, prima facie, the guilt of every illegal sale? I take no objection to that; I am prepared to take the responsibility.
11495. It has been very much objected to? It might be, but I do not object to it; I am prepared to take the responsibility. I am aware that my stewards might criminate me in some way which I could not avoid, but nevertheless I am quite willing to take the responsibility; but if I were not providore as well as captain I would not take the responsibility. The license should be taken out by the providore at the owner's request.
11496. Do you make many trips on Sunday? Only once a month.
11497. Of course you sell on Sunday? Yes, if anyone wants liquor; but it is generally only for an hour, from 11 till 12.
11498. Do you think it is possible to extend the Sunday closing system to packet licenses? You could not very well do so at sea. We leave once a month on Sunday night from either end, but there is not much drink sold.
11499. Then I gather from you that there is nothing which you would propose by way of amendment in respect to the packet licenses? Nothing beyond an extension of the time to half-an-hour before the ship leaves, in order that bonâ fide passengers and their friends may be supplied with a glass of grog if they require it.
11500. How can you tell a passenger? By his presenting his ticket.

- Capt. Adams. 11501. Would there be no difficulty about it? No; he gets his ticket before he goes on board, and if he does not do so he ought to. If he had not a ticket of course he would not be supplied with liquor.
- 29 Oct., 1886. 11502. Do you ever see any female intemperance on board your ships? Yes.
11503. They are females of the lower class, I suppose? It is hard to say what class they belong to; sometimes we get them mixed in with the saloon passengers, but those are exceptions. In the steerage we have any number of them; they are the worst cases of the kind with which we have to deal. They cause the most disturbance on board the ship, because the men congregate about them, and if you go to take the women away, there is a fight directly, because some of the men are sure to take their part. Coming down last night I had a woman going about the deck all night yelling like a maniac. She was screeching in a dreadful manner, and it was impossible to know what to do with her.
11504. Mr. Hutchison.] What would be your average taking at the bars? I cannot say exactly from memory, but as nearly as I can recollect I do not think it is more than £40 a month. That includes the whole of the liquor which we sell.
11505. There are thirty passages during that time? We make six passages a week.
11506. Do you not think the sixpenny drinks would account for some of the liquor being taken on board? It might be the case; but it is not so much the saloon passengers as the steerage passengers who take it on board. We have not so much drunkenness aft; it is exceptional. Sometimes we get noisy persons there, football and cricket clubs for instance. The noise they make does not arise from drink particularly, but, as a rule, these young men cause a great deal more disturbance than the drunken people. We can generally deal with the drunken people in the saloon.
11507. Do you let the bar to the steward? No; I keep charge of the whole of it myself. There is nothing supplied there except what I know to be of first-class quality. I take charge of everything connected with it. Perhaps I ought to tell you that the bar in the "Newcastle" is out of the way. It is in the lower saloon, in a corner, and would not be observed by passengers outside. There is no drinking in the open saloon to the annoyance of passengers there. If several persons are sitting up late at night over a glass of grog therefore they do not annoy anyone. They are quite out of the way.
11508. Mr. Roseby.] I understood you to say that frequently the number of drunken persons who come on board your steamer make it what may fairly be called a pandemonium? Yes.
11509. Is that frequently the case? We may go several trips without it. We might not have an obstreperous fellow more than once or twice a week, but I think it happens very often, considering the number of trips we make.
11510. In view of the annoyance which that must occasion to the other passengers would you not have them prohibited from bringing drink on board? I should be glad to have the power if it were possible to carry it out.
11511. Do you not think that the bringing of flasks and bottles of grog on board, apart from its being a nuisance to passengers, is of itself a great evil? A very great evil in this way, that it prevents me from really having the control of the passengers on board.
11512. But a law could be made prohibiting the use of flasks and bottles of grog on board these coasting steamers? I do not see how you could carry it out. You would have to examine every man's swag and every passenger's bag to satisfy yourself that he had no grog with him.
11513. You say you see these persons using their bottles of grog on board when they have been in a far from sober condition? Yes, I have seen them, but if it were unlawful for them to bring the grog on board they would take pretty good care that no one saw them drinking it.
11514. Have the passengers ever complained to you of drunken persons being supplied with liquor by your servants? No, I have never had any complaint of that sort.
11515. You are an old citizen as well as an experienced seaman;—have you noticed of late years an increase of intemperance among the young fellows who travel up and down the coast? Yes.
11516. A very marked increase? Yes.
11517. Do you think the law ought to be made more stringent in preventing the supply of liquor by publicans to young men; do you consider the present age (16) too young? If an alteration of the law increasing the age could be carried out I think it would be a good thing, but I do not see how you are going to give effect to it, because if a young man wants drink he will get it in spite of all the laws and prohibitions you may impose.
11518. But you think that if it were practicable there is no doubt as to the change being beneficial? Not the slightest doubt.
11519. You think they are frequently cases of intemperance among the female passengers; have you noticed an increase of drinking among them of late years? In the lower class of them I have, but not in the more respectable portion. Sometimes we get very respectable persons in the steerage, and as the place is open the sight of drunken persons there must be very annoying. However these drunken females get on board the ship, and we cannot deal with them. They are like she-cats to handle; it takes all hands to lay hold of them.
11520. Have you frequently to lock up men who are violently drunk? Not frequently.
11521. But occasionally? My practice is not to go to extremes if we can possibly avoid it. Once you come to extremes you create sympathisers, and then we have to deal with them as well as with the person who is drunk before we can get him locked up.
11522. And I suppose the person you want to lock up has some sympathisers? Yes, particularly if it is a woman.
11523. This must be a great source of annoyance to the respectable passengers? It is.
11525. You would not think it proper for her to have anything to do with the bar? She is never allowed there, and she never goes there.
11526. Do you think that the officers and seamen are as temperate a body as any other section of the community? I think so.
11527. Do you think that they are more so? I have not much opportunity of knowing what persons do ashore, being so very much at sea, but from my observation I should think that sailors were more temperate if anything, because they are more restricted.
11528. You have been twenty-eight years in command? Yes, but thirty-seven on the coast.

11529. What is your idea of the drinking habits in the country districts as compared with those of the young men in the city? I think that when they are travelling they are not generally so bad. As far as my observation goes they are not so wild. Capt. Adams.
29 Oct., 1886.

11530. That is, the young men in the country districts? Yes.

11531. They are more gentlemanly? I do not know whether you can say more gentlemanly, but I do not think they take so much grog.

11532. Have you noticed many persons (travellers from the interior) who are going to destruction through drink? No, not many.

11533. Do you think that residence in the city has much effect in inducing excessive drinking as compared with a country life? There may be more temptation in Sydney in consequence of the increased excitement.

11534. Making due allowance for the idleness and holiday making of the people who come to the city, you think the temptation to drink in the country is equally as great? Yes. In the city, frequently young men who are visiting it are induced to take a glass of grog under the influence of excitement, without which they probably would not take it.

11535. Do you think that in the hotels in the country the temptation to drink is greater than it is in Sydney? I think it is equally as great.

11536. Is it not a rule for a man who comes in from (say) a farm, or any place of that kind, to go in and get a drink? I think there is as much drinking going on in the hotels at Newcastle, Morpeth, and Maitland, from what I have seen, as there is in any hotel I know of in Sydney.

11537. You cannot put a drunken man off your ship? I could do so, but if he had paid his passage and had a ticket, he would be a difficult person to deal with; and moreover, I have not the time to deal with such cases, and it frequently happens that the disorder does not take place until after the ship has left the wharf. It is then that those who are drunk become offensive, and a great annoyance to passengers who wish to sleep.

11538. During your long period of service, have you never known a man to be kept from boarding a ship because he was drunk? I have never known them to be put on shore before we left unless in case of a fight or row. I know of several cases of that kind, but they are very exceptional.

11539. I suppose it is not an uncommon thing for some persons to go to sea to get sober? I do not know about that, but I do know that some persons are very much surprised when they wake up in the morning and find themselves at Newcastle, knowing, as they very well do, that they have no business to be there. Only the other night the steward had to get a man out of the far cabin who was both drunk and noisy. I had to put him on the upper deck and set a man there to watch him and prevent him from going down below to annoy the other passengers.

11540. Do you think that seafaring men are more temperate than they used to be? I think so. I do not think there is so much drinking among the officers and men as there used to be.

11541. As a rule, you think that sailors take as much interest in their homes as any other men do? Quite as much. If any of my men drink I do not keep them. I make no allowance for drinking. So far as the officers are concerned there are not so many opportunities for drinking as there used to be. At one time there was a great deal of temptation, because passengers were frequently asking the officers to drink with them, but I do not think that is so much the case now.

11542. Mr. Hutchison.] Have you prohibited it? No.

11543. You think there is not so much "shouting"? No, and I do not think my prohibiting it would have much effect. I might tell a man that I would not allow him to drink, but if he wanted to drink he would do so in spite of all I could say. It is so in all cases; you cannot make a man sober by Act of Parliament. Unfortunately I have a number of old friends who have gone wrong through drink. I have therefore paid a little attention to the matter at times, and that is the conclusion to which I have arrived.

11544. Do you think as good a glass of liquor is supplied on the ships as in any other place? Yes.

11545. You have never heard any complaints? No.

11546. I suppose you are a fair judge of liquor? Yes; I know a good glass of spirits when I taste it.

11547. Mr. Colls.] Have you not the power of refusing to carry a passenger who is the worse for liquor? Yes; I could do so, but if he had paid his passage I should have to prove that he was drunk; and as I have pointed out, the powers of coasting captains are very limited.

11548. In the course of your long experience have you ever seen a lad of about 16 years of age tipsy on board your vessels? Yes.

11549. Often? Yes; during holiday time and in the excitement of footballing and cricket. On these occasions young fellows who do not take a drop when they are on shore frequently take a glass of grog when they come on board. They then get excited. It is in that way that I have noticed the effect of drinking, so far as young persons are concerned.

11550. And you have noticed many females drunk? Only among the second-class passengers.

11551. You have no experience of the operation of the Act in the city? No.

11552. President.] It was said years ago, and it is said now, that a bar on board a ship is a standing danger in respect to the navigation of the vessel? I do not think so. It is not so in my experience.

11553. Mr. Roseby.] But have you not heard of many vessels being lost through the officers being the worse for drink, not on this coast only, but in other parts of the world? I have heard of it, but the circumstance has never come under my own observation. I do not think the existence of a bar on board a ship has any effect upon the officers, and, as I have already said, if an officer is determined to drink you may prohibit him as much as you like but he will get what he wants. I have known some of the men to bring grog on board with them.

11554. Mr. Hutchison.] Is it not possible from the fact that you to some extent share in the profits of the bar, you look more leniently on the evil arising from the sale of liquor than you would otherwise do? No; I do not live upon the bar. I have more at stake in the conduct of my ship than I have in making a few paltry shillings out of the bar. I live by my profession; I do not live by the bar. I am not biassed in any way in any of the statements which I have been making to-day.

11555. Mr. Colls.] You regard the bar as existing for the accommodation of the public? Yes.

11556. Mr. Hutchison.] I have travelled on steamers where the steward was the providore, and I have seen him running accounts with the hands. You would not allow such a thing as that? No; if such a state of things came to my knowledge I would stop it at once. I would not allow it under any circumstances.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,
T. COLLS, Esq., J.P.,J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.,
A. HUTCHISON, Esq.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Spencer Beaney called in, sworn, and examined:—

Mr.
S. Beaney.
1 Nov., 1886.

11557. President.] The reason we have asked you to favour us with your evidence to-day is not because we know you to be an advocate of the temperance movement, so much as because we know that in the industry in which you are engaged you have a considerable experience, extending over many years. I understand that you have been a long time in the employment of Mitchell & Co., ship-chandlers? Yes, some twenty-nine years.

11558. Will you state in what capacity? As a mast and block maker.

11559. You probably know a great deal about the habits of sailors in this city? Yes.

11560. You have had experience of the condition of things prior to 1881, when Sunday was pretty well an open day for the publicans, and you have been able to contrast the condition of things which existed then with what exists now, when we are supposed to close the public-houses on Sunday; do you think the Sunday closing in the interests of temperance has been a success or not; do you think the Legislative attempt to close public-houses have been a success? I believe it is a right step; I think the intention is good.

11561. But what has been the measure of success? You could scarcely count the measure of success in my opinion. For many years I have taken an active part in the temperance cause; for many years previous to that I was not a total abstainer, and I know that at that time, when the houses were supposed to be open only during certain hours on Sunday, I used to spend more money myself than I used to do upon any other day of the week. I think the attempt of the Government to close the public-houses on Sunday has been a boon to the working man.

11564. Now it has been pressed upon us by intelligent witnesses that in the interest of temperance it would be better to allow trade on Sunday than to close the houses as they are now closed; have you formed any opinion on that point? I should be in favour of not having the houses open at all on Sunday.

11565. It is difficult for a temperance advocate to realise what is said to be the existing state of things,—that an earnest believer in temperance should say that it would be better for us in the interests of temperance to open the houses and somewhat to relax the prohibition than to leave them to be conducted as they are now conducted. There are two reasons for this: It is said that the people who frequent the houses are a numerous class, and that they drink much more than they would drink if the houses were open during an hour or two on Sunday. It is said that people go into the houses in secret and stay there and get sodden with drink, taking drink after drink, because they think their right to be there is precarious, and that they may be hunted out. They therefore make the most of the opportunity. Dozens of witnesses, men who were not speaking in the interests of publicans, but entirely in the interests of temperance, have told us that;—have you thought of that aspect of the question? It may be the opinion of a great many advocates, but it certainly is not mine. No doubt a few persons may get into the public-houses, but the large majority of persons who would go in if the houses were open for an hour on Sunday do not go in now; if they were allowed to do so I think there can be no doubt that there would be a great deal more drunkenness. At the present time the public are frightened to be seen going into a public-house—they have to steal in and steal out—and the publican has to be very cautious for the sake of his license. My opinion is that if the houses were allowed to open for an hour or two on Sunday there would be more drunkenness.

11566. Understand that this point is not put to you in any other way than in the interests of temperance itself. It is not a question of the right of people to have a drink on Sunday. It has been strongly urged upon us that there is more intemperance caused by the so-called prohibition of Sunday trading than existed under the old law? All that I can say is that I am not aware of the fact.

11567. You do not believe that it exists? I am not aware that it exists to the extent you have stated; I know that I travel very little on Sunday; but I am sure I can safely say I have not seen as much drunkenness since the houses have been closed on Sunday as there was before.

11568. You can speak for St. Leonards at all events, where you have been a resident for some time? Yes.

11569. St. Leonards has increased in population very largely during the last ten years; therefore there ought to be a larger amount of visible drunkenness? There ought to be, but I do not see it.

11570. Then your opinion is that the present law should be retained? Yes, with regard to the Sunday opening.

11571. Have not the seafaring class become much more sober lately than they used to be? As a class I believe they have. I refer now particularly to the class round about the Circular Quay. I think there is scarcely a house now round the Quay into which they can get on Sunday.

11572. And if those houses were open do you think the men would lose their character as a sober class? I have no doubt that if the houses were opened on Sunday from 1 to 2 o'clock it would be the means of drawing a number of them in.

11573. The proposal to relax the law is for the purpose, or ostensibly for the purpose, of allowing the working man to have his beer fresh; put in a few words, that is the object; the working man is supposed to be a beer drinker, and not to be able to do without his beer; the notion of opening the houses on Sunday is that he may have his beer by sending for it rather than packing it away in his house on Saturday night when he would probably get more than he would want, and would perhaps teach his wife to drink. All these points have been strongly urged upon this Commission by various witnesses; it has been said that many men drink on Sunday, not because they like to drink so much as because the drinking in defiance of the prohibition gives an extra zest to it. Putting all these things together, they say that it would be better better to have the public-houses open during limited hours on Sunday. I do not know how it strikes you, you have the evidence of your own eyes, together with what you have heard and what you know, and as one acquainted with the resorts of sailors about the Quay, I should like to know whether you think there would be less drunkenness among that class than there now is if they had an hour or two of Sunday opening? I am of the opinion that there would be less drinking by your not having the public-houses opened on Sunday.

Mr.
S. Boaney.
1 Nov., 1886.

11574. You think that by opening the houses then we should have more drinking? Yes; but I am speaking only with reference to the class to which you refer. So far as that class is concerned I have no doubt in my own mind that there would be more drunkenness.

11575. I suppose the sailor class, roughly speaking, consists at any given time of two divisions, those on board ship and those out at lodgings, who have obtained their discharges, and who are looking out for other employment; some of them perhaps are in the hands of crimps? Yes; you may say there are two classes.

11576. Taking them as a body, you think that if the houses were opened during an hour on Sunday they would take more drink than they now take? Yes.

11577. What is the favourite drink of the sailor? Rum.

11578. Have you ever heard that rum is much adulterated? I have often heard that a great deal of the rum is adulterated, but I have never seen it proved.

11579. I suppose you know a good many of the sailor class who are not temperate men? Yes.

11580. Have they ever complained of the character of the liquor sold in the public-houses? Yes; I have heard some of them say that two or three glasses have knocked them down, and that, under these circumstances, it cannot have been over good.

11581. Do you see much of the lumpers? Yes, I see a good deal of them.

11582. Do you consider them on the whole a temperate class? I do now.

11583. Do they often belong to temperance societies? I know a few who do.

11584. I suppose these belong chiefly to the Sons of Temperance? Yes, or to the I.O.G.T.

11585. Do you think that taking a retrospect of your experience, the community generally, as far as you know, have become more sober or more intemperate of late years? I think that of late years they have become more sober.

11586. Are you speaking generally? I am speaking of the neighbourhood of the Circular Quay, and of the part of St. Leonards in which I live.

11587. Do you not think that if intemperance would be visible anywhere it would be visible at such a place as the Circular Quay? I should think so.

11589. Do you notice these picnickers when they come back? Yes.

11590. And you have seen nothing at which you would hold up your hands? No; that is to say, compared with what it used to be a few years ago.

11591. You know Lower George-street well, I suppose. Are there too few or too many public-houses there? Too many I should say.

11592. Do you believe that a public-house is a necessity at all? Yes.

11593. I do not mean an hotel which supplies food and non-intoxicating drinks. I am speaking of a public-house as we know it. Do you think a public-house is a necessity. Give us your frank opinion, as a temperance advocate. I want to know whether you think the public-house is a necessity for the community for whom it is supposed to be established? Although I have been a temperance man I do not believe in debarring my neighbour, if he is moderate, from obtaining what he wants; but I do not agree with there being so many public-houses within a small area. They are far too close together, and in such numbers as I do not think are necessary; for instance, we have some streets in which there are public-houses at each corner.

11594. Taking the locality from the old Commissariat Stores to Cumberland-street, I think they are thicker than in any other part of Sydney or the suburbs? Yes, I think so; there are seven between Globe-street and the Argyle Cut.

11595. Within what range of street would that be? I should say that would not be even 200 or 250 yards; and if you go down on to the Quay you would take in two more, which are not 50 yards apart, at each corner.

11596. Then if a man stood in front of the Commissariat Stores there would be nine or ten public-houses within a radius of 100 yards? Yes.

11597. Do the whole of these do a flourishing business? They appear to do so.

11598. Are not some of them rather low houses? That I could not say.

11599. I notice that some of them are used very largely for the purpose of inquests? Yes; if you go towards to the Mariners' Church, another 100 yards, you would take in three or four more public-houses where inquests are very frequently held. The houses are very thick in that part of the town.

11600. But you say that a limited number of public-houses are a necessity? Yes.

11601. I suppose you would add well-conducted houses? Yes; if they are well conducted.

11602. Referring to the area you have just described, within which there are nine houses, do you not think that number largely in excess of the requirements of the locality? There is no doubt of it whatever.

11603. You think the number could be largely reduced? I think they might be brought down to two or three in that distance.

11604. Do you think the reduction of the houses would reduce the intemperance? To a certain extent.

11605. The houses left would do a larger trade? Yes; but perhaps it would be done in a better manner.

11607. That is the sort of house you would stamp out? Yes.

11608.

Mr.
S. Beancy.
1 Nov., 1886.

11608. How would you reduce these houses. There is not a single witness who has appeared before this Commission, with one exception, who does not agree with you that the number of houses in this particular locality is largely in excess of the demand. There being all that concurrence of opinion, the question arises as to how the number of houses is to be reduced. It appears that the Magistrates continue to give renewals to all the old houses because they will not undo the work of their predecessors. The Magistrate says that, if his predecessor thought the house was wanted, and there is nothing against the man's character, there is no reason why he should not renew the license; so that the licenses get renewed as a matter of course. How would you set about reducing the number? Some of the houses I have now alluded to are not fit for public-houses; they may have the number of rooms required by the Act, but the height, width, and general size of the rooms do not fit them for public-house accommodation.

11609. Would you raise the standard of accommodation? Yes.

11610. But then you see the men might increase the size of the rooms as they did in many cases when the new law came into operation. In many instances they could, perhaps, afford to buy the next house. I fancy, therefore, that would not have the effect of reducing the number. You would want some more drastic provision. Let us get to the point. Do you not think you want local option in some form to deal with these houses? We have local option of a kind at the present time.

11611. But that does not affect the existing houses at all? No.

11612. You have nine houses within a given area, and you think they should be reduced to two; therefore there are seven too many. Who is to pick out the seven—to whom would you entrust that duty? I think there ought to be some provision in the Act to deal with houses which the police may point out to the magistrates as being badly conducted. I think the house should be disqualified.

11613. What is your idea as to permitting the popular vote to operate upon existing licenses. Would you submit the vote to the people in this form—whether there should be any public-houses or not in a given district;—would you go to that extremity? I am in favour of some public-houses.

11614. Then you would not submit the question of public-house or no public-house; you would submit a question of a more limited character. Having first of all fixed the number of public-houses, so as to bear a proportion to the number of inhabitants, you would try and get rid of the excess of public-houses by bringing the local option vote to bear upon the excess? Yes.

11615. There are seven houses in excess in the district you have described; these seven would be got rid of by the local option vote;—is that your idea? That is my idea.

11616. This is not what the advanced local optionists regard as necessary, but it is what some of the limited local optionists, so to speak, would advocate, namely, bringing the local option vote to bear upon specific cases of excess of public-houses over the public requirements. Now would you allow the voter to vote for a certain number of public-houses, naming them, or how would you get rid of them? I can see that if you attempted to name all the public-houses you would soon get into a fog.

11617. And they might not name the worst? No.

11618. Then tell us how you think the vote could be carried out? I am quite sure there are some houses in the city which are not adapted for public-houses, and I think the vote should be made to apply to them.

11619. Those which do not conform to the statutory requirements ought to be got rid of at once, and the licenses ought not to be renewed? They ought not.

11620. I can hardly think, however, that with such an inspection of public-houses as we have, that there are any which do not come up to the standard—I am inclined to think that they do come up to the standard, or the licenses would not have been renewed? I can see a great difficulty in the matter. No one would like to point out any one public-house in distinction from another, and the magistrates are bound to renew the licenses if there are no charges against the publican. I think, however, that the bench ought to listen more to the police when they make complaints. I have noticed that in several cases the magistrates have granted licenses where the police have been decidedly against the renewal of these licenses.

11621. Does that apply to houses in the locality which you have described? I have not noticed, but I have read of cases in the newspapers. Frequently the police have raised some weighty objection, but the magistrates have nevertheless granted licenses.

11622. When you said that the houses were in excess of the requirements in the locality which you have described was that an expression of opinion, the result of a belief that there should be so many houses to 1,000 of the population? Yes, I think that one public-house in 200 yards is quite enough.

11623. The fixed population of the district to which you have referred is very small, but the casual population is very large; if you have such a system as they have in Victoria, allowing one public-house for the first 500, you take no account of the passing population? I am aware that the population of the locality you are referring to would be very large in the day-time. It is increased by a large number of men who are working on the wharves and by a great deal of traffic.

11624. Supposing you arrive at some basis of population, could you not solve the difficulty, assuming that the locality in question is entitled to two houses, by rejecting applications for licenses in excess of that number. Such applications would require to be rejected would they not? Yes.

11625. Would not that course have the effect of throwing a large monopoly into the hands of the two publicans who were fortunate enough in making applications for licenses first? There would certainly be a monopoly to commence with.

11626. Let us see whether there would be any disadvantage in that monopoly;—would it not necessitate the houses being much enlarged? No doubt.

11627. And being made much more comfortable? Yes.

11628. The conductors would have to be men of much more respectable character? Yes. I think the places would be better managed altogether.

11629. And there would be no such thing as supplying drink to drunken sailors? No. I believe you would have a very much better class of houses.

11630. Do you think you would get a better class of houses by this change; might they not be bigger without being better? I have no doubt that they would be bigger.

11631. But would they be better conducted? That is a hard question to answer. I have known publicans who would not serve anyone on Sunday, and who would not give drink to a man who was already the worse for liquor. I know some publicans who are very careful in that way, but I could not say definitely that

- that we should get better houses. I know there are a great many publicans of whom we should be glad to get rid.
11632. There is no object in reducing the number of public-houses unless we get some specific advantage; we all believe that the multiplication of houses is a multiplication of temptation to drink. We know also that where there are too many public-houses the publican is compelled in his own interest perhaps to have resort to very doubtful means of attracting business. We frequently read also of persons being seduced into public-houses and losing their money there? The tricks you describe are not at all uncommon.
11633. If we are going to have fewer houses we certainly hope to have better ones? I have no doubt that you would find that as a rule they would be better houses; in the first place the police would have more power over a fewer number.
11634. No doubt this is a difficult matter, but supposing we had some means of getting rid of the seven houses to which you have referred, would you give the publicans compensation; do you think they are entitled to any? I think that if you make it compulsory to close the houses it would be only right to give them some compensation.
11635. We know that the licenses are in the strict letter of the law for only a year? Yes; but in this as in many other businesses persons take houses on a lease of perhaps five or seven years.
11636. In the expectation of the licenses being renewed as a matter of form? Yes.
11637. Then you think that they have something better than an annual license and that they are therefore entitled to some consideration if they are thrown out of business by the operation of the law? Yes.
11638. How would you get the money; from what fund would you pay it? It is a hard thing in these days to find what it is to be paid from.
11639. Do you think the Government should pay or that the City Corporation should pay? Certainly not the Corporation; they derive no benefit from the license; the Government receive the license fees and I think they should compensate the publicans.
11640. But is that not making you and me and other taxpayers compensate them? No doubt.
11641. And you are willing to provide your quota of compensation in cases of that sort? In a case where a man has a house on a lease, and it is determined that it should be shut up? I think he should be compensated, and I am willing to pay my share of the compensation.
11642. Have you heard that there are many concert-rooms or establishments of that kind about the Quay? No; the only concert-room of which I know is under the Bethel Church.
11643. The part in which your business is situated is very much inhabited by Chinamen; we understand that they rarely go into public-houses? It is very seldom that they do so; they have drink of their own; and it is only on certain occasions that they take even that.
11644. Does the Chinese population of Lower George-street contribute nothing to the intemperance of the district? Nothing in comparison with the other portions of the population. Of course a few of them go into public-houses, but when they do so they do not stop, they have their brandy or whatever they want, and go out again immediately.
11645. Do you think we are treating the habitual drunkard properly in sending him to gaol; do you think he has committed such a crime to society that we should lock him up with hardened offenders? No, I think he should be sent to another place.
11646. Would you have something in the nature of a reformatory or work-house, or something of that kind, which would not have the stamp of the gaol? Yes, it ought to be quite apart from the gaol.
11647. It should not be too attractive as a sanatorium, but it should be a place where a man might be confined for a sufficient interval to completely rehabilitate himself? Yes, that is what I mean.
11648. You know the temper of the artizan class pretty well? Yes.
11649. You know that they rebel against too much interference with their liberty? They do.
11650. Do you think they would acquiesce in a law which permitted a couple of Stipendiary Magistrates to send them away from their families for six or nine months; understand that I am speaking of an habitual drunkard who now goes to gaol, or runs the chance of going to gaol? I think they would prefer to be sent to a reformatory to being sent to gaol.
11651. You think then that the object of restoring them as decent members of society would make some amends for their long detention—in some cases not less than a year's detention would be necessary we are told? I believe it would be far better that this class of persons should be sent to a reformatory than to a gaol. No doubt many drunkards are good men at heart, but an inclination to drink is their weakness. When we send them to gaol we mix them up with a bad class, and they may come out themselves quite as bad as the class with which they have mixed. In many cases I can quite understand that they would lose their characters, and this would not happen if they were sent to a reformatory.
11652. You think that they sometimes add criminality to vice? Yes.
11653. You think that is not a wise mode of treatment then? No.
11654. Then you do not think that more drunkenness is a crime? I do not think that drunkards should be herded together with thieves, or with men who have committed outrageous offences.
11655. You are giving expression I suppose to the same human feeling as has been expressed by other witnesses. But there is a difficulty. What is to become of the families of these men during the interval of detention. We have evidence here that there are many men who are habitual drunkards. They are drunk two days of the week, and they manage to eke out some sort of subsistence for their families during the remaining five. The wives and families of that class would be totally unprovided for during the period of detention, which might last nine months or a year. Who is to sustain the families during the interval? I do not think for one moment that the Government should send a man from his family if he were drunk only two days a week.
11656. You do not think it should be done in these cases? No, I do not think it would be just.
11657. In such circumstances as these you would not take away the man who is the bread-earner? No. The class whom I would take away and detain are those who never do support their wives and families.
11658. So far as that class is concerned you think there would be no objection to their detention? No.
11659. You seem to have some objection in the case of the others, but it is only a question of time. A man who now gets drunk on two days a week may become a habitual drunkard and may be always drunk? Yes.
11660. If he could be weaned would it not be better to wean him by this course, if you could take him in time,

Mr.
S. Beaney.

Mr.

time, because when the habitual drunkard is 50 or 60 years old you may practically regard him as hopeless. Do you not know of men, to whom if they could be taken away and put under proper treatment and be moderately worked during the time of their detention, a reformatory would be salvation? I have no doubt there would be some, but of course the hardship would come in if you took away a man who had been drunk perhaps only a few times, and who was not an actual drunkard. There are many men who if they have any loss may indulge in drink for a time.

11661. But the arrangement to which I refer would not operate upon that class at all. Before the magistrates should have any right to send a man away from his home for a long period, it should be shown that he had been drunk so many times, but that he was also ruining his family, and wasting his means, and that there was an absolute certainty that if he were not provided for in some way he would become a mere vagrant drunkard in a short time. All that would have to be proved? If the magistrates have the power to send these men away from their wives and families it seems to me that the public will have to be taxed to maintain the reformatory.

11662. The expense of the reformatory will be the expense of keeping the drunkard, and of contributing something towards the support of his family? I think it would be far better if the drunkard could be employed in some way during his detention and in that way help to maintain his family.

11663. So that if the drunkard happened to be a tradesman he could be made to work almost as profitably as he could work outside? Yes. I do not approve of sending the drunkard to gaol; I quite believe in a reformatory. Of course care would have to be taken in drawing up a good Act, and in administering it.

11664. So that none but proper cases may be dealt with? Exactly.

11665. Mr. Colls.] Are there many men employed in your establishment? No; there are only two. The business has been divided.

11666. I think you said that there was not so much drinking now-a-days at picnics as there used to be in former days. Do you attribute that to the abolition of packet licenses on harbour steamers? No doubt that has a great deal to do with it.

11667. You are aware that in former days people who went to these picnics commenced drinking immediately they got on board and continued to do so all the way down the harbour? Yes.

11668. How many of the nine houses near the Circular Quay, to which you have referred, could accommodate a family. Would you take your own family to any of them for accommodation? There are some two or three of them to which I certainly would not take my family. I do not know much about them, but I have seen something of the way in which they are kept.

11669. Do they take in lodgers or boarders, or are they mere drinking shops? I think most of them take in sailors as boarders.

11670. Do you think that 16 is too low an age for young men to be supplied with drink by publicans? Yes, I would not have the age under 18.

11671. I suppose you notice a great deal of drinking among the young people in the part of the town in which you live? Yes, I see a great many young people drinking down my way.

11672. Girls as well as boys? Yes; I am sorry to say that I see a great many girls coming out of the watch-houses in the morning.

11673. Are there many houses of ill-fame there? I think from what the police have told me that a great many of them have been moved away. There is a place called Suez Canal, which was at one time an awful locality.

11674. I suppose you have heard that there is a great deal of drinking at high prices in these places? I have heard of it.

11675. Are there many public-houses in St. Leonards? Not many.

11676. Do they accommodate the public? I think most of them are only drinking places.

11677. Would you be surprised to hear that the Police Magistrates cannot get as much as some bread and cheese in some of these houses? I should not be surprised.

11678. Mr. Roseby.] How long have you been with Mitchell & Co.? Twenty-nine years. I have been connected with them for fifty years. I was reared with them—when I first came to the Colony. My father was with them for forty-seven years.

11679. They employ at different times a number of men? Yes.

11680. How many have you known to be employed about the establishment at one time? Perhaps thirty.

11681. You have had large dealings with the sailor class of people in the district? Yes.

11682. Have you not known that drink has been a terrible curse to a large number of the sailor class with whom you have come into contact? I know that it has been, and that it still is a curse, but not to the same extent as it used to be.

11683. To what do you attribute the very great reform in the habits of the sailors of late years? I have no doubt that a great deal of it is owing to the fact that the public-houses do not open before 6 o'clock in the morning. In olden times you might see sailors in public-houses before 6 o'clock. Perhaps they would then take enough to make them wish for more at 8 o'clock. I think the closing of public-houses at 11 o'clock had also stopped a great deal of drinking.

11684. Do you know whether a number of the men have joined temperance organisations? Yes.

11685. There are a number of temperance organisations connected with the Mariners' Church, are there not? Yes.

11686. From your extensive knowledge and experience as a citizen you regard drink as an unmitigated curse, do you not? Yes, there is no doubt as to its being a curse.

11687. You live at North Shore? Yes.

11688. Do you think that there are quite sufficient public-houses at North Shore to meet all the just requirements of the people at the present time? There are not many houses.

11689. I believe there is only one public-house per 2,000 inhabitants. Do you think that is sufficient for the requirements of the people? Quite sufficient.

11690. Do you think the same proportion would be sufficient in the city? No, I hardly think that one is sufficient for 2,000 persons.

11691. Then you think it would be well if there were more houses at North Shore? No, we do not want any more new houses there.

11692. I think you said you would allow the people to decide how many public-houses they would have in a district;—is that your idea? Yes.

11693.

Mr. S. Beaney. 1 Nov., 1886.

- 11693. Do you not believe in the principle that everything should bow to the will of the people? When I was speaking just now I was referring to the locality about which the President was examining me, and in which I said I thought there were seven houses too many.
- 11694. But do you think that everything in this matter should bow to the voice of the people—that the people themselves should rule? Yes, I believe in that.
- 11695. Then surely you would give them the privilege of saying whether they would or would not have public-houses in their locality. In Queensland the local option vote is upon three questions. The first of these is: Shall there be any more new licenses in this district? The second is: Shall there be a reduction in the number of licenses, and if so, how many? The third question is: Shall there be any licenses at all?—do you think that those three questions should be voted upon here? I have no objection to these three questions. I would leave these to the people to decide for themselves.
- 11696. President.] Would you let a bare majority determine? I believe a majority in all cases should decide.
- 11697. Mr. Roseby.] With reference to the compensation of the publicans, do you not think it would be sufficient if three years' notice were given them; in other words, they would have a monopoly for three years. Do you not think that would be a sufficient compensation? I have no doubt that in that case the compensation could be a great deal lessened.
- 11698. But you do not think it would be sufficient compensation? No, I do not.
- 11699. Do you think that young women should be employed in public-houses as barmaids? No; I do not believe in barmaids.
- 11700. Do you not know that most of the public-houses are nothing more than mere drinking shops, mere pot-houses, making no provision to accommodate the public? That has come to my knowledge from others. I have heard many persons say that they cannot get a bed or a meal at some of the houses.
- 11701. Did you ever see a Chinaman intoxicated? Yes.
- 11702. But as a rule they are a very sober class? Yes; and I know, because I have so many in my yard.
- 11703. Mr. Hutchison.] You firmly believe in the present system of Sunday closing? Yes.
- 11704. And you would urge the enforcement of the Act? Yes.
- 11705. When you say you believe public-houses are necessary, do you think they are necessary by virtue of the drink they sell or by virtue of the accommodation which they offer? I think they should give general accommodation.
- 11706. Could you not imagine a state of things arising in which the houses would offer splendid accommodation without selling any drink? Yes; but I would not prevent people from having public-houses altogether because my neighbour may like to take a glass whereas I do not.
- 11707. But you do not want to maintain them as accommodation houses because of the drink? Not for the drink alone. I want general accommodation; I think we should have a better class of houses if the number could be reduced.
- 11708. You know there are localities in which there is splendid hotel accommodation, and where not a drop of drink is sold; is not that the kind of accommodation you require? No.
- 11709. You think the houses must sell drink? I am not referring to the community generally; I am referring to the class about which I have been questioned, the scuffling class. I know that most of them like a glass of grog, and I would not prevent them from having it.
- 11710. Mr. Colls.] You would like to see hotels, not public-houses? There are temperance houses where they do not sell drink, but I believe in hotels where a man can get accommodated with anything in reason, including drink.
- 11711. Mr. Hutchison.] Personally you do not believe in drinking hotels? Personally; but I am not sufficiently bigoted as to say to my neighbour, "You shall not have any drink because I do not want any myself."

Mr. William Russell called in, sworn, and examined:—

- 11712. President.] What are you? A cab proprietor.
- 11713. Do you work a number of cabs? No; only one.
- 11714. You own your own cab, and drive it? Yes.
- 11715. Have you been a long time in the business? About four years.
- 11716. Are you a native of the Colony? No, of London.
- 11717. Were you a cabman there? No.
- 11718. Do you know the town pretty well? I know almost every inch of it.
- 11719. Do you do much night-work? I generally work from 5 in the evening until 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning, at the time when people are most liberal.
- 11720. There are a large number of cabmen in this city? Over a thousand.
- 11721. They have a society, have they not? Yes, a union.
- 11722. How many do the cabmen generally number? I suppose 1,500.
- 11723. Is that in the city? Yes; there were 1,195 cabs two or three weeks ago, and there must be a driver to each cab.
- 11724. Do you not think there are more cabs licensed than there are drivers? No; that very seldom happens.
- 11725. Is it not a common thing for a man to have both a "four-wheeler" and a "two-wheeler" in his own establishment? Not in Sydney. A licensed man can drive any cab.
- 11726. Do you not find that the public-houses are rather too numerous in the city? Yes, they are.
- 11727. We could do with fewer? Yes.
- 11728. Are there as many proportionally as in London? Not in proportion to the population, but I think there is more drunkenness here.
- 11729. Are you a tectotaller? No.
- 11730. Are the cabmen, as a rule, temperate men, do you think? Yes, they are.
- 11731. It is not a common thing to see cabmen fined for drunkenness, is it? Not in proportion to their number.
- 11732. I suppose the Commissioners have rather stringent rules? Yes. If you are drunk on a cab you endanger the lives of other people as well as your own life, and for that reason the rules are very strict.
- 11733.

Mr. W. Russell. 1 Nov., 1886.

- Mr. W. Russell.
1 Nov., 1896.
11733. Suppose a "fare" offers a cabman a drink, is he not allowed to take it? If he can get someone to mind his horse. If you leave your horse alone you get heavily fined for it.
11734. Do the cabmen make any objection to the public-houses being closed on Sunday, do they feel it a great hardship? No; I do not think it is a hardship.
11735. I suppose that is because they can get a glass of grog whenever they like it? Yes.
11736. They know the way to go about it? Yes.
11737. The so-called Sunday closing is nonsense, then? Rubbish. Anyone can get a drink if he wants it.
11738. You think the houses might as well be open on Sunday? Yes, for an hour or so. I do not think the law can possibly stop drinking on Sunday.
11739. Mr. Hutchison.] Why? Because there are so many ways of evading it.
11740. Do you mean that the publicans are stronger than the law? Yes. For instance, the law says that they are not to serve drink, but they do serve drink. Depend upon it the publicans will find a way through any Act you may pass.
11741. Do you think the publican is more to blame than his customers? No. I think the customers are most to blame, because they beg and pray and go on their knees for a drink, and if a man does not serve them on a Sunday they will not go into his place on week days.
11742. President.] Do you honestly believe that that is a fact? I know it to be a fact.
11743. Do you think that the business of some of these publicans would be ruined or injured by their customers leaving them during the week? Yes.
11744. Mr. Colls.] Is that the feeling of the cabmen? Yes.
11745. President.] Supposing a cabman is refused a drink at the "Swan with two Necks" on a Sunday, would he go to the house during the week, or would he resent the refusal so much as to avoid the place during the week? I think they would generally avoid the place.
11746. They bring that sort of influence to bear upon the publican? Yes.
11747. And I suppose they would not only stop away from the place themselves but would refuse to bring customers? Yes; as a rule I think you will find that the cabmen take customers to the houses where they have no difficulty in getting a drink on Sunday. There is many a publican who believes in acting up to the law who is ruined by it.
11748. Mr. Colls.] Then there are houses where cabmen are refused drink? Yes.
11749. I understood you to say that a man could get a drink anywhere? I do not think I said that. What I meant to say was that if anyone wanted a glass of drink he could get it by looking for it.
11750. President.] I suppose you have been to some of these up-stair bars? I suppose you mean the sixpenny bars?
11751. I refer to the up-stair bars, which are generally kept by ladies? Yes, I have been to the bars when I have been invited up by parties whom I have driven there. I have been asked to have a drink with them. They generally pay a boy a shilling to mind the horse.
11752. I suppose there are sometimes several ladies in these upper bars, are there not? Well, sometimes there are two of them.
11753. And do customers go there for the sake of the drink? Yes.
11754. Only for the drink? Well, I am not aware of what it ends in.
11755. Do they not appear to you to be places for assignation? Well, I do not know.
11756. There are a considerable number of these houses, and it is considered doubtful what their particular character is and what their purpose is. They are said to sell drink at extraordinary prices, and we want to know what the business is. Is it not a fact that these bars kept by women are assignation houses? I could not give you a decided answer. I could not state the fact because I have never proved it.
11757. At what time do you generally drive up to them? Not after 11 o'clock.
11758. Do not they get drink at these places after 11? I think not.
11759. Do they all clear out at 11? Yes.
11760. You say you have been in some of them? Yes.
11761. Have you seen anything going on which you would consider wrong; have you seen anything going on which would lead you to suppose that the purpose of persons in going there is not so much to get drink as to obtain accommodation of some other kind? I have never noticed it. In some of them the people are rather jolly, and there is a little joking going on, but that is all I have seen.
11762. How many women have you seen at these places. I suppose there would be female visitors? No, there are only the barmaids.
11763. No one else? No.
11764. You have seen no one else? No.
11765. No women of the town? No; they will allow no women except barmaids there.
11766. How many of these up-stair bars kept by women are there in the town? Between forty and fifty I should say.
11767. Where are they chiefly situated, in what parts of the town;—are there many in George-street? I know a couple of down-stair bars in George-street.
11768. Kept by women? Yes, down the Haymarket way. There are others in King-street and Castle-reagh-street.
11769. Mr. Hutchison.] Are the bars to which you refer sub-let? Yes, the women pay so much a week for the bar. They buy the liquor off the landlord. It is quite apart from the ordinary bar of the public-house.
11770. President.] Drinks are dearer at these places than they are elsewhere? Yes, they charge 6d.
11771. Is it not a fact that liquor is sometimes sold at 10s., 15s., or even £1 a bottle? Yes; that is champagne. They charge £1 for a big bottle and 10s. for a small bottle.
11772. Is that the ordinary prices for champagne anywhere else? No.
11773. The charge is about double? Yes.
11774. What would be the object of a person in paying double prices for his drink. The houses shut at 11 o'clock you say; what is the inducement? As far as I can make out, persons go there more with the idea of captivating the barmaids than for the sake of obtaining drink.
11775. You think they go for the sake of captivating the barmaids? Yes.
11776. Mr. Colls.] The barmaids to whom these bars are sub-let do not lodge in the house I suppose. You have often driven them home to their own lodgings? Yes.
- 11777.

11777. President.] Are they driven with one of their customers? No.
11778. Mr. Colls.] Do more than one of the barmaids occupy the houses in which they live? Yes, sometimes.
11779. President.] In what sort of houses do they lodge? I could not say; I have never been inside.
11780. To what part of the city do you drive them; to Woolloomooloo? Sometimes to Gipps-street, sometimes to Albion-street.
11781. What rent is paid for these bars? I know one of them, within a stone's throw of this place, for which £4 a week is paid.
11782. Do you think much drinking goes on at concert-rooms after 11 o'clock at night, or that much drink is taken into concert-rooms or dancing-saloons? I could not say; I have not been into one of them since I have been in Sydney.
11783. Do you take many "fares" there? No; the 'class of persons who go there cannot afford a cab.
11784. You think these places are chiefly the resort of larrikinesses? Yes, and of other women of the lower classes.
11785. Do you think tobacco-twisters are fond of dancing? Yes.
11786. You refer to women such as are employed at Cameron's? Yes. As soon as the day's work is done they clean themselves and have tea, and go away to a dance.
11787. I suppose you take your glass when you want one? Yes.
11788. Do you find any great hardship in the 11 o'clock closing;—do you think it is too early for cabmen? I never miss it at all; I could do without it altogether.
11789. But, taking the cabmen generally, I suppose they often have to deposit a "fare" miles away, returning home to the city long after 11 o'clock at night;—are they able to get liquor after 11 o'clock at night as easily as they can get it on Sunday? No, they cannot.
11790. You think the closing at 11 o'clock then is an absolute closing? Yes, it is. There is no going into the houses after 11 o'clock.

Mr.
W. Russell.
1 Nov., 1886.

Mr. George Law called in, sworn, and examined:—

11791. President.] You are a cabman? Yes—a proprietor.
11792. You drive your own cab? Yes.
11793. Have you been long engaged in cab-driving—a night-cab in Sydney? For about seven years.
11794. Are you a teetotaler? No.
11795. Are you a temperate man? I am in the habit of taking liquor when I require it. I am sorry to say I sometimes take it to excess.
11796. You do a lot of night business with your cab? Yes, it is all night work.
11797. And you see a good deal of the habits of people at night-time? Yes.
11798. What is your opinion of these upstairs bars—the bars kept by women? Very bad indeed. The places are not private bars in the proper sense of the term, because no one is excluded. If they wanted to sell a better article, and charge more for it, I do not see why they should not call them sixpenny bars.
11799. They sell nothing under 6d.? No.
11800. But a good deal over? No; I think 6d. is the general price.
11801. But we understand that champagne, which is 10s. at another place, is £1 at these bars? I think not.
11802. Have you been in any of them? I have been called in by gentlemen occasionally to have a drink. Sometimes I go in for the sake of getting a glass of good drink, in preference to the rubbish which I get elsewhere.
11803. You think then that they sell good drink? Yes; because the class of persons who frequent these bars would not go there unless they got good liquor.
11804. Do you think that is why they resort to these places? No, I do not.
11805. Then why do they go there? I fancy that in a great many cases the females are a source of attraction; but in some cases people like to be more private, and go for the sake of getting a good glass of drink.
11806. You are referring now to the bars leased by females? The leasing rests with the proprietor. It would not do for him to publish the fact because it would not be to his credit; but I am told that such leases exist. To tell the truth, I have very little experience of them. They all go by the name of private bars, and it is difficult to distinguish one from another.
11807. But there are other places which are called public bars, where there are also sixpenny drinks? Yes; but the same term is applied to them. They are all called private bars.
11808. Does every publican who has a sixpenny bar call it a private bar? Yes, when he has a three-penny bar as well.
11809. Who do you generally drive to these bars—elderly men, such as those you now see around you, or young men? The men are, as a rule, above the common; but it is not more than once in six or twelve months that I go to one of the places.
11810. How many of them are there in the town? There are a great many bars which they call private bars. They used to call them cafés at one time, and I think they were then more private than they are now.
11811. The houses are supposed to be rigorously closed on Sunday, but if you wanted to get a drink I suppose you would have no difficulty in getting one? I should have no trouble at all in getting a drink during prohibited hours. I do not think you could really put a stop to drinking during these hours.
11812. Do you know a place where one could not get a drink on Sunday? There are more places where you could not get a drink on Sunday than there are places where you could.
11813. If a publican refused you on Sunday would you go to his house during the week? I can scarcely say that I should feel so annoyed as not to go near him during the week.
11814. But do you think that many others would revenge themselves in that way? I do.
11815. And you think it certainly hurts a publican's trade to refuse a cabman on Sunday? I am sure of it.

Mr. G. Law.
1 Nov., 1886.

- Mr. G. Law. 11816. Are the cab-drivers as a class temperate? No; I fancy they are greatly addicted to drink. You see they have so many temptations.
- 1 Nov., 1886. 11817. The "fares" I suppose are sometimes a little jolly then, and are constantly pressing drink upon the driver, and I daresay there are many temptations in the weather and that kind of thing? Yes. Sometimes you would have gentlemen who would think nothing of you unless you have drink with them. They will not pay for lemonade or anything of that kind; you have to have brandy, or whatever they drink, and the chances are that if you do not take it they will turn you off and take another cab.
11818. Is that frequently the case? Yes.
11819. Are you not thinking of times when a man would come down from a station with a pocket full of money? But it happens so often. If it does not happen to me it happens to other cabmen. One hears almost every week of some cabman having had a "jolly fellow." I am constantly hearing of cases of the kind, even though they might not happen to me.
11820. You have only one cab? Yes.
11821. You say that you have no fault to find with Sunday closing because you can get your drink when you like. Do you prefer to take your drink when it is contraband, or would you like to take it legally? They say that "stolen fruit is often the sweetest." I have known soldiers to get out of a fort in the middle of the night and get over the ramparts and down the chains of a draw-bridge in order to get a bottle of liquor. I fancy that it is requisite to open the houses for an hour on Sunday.
11822. Do you think that would be enough? I think so.
11823. Do you think that men would frequent public-houses in large numbers, or that they would send for their beer in jugs? I would not allow them to drink at the bar.
11824. You would have what they call in England "off licenses?" Yes, the liquor should be drunk off the premises, as it is on Christmas Day and Good Friday.
11825. Do you think that much bad liquor is sold in Sydney? Very bad liquor.
11826. I suppose you are a judge of liquor? I do not know; I drink brandy chiefly. I find that in the threepenny houses it is very inferior. I would willingly give 6d. in a place where I knew I could get good drink, but in some places they have not a three star brandy to give you, even if you are willing to pay 6d. for it. You will find a difference in the quality of the liquor in almost every house out of half a dozen.
11827. Do your friends frequently complain of the character of the liquor which they obtain? I have known them to resort to different houses for the purpose of obtaining liquor, and I have known them to wait until they got to a certain place in town before they would take a drink.
11828. You would not object to go to these private bars for the sake of getting a good drink? No.
11829. In spite of the ladies? The ladies would be no attraction for me.
11830. Mr. Colls.] You are a married man with a family? Yes.
11831. President.] In going about in the later hours of the night do you see much drunkenness? No.
11832. Comparing us with the English people, do you think we deserve to be called a temperate people? I think that where you find one man who abuses drink you could find twenty who do not, and who can drink in moderation.
11833. Do you notice in going about that there is much drinking among young girls and young boys. Do you observe them going in and out of public-houses, or do you notice the signs of drink upon them? Some of them who are addicted to drink are great drinkers.
11834. Are they young? Yes, and mostly girls.
11835. You have noticed it? It is very noticeable, especially to a man like myself, who is out at all hours.
11836. You see unmistakable signs of their being intoxicated? Yes. I have noticed a great many girls, and they drink very strong liquor. You hear them calling for brandy.
11837. Do you think that the girls who go to the dancing saloons finish off as a rule by taking to drink? No; I do not think they do.
11839. Are these saloons ever situated next door to public-houses? I do not know of any. I am very strongly opposed to the existence of the dancing saloons.

WEDNESDAY, 3 NOVEMBER, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,
T. COLLS, Esq., J.P.,

J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.,
A. HUTCHISON, Esq.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Thomas Davis called in, sworn, and examined:—

- Mr. T. Davis. 11840. President.] You are the Secretary of the Seaman's Union? Yes.
- 3 Nov., 1886. 11841. I suppose the Union of which you are the Secretary is composed of a large number of seafaring men? There are 4,000 in our branch.
11842. What do you mean by your branch? We belong to the Federated Seaman's Union of Australasia. The New South Wales branch has 4,000 members.
11843. And you are the Secretary of that branch? Yes.
11844. I suppose I am right in saying that these men either are or have been seafaring men? They are all bona fide seafaring men. Some of them may work on shore for even six months at a time in the wool season, but they go to sea again in the winter.
11845. And I suppose that some of your men are lumpers? You may say that seven or eight hundred are lumpers. Some are coal lumpers.
11846. But in original training or instinct they are all seamen? Of course there are coal-trimmers and firemen, who might not have gone to sea until they were 25 years of age, because they do not require require much training for the stoke-hole; it is merely a matter of endurance. But the sailor portion of the Union, numbering about half, have all been brought up to the sea from boyhood. Mr. T. Davis.

11847. In the principles upon which your rules are founded do you take any cognizance of temperance? 3 Nov., 1886.

We have certain rules in the Union, punishing the members who by reason of being drunk may lose their ship or who may go on board so drunk as to be incapable of performing their duties, thereby throwing an extra amount of work upon their shipmates. Of course a man may not be drunk and yet may lose his ship in various ways, but he would be fined for it.

11848. Then am I right in gathering from your answer that in forming your rules you have regarded drunkenness, not so much as a moral evil per se as a burthen upon one's fellow seamen? That is exactly the motive we have had, because if a ship goes away a man short there must be more duty for the remaining men to perform. If on the other hand a ship goes out with a man who is incapacitated from performing his duties of course something would occur.

11849. But so far as the Unionist is concerned your rules have no bearing upon him if he is drunk at a time when you consider that he has a right to be drunk so to speak? No. We give him perfect liberty to do as he likes when his time is his own.

11850. How long have you been the Secretary of the Union? For about five months.

11851. You may be aware of the fact that this Commission was appointed during the Administration of Sir John Robertson in order to ascertain by taking evidence, what apparently the Government considered themselves unable to ascertain by the means open to them, certain facts with regard to the drinking habits of the community. One of the subjects of our inquiry is as to whether among the various classes of the community intemperance is or has been gaining ground. Now, you represent 4,000 men of whom most from their training and antecedents must have been very familiar with drink. Do you consider that the seafaring class as a body is become more temperate than it was? I think that as a body they are becoming more temperate. Of course we have more cases of intemperance brought before us now than we used to have, but then the number has not increased in proportion to the increase of the number of members in the Union.

11852. That is to say, there has been no increase in numbers pro rata? Exactly. Ten years ago the society was but just formed, and it has risen up to a strength of 4,000 members. I think that you had a very good illustration of the temperate habits of the men on the occasion of the recent eight hours' demonstration. According to the Daily Telegraph they marched in procession that day 1,500 strong, and I do not suppose that on the ground at which the sports were held, where you might have expected, considering it was a holiday, that they would have been inclined to be jovial, there were more than three of the number in what you might call a state of drunkenness—that is to say, who were so drunk as to render them incapable of taking care of themselves. Since the Orient steamers have been running a number of men have come out here in the stoke-holes, who have been drawn from the very lowest parts of London, and you can very well imagine that they have been brought up to habits of drinking, and that it would take some time, a matter of a couple of years or so at least, to break them of that habit. I notice, however, that in coming out here they do greatly get broken of the habit.

11853. Are the bulk of your men married men? No; I can say, without fear of contradiction, that there are at least 75 per cent. who are single.

11854. Then they must have some motive for comparative sobriety which is not connected with their family lives? Yes; I can point to scores of members who own houses. These are single men; they have houses in the suburbs—at Leichhardt, and other suburbs in that direction. I often meet them going out to look after their properties. Sometimes they ask me to do a little business for them in that line. I used at one time to stay in the Sailor's Home, in Sydney, and I know that Captain Chatfield has several hundred bank-books belonging to the men. I dare say you could obtain from him the amount of money which is being continually put into the banks to the credit of these men.

11855. That would be put into the Savings Bank or into the Post Office Savings Bank? Yes.

11856. Do you consider the eight hours' demonstration a fair test of the sobriety of the men? I think so. You must bear in mind that they knew nothing whatever of the existence of this Commission. I do not suppose there are ten members of the society who knew that I was coming here to-day. Taking these circumstances into consideration I think you may regard their behaviour, on the occasion to which I refer, as a fair specimen of their general conduct. If you compare the class of seamen here with the seamen in other parts, such as Liverpool, London, and Glasgow, you will find that the comparison is very much in favour of our men. The amount of drunkenness and crime of every description among the seafaring population of those cities is very great when you compare it with what exists here. No doubt many of the men become greatly reformed when they have been out here a couple of years or so.

11857. Do you know Liverpool well? I do.

11858. Have you lived there? No; but I have often sailed out of the port across the Atlantic.

11859. I believe Liverpool was the city in which they tried a system of freetrade in drink? Yes.

11860. And at Glasgow they tried a different system. Do you still say that you think the seafaring population of this city compares very favourably with the seafaring population of the cities you have named? It compares very favourably indeed; in fact there is no comparison. I have stayed in the Sailors' Home in London, and I have seen scores and scores of cases of drunkenness. At night the street outside the Home used to be a perfect Bedlam, and it was unsafe for any respectably dressed man to put his head outside the door after dark. There was always a double quantity of police in that particular quarter among the seafaring population. Now you will not see anything of that kind in Sydney. The police are no stronger about George-street than they are in any other part of the city.

11861. To what do you ascribe this remarkable amelioration in the habits of the class, because, bear in mind, that the men are still Englishmen, Scotchmen, and Irishmen; and I suppose there are a few Americans? There are many foreigners.

11862. Germans? Yes; and Scandinavians. I suppose that fully 30 per cent. are foreigners.

11863. Is not that so in Liverpool? Yes; but I think that in Sydney we have a larger proportion of foreigners than there is in any other English seaport. The reason I give for it is that the foreigners when they do arrive here are more thrifty than the average British seaman. They join our Society, and they wait, even if they should have to wait a couple of months, until they get a ship. When they once get into a ship they stop in it; many of our members have been five or six years in the same ship.

11864. To what do you ascribe the improvement in the habits of the seafaring class in this Colony? I think

- Mr. T. Davis. think the principal reason is that their position is becoming more elevated; they receive more remuneration for their services; they have so much more money than they used to have in Great Britain. The first thing they take to is dress; you will notice a great difference in the dress of the seamen of this Colony as compared with that of the seamen at Home, and you may say the same of any of the other Colonies. When they come to have a little respect for themselves in the matter of dress I think it naturally follows that they do not like to be seen reeling about the streets in a state of intoxication.
- 3 Nov., 1886. 11865. Then the extra wages do not take them to the public-houses? A great many will go to the public-houses, but they drink in moderation.
11866. They do not waste their wages? No, not as they used to do in Great Britain. They do not take their wages for the whole voyage into a public-house and start drinking until the whole of the money is gone; there is none of that here.
11867. Do you think the Union itself has any influence in raising the standard of character in these men? Yes; there is no doubt about it. I think the meetings every Monday night have a great influence. If a man were seen coming up with an old or shabby dress on, remarks would at once be made about him; the men take a natural pride now in matters of that kind. You may say that these Colonies are the only place where the seamen have a chance of assembling together; that is one reason which I give for their elevation.
11868. But there are Seaman's Homes in all the chief seaport towns? Yes; but to tell the truth, I see no difference between the men who go to the Seaman's Homes and those who go to the boarding-houses. They have a bar in the Sailors' Home in London, and although no spirits are sold, ale and porter can be had.
11869. There is no bar in the Sailors' Home here? No.
11870. Do you think the missionary enterprise in other places is as energetic as it is said to be here? I should say that it was; I do not know, however, that the missionary efforts here have any effect upon the members of our Union. I think they are in the habit of attending concerts and free-thought lectures more than they attend church.
11871. I suppose Mr. Shearston, Mr. Bradley, and other gentlemen have some influence upon the men? Yes; but their efforts are principally directed among the men on the foreign ships, that is to say, the men signing from Home.
11872. Among the men who are paid at the other end of the journey? Yes; you see these men are strangers to the port, and they are induced to go to the Bethel. They have concerts and lectures there once or twice a week; everything possible is done to keep the men away from the public-houses. No doubt there are among these men many who, if they got £1 from the captain would, after making a long passage in which they had been, so to speak, hemmed in as in a prison, spend the whole of it in a public-house. They would enter the public-house and would not leave it until the last shilling was gone. I dare say that a good deal of good is done among men of that class.
11873. You really think that these gentlemen do a considerable amount of good among the class who are utter strangers here? There is not the least doubt about it.
11874. There is no doubt with reference to the good they do among the men-of-war's men? No; there is no doubt about that. I have also seen a great many apprentices go to the Bethel and attend regularly. No doubt Mr. Shearston is doing a good work among the ships; but among our coasting vessels there is scarcely any missionary enterprise. I do not suppose that on any one Sunday you would find more than ten members of the Union in the Bethel Church.
11875. I find that the three men out of the 1,500 whom you state were drunk and incapable on the occasion of the eight-hour demonstration represent an average of '05 per cent. Do you think that fairly represents the number of drunkards in your Union? No, I do not think so. I am not a teetotaller myself, I take a glass of beer when I feel inclined; but I was walking round the ground on which the sports were held continually. I know the whole of our members who were there, they all wore blue ribbon rosettes in their coats. Out of the whole number I marked only the three cases to which I have referred. These were the only cases which came under my notice. Of course a few may have escaped my attention, but I do not think so.
11876. Taking a survey round, you noticed only three men whom you thought were fit for the interference of the police? There were only three men whom I thought were really drunk. They were not behaving riotously, but they would have been the better for some friend to look after them. I think there are very few teetotallers in the Union; I do not think there are more than 10 per cent.
11877. Then there would not be more than 400 out of the 4,000? No, not of staunch teetotallers.
11878. I gather from what you say that the vast majority of the Unionists are temperate men, that is to say, they can take a drink, and they know where to stop? Yes, you may say that of the vast majority. The only class who give us any trouble are the stokers.
11879. If a man in your Union goes to a meeting drunk do you fine him? He is not allowed to come in. There is a quarter-master at the door.
11880. How many inveterate drunkards would there be among your members. Do you think there are 5 per cent.? I think not. I do not think I could put my hand upon more than four inveterate drunkards among the whole of the sailors.
11881. Five per cent. in 4,000 would be 200? There is nothing like that number of inveterate drunkards. I mean men who are continually losing jobs through drink, that is to say, men who would go into a public-house and drink until they become drunk, and who would do so frequently. There are some men who may get drunk only once in a while. Captain Hampden, of the "Barcoo," told me, for instance, yesterday morning, that he had some trouble on Saturday night with a fireman who was mad drunk. The captain said that it was very strange, as the man had come out from England in the steamer, and was the quietest man on board. He had never given any trouble before, but on Saturday night, when the vessel was in port, he got mad drunk. Now that man may never do such a thing again. I think I could safely say that during the last eighteen months there have only been something like thirty complaints of men being drunk and incapable of performing their duties. There may have been a larger number of inveterate drunkards than that, because an inveterate drunkard might drink in his own time and waste the whole of his money. I should not think that there were more than 100 of such men in the whole of our branch of the Union.
11882. That would be 2½ per cent. of the whole number? Yes.

11883. The vast majority of your men being moderate drinkers, do you think they, as a body, demand any alteration of the law in regard to the Sunday prohibition? As far as I can gather their opinions, they speak against the public-houses being closed on Sunday. Very nearly all of them do so. In my opinion there are more cases of drunkenness caused through the men getting into the houses illegally than there would be if the houses were open. As the Commission are no doubt aware, many of the houses are literally crammed on Sunday with persons who are drinking. The men, once they have got into a house, will not get up and go out and walk away the effect of one or two libations. They continue to stop and drink, because they do not know whether they will get into another house.

Mr. T. Davis.
3 Nov., 1886.

11884. They know very well that the houses will only admit their regular customers? Yes. I think that most of our men would only like to see the houses open in specific hours, between church hours, on Sunday.

11885. Where do your men generally live? They live in all directions. Some live in the suburbs, but the majority live in Kent-street, along by Miller's Point, and at Balmain. The principal boarding-houses are close to the A.S.N. Company's wharves.

11886. Supposing you take up a position at the corner of the Argyle Cut, do you not think you can see too many public-houses there? Far too many; the place is literally crammed with public-houses; I think I could see fifteen without any trouble. I have often made a note of the fact, and I have spoken of it several times when I have been in England.

11887. Do not you think the multiplication of public-houses must be a nuisance? They are a perfect nuisance. There are altogether too many public-houses. Some of them sell liquor which is simply poison. There being so many houses there they are obliged to mix up their liquor in all kinds of ways in order to make the sale of it pay.

Mr. Edwin Milton Witton called in, sworn, and examined:—

11888. President.] You are one of the provedores of the Hunter River New Steam Navigation Company? Yes.

Mr.
E. M. Witton.
3 Nov., 1886.

11889. Do you find any great trouble in the provisions of the Licensing Law concerning packet licenses? Well, I might mention the circumstance that we are not allowed to serve drink while we are along side the wharf.

11890. Do you think the law ought to be altered in that respect? I do. The people who come on board do not come there specially for the sake of the drink, but there are very often two or three friends who would like to have a parting nip. Many persons knowing that they cannot get any liquor on board bring a bottle with them, take it into their cabin, and borrow glasses.

11891. I suppose, that being the provedore, you are not altogether disinterested in this matter. You have an interest in a large consumption, have you not? Yes.

11892. I do not suppose that you may not have a larger interest in temperance itself, that is to say, you would not like to see your vessels turned into drinking dens? No, I am a teetotaler myself, and I never push my drink in any way.

11893. We are inquiring into this matter rather in the interests of temperance than of any other interests;—would the effect of a relaxation of the law, permitting liquor to be sold before the ship casts off her moorings, be a good thing in the interest of temperance? I think so; that is to say, if you were to allow the vessels to sell for an hour or half-an-hour before they leave the wharf.

11894. Would that have the effect of getting rid of the "flask" business. Do you think that people would still bring their flasks? I think they would.

11895. Do you not think that there would be more friends come to see the passengers off, and that therefore there would be more persons to drink? No, I do not think so. There might not be one out of every dozen who come on board who would take a drink. I had two hundred persons down there last night, and I do not suppose I took a pound altogether for drinks.

11896. We are told that a great deal of drinking is indulged in by passengers who take their own flasks with them? Yes; you may find the flasks every morning in the berths.

11897. The reason we are told for the taking of flasks on board is, that persons who take them may be enabled to drink with their friends directly they get on board? I do not know about that.

11898. Then why do you think they take the flasks? I think they like to have it in their cabin during the night in case they should be sea-sick.

11899. Do you think that alcohol is a preventive of sea-sickness? I know a good many persons take a nobbler before going to bed with the idea of preventing it.

11900. Does this flask-drinking occur in the steerage? In the steerage and in the saloon also.

11901. Do you not think that many sailors are tempted to drink in consequence of this practice? They are not allowed to drink at all while they are on board.

11902. Not even if the drink is the gift of the passengers? No; the steward is not allowed to serve either the sailors or the firemen.

11903. But do you not think the men get drink from persons who carry flasks? Not as a rule. It might happen occasionally; but between here and Newcastle there are only four men on the watch.

11904. Is the alteration of the law to which you have referred the only alteration which you would suggest? That is all.

11905. You do not travel with the ships? Yes, I am always on board.

11906. But the captain is the responsible person under the law? Yes.

11907. Mr. Hutchison.] Do you think that the friends of the passengers drink out of the flask when they come on board? When they come on board they generally ask for the number of the cabin. When they have discovered it they ask the steward to give them a couple of glasses. Then, I suppose, they take some drink.

11908. Is it not just possible that they procure these flasks, because by doing so they can obtain a given quantity of liquor at a price cheaper than that at which you can sell it to them? Yes, that might have something to do with it.

11909. Then the flasks will be taken on board, not so much because the passengers cannot obtain liquor at the bar, as because they get the liquor cheaper by taking the flasks? Yes.

11910. You said that you had 200 persons on board last night; do you mean 200 passengers? Yes.

11911. And you did not sell a pound's worth of drink? No. Often between Sydney and Newcastle at night I do not take 10s. for drink.

11912.

- Mr. E. M. Witton,
3 Nov., 1886.
11912. You know, that as a matter of fact, the prohibition against serving at the wharf is ignored. You do sell now both here and at Newcastle as if the law did not prohibit you? I never sell alongside the wharf myself. I do not know what my assistants may do.
11913. Mr. Roseby.] Have you noticed whether the passengers have not frequently been annoyed by people who are drunk kicking up a row during the passage? In the saloon there is no noise of that kind, but I could not say that there is none in the steerage. Persons come on board drunk, and it is impossible to keep them quiet.
11914. Have you not often seen half drunken persons supplied with drink in both the steerage and the saloon? No.
11915. Do you frequently notice cases of intemperance on board these vessels as you travel up and down? No.
11916. Then the master of a vessel who says that he has seen a number of passengers in such a state of intoxication as to make his vessel a pandemonium, would be exceeding the truth? The only time at which such a thing would be likely to occur would be at race times, when you have the card-sharpers and other persons of that kind on board.
11917. Do you ever notice any women among the passengers who are the reverse of sober? Not once in six months.
11918. And do you really think that in the interests of sobriety it would be a wise thing to allow liquor to be sold half an hour before the vessels start? Yes. I am not speaking for my own benefit, but for the benefit of the community.
11919. Do you not think, from what you have observed, that drink is a great curse and a nuisance to persons who travel in these coasting steamers? Not if it is taken in moderation.
11920. Have passengers ever complained to you of the disturbance made by persons who have been supplied with drink? No.
11921. What is the name of your ship? The "Maitland."
11922. Do you think it is wise or necessary to give increased facilities to persons to obtain drink? I see no harm in their being allowed to get it half an hour or an hour before the vessel leaves the wharf.
11923. You think the passengers would be more comfortable and quiet, and that there would be less intemperance. Do you really think that? Yes. I do not think many passengers take a drink purely for the sake of drinking. Friends like to have a parting glass, and they may have a glass under these circumstances, and take no more during the voyage.
11924. Mr. Hutchison.] Do you think persons would come on board an hour before their friends started? Perhaps not an hour, but they are frequently there half-an-hour before the vessel starts.
11925. Mr. Colls.] Do you think that the opening of the saloon bar an hour before the vessel leaves the wharf would do away with the bringing on board of flasks to a great extent? I think it would do away with a great deal of it, because there are people who come down from the country who are going straight through to Newcastle. These persons have no place of residence in Sydney; they do not wish to wait up until 11 o'clock in order that they may be able to get a drink, so they fetch a glass of grog on board with them, and take it into their cabins.
11926. You are responsible to the captain for any misconduct in the saloon in consequence of drink? Yes.
11927. Have you had any experience of hotels on shore? No. I have been all my life at sea.
11928. Can you deal with passengers who annoy others in the saloon? I can call the captain down, and if he comes down he may order the noisy persons on deck or to their cabins.
11929. And he will compel them to go? Yes.
11930. Have you seen him do so? Yes. I might be permitted to add, that I think a number of passengers finding that they cannot get liquor on board, sometimes go on shore and drink perhaps several glasses within a very short space of time. In fact they might take within that time a great deal more than they would take if they could get liquor on board at their leisure.
11931. Do you think there would be no danger of a large per-centage of the public going down to the vessels and obtaining drink, if they were allowed to open their bars before casting off their moorings? I would restrict the sale to passengers. I would ask them to produce their tickets before serving them with any drink.
11932. President.] But a person might ask for a second or third drink upon his ticket? That might be so, but I do not think you will find that many persons will come on board and pay 6d. for a glass of beer which they can obtain on shore for 3d.
11933. Are there any three-penny bars near to the vessel? Yes. There are some only a few steps off the wharf.
11934. Have you only one bar on board? There are two, one in the fore-cabin and one in the saloon, but they are both six-penny bars.

Reverend William Bradley called in, sworn, and examined:—

- Rev. W. Bradley,
3 Nov., 1886.
11935. President.] Will you state your occupation? I am the Chaplain of the Sydney Bethel Union.
11936. Mr. Hutchison.] How long have you been Chaplain? A year and ten months.
11937. You come largely into contact with seamen visiting our port? Yes, I visit the ships twice a week.
11938. Would these visits apply merely to foreign ships or would they include coasters? I go to all ships at the wharves, chiefly to the ships which are called merchant ships.
11939. You do not go on board the coasting steamers? I go on board those which come alongside the A.S.N. Company's or Howard Smith's wharves. I go on board both ships and steamers which I find at the wharves.
11940. Do you think there has been any improvement in the habits of seafaring men so far as sobriety is concerned? Yes, certainly.
11941. Is that within the last few years? Yes.
11942. Have you any theory by which you can account for it? Well, I presume it is the actual work which is being carried on. I have at the Bethel a concert which is crowded every Wednesday night. I suppose we have to turn away fifty or sixty persons every Wednesday. At the close of the entertainment we appeal for pledges, and pledges are taken.
11943. Do you think a large number of the men take the pledges and keep them? A proportion do so, but I think that many break them.

Rev.
W. Bradley:
3 Nov., 1886.

11944. Are sailors generally connected with temperance societies? We have a very fair proportion of sailors in the "Life-boat" Lodge, and there is a fair proportion of total abstainers, who are connected with the Seaman's Benefit Society.

11945. What do you mean by the "Life-boat" Lodge? The "Life-boat" Lodge of Good Templars.

11946. You get a considerable proportion of the men to go to these meetings and to feel interested in them? Yes.

11947. Do many of them come with affiliation cards or anything showing that they belong to societies in other parts? Yes. I get a number of letters from sailors, and they speak of institutions in New Zealand and in Victoria. I have just received a letter from a sailor who says that all honour is due to the ladies and gentlemen of New Zealand who have been starting such and such a mission. He says they have an opportunity of meeting, playing games, and having a cup of coffee, and that this has the effect of keeping the men away from the public-houses and that sort of thing.

11948. You attribute much of the improved habits of sailors to the efforts which are being made by people on shore? Yes. The war ships are visited by Mr. Shearston, the Seaman's missionary for the Church of England party, and the Wesleyan body have engaged a missionary lately. Then the Y. M. C. A. send young men down to give cards of invitation to attend their meetings, to the apprentices and midshipmen.

11949. You represent the Congregationalists? Yes; but I am not known as a Congregational Minister. The Union is purely unsectarian. As a matter of fact I am a Congregational Minister.

11950. Then the men are not only becoming more sober in their habits, but are becoming interested in sobriety? Yes. I think you might trace a good deal of the alteration to the influence of captains. There are a number of teetotal captains now; and it is a common thing for a teetotal captain to attend at my concert-room, and to say that he is happy to be in a position to state that the whole of his men are teetotallers.

11951. Would that be true of many ships? Not many, but we hear of it occasionally. I received a letter a short time ago from a captain who said that he had induced the whole of the members of his crew to sign the cards I had given him at our concert-room.

11952. Was that a foreign-going ship? A ship going to England.

11954. Could he go to a part where he would find that this password was not available? I do not think so.

11955. You think that this organization then has had something to do with the change? I do.

11956. And that there are a great many influences at work endeavouring to win the sailor from drink? Yes.

11957. Comparing the present with the past, you think there is an improvement? A marked improvement. I think the weakness of our sailors is impurity, rather than intemperance.

11958. President.] But surely the two things are connected, are they not? It may be so, but there are many men who get into bad society without drink. They seem to have a tendency in that direction, quite apart from the effect of drink.

11959. Mr. Hutchison.] There was a time when people, instead of taking interest in the sailor, passed him by, as belonging to a sort of nondescript class, with whom they would have nothing to do. You think that that spirit has entirely disappeared? I think so, to a great extent. I can only judge from what I have seen since I have been living in the neighbourhood of the wharves. I find that the married sailors are a splendid lot of men. Mr. Mills, of Balmain, wrote to me the other day to the effect, that he had driven his wife round the Circular Quay, and had pointed out the old spot where men were hung. He said that in so doing he could not help remarking the great change which had come over the place. At one time there were any number of drunken sailors and debauched women to be seen in that vicinity, and Mr. Mills could not help contrasting that state of things with the present.

11960. How does the Sunday closing affect the sailors of this port;—are they hostile to it? Those who do not drink would not be, but I think the majority are hostile to it. At our end of the town we are cursed with a number of public-houses. From the Bethel House, in which I lived, I used to notice the dodges of a publican in that neighbourhood, who used to supply the wants of sailors and others who were inclined to drink on Sunday. From my back window I could see him handing the beer over the fence to the lodgers in the eating-house next door, during hours at which he certainly ought not to have done so.

11961. You think that the majority of the sailors are positively hostile to the Sunday closing? Well, I can scarcely say.

11962. Do you think the majority of them would be in favour of the closing of the houses, providing that it can be done effectively? I think it would be safe to say that the majority would be in favour of Sunday closing, that is, judging from the improved character of the men.

11963. Would there be no danger of your having rather a rosy view of the case, from the fact that the sailors who come to your meetings, and with whom you chiefly come into contact, are well disposed in the direction of your work. Can you divest your mind of those circumstances, and, taking the whole of the sailors, say that a majority of them are in favour of an absolutely effective closing of the houses on Sunday? I think so, judging from the character of the captains, officers, and men. If we were to ask them to vote, I think we should get a majority to vote in the direction you indicate.

11964. You do not go much among the men-of-war's men? That is a different department; Mr. Shearston attends to that. The Wesleyans have also engaged a missionary. I saw in the first instance an appeal in the Wesleyan paper. There was a remark to the effect that very little was being done for the sailors. This elicited a letter from Captain Sadlier, President of the Sydney Bethel Union, who complained of the tenor of the appeal, and who suggested to the Wesleyan body that they should support the union which would engage a man under its own auspices. I believe that a man has been engaged, in fact, I saw some evidence of his having been on board some of the ships. I saw some hand-bills, for instance, on board one of the P. & O. boats.

11965. You think your mission is a successful one? Yes, we have no reason to complain. I have done all that I could to make the place attractive. I have opened a reading and smoking room, and have afforded to the men the means of playing games. They are also supplied with paper, upon which they can can write to their friends. The concerts, to which I have referred, are conducted purely upon concert lines, that is to say, there is no religious exercises engaged in. We open with a pianoforte solo, then there are songs and recitations. We close with God save the Queen, and there is afterwards an appeal for pledges. 11966. You make the place resemble a public-house as far as possible, without the drinking? That is exactly what we do. We allow the sailors to join in the chorus, in the free-and-easy style. The landsmen who come to the concerts enjoy them thoroughly.

11967. How do you think the sailors would feel with regard to the multiplicity of public-houses. Do you think they would be favourable to a system which would place in their hands the power of voting, either to reduce the number of public-houses, or of annihilating them altogether in a given locality. Do you think that as a class they are favourable to that idea? I think that as a class they are favourable to the principle of local option.

11968. Have you ever spoken to them about it? Yes. Many of the captains fly a flag indicating that they are connected with a religious institution, and these men work earnestly, not only to make the men Christians, but to make them total abstainers. I receive letters from these men telling me how they influence the sailors; I published some of them recently in the Gem of the Sea.

11969. There is a Sailors' Home here? Yes, next door to the Bethel.

11970. Is there a bar there? No. The men are provided with a billiard-table and papers. The place is made somewhat attractive, and they pay 17s. a week.

11971. Is it a success? Fairly I should think.

11972. Do you think it would be an advantage to increase it and to popularise it? Yes, I think it would be. I think the place should be made more attractive than it now is. In the first place I think they ought to give more space to the men. The sleeping rooms are very small.

11973. Is it private property? It is subsidised by the Government. A collector goes round for some subscription from merchants and others in the city. I am a little puzzled as to the government of the institution. It is regarded as a sort of charity, but it is not, because the men pay 17s. a week for board and lodging, and I think the amount must be paid in advance.

11974. Mr. Roseby.] I believe you are an old citizen? I am a native of the Colony.

11975. Do you think that many of the seamen of this port are establishing homes of their own? Yes, I think so. I can say unhesitatingly that there is a marked improvement in the class. The men who seem to give the most trouble are the stokers. They are a curious lot.

11976. They are a drinking class? Yes; and I do not think they would be likely to contribute to building or benefit societies. The ordinary sailor, the A.B., as he is called, is quite a different man. He is much improved. Even the deep sea sailors are improved.

11977. What proportion of the sailors who come under your observation should you say were total abstainers? I think it would be quite safe to say that one-third are pledged to total abstinence.

11978. Are there many confirmed drunkards among them? No; not among the sailors.

11979. You think you have far too many public-houses at your end of the city? Yes.

11980. Do you think it is the wish of the people, including the sailors, in that district, to have so large a number? I am sure it is not their wish.

11981. Do you not think it is a great wrong to the community that so many houses should be saddled upon them? I think it certainly is. Next door to the Bethel, where I lived, is a piece of vacant land. On Saturday night when I wished to be quiet it was a common thing to hear men quarrelling there, and there would be frequently stand up fights. No doubt this was in a great measure owing to the men being supplied from some of the half dozen public-houses within a stone's throw of each other.

11982. The law as to Sunday closing is frequently violated in your district? I am sure it is; I have seen what they call touts watching for the police. They give a sort of signal when a policeman is in sight, and men are not allowed to go in to or to leave the public-house when that signal has been given. When another sign is given men are allowed to go in and others to come out.

11984. Do most of the men remain in the public-house? Some of them I suppose would remain in all the while.

11985. Have the captains and officers of ships with whom you have conversed, spoken of sailors who are total abstainers as being inferior or superior to the men who take a little stimulant? As a rule I think the captains prefer the sober men, the men who are pledged teetotallers and who are known to be such.

11986. Is it a custom to serve out drink to sailors daily when they are at sea? Not now. I asked Captain Andrews the same question last night, and he said that no drink of any kind whatever would be served to the men or boys during the voyage. His ship is the "Derwent."

11987. I suppose that when a sailor gets into trouble or disgrace it is generally traceable to drink? As a rule it is.

11988. Have you heard the sailors complain of the hardship of the regulation under which no liquor is served to them? No, I have not.

11989. Do any of these seamen's unions or organizations meet at public-houses? I think some of them do, but I am not sure about it.

11990. Do you know any which do? No, I do not.

11991. Apart from your experience as a minister among sailors, I ask you whether, from your observation as a citizen, you think that young women ought to be employed as barmaids in public-houses. Do you think a public-house bar is a proper place for a respectable girl or woman to be engaged in? No; it is not.

11992. Do you think that being so employed they often lure to drink and ruin persons who would not otherwise be tempted? I think it often happens unfortunately that the poor girls are themselves lured.

11993. Have you noticed whether there is a great tendency to intemperance among the young men generally? Yes; I think there is a tendency among the Colonials to give way to habits of intemperance.

11994. A tendency such as did not characterize them years ago? Yes; I am inclined to think that.
11995. Do you think the law ought to prohibit publicans supplying young persons with drink? I do.
11996. Do you think the shorter hours during which public-houses are now open is a beneficial change? Yes.
11997. Would you be in favour of restricting the hour still further? I do not know that I would. There are persons who go out to entertainments, and I think it would be well to let them have the opportunity to obtain refreshments up to 11 o'clock.
11998. You would submit the question of the existence of public-houses in any given locality to the vote of the people? Yes.
11999. President.] How are the public-houses near the wharves generally conducted do you think? On the whole, very well. There is only one place where I notice what I described as going on on Sunday. As a rule I think the houses in our part of the town are conducted very well.
12000. You know the houses at Miller's Point? Yes.
12001. You know that there are a large number of houses in lower George-street which appear to anyone passing down the street to be mere drinking shops? Yes.
12002. And we are told that they are? I have had a suspicion that some of them are not conducted very well.
12003. Take this as an instance of good or bad conduct: Do you think they would supply drink as a rule to men who had already had too much? Some might do so, but I would not like to say that they would do so as a rule.
12004. Do you know why so many houses are licensed in that neighbourhood? No.
12005. Is it a fact that when a license has been once granted in the city it is never refused, except for statutory misconduct of some kind? I believe it is the case. I know one of the publicans in this neighbourhood who closes his house absolutely on Sunday, and who would not serve a drink to anyone on that day. I refer to Davis.
12006. Does he complain of losing his custom during the week in consequence of his closing his house on Sunday? I never heard him complain. I know that he would not serve a drunken man.
12007. Do you not think that sailors are sometimes hounded in some of these public-houses? I believe there are one or two houses of a rather questionable character. They are well known to be shady places.
12008. Have you had occasion to know many cases of ruin to sailors from drink? Well, one or two have made a confession to me that they have given way to drink.
12009. But do you know of many cases in which sailors have ended by becoming habitual drunkards and by being sent to gaol for drunkenness, combined perhaps with other offences? I have not known of such cases.
12010. I suppose it is hardly necessary to ask whether you ascribe a large influence over the sailors to what is known as "moral suasion." I mean so far as their intemperate habits are concerned? Yes, a great deal.
12011. You regard moral suasion as a potent factor in getting rid of intemperance? Yes, with legislation to help it.
12012. You think that legislation would also be useful? I do.
12013. Do you think our existing legislation has had any sensible result upon intemperance? Yes, I think it has decidedly improved the condition of things. Still we want something more. I think more power should be given to the police. At the present time a constable seems to be cheated right and left, and I think he should be given more freedom in his efforts to prove violations of the law.

FRIDAY, 5 NOVEMBER, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,
G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.,

A. HUTCHINSON, Esq.,
J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. John Vale called in, sworn, and examined:—

12014. President.] You are secretary to the Victorian Alliance for the suppression of the liquor traffic? Mr. J. Vale.
Yes.
12015. Will you describe the general character of that organization, and its purpose? Its object is to secure the suppression of the traffic in harmony with public opinion. 5 Nov., 1886.
12016. You mean through public opinion? Yes.
12017. Do you mean the entire suppression of the traffic? We seek to get a Local Option Act, by means of which the people in each district shall be enabled either to keep the present number of public-houses, or to reduce them, or to abolish them altogether, just as they may see fit.
12018. That hardly seems to harmonise with the purpose of suppressing the traffic? We aim at the suppression eventually.
12019. But in the interim you aim at the reduction of the licensed houses? Just as the people may determine.
12020. They might determine, I suppose, in some cases, in favour of an increase? Yes.
12021. They could do so under the Act, could they not? They can only decide for an increase under the present Act under certain circumstances.
12022. Supposing there is not the statutory number of public-houses in a licensing district? Then they can decide for an increase.
12023. But not beyond the statutory number? No; in fact there are very few districts in which there are less than the statutory number.
12024. Then to a certain extent the Alliance works on and in accordance with the lines of the existing licensing law? We seek to make the best possible use of that Act, but we do not profess to be contented with it.
12025. While it is in force you will endeavour to use it to the best advantage? Yes.
12026. But you seek an amendment of the Act? Yes.

12027.

- Mr. J. Vale. 12027. Is your organization in Victoria a large one? Yes, it is rather large.
- 5 Nov., 1886. 12028. How many members does it number, do you think? I cannot say now exactly how many members we number. Speaking roughly, there would be perhaps 5,000; but then the influence of the Alliance is not to be measured by its actual roll of members.
12029. Your members are distributed among many branches? We work in connection with every temperance organization. For political work each of these organizations is practically a branch of the Victorian Alliance.
12030. Then you affiliate every temperance organization? Yes.
12031. Do you lead them all? They follow our lead.
12032. Without any difference, bickering, strife, or jealousy? Yes, I may say that. I may explain that there is what is called an United Temperance Political Council, which consists of three representatives from the executives of each of the temperance organizations. This Council acts in conjunction with the Alliance executive.
12033. Does the Alliance give the last word in matters of temperance politically? Politically.
12034. Does it concern itself with elections? Certainly.
12035. Supposing an election were coming off—a general election, or an election to fill an extraordinary vacancy—what would the Alliance do, A and B being candidates? It is impossible to lay down a hard and fast rule, for the reason that we adapt ourselves to the circumstances of each particular contest.
12036. Quite so. But give an ordinary instance of how your rules operate? We have a certain political platform. For instance, our platform for the last general election was this: The absolute enforcement of the Sunday clauses of the Act; that is to say, the putting down altogether of Sunday trading, the abolition of grocers' licenses, and complete local option. If A and B were candidates we should support the man who was most in accord with that platform.
12037. Apart from any political opinions they may entertain, and apart from their characters? We should not think of identifying ourselves with a man who had a bad character.
12038. You give yourselves perfect discretion in saying what a bad character consists of? Certainly.
12039. Is it true then, as I have heard it stated, that in selecting candidates for Parliamentary representation the question is, local option, or certain views as to temperance first, and character afterwards? That scarcely describes our operations.
12040. How long have you been secretary? Four years and three months.
12041. Have you seen an election? Many elections. I have seen two general elections, and many bye-elections; also Legislative Council elections.
12042. Without further explanation, any one would infer that as a political organization you would throw all the weight of your party in the scale in which you recognize the greater predominance of your views, independently—for that is the meaning of party voting—of any other opinions or want of opinions which the candidates might possess? As an organization we have nothing to do with other party organizations.
12043. That is to say, you have nothing to do for example with protection or free-trade? In one constituency we may be supporting a free-trader and in another a protectionist, and I may say that at the last general election a large number of our supporters who were out-and-out free-traders were supporting protectionists, because they were most in accord with our platform.
12044. Then you do not consider, as I have heard it stated, the candidate's views of temperance to be all in all? No. We take into consideration his character, and of course we look towards the man who has the best chance of winning. If there are two candidates who are equally favourable to us we support the man who seems to have the best chance of winning, but our policy has always been, with one or two exceptions, and it has been successful, to induce the candidate who has the least chance of winning to retire.
12045. I suppose as a body you are disappointed with the existing Licensing Act? We are.
12046. You do not consider it satisfactory? It is not satisfactory from our standpoint.
12047. It is a very different Act as it stands on the statute book compared with the form which it presented on its first introduction to Parliament? Yes. A number of what we considered the good provisions of the Bill, such for instance as the abolition of the employment of barmaids, were eliminated during the progress of the measure through Parliament.
12048. Were there not some other important alterations? Several others; and a number of other provisions were hampered with restrictions which have made them unworkable.
12049. Is the local option part of the Act the same now as it was on its introduction? No. The principal difference is this: When the Bill was introduced it provided that there should be a certain statutory number of public-houses on the basis of one to each 250 of the population up to the first 1,000, and one for each full 500 beyond. In the first place a petition signed by a fifth of the electors had to be presented to the Governor-in-Council asking for a poll to be taken.
12050. Had the petition anything to do with the statutory number of public-houses? No; it merely required to be sent in by one-fifth of the electors.
12051. What was the petition for? It would ask for a poll to be taken to decide whether or not public-houses should be reduced to the statutory number.
12052. Then it did concern the statutory number to some extent? Yes.
12053. And that would apply to cases where the number was in excess? Yes; or in the few districts in which there are not the statutory number a similar petition could be presented, asking for a poll to be taken to decide whether there should be an increase up to the statutory number.
12054. That was the provision of the Bill as introduced? Yes. Then the Governor-in-Council could appoint any day in the year on which a poll could be taken, and the majority of the votes recorded would decide the issue. When the Bill was introduced the provision was that the ratepayers only should sign the petition and vote. The alteration was made to the effect that all Parliamentary electors should vote and sign the petition—that is to say that the manhood suffrage roll should be used instead of the municipal ratepayers' roll. Then, again, it was provided that a poll should be taken only in the month of March. But the alteration which seemed to us the most objectionable was this—that in order to constitute a poll one-third of the electors should record their votes.
12055. You mean one-third of the electors on the roll? Yes. That is to say, if in a particular licensing district there were 900 electors, 300 of them would have to vote in order to make a poll. If 299 should vote for the reduction of the number there would be no poll, but if 300 were to vote—151 for the reduction tion and 149 against it—there would be a poll, and the 151 would carry the day. Our objection to that state of things is this: Friends of the liquor traffic and those who are interested in it see that they have a better chance of success, indeed the only chance of success, in preventing the number of votes required to constitute a poll being recorded, so they abstain from voting themselves, and use all possible influence with electors to prevent them from voting also. The principal effect of this is to destroy vote by ballot. It is understood that only those in favour of the reduction of the number of houses record their votes, and of course in country places, where business interests cross and recross, a large number of persons whose sympathies are on our side do not care to set themselves openly against the interests of the liquor trade. In each case last March when the poll was taken the licensed victualliers were outside the polling-booths marking off on the roll the names of those who went in to record their votes, and it was understood that these persons were to be boycotted and annoyed in every possible way. The effect of this was to deter a great many persons from voting, and, with one exception, we did not succeed in getting a poll.

Mr. J. Valé.
5 Nov., 1886.

12056. You require in every licensing district a petition to start this machinery? A petition signed by one-fifth of the electors.

12057. The one-fifth of the manhood suffrage electors start the machinery? Yes.

12058. How do you get at them; are they made co-extensive with the electoral divisions? Every electoral division is a licensing district.

12059. In March last a certain number of these licensing districts were set in motion by petitions? Yes.

12060. And how many licensing districts are there? I could not say. There are at least fifty electorates, and in some electorates there are five or six or even ten divisions. I suppose there would be at least 300 licensing districts.

12061. In how many was the local option vote taken? In seven.

12063. But you say that only seven districts out of 300 took the vote. Tell us how that extraordinary result came about? In the first place, the Act only came into operation in February, and we were absorbed in a general election which took place in March. Then it was necessary when we had settled the general election to get up petitions and to have them presented to the Governor-in-Council. These steps involved delay. I think that was the principal reason for the result you refer to.

12064. Then there was not time between February, when the Act came into operation, and March, when the vote had to be taken, to get the machinery ready? That was so. The Government themselves were not ready with many of the things. The rules for taking the poll, and so on, were not published until the middle of March.

12065. Then your local option voting has been abortive? Yes, except in the Stratford district in North Gippsland. There were nineteen public-houses there, the statutory number being nine. A poll was taken there, and by a large majority, a majority of more than one-half of the resident electors, it was decided to reduce the number of the houses to the statutory number, that is, it was decided that ten of the existing number should be closed. In other districts where the vote was taken we failed, in consequence of not getting a poll. Suppose, for instance, that we wanted 300 votes, we obtained only 270; in another instance in which perhaps we required 200 votes, we obtained only 190. In each case the failure was through there not being a sufficient number of votes to constitute a poll. It was not because we were defeated by a number on the other side. The other side abstained from voting for the reasons I have already explained.

12066. In any case were the votes in favour of increasing the number of public-houses? In one small district in Bacchus Marsh the township of Maddingly did so. The circumstances were very peculiar. The statutory number of public-houses is two, that is to say, the total population is 500, allowing two public-houses. There was at that time only one public-house, kept by a Roman Catholic. A large number of Roman Catholics in this district had been offended by this publican, who had supported a Protestant at the previous municipal election. The whole of the brethren made it a point of honor to go up and vote for the increase in the number of public-houses, out of spite against this particular publican. It only required a little more than forty votes to do so.

12067. So that these persons were turned into local optionists voting upside down? Yes; but the principle works both ways, and that is one reason why it is so very fair.

12068. So that if there were many communities like that of Maddingly, with circumstances somewhat similar to those of the publican supporting a Protestant, you might expect a similar result? We are quite prepared to take the risk.

12069. Is a poll taken in March every year? Every year.

12070. Then in March, 1887, you will have another poll? A poll will no doubt be taken in a few places, but not in many. We are so handicapped by this restriction that one-third of the electors shall record their votes in order to constitute a poll, and that provision is being so wrongfully used by the other side, that our policy is to get that provision withdrawn first. There is an understanding with the Government that an amending Bill will be introduced next session, with a view to altering these among other provisions of the existing law.

12071. It is proposed to retain the number of one-fifth, to start the machinery? Yes.

12072. You would retain all that portion of the Act? Yes.

12073. I suppose that if there is a vote of one-third of the electors, a bare majority will determine the issue? Yes, the majority of those who record their votes will decide the issue, and as in the first place one-fifth of the electors have to sign the petition, it is not at all likely that a poll will be taken where there is not a pretty general interest in the matter.

12074. What do you propose to substitute in lieu of the provision as regards one-third of the electors constituting a poll? We propose to substitute nothing. We propose to leave this as other matters are left, to the majority of the votes recorded. If 201 persons vote against the reduction, and 200 vote for it the 201 will carry the day, and vice versa.

12075. Suppose there were 2,000 voters for the purposes of the Act in a licensing district; that 400 of them petitioned for a poll, and that when the poll came ten voted one way and thirty another, that is to say, that only forty votes in all were taken. Do you propose that that voting should determine the question? But seeing that 400 signed the petition, and that there would probably be a fairly strong body on the other side, there would certainly be a real live contest, and such a fiasco as you indicate could not happen.

Mr. J. Vale. 12076. I am asking the question because you say that intimidation is exercised. I suppose that is not in the petitioning stage? No; it is to prevent a poll, but if the restriction of one-third were removed there would be no object in intimidating the electors. The policy of each side would be to secure as many votes as possible.

5 Nov., 1886.

12077. You do not think that intimidation would come in then? No. Our chief complaint against the one-third restriction is that it destroys the secrecy of the ballot, and so opens the way to intimidation.

12078. You say that polls were taken in seven places in March last? Yes.

12079. And that in only one case was there a vote confirming the desirableness of increasing the number of houses from one to two? Yes.

12080. In the other six cases what was the result? In the other cases the object of the poll was to secure a reduction. In the case of Stratford that object was secured; in the other cases the object was not secured, because, owing to intimidation, there were not quite enough votes recorded.

12081. Then in five cases, a large majority out of seven, you think the influence of the licensed victualling interest was effective in making the vote abortive? In consequence of the defective character of the Act. 12082. But they brought to bear, as I gather from you, certain trade and other influences of a boycotting character; in fact they brought all the armoury of intimidation to bear on the others, in order that the voting might be rendered abortive? Yes.

12083. Have you found that the high licensing scheme has been of any use in Victoria. Your scheme of fixing the licensing fees is a graduated one, according to assessed value? Yes.

12084. Have you found that of any use? I may state that we oppose the scheme. We object to a sliding scale of licensed fees on this account; the licensed fee is a tax, not upon the general accommodation in the way of bedrooms and so on, it is a tax upon the drinking bar. A small house, with scarcely any accommodation for travellers, may have a larger bar trade than a bonâ fide hotel. The chief object of a high license fee is to weed out the inferior houses, and that object is not secured if the inferior houses do not pay the high fee. We advocate £50 or £100 all round, but the sliding scale is £15 for houses not exceeding £50 a year in value, £25 for houses not exceeding £200 a year in value, and £50 for houses beyond that value. We advocate either £50 or £100 all round, that is so far as we interfere in these matters, but we do not go out of our way to do so.

12086. What is your own opinion about the licensing fees? My own opinion is that the higher the fee the better will matters be from a temperance standpoint.

12087. Would you have the one fee applicable to wine licenses and roadside licenses as well? Wine licenses are a special sort of license. Personally, I would advocate their abolition.

12088. I suppose in Victoria you have much the same experience as we have in regard to wine licenses? Frequently we find that the wine license is a cover for sly grog selling.

12089. And as to the roadside license and the grocer's license. Would you have the one vote applicable to all licensees who sell liquor? The £50 was advocated for the publicans only. Our grocers pay £35, £10 for the single bottle license, and they are obliged to take a spirit merchant's license costing £25, making £35 in all. We advocate the abolition of grocers' licenses.

12090. Were these grocers' licenses provided in Sir Graham Berry's Bill originally? There was no alteration proposed in regard to grocers' licenses. We made an attempt to secure their abolition when the Bill was going through Parliament, but we failed in it, although we secured an amendment providing that there be no increase of grocers' licenses, except by a vote of the people. I do not think that it is at all likely that a vote will be secured in favour of increasing grocers' licenses.

12091. Are they submitted to a local option vote in the same way as a publican's license? They cannot be reduced, but when there is less than one license to each 500 persons, a petition can be presented, signed by one-fifth of the electors, and a poll can then be taken just as in other cases. There would be a great deal of trouble, however, and the general feeling of the community is so much against grocers' licenses, that we do not anticipate that there would be any increase of the number under that provision.

12092. What is the general opinion as to the operation of these licenses in the community; is it generally supposed that they have a tendency to increase drunkenness? The chief objection to grocers' licenses in Victoria, as in other places, is, that they afford such facilities to women to acquire habits of intemperance, and in some cases lead them to continue those habits.

12093. But is it found practically to have that result? That is, so far as we can see.

12094. Public opinion generally attributes family drunkenness to the existence of grocers' licenses? Well, it connects the two things.

12095. What is your bar system; do your publicans have to pay for extra bars? No, the provision is that there shall be only one bar. The original provision of the Bill made no exception, but among the alterations was one giving the Licensing Court the power to give a special permit for two or more bars.

12096. On payment of a fee I suppose? No, there is no extra payment required by the Act. We suggested a number of amendments a few months ago, and among them was one to the effect that there should be special fees imposed for every extra bar.

12097. Are the bars required to be on the ground floor? No.

12098. Can they be anywhere? One bar must be on the ground floor; but the extra bars might be upstairs.

12099. Then a house can have any number? The Academy of Music has eight bars altogether. But the opinion of the police is very much against these extra bars.

12100. Are any of these bars similar to what we call upstairs bars here. That is to say—are they under the control of women, I do not mean barmaids, but women to whom they are sublet by licensed victuallers? No. It is supposed in some cases that barmaids in charge of the upstairs bars —

12101. Have an interest? Well, it is supposed that they are not only barmaids; but if ever a case of that sort could be proved before the Licensing Court it would be sufficient to secure the closing of the house.

12102. What do you mean by the women not being barmaids only? That they are prostitutes.

12103. Do you find a difficulty in Victoria in getting convictions under your Licensing Act for the ordinary offences, selling for instance during prohibited hours? There is a general tendency on the part of the honorary as well as the stipendiary magistrates to lean towards the publican—to give him the benefit of a doubt whenever it is possible—we complain of that, but we feel that the police do the best they can, and generally convictions are secured where there is a bonâ-fide case.

Mr. J. Vale.
5 Nov., 1836.

12104. Do you have much Sunday selling? Not so much under the present Act as we had under the old Act. I may state that the police are very vigilant, and that the penalties are high. The penalty for the first conviction for Sunday trading is not less than £2, and not exceeding £10; for the second offence not less than £10, and not exceeding £20; and for the third offence the license must be forfeited. No licenses have been forfeited, because after the second offence the publican is obliged to reform, or transfers his license to another person, who starts with a clean record.

12105. The penalties here are also high, but the form of law is perhaps stricter in your Colony than it is here? Do you mean with regard to Sunday trading, or trading during prohibited hours?

12106. I mean in regard to trading during prohibited hours. It is quite safe to say that here the publican is more ingenious than the policeman, and that in our Metropolitan Licensing District alone we reckon that about three-fourths of the 820 houses embark in the illicit sale of liquor, and do it with impunity. Have you any exemptions or privileges in your Act in favour of inmates, lodgers, or bonâ-fide travellers; can they be supplied with liquor during prohibited hours? They cannot be supplied between half-past 11 at night and 6 in the morning.

12107. But take Sunday? They can be supplied on Sunday. Lodgers or bonâ-fide travellers can both be supplied, he being a bonâ-fide traveller who is 10 miles from the place in which he slept the previous night.

12108. Is it not a common method of evading a conviction in Victoria, to prove that the person supplied with liquor belongs to one of these privileged classes? The publicans will frequently endeavour to prove that the person is a bonâ-fide traveller. The onus of proof is thrown upon the publican.

12109. Do you punish the man who drinks as well as the publican who supplies? We do not; but the publicans advocate that that should be done, and we are quite willing that that alteration should be made.

12110. Then you have in point of fact taken a leaf from the English Act in regard to throwing the onus of proof upon the defendant? I was not aware that it was a part of the English Act.

12111. Have you any working men's clubs in Victoria, that is to say, shan clubs, mere drinking clubs, clubs constituted in this manner—the whole of the property being vested in an indefinite number of people, and the entrance to the club being secured by a nominal fee. Have you such clubs designed to evade the law by bringing themselves within the denomination of clubs? In order to prevent the growth of that system we have in the Act the definition of a club. A club is any club recognized as a club before the Bill was introduced, or a club consisting of a no less number than fifty persons, any one of whom has no greater interest in the club than the others.

12112. Then in point of fact fifty men could band themselves together and form a drinking club, provided that no one of them had a greater interest in it than another? They could, but they would have to get a certificate from the Court, and if the Court knew that the club was established merely as a drinking club it would not grant the certificate.

12113. Then before being considered a legal club they would have to be certificated? Yes, by the Licensing Court.

12114. Would they pay any fee? No.

12115. As a matter of fact are there any of these spurious clubs in Victoria? They are not in vogue there. There are a few clubs for the upper classes, but there are only two or three clubs of the working man kind.

12116. Have you in Victoria what are known as "brewers' houses?" A large number of the houses, especially in Melbourne and the suburbs, are in the hands of the brewing Companies and brewers. I cannot speak certainly, but I think that at least more than half of the houses in Melbourne are in the hands of the brewers and spirit merchants, and generally speaking these are the worst half.

12117. Are the licensees tied hand and foot when they get into the hands of the brewers? Yes.

12118. Does the brewer own the lease, or does he not. Has he an interest in the lease, or has he only an interest as a money lender to the licensee? He is not allowed to appear to have any interest in the lease.

12119. He is merely an advancer of money? Yes, on the understanding that the licensee takes all his liquor from him, and so on.

12120. Must the licensee under the terms of the agreement take all the liquor from the brewer? Yes.

12121. Do you think that that practice has a tendency to compel the licensee to take inferior liquor? That may or may not be. In some cases when the name of the brewer is advertised the brewer would perhaps endeavour to keep up his reputation by sending good liquor, but the general result of the system is bad.

12122. There has been no attempt by legislation to prevent brewers having this kind of interest in public-houses? Attempts have been made, but it is a difficult matter to get them out.

12123. The brewer can have no beneficial interest? No; but the plan works in this way: A man comes from the country with a little money—say £300—and he has an impression that keeping a public-house is a nice easy way of getting a living. He goes to a brewer or spirit merchant. The brewer puts him into a house, takes the money he has, and advances the rest. In say six, nine, or twelve months, usually in a very short time, the man who has invested his £300 is glad to get out, minus the money which he put into the concern. Therefore he is interested in deceiving the incoming tenant as to the nature of the business, and so another victim is secured. The majority of these brewers' houses do not pay, they are only kept going by the ruining of the successive tenants. We endeavoured to grapple with the question in one way by providing that licenses shall not be transferred except at intervals of six months. That interval was reduced to three months during the progress of the Bill through Parliament. The brewers and spirit merchants are endeavouring to abolish it altogether, but there is no fear of that being done.

12124. But do you not think that the good will of houses which are constantly transferring their licenses is kept up artificially? Yes.

12125. That is to say, because the brewer is always there to advance the money? Yes; I am sure of that. In almost every case the tenant pays far more than he should pay.

12126. So that you think that in the market the value of a goodwill would not be so great if it were to be put up at auction as it is when it is operated upon by this system of money lending? There is no doubt about it.

12127.

- Mr. J. Vale. 12127. I suppose you have statistics in Victoria showing the proportion of convictions in the police courts for what might be called the drink offence, in relation per thousand or per hundred of the population?
 5 Nov., 1886. We have.
12128. Can you remember what the figures were for last year? The returns are not yet completed for last year. Our statist always leaves these statistics until the very last, and when I left Melbourne, three weeks ago, the returns for 1885 were not completed. I could tell you the arrests for drunkenness and for drunkenness and disorderly conduct for the last four or five years.
12129. Would these figures apply to the whole of Victoria? Yes.
12130. Then, unfortunately, we can make no comparison. Have you not a Metropolitan Licensing District, embracing the city and adjacent suburbs? For the purpose of the administration of the Act, the city and all the suburbs are included in one Metropolitan District.
12131. We should like to have the returns for the Metropolitan District? The district has been in existence only since February last, but I could send you statistics for the Melbourne and suburban police courts, which, I suppose, would amount to about the same thing.
12132. Do you consider that in the adjoining Colony drink is responsible for crime, distress, and lunacy to the extent which it is stated to be in this colony. The evidence varies with regard to lunacy, but with regard to crime it is considered that drink is responsible for nearly 90 per cent. of it? With regard to that point, I may state, that in our City Police Court it is a common thing to have from 1,200 to 1,400 cases of various sorts during a month. About one-half of these would be for drunkenness, or drunkenness and disorderly conduct, the rest would be assaults and robberies, including many robberies from drunken persons. Mr. Call, who is our most experienced Stipendiary Magistrate, stated a little while ago that nine-tenths of the cases which came before him in the City Police Court were, directly or indirectly, due to drink. Sir William Stawell, our ex-Chief Justice, stated that from his experience he thought 90 per cent. of the criminal cases brought before him were due to drink. In regard to the effect of drink in producing poverty, I may say that the Superintendent of our Immigrant's Home has stated that nearly all the cases which come before him are cases of poverty originating in intemperance. Mr. Guillaume, the Superintendent of the Industrial and Reformatory Schools Department, has stated that at least 90 per cent. of the children left to the charge of the State are the children of intemperate parents. In fact 90 per cent. seems to be the favourite calculation. Roughly speaking, it means nearly all. Opinions differ with regard to the effects of drink in creating lunacy. I have not seen any statement on the question recently, but Dr. Embling, when he was Superintendent of the Yarra Bend Asylum, said that more than 50 per cent. of cases there were connected with intemperance. Dr. Bowie has also set down the proportion at 50 per cent.
12133. You have a system of Inebriates' Asylums in Victoria? Yes, but it is not successfully worked.
12134. Do you know much about the place; have you visited it? No, I have not. There was an asylum at Northcote, conducted by Dr. McCarthy. It was established by the Government, but the doctor managed in some illegal way to get the entire control of the establishment, and he charged very high fees. His fee was 4 guineas a week for every patient. That made the institution inaccessible to any but the well-to-do classes.
12135. Were people put there by their friends? Yes, but there was no power to compel them to remain against their wishes.*
12136. I suppose there were Visiting Magistrates who discharged the patients from time to time? No.
12137. The patients could leave when they wished? Yes.
12138. It was purely a voluntary institution? Yes. The Government have just recovered possession of it, trustees have been appointed, and it is proposed to conduct it so as to admit of poor people becoming inmates. The Morality Society, of the committee of which I am a member, has also taken up this matter, and we have drafted a small Bill which it is proposed to get passed as soon as possible. That Bill will make provision for compelling persons to stay in the retreat for a specified time.
12139. Do you propose to arm the magistrates with power to send habitual drunkards to this place? We do.
12140. Instead of their being sent to gaol? Yes. They are frequently sent to gaol now.
12141. I suppose your system, as regards habitual drunkards, is somewhat similar to ours, that is to say, if they cannot pay a fine of a pound they go to gaol for 7 days? Sometimes a drunkard is sent to gaol for 12 months, but then he must have been charged with drunkenness a number of times.
12142. Is that under the Vagrant Act? Under the Police Offence Statute.
12143. He must have been convicted so many times, and must have been found drunk again? Yes. A great deal is left to the discretion of the magistrates. A man may be brought before them, and the police will say that he has been convicted 40 or 50 times, and that there seems to be no hope of securing his reformation unless he is put out of the way of temptation for a long while. He is therefore prosecuted as an habitual drunkard, and the magistrates can send him to prison for twelve months.
12144. Do they do so? They do now and then.
12145. The drunkard is treated as an ordinary misdemeanant? Yes.
12146. Is he worked? Yes, and he is compelled to be a teetotaler.
12147. How far is the inebriate asylum from Melbourne? About 4 miles.
12148. Is it a large establishment? No. Our scheme includes the erection of a larger place. This is a mere commencement.
12149. You must have a certain average population of habitual drunkards; have you any idea what it would be? I could not say.
12150. Do you think it would be 2,000 in the city and suburbs? I should not like to give an opinion on the point, it would be merely a guess.
12151. No attempt has been made to ascertain the number? No.
12152. But some attempt will have to be made to ascertain the number, in order that you may know how large it will be necessary that the institution should be? We do not expect to obtain anything like the total number of habitual drunkards. If we were to do that we should require a large barrack.
12153. But the size of the building must bear some proportion to the number of habitual drunkards. If you give the magistrates power to send them all to the asylum for a certain period, the asylum must be in proportion to the demand? It is not at all likely that we shall ever get an establishment large enough to accommodate all, so long as things remain as they are at the present time. 12154.

* NOTE (on revision).—Mr. Vale, in a letter to the President of the Commission, dated 2/1/87, desired the following correction to be made in his evidence. See appendix.

12154. Do you expect much benefit from an inebriate asylum properly conducted? There are benefits of course; but we believe not so much in curing a man who has been made a drunkard as preventing him from becoming a drunkard. We centre all our efforts in that direction.
12155. But be your efforts as successful as they can, and be your organization as great as it can be, you will still have habitual drunkards always with you? Yes.
12156. And is it better to treat them as persons guilty of a crime or to try and reform them as persons addicted to a vice? I think the latter plan is by far the best.
12157. I mention the circumstance because whatever your success may be upon the lines of local option you will still have your habitual drunkard, at least for a long time to come? I know gentlemen who are now living temperate lives who were once intemperate, and who have been reformed through being for a time in one of these retreats.
12158. In Victoria? Not in Victoria. They have been to a retreat at Bellair, near Adelaide, and they attribute their reformation to the time which they spent there. I believe the experiences in connection with that retreat are very encouraging.
12159. How is it proposed to get over the difficulty in connection with the habitual drunkard who is still a support to his wife and family. Suppose he is sent to one of these establishments for six or nine months, or even a year, and that his wife and children are left without means of support. Has any solution of that difficulty suggested itself to you? No. No proposal has been made to remedy it. No provision of the sort is made for the wife or family of the man who is committed to prison for being a drunkard.
12160. But you say that the present law, imprisoning a drunkard for a year, is seldom put into operation. If the detention of drunkards in the asylum is frequently carried out you will very often have to deal with the class of drunkard who gets drunk regularly on a Saturday, Sunday, and Monday, and who works on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday. Some of our habitual drunkards are in that position? They would usually only be brought before the magistrate with a view to their committal to the asylum upon action taken by the wife or some other relatives.
12161. It seems to me that you will, nevertheless, have to take this question into consideration in connection with a large number of cases of drunkenness. What are you going to do with the wives and children who are left penniless, because the head of the family is detained as an habitual drunkard in an asylum? The provision of the law to which I refer would only be brought into operation by the wife or some other relatives bringing the husband into Court with a view to his committal, and it is not likely that they would take that step unless they were able to make some provision for the maintenance of the family during the time the husband was in the asylum.
12162. Mr. Roseby.] How many public-houses have you in Victoria altogether? At the end of last year there were 4,336. Some have been closed already under the operation of the new Act.
12163. How many? About thirty.
12164. We think that we have in our community a very much larger number of public-houses than is necessary for the legitimate requirements of the community, and yet we have 1,000 less than you have, the population of the two Colonies being nearly the same? Since 1876 there has been scarcely any increase in the number of houses, in consequence of the local option provisions, under the old Act, that is to say, the vote of the ratepayers against an increase.
12165. If the houses in Victoria were reduced to the statutory number, have you made any computation as to how many you would require for the whole Colony? Roughly speaking, I should say one-half of the present number.
12166. Do you anticipate doing something considerable in March next to try to reduce the houses to the statutory number? We do not intend to try to do over much in March next. Our first object is to secure the withdrawal of the one-third proviso. The handicap is very heavy, in consequence of the destruction of the secrecy of the ballot.
12167. Your law prohibits the opening of houses on Sunday absolutely? Not absolutely. Clause 107 provides that the bar shall be kept locked during prohibited hours. That was intended to apply to Sunday, it was inserted for the very purpose of putting down Sunday trading, but the Supreme Court has decided that the prohibited hours are from 11:30 at night, till 6 in the morning, and that travellers and lodgers can be supplied on Sunday, the hours of that day not coming within the prohibited hours. We regard it as a break down of the Act, and it is one of the clauses which will be amended next session. It is proposed that the mere fact of the bar being opened shall be evidence of sale. Of course the publicans are not allowed to sell to any but lodgers or bonâ-fide travellers. The amendment we proposed will make the clause read in this way,—“bars on the premises of every licensed victualler shall during Sunday, and the hours on which the sale or disposal of liquor to the public is prohibited, &c.
12168. Is the law in regard to Sunday closing flagrantly and extensively violated in your Colony? Not flagrantly, and I do not think extensively. The police, especially in the city and most of the suburbs of Melbourne, are very vigilant, and special constables are told off every Sunday in plain clothes to discover offenders.
12169. What would constitute proof sufficient to convict a publican of selling on Sunday. Suppose a number of persons were seen going in and out at the side or by the back door, would it be considered they were there for an illegal purpose? The publican would have to prove that they were travellers or lodgers if the police found them coming in and out of the house.
12170. Only coming in and out? Yes; if they were found on the premises.
12171. How many wine-shops have you in the Colony? Last December 113 were licensed for this year.
12172. Are the reports concerning them, to the effect that they are of a beneficial or of a demoralising character? Persons who are interested in, and who believe in the development of the wine industry, endeavour to prove that they are of a beneficial character, but as a matter of fact in many cases the wine license is just a cover for sly grog selling. I know that in Melbourne some of the lowest drunkards, men who would not be allowed in most of the public-houses, get what they want in the Colonial wine-shops, and I imagine that they do not confine themselves to wine.
12173. Has it been noticed that of late years there has been an increase of intemperance among the young people of your Colony? Generally speaking the Colonial youth are sober, but amongst the persons who are arrested for drunkenness in Melbourne there are a large number of the youth of both sexes. I have seen myself girls of 14, 15, and 16 prosecuted for drunkenness. I have seen boys of 15, 16, and 17 quite drunk. These are of course exceptions.

Mr. J. Vale.
5 Nov., 1886.

- Mr. J. Vale. 12174. At what age can a publican supply a youth with drink? If the drink is for his own consumption he must be above the age of 16.
- 5 Nov., 1886. 12175. Do you propose to have the age raised? We tried to make it 18, and we would try again if we had an opportunity. The age under the old Act was 14.
12176. Are there many young women employed behind the bars in the various public-houses and hotels of Victoria? There are a large number. In country places it is frequently the daughter or wife of the lessee who is behind the bar. A return was presented, showing the number of barmaids employed in Victoria, but it was generally considered that that return was not at all authentic. I do not remember the number given, but I know that it did not show a very large number.
12177. Your organization is strongly opposed to the employment of girls in this business? It is.
12178. Is public opinion generally against their employment as far as you can ascertain? Yes, so far as the public have thought about the matter; but there is a great deal of apathy in reference to it.
12179. Have you noticed whether the feeling in favour of full local option is growing in your community? It is certainly growing. I may state that last session we presented to Parliament a petition signed by 44,000 women, asking for complete local option. Petitions from electors only, with at least 50,000 signatures in the aggregate, were also presented. That would have been impossible a few years ago.
12180. Your present law deals only with a reduction of the houses to the statutory number, not with the abolition of the houses altogether? There can be no reduction lower than the statutory number.
12181. A feeling in favour of leaving the question of the existence of public-houses to the popular vote is growing in interest? It is growing of course not only on the part of the temperance party but of politicians who believe in what is called government by the people. We put this matter on a political basis so that if the object of the licensing system be to supply a supposed public want, the people of each district should decide for themselves the nature of their own wants, and we say that if the principle of local option is just it should not be limited as it is by the present Act.
12182. Are many members of the House pledged to the principle of full local option? A majority are pledged to complete local option.
12183. In the present Assembly? Yes.
12184. Are candidates for the Legislative Council interrogated upon this matter? Yes.
12185. How often do your elections to the Upper House occur? At the present time every three years. A certain number of the members have to retire, and they can stand for re-election if they chose. There is never an entire change in the constitution of that body. There is an election in a certain number of provinces every three years.
12186. Has your Alliance ever ascertained whether or not there are many members of the Upper House who are favourable to the principle of local option? The majority of the members are favourable to limited local option, but only a minority at present are in favour of complete local option.
12187. Mr. Hutchison. Was the principle of absolute prohibition through local option ever decided during the passing of the Act through the house? It was decided, but not in a good way. Mr. Munro, who is regarded as the Parliamentary champion of local option was not in the House when the Bill was going through, and our amendment was entrusted to a member, who, without consulting anyone, altered it, to the surprise of every one who knew about its coming on, at the very last moment, so that it could not be consistently supported even by our own people. Thus the opportunity was lost of getting a fair test, but in the previous Parliament, Mr. Munro moved Sir Wilfred Lawson's local option resolutions in favour of complete local option, which were carried without a division, with an addition in favour of compensation.
12188. Do you still propose pressing for a direct vote for giving the people the right to veto the traffic in their midst? Yes.
12189. Do you do so with any degree of hope for the success of it? Certainly. The Alliance insists on asserting the principle that the people of each district should decide whether or not the liquor traffic should be maintained in their midst. That is the principle we keep to the front.
12190. Do you believe we will always have drunkards in our midst? I think we shall for a very long time.
12191. Do you know what your drink bill is in Victoria per head of the population? Last year it was a trifle under £5.
12192. Do you think that that is authentic? Yes. We went very carefully into the matter. We waited upon a number of licensed victuallers, spirit merchants, and brewers, who were kind enough, knowing our object, to give us full information with regard to the average retail prices of the various liquors. We secured from the Customs authorities full particulars as to consumption, and we went into the matter so carefully that we think we have now obtained a correct estimate. The only thing which we could not obtain was the Colonial wine.
12193. Did you leave it out? No, we obtained from Mr. Hayter the total amount of grapes used for wine-making purposes, and you can establish as a rule so many gallons of wine for so many bushels of grapes.
12194. In what form did Sir Graham Berry propose to deal with the brewers' houses. Had he not a strict provision forbidding brewers to have anything to do with licensed houses? Yes, but I do not remember the exact wording of the clause.
12195. To what did it amount? It amounted to this, that it was a breach of the law for a brewer or a spirit merchant to have a beneficial interest.
12196. Was there nothing about lending money? I do not think so, and I think I should have remembered it if it had been the case.
12197. I understood you to say that you had no sub-let bars; might not some of them be sub-let without your knowledge? We have not discovered any.
12198. But may you not be in the dark about it? It is possible. We have not many upstairs bars.
12199. Then you have not been troubled by them? No.
12200. Supposing a man required a license for a house he would, under your law, have to get one-fifth of the electors of the district to set the law in motion? Yes.
12201. At the voting to which you have referred what proportion of the vote was in favour of a decrease of the houses? Nearly every vote was for a decrease.
12202. Then it was only the active advocates of a decrease who voted? Yes.
12203. And the others abstained from voting in order to defeat you? Yes. 12204.

12204. You think the effect of a large increase in the licensing fee will be to do away with the lower houses. Is that all you think you will gain? Yes. Mr. J. Vale.
12205. You have been asked whether your Alliance would support any man, regardless of his character, providing he came up to your platform as regards his views. Have you ever had a bad man, a man bad in the eyes of the community, offer himself as a candidate prepared to support your principles? We have had men whom we have considered sufficiently bad to be unworthy of our support. 5 Nov., 1886.
12206. Taking the materials of your House of Assembly, what is the standing of the Members who are pledged to local option as compared to the standing of the rest of the House? They will compare very favourably with the other members.
12207. Is the comparison conspicuously favourable to them? Yes.
12208. Generally those who come forward in the interests of your Alliance are moral reformers? They are consistently moral men.
12209. Are the members of your Alliance necessarily total abstainers? No, among our members are men who are not abstainers.
12210. No abstainer's pledge is required in order to enable a man to become a member of the Alliance? No.
12211. And as the Secretary of the Alliance you tell us that nothing short of the right of the people to veto the traffic by their vote will satisfy you? Certainly.

MONDAY, 8 NOVEMBER, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,
F. ABIGAIL, Esq., J.P., M.P.,
A. HUTCHLSON, Esq.,

T. COLLS, Esq., J.P.,
C. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.,
J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. William Richardson called in, sworn, and examined:—

12212. President.] You are a native of the Colony? I am.
12213. You have made the drink traffic peculiarly your own by way of study and other treatment of it? I have taken very great interest in it from my boyhood. Mr. W. Richardson.
12214. Is it your opinion that there has been an increase in the drinking habits of the people of this colony of late years. Take your mind back for ten years? Yes; I have no doubt about it. 8 Nov., 1886.
12215. Now from what facts do you arrive at that conclusion? From every-day association with the people, from the increase in the number of public-houses, and from the fact that there is a very large percentage of teetotallers in the country just now. If the people were drinking less, taking into consideration the large number of total abstainers, there would be less public-houses. The number which we now have could not possibly exist.
12216. Do you consider that the increase of total abstainers denotes an increase in drinking. Do you mean that the drinking is greater among the few, or is it more diffused among the many? I think it has always been diffused; I think there is as much drinking among the upper classes as there is among the lower, only it is not seen to the same extent. In fact I have no doubt about it. The lower classes go to public-houses, and the rich people drink at home. My opinion is that all classes are very much alike in this particular, and that a number of every class are being destroyed by drinking habits.
12217. We have been told on very good authority that the custom of sitting and drinking at table, which in former years used to be very common, has almost disappeared. The great mark of drunkenness forty or fifty years ago lay, as you know, in the quantity of wine which was drunk at the table after dinner. That habit, I believe, has entirely disappeared? Well, I am aware of some particulars which I think will contradict that assumption. Recently a workman's club was started —
12218. I am talking of the class who dine out, the people who go to dinner parties. You are speaking of all classes; but we have been told that among the classes who used to be almost famous for drinking thirty years ago you find very little drinking now? That is not my experience. I am acquainted with medical men and with commercial men. My experience is the opposite of that which you state; in fact I have in my mind quite a number of men who are connected with commerce who are rapidly going down hill. A year or two ago they were quite respectable persons, now they are falling off rapidly.
12219. Do you think the proportion denotes an increased drinking habit, because of course one hears of these bad cases while one passes by the other cases. Do you not think you are apt to pass over the other side of the question? I do not think so. The position of the men and the position of their families, their influence, and everything is thrown over the habit so as to cloak it, and when you see a percentage such as I have seen, notwithstanding all this cloaking you may readily imagine without drawing upon your imagination that the real extent of the drinking which goes on is much greater than would appear from the surface.
12220. Then you think, judging from the facts which have come under your notice, that the habit of drinking is on the increase? I have no doubt of it.
12221. Measured by the last six years, the period during which the new licensing legislation has been in operation, do you think there has been more drinking than previously? There has been a reduction in the hours.
12222. But I am speaking of the result, the net result. Has there been more or less drunkenness since 1881 in proportion to the increase of the population? I think it is increasing.
12223. Now if the amount of liquor taken into consumption were shown to you by the Custom-house statistics to be considerably less than it was, would you not infer from that that there has been less drunkenness? No.
12224. Why? I am well aware that there is a large amount of adulteration. For instance, a man will run thirty casks of Lowndes' rum into his cellar, and will run out 100 casks from that same quantity. I think, therefore, that the Customs' returns in this matter are, to some extent, useless. You can form no idea from these returns of the quantity of liquor which is retailed over the public-house bars. There is no check whatever on the part of the Government. I never heard of any effective attempt to discover the actual quantity in consumption. The manufacture of liquor has been known as a business for years past, and

Mr. W. Richardson. and the whole of this infamous dealing is allowed to go on without let or hindrance. For instance, I know a firm of wholesale chemists who sell chemicals and books which enable people to make a number of gallons of liquor, with only one gallon as a basis.

8 Nov., 1886.

12225. Do you believe that there are some large manufacturers of spurious liquor? I have not the slightest doubt of it. Adulteration is carried on here to an enormous extent right through the trade. I believe it could be detected at once if a thorough effort were made all over the city. The other day eighty-six cases of brandy, landed in Victoria by the French steamer "Sydney," were seized by authority of the Board of Health, and condemned as being utterly unfit to go into consumption. I need hardly tell the Commission that no such seizures are ever made here, and yet, no doubt, the vessels which land this class of liquor in Melbourne bring some of it on to Sydney. It is only reasonable to suppose that that would be the case, and under existing circumstances the liquor brought out here enters into consumption.

12226. The Custom-house statistics for the year ending 1885, when compared with those for the year ending 1884, show a large reduction in what is called proof gallons of spirits. You still think that there is more drunkenness in the Colony? Yes; for the reasons which I have already given.

12227. I must ask you to believe the fact which I have just mentioned, because we are told it by the Collector of Customs? Has he allowed for re-exportation?

12228. He has allowed for everything? Well, I have not the slightest doubt, judging from my every-day observation, that drunkenness is increasing.

12229. Then notwithstanding any apparent reduction in the figures representing imports, and liquor going into consumption, you still think that drunkenness is increasing? I have no doubt about it; it is my experience.

12230. And you seem to account for it by the manufacture of spurious spirit? I do indeed. I have been talking to many men whom I have been anxious to reform, and have detected from their breath, and from the appearance of their dried cracked lips, that they have been drinking what is known as white spirit. It is quite evident from their appearance that they have not been drinking ordinary spirit.

12231. Can you discriminate between the appearance of a drunkard who consumes bad liquor and that of a drunkard who is in the habit of drinking the best of liquor? I can tell when a man has been taking bad liquor most distinctly. I have no more difficulty in distinguishing between the flavour of strawberry and raspberry. I have often told the poor fellows that their breath resembles the smell of furniture polish with which you would brighten a chest of drawers; it has much the same kind of smell. I have no doubt that they use methylated spirits with water and colouring matter.

12232. When you know that any quantity of liquor can be obtained here at 3s a gallon, duty on which would probably be 12s. if the spirit were proof, or 14s. if it were over-proof, do you still think that it would pay to manufacture this stuff. Remember that the stuff is manufactured to pay, it is not manufactured for the purpose of hocking people. Do you think it will pay when any quantity of liquor can be obtained at 3s. a gallon in bond? You see they save the duty when they manufacture the stuff. I myself have seen cigars and figs of tobacco come out of rum casks.

12233. We have tried our best to find out any person who manufactures these spirits and we cannot do so. Can you tell us of any? No; but I could find them out easily enough. I could show you fraudulent labels for brandy bottles in some of the leading hotels to-day.

12234. But may that not be imported brandy? No, I do not think so. I think this is the channel by means of which the illicitly made liquor gets into consumption.

12235. Do you know where the labels are printed? A party showed me a number of labels and wanted me to go into the matter, but that person is not in the Colony now, and what he told me he told me under the promise of secrecy. I have compared a bottle of brandy containing a fraudulent label with the bottles containing the genuine labels, so that I know I am not deceived. The person to whom I refer told me that there would be no difficulty in detecting the wholesale manufacture of this stuff. Of course I am only giving you his statement.

12236. But you believe it? I have every reason to believe it. As members of the Commission are probably aware there was on one occasion a great fire here, and it was the talk of the town at the time that a number of these fraudulent labels were discovered.

12237. Do you not think that instead of having the white spirit sent to us to mix, a large quantity of liquor comes out ready mixed, that is to say, the white spirit is not sent here to be turned into brandy or gin, or whisky, but it comes out labelled "brandy," or "gin," or "whisky." I still think you are in error in supposing that there is a large quantity of spurious liquor manufactured in the Colony. In reality it makes no difference whether the stuff is manufactured here or elsewhere; but you lay great stress upon the quality of the liquor as contributing to drunkenness? I did not want to convey that impression entirely.

12238. I thought you considered that the drunkenness was aggravated from the fact that persons consumed this counterfeit stuff? I certainly think that the drugged liquor is more irritant, while unadulterated liquor is more soporific in its character.

12239. But you would still be a teetotaler if the spirit sold here were of the most perfect kind in the world? Yes; because the body will not assimilate it, it is a poison to animal life. I have this feeling in reference to the matter, that while liquor is sold persons should have what they think they are buying. We do not allow water to be put in milk, nor do we allow short-weighted coals to be sold. I do not think that the liquor business should have the monopoly of fraud, and that it should be allowed to go on for years without check. I think that if this fraud were stopped a number of houses would close. There would thus be a reform, and a certain proportion of temptation would be removed from the population.

12240. Then are you of opinion that recent licensing legislation has had no palpable effect upon drunkenness? I think not; if you accept the fact that the hours have been reduced.

12241. You think that the effect of the law has been only to keep the drinking habits of the people more out of sight? The law is scarcely keeping it out of sight at all at the present time. Yesterday I stood near a public-house beside a man who knew me to be a total abstainer, and an opponent. He was standing in Dowling-street, Woolloomooloo. He knocked at the door of a house and allowed three persons to go out and six persons to go in. He then came out and stood in the street again; when he thought that those inside had been supplied with what they wanted he went to the door and repeated the office. I was looking on, and I saw that he allowed another three men to go in while four came out. Presently the publican came out in his shirt-sleeves and stood with a towel thrown over his shoulders. He laughed heartily as if he thought it a huge joke. This happened in an open place, and as the people left the afternoon

Mr. W.
Richardson.
8 Nov., 1886.

afternoon pleasure boats a roaring trade was done. Residents have told me that has been so for two years; the name of the hotel to which I refer is Dumphrey's. I have seen this sort of thing taking place myself almost every Sunday for two years. With reference to the adulteration, I may state that in discussing this matter with the publicans in all parts of the city, as I frequently do, I have found that they have one and all said to me, "Why don't you direct your energies towards having the people supplied with good liquor." Almost every publican I have met has suggested that to me. They have told me that if I stop the present adulteration I should be doing a real good, as people were now being poisoned. One licensee has to fight with others, and so they are all dragged down to the same level. This confession on the part of the publicans has made me feel confident that adulteration is adopted to a large extent.

12242. Mr. Hutchison.] Has it ever occurred to you as being possible that this suggestion was made to you by way of throwing a red herring across the trail of a temperance reformer? It did not occur to me in that light. I am convinced that adulteration is being carried on. I think the men were perfectly honest in their statements.

12243. President.] Have you devoted yourself much to a denunciation of the habit of drinking—do you take it up as a part of your platform, that is to say, this custom of adulteration? I seldom refer to it.

12244. I have rarely seen it referred to in the addresses of advocates of teetotalism, because, as far as I can understand, the better the liquor the more they would denounce it? In Melbourne adulteration is a very common thing. A decoction of tobacco was recently found in a bar and the publican fined £50. In addition to that I have noticed within the last twelve months that there have been no less than six or seven prosecutions for the sale of liquor which has been adulterated, or below the standard.

12245. Admitting the evils of drunkenness to have increased as you have described, what would be your panacea;—would it be prohibition? Yes.

12246. Absolute prohibition? Yes, and by the people who are interested.

12248. That is local option? Yes.

12249. But you might have the direct vote of the people taken for twenty years under local option without prohibition as a result? Of course if the people voted for licenses.

12250. As far as you know do you consider that the people of the present time are ripe for that kind of legislation? Yes.

12251. You think public opinion is consolidated to such a degree as to be ready for that kind of legislation? I think so.

12252. What do you think would be the effect of local option in the wards of Sydney, supposing it were a matter of life or death to the publicans, the question being: "Shall there be any public-houses in this ward or none?" Do you consider that it would be likely that the majority of votes would be polled for the extinction of the liquor traffic? I am certain of it. I am not referring to the ratepayers votes; I do not consider them the people.

12253. Then who would be your voters? The electoral voters. I am very confident that they would vote in favour of prohibition. Many men have come to me and have said that they would be willing for the sake of their families to vote the public-houses out of existence, although they themselves might take a glass of ale as long as they lived. I think the large majority of moderate drinkers would vote under my direction for prohibition in the interests of their families.

12254. Would you allow a bare majority of Parliamentary voters to destroy the traffic? Yes.

12255. Supposing 5,000 were on the roll, how many would you require to poll in order to obtain an effective vote? I would take the majority of those who polled.

12256. But supposing there were only 500 votes altogether? Then I would let the majority of the 500 decide the issue. Those who take an active interest in the matter should be allowed to govern, those who stopped away could not complain. If there is to be any handicap at all it should be placed upon the liquor traffic, because we ourselves are unselfish and disinterested.

12257. Mr. Abigail.] What do you mean when you say handicapped? What I mean is this: The President suggested that only 500 out of 5,000 voters might poll. I think that if only 500 voted, the majority should be allowed to decide. We had much more stringent Acts sixty years ago when the Colony was a penal settlement than we have now, so far as the liquor traffic is concerned. In those days recognisances were required, and if a conviction were sustained they were forfeited. I think that is a very reasonable provision, but we have nothing like it now. Formerly also the magistrate living nearest to the proposed house had to give his consent. The Governor also could make a bench of eight, ten, or twenty magistrates as he thought fit. The old Acts altogether are far more restrictive. Within two years seven Acts of Parliament were passed. I think that in 1825 there was a new Act every few months. This shows to my mind that the liquor traffic is one which cannot successfully be regulated.

12258. President.] Then you see no hope but in prohibition? No hope; 400 Acts which have been passed in Great Britain have been all utter failures.

12259. Do you think the drinking of liquor to excess is a vice or a crime? I think it is a disease. I would not call it a crime; it resembles insanity.

12260. Do you think we are doing a good thing towards curing this disease by sending drunkards to gaol for a few days? No, I do not. I would send a drunkard to a hospital rather than to a gaol. I would rather send to gaol the man who made the other man drink against the statute law. I admit that that law is a dead letter, still I think that the man who has been made drunk should be put in the witness-box, and should be made the means of punishing the man who so outraged him.

12261. But the man might have outraged himself. He might have bought a case of whisky from a perfectly innocent merchant, and having obtained it, he might soak himself until he became in a deplorable state of drunkenness. Under these circumstances there would be no criminality with the exception of that of the drunkard himself? In that case I should not say that the drunkard was a criminal; I should say that he was insane. I am sure that science will demonstrate that drunkenness is as complete a form of insanity as any which is known.

12262. But then, if you had a prohibitory law on the statute book, it might still be evaded, as it is very largely in the State of Maine? I did not know that it was largely evaded there.

12263. You think it is not? I think it is not. I have referred to the subject at some length in a work which I have published on the question.

12264. You deny that the Act is largely evaded in Maine? Oh, yes.

- Mr. W. Richardson.
8 Nov., 1886.
12265. Do you state that in such towns as Portland and Augusta there are no places where you can get liquor? According to the men who have travelled there you would have to go into garrets or cellars to obtain it.
12266. Do you not think that a prohibitory law would also be evaded in this colony? No, I should not think so, especially if you arranged to give to the police rewards for the conviction of offenders. These rewards might also be given to civilians.
12267. Would your prohibitory law prohibit the manufacture and importation as well as the sale of liquor? Yes.
12268. Then you go far beyond the local optionist, who, at the present, merely seeks to suppress the liquor traffic? I think they will go to the other length immediately afterwards.
12269. Now do you think from your knowledge of the course of legislation that you could reach a point of reform like that at one jump? Oh, yes.
12270. Have you ever seen such a feat as that achieved in any Legislature? I have read of seven States in the Union who, by a jump, in one hour arrived at the conclusion to which I have referred.
12271. But had there not been some progressive agencies behind—was there not a large amount of agitation—was not public opinion settled, and so on? There was no previous agitation, notably in the case of Maine. It was the last week of a moribund session. The teetotal party wheeled into line, and in the last week of the session they ran the measure through the Assembly, and got the Governor's assent. There had been no previous agitation, although I believe some teetotal literature had been distributed. Neal Dow is my informant. I think that if we were to teach our children the nature of alcohol, and to inform them of the manner in which it works upon the animal economy, we should have in a few years time a generation which would vote for prohibition.
12272. But I have known doctors who have been remarkably temperate men, and who have, nevertheless, fallen victims to drink? That only shows that if they had been as well drilled in the knowledge of alcohol as they ought to have been they would never have resorted to drink at all.
12273. You think that education ought to dispel not only crime but vice? Education will not work a miracle. If a man is in the habit of dabbling in liquor he will probably fall, in spite of all his knowledge. You have a physical agent acting upon a physical form.
12274. You have a large audience in the Domain sometimes on Sunday, I believe? Yes.
12275. Do you find any good results from your efforts? Has it come to your knowledge, not from the cheers of your audience, or from the effect which you produce upon them by your speaking, but has it come to your knowledge that you have actually worked cures upon any of these people? Yes.
12276. You know it? Yes.
12277. I suppose you also disseminate temperance literature? Frequently; almost every Sunday.
12278. Have you travelled much in this Colony? I have been all over it.
12279. Have you travelled elsewhere? I have been to Victoria three times. I have been nowhere else.
12280. Comparing our population with that of Victoria, do you think it is more intemperate? I have not been there at any time sufficiently long to enable me to make a comparison.
12281. Would you consider an inebriate asylum part of the temperance platform? I would prefer an inebriate asylum to a gaol; but I want neither.
12282. Mr. Hutchison.] If I understand the letter which you have addressed to us, you have a particular desire to be examined with regard to the present Act and its administration? Yes; I was about to mention that matter.
12283. You have taken many objections to licenses being granted in the localities where the votes have been taken against the increase? Yes.
12284. You have done a good deal in the direction of opposing licenses? I have.
12285. I think you wish to show that there have been a great many improper proceedings in connection with this matter? Yes; I have taken an active part in opposing licenses in the district of Summer Hill. I have been at the Court almost every quarter. I have noticed that the Bench always act as though they must grant a license if there is no opposition. They seem to throw the whole onus of a refusal upon the inhabitants. The police evidence also has no weight with Licensing Benches. A policeman's word is apparently taken in every other case, but I have been struck with the fact that the objections of the police have been treated very lightly, so far as the licensing of public-houses is concerned; in fact the Bench take no notice whatever of those objections.
12286. As a matter of fact, is the vote not always called for—that is to say, do not the Bench always ask to see in what way the vote was taken? Yes.
12287. Do you not think that the fact of the vote being taken against the houses weighs with them? It does not appear to do so, and I have noticed it in some remarkable cases.
12288. Do you think that the Bench have been less ready to grant such licenses since this Commission commenced to sit? Whatever the reason may be there have been wholesale refusals lately, and I think it is only a reasonable thing to infer that the improvement is due to the appointment of this Commission.
12289. Do you know of any houses which have been granted licenses by virtue of their size, and which have been afterwards denuded of the extra rooms which have entitled them to the licenses? I do.
12290. Have you not heard the applicant's solicitor, when the Magistrates have objected that the whole of the house might not be used, answer him by saying that if the whole of the house were not used under the license the Bench could take the license away? I have frequently heard that said by the applicant's solicitor.
12291. You know of no cases in which that has been put into force? No.
12292. The law is evaded? In my opinion it is.
12293. Openly? Yes.
12294. You have been always successful in your opposition at Summer Hill? Yes.
12295. As a matter of fact two-thirds of Summer Hill is under prohibition? Yes.
12296. You think the people are content? Yes.
12297. Have you any means of ascertaining that opinion. Have you been round with petitions? I have been round only on one occasion. I generally stand in the street near the station with a table. The people rush up voluntarily and give their signatures; no effort is required. Of course there are some persons connected with the brewing or with the wine and spirit business who are hostile to us, but the bulk of the people resident there are with our movement.
12298. Do you think you can divest yourself of your own enthusiasm and ultra-temperance notions, and still

Mr. W.
Richardson,
8 Nov., 1886.

still come to a conscientious conclusion, apart from your own wishes, that the people in that locality are in favour of prohibition? Yes; I have fought so continuously upon this question, attending at almost every quarterly meeting, that I know almost everyone there. Even those who sign against us admit that we are right, and regret that they have to so sign. The fact of the matter is they do so because they wish to help a friend. I am certain that many of the men who sign the publicans' petition would vote against it if they were not influenced. The butchers, grocers, bakers, bootmakers, milkmen, and all the business men want the cover of the ballot. They do not like to make enemies.

12299. What about the men who are engaged in the building trades, and in land speculations? They are openly against us.

12300. Do you know whether there is not a perfect system of surveying, and planning, and drawing, and that there are men who devote their lives to the drawing of plans of proposed public-houses? Yes, I have heard it sworn in evidence that leases are granted continually in order that licenses may be obtained.

12301. And one man really devotes his life to the drawing up of plans of proposed houses for conditional licenses? Yes. Syndicates are formed. A conditional license in any suburb, such as Summer Hill, would be worth £1,000 to the speculators. They go into this business speculatively. Several of the parties I have defeated have been syndicates.

12302. Do you object to the Government making a gift of £1,000 to a man who may step in the next day and demand compensation for the house being taken from him. Do you object to that? Yes, I do object to it.

12303. Do you believe in Sunday-closing? I do.

12304. Are your audiences in the Domain composed largely of working men? Sometimes I have seen as many as six or seven Members of Parliament there. There will also be clergymen and visitors from the other Colonies. There may be a few artizans; but if you mean labourers, I have an idea that not many of my audience are working men. No doubt the artizan class, Civil servants, and clerks attend.

12305. Do you ever say anything about politics at these meetings on Sunday? No.

12306. You abstain from all questions but that of temperance? Yes.

12307. Do you think your gatherings are as a rule in favour of Sunday-closing? We frequently take a show of hands upon important questions. There is generally a unanimous show of hands in favour of temperance lessons in schools.

12308. We have those now to some extent? Yes, but I mean absolutely. We have repeatedly taken a show of hands for local option. With the exception of one or two dissentients, the gatherings are generally unanimous.

12309. And what is the feeling with reference to Sunday-closing? It is generally unanimously in favour of a continuance of Sunday-closing.

12310. Do you address the same people every Sunday? No; my audience is almost altogether different every Sunday.

12311. Then you believe that the working man, as such, is in favour of Sunday-closing? I have no doubt of it.

12312. Just now the police are unable to obtain convictions. You do not doubt for a moment that they do their best to obtain these convictions? I know they are not doing their best. Some do very well, but others do not do anything.

12313. Are you aware that unless a policeman can prove the sale of the liquor, or sees a man drinking it, his evidence is of no use? I am aware of that.

12314. Would you remedy the law? I would. I do not think the police should be put in their present position. I think that any one who is found on the premises of a public-house on Sunday should be accounted for.

12315. You would apply the English and Victorian Acts? Yes.

12316. Do you think that would be a remedy? Yes.

12317. Would you punish the men who are found drinking on the premises? I do not think I would. I would use them against the publicans. Sixty years ago we did not punish the men who were found drinking. The informer received one-half of the fine, while the police received the other half.

12318. But you would not give to the men who went in to get drink, and who were the means of getting the publican into trouble, any pay as informers? I would. I maintain that any citizen living in the neighbourhood of a public-house is as much justified in getting a conviction against a law-breaker as is the policeman.

12319. In that case you will make it possible for every publican to be deceived? He would not open his door under the circumstances I have mentioned, because he would be shorn of all faith in his customers. He would never know what the object of the customer might be.

12320. You refer in your evidence to thirty casks of Lowndes' rum being turned into 100; do you really know whether, as a matter of fact, such a thing takes place? I do.

12321. We do not wish you to give us more hearsay or hypothesis, we want you to tell us what you really know? Well, I cannot say that I have been into the cellars and have seen it done, but I can produce evidence that would show you very distinctly that something is done with this particular brand of rum. For a long time in this city it was possible to obtain 30s. for Lowndes' casks, and a roaring trade was done in them.

12322. What is the ordinary value of one of these casks? Perhaps 10s. One firm in particular were large purchasers of these casks. I was speaking quite recently to a cooper who was complaining about the depression of the trade. One of his complaints was that at one time there was quite a business in these casks. He plainly told me that people were in the habit of buying these casks for the purpose of filling them with some mixture and selling it as Lowndes' rum.

12323. Do you mean to say that the man merely thought that? Of course I cannot say positively that this is done. The cooper to whom I refer lives in Sussex-street, and he mentioned what I have said incidentally in the course of a conversation.

12324. Do you know any man who has sold a quantity of these casks for 30s.? The cooper who gave me the information has done so I believe.

12325. In reply to a question asked by the President, you asked whether the re-exports had been deducted from certain statistics. Do you know anything of the practice in that direction? I do not.

12326. For instance, suppose that I got 100 cases of brandy through in bond, I do not pay for them until I relieve them. Are they, or are they not, computed as being delivered to me before I have relieved them from bond? I do not know what the rule is in these cases.

12327.

Mr. W.
Richardson.
8 Nov., 1896.

12327. Suppose I only take out fifty; the other fifty never appear in statistics at all; they are re-exported? I should imagine that you could not land them in the first instance, without an import entry.
12328. We cannot get clear evidence as to how the statistics are taken—that is to say, whether they are upon the manifest or only upon the quantity upon which duty is paid? I think they are taken upon the manifest. Each manifest shows from one to fifty or 200 lines, as the case may be. Each of these lines would have to pass a Custom-house entry.
12329. Mr. Roseby.] You have read a great deal about the operation of the prohibition laws in Canada and America? I have.
12330. In your reading have you noticed that in any case the operation of these laws has been a failure? I have not read anything of the kind. I do not think they are a failure any more than the law as regards murder is a failure, because it does not have the effect of stopping murder.
12331. But in cases where drunkenness was at one time manifest it is now very seldom seen? That is so. You get every man who claims to be respectable out of the business at a blow. You thrust the business clean out of sight. If it is done at all it must be done by stealth.
12332. If a man gets drunk in one of the places in which liquor is sold on the sly, he is much in the position of a man in our own community who gets into a cock-pit or a gambling-den? Exactly; the circumstances are the same.
12333. You say you advocate the introduction of temperance lessons in our public schools? I do.
12334. Has any petition been presented to the authorities? A deputation, representing a large meeting, at which an unanimous vote was taken, recently waited upon Dr. Kenwick. We asked him to allow Dr. Richardson's book to be used in the schools. That book is used in the State of New York, and I believe it has also been adopted by the London and Liverpool and many other School Boards.
12335. Have you heard whether any action has been taken by the Education Department in this direction? Dr. Kenwick refused to allow the book to be used. He thought that it was a little too advanced. He thought it was sufficient that a book which deals with drinking in moderation should be used, but we do not consider it sufficient.
12336. Have you been a teetotaler long? From my birth.
12337. You have very pronounced opinions to the effect that drink is not necessary to enable a man to discharge any of the ordinary duties of life? I do not think it is necessary.
12338. You regard drink as being not only injurious but positively dangerous to the health of the person who takes it? I regard it as being poisonous.
12339. Have you known many reputable citizens to fall into ruin and disgrace through the use of drink? I can refer to many of my own schoolmates, representing all classes of Colonial society, including doctors, engineers, commercial men, artisans, and labourers. I have known them to die drunkards, and among the number you would find some of the most clever, intellectual, honest, and reliable men,—men who have been head and shoulders above their social surroundings.
12340. So that you regard the drink traffic as an unmitigated curse? I do.
12341. Have you noticed whether there has been a growth of intemperance of late years among young people? I think there has. I often go into the streets on Saturday night, and I have been struck with the crowds of young persons frequenting the bars. You will notice that they are mostly young men, and that they drag in girls with them. This is a common occurrence in the neighbourhood of the Haymarket.
12342. These young persons whom you have noticed as being under the influence of drink have not been sufficiently intoxicated to come under the cognizance of the police? No.
12343. Very few of them find their way to the watch-houses? Not for drunkenness; they are more likely to be taken there for riotous conduct induced by the liquor.
12344. Do you think that publicans ought to be prevented from employing barmaids? I do.
12345. Do you think they are often used as decoys to young people, with a view to attract them into certain places to drink? I think they are almost always used in that capacity.
12346. Do you think the employment is disastrous to the young women themselves? I think there is no doubt about it. I noticed recently, in a return published in Victoria with reference to the women of ill fame in Melbourne, that fully 50 per cent. of them had been barmaids. Although I have no personal knowledge of the matter, I myself believe there are a number of reputable citizens who have been simply shocked by being decoyed into private bars presided over by women,—bars which were really places of assignation. I have heard that suggestions have been boldly made to persons who have been decoyed there, and this has happened in places which are not far from King-street.
12347. Do you think these private bars in many of our public-houses are a standing disgrace to the community? I think they are worse than the open bars. I would have the bars stripped of their paint, and I would have plate-glass windows covering the whole front. I would also prevent the use of screens. If the places are respectable why should not the light of day be let into them?
12348. You hold very pronounced views with reference to prohibition and local option? I do.
12349. Do you believe that a large number of the victims of intemperance would vote for the prohibition of the traffic? I do; they recognise prohibition as their only hope.
12350. And you think the right to veto the houses should be vested in the people as members of a democratic community? I certainly do. The wonder to my mind is that they will consent to be deprived of their rights for so long. The only explanation I can give is that we have been born, so to speak, into the present licensing system, and that that being so it does not shock us as it ought to do. Unfortunately we become familiar with the thing.
12351. You are strongly of opinion that, in spite of all legislation and restrictions, drunkenness is increasing in this community? That is my opinion.
12352. Mr. Hutchison.] Have you been in any of these upstairs bars yourself? No, but my informants are persons of so reliable a character that I am confident that they would not mislead me. They would have no object in doing so.
12353. Has more than one person of your acquaintance been decoyed in the manner you have described? More than one. They were shocked because they were partly entrapped. The friends who invited them to go and have a drink wished, I suppose, to give them a shock and did not say what would be the result of the visit.
12354. Do you know whether it was evident that the barmaid herself wished to make arrangements with the gentlemen to whom you refer, or were there other females to whom the arrangements might have applied?

Mr. W.
Richardson.
8 Nov., 1886.

applied? I understood that there were other females there with whom arrangements might have been made. I was informed that the dresses were very unbecoming and that the deportment of the women was scandalous, some of them sitting down on the knees of the gentlemen and throwing their arms around their necks.

12355. Mr. Withers.] What proportion of crime do you consider is traceable directly or indirectly to drink? I should say nearly the whole of it, at least nineteen-twentieths. I can scarcely conceive of any crime in an absolutely sober community. There would be no crimes against man's laws although the higher moral laws might be infringed occasionally.

12356. I suppose you have observed the growth of a couple of generations in this country? I have.

12358. Even among what was known as the lively element in the community--the cabbagetree-mob. They were not given to drink, I suppose, as are the larrikins of the present day? No; nor were there such cruel and low practices. There was not so much vice; their conduct was more in the nature of a wild youthful buoyancy. Now we have to deal with real crime.

12359. Beastly crime? Yes.

12360. Do you think, seeing that the publican's business has been recognised by the State, up to the present time that legislation has improved the conduct of that business? I do not.

12361. Do you think that the houses are cleaner, and that the publican shows more concern and regard for the respectability of his house? There are at the present time in this city houses as low as it is possible for public-houses to be. I never saw lower public-houses. There are three notable hotels at the corner of Sussex and Junction streets, which are frequented by poor bruised abandoned women and low blackguards.

12362. Do you think this class of house exists in the same proportion as it did in the early days of the Colony? I do.

12363. Do you not think that the buildings themselves are more healthy and are cleaner? So far as the health of the buildings are concerned that does not affect the customers. They chiefly use the bars, which are filthy enough.

12364. But do you not think that a proportion of the bars are kept cleaner, and that there is greater evidence of supervision? I think if you take the whole of the houses, particularly in the suburbs, the condition of the bars is worse than it used to be.

12365. Do you think the system of "shouting" is as prevalent as it used to be? Yes; I have no doubt but that it is increasing. You may often see half a dozen men going into a public-house together.

12366. Do you not think that the operation of building societies tends to make men more provident, and thus reduces the system of lavish expenditure in which they formerly indulged? I do not think that, as a rule, the class of men frequenting public-houses go in for building societies.

12367. Mr. Hutchison.] But those men who begin to build would be likely to be kept away from the houses? I think so. I lived for some time at Lambton. On the borders of Lambton there is a commonage. Those who lived on the commonage were nearly all drunkards, and they were a large percentage, but those who bought land in the township were nearly all steady men, so much so that we used to say that the commonage had demoralized a certain section of the inhabitants. That section would be content with any sort of old camp or gunyah; they would make no improvements. They drifted away to quoits and to base-ball, and eventually took to drinking.

12368. Mr. Withers.] You have no doubt that the number of public-houses is in excess of that which is required? In my opinion the whole number is in excess.

12369. You have no hope of sweeping away the whole of the houses at once? I have great hopes of doing so, I have no doubt that it will one day take place.

12370. Suppose the Government determined to reduce the houses by 25 per cent., and that you were appointed Commissioner to make the reduction, which hotels would you demolish? Speaking as a politician I would take away all the respectable houses. I do not believe in the popular fallacy of a respectable hotel. If I were to clear away what are called respectable hotels the obnoxious features of the trade would be left in their true light. In my opinion there is no difference between what is called a respectable and what is known as an ordinary hotel. In a respectable hotel there is perhaps a little more cover, but that is about all.

12371. You think the respectable hotels are the more dangerous? Yes, and it would be harder to move them.

12372. I suppose you think that were it not for the bad effects of excessive drinking the hotel would be a great convenience? I think we require accommodation houses. You may leave the hotels, but I would have the bar taken out of the corner. At the present time you cannot get accommodation at all at these places. The only men who would go into a public-house are those who have been for some time familiar with them. A man and his wife and family would generally shun an hotel.

12373. But suppose that I had come to town and met a friend with whom I wished to talk over some business matters, the hotel would be the only place to which I could go. I should not be able, for instance, to go into one of the lodging-houses in Macquarie-street? No, but you could go into any bank.

12374. Do you think it would be fair to use the bank stationery, and to crowd out persons who had bank business to do? If you objected to go into a bank you might go into one of the building societies offices. I often do it myself.

12375. Do you not think that if two strangers were seen going into a bank or an office, in the way you suggest, that a messenger would be instructed to keep his eye upon them? I think you are suggesting extreme cases. I do not think you will find many men who come down from the country will suddenly find themselves in want of pen, ink, and paper, but even if there were a large demand for accommodation of that description I would not allow it to be a pretext for continuing the existence of hotels.

12376. Mr. Hutchison.] You would shut up not the hotels but the bars? Yes.

12377. Mr. Withers.] After a great deal of study you have come to the conclusion that there is no good in any shape or form results from taking alcohol in a moderate manner? That is what my reading has taught me. From a scientific basis I think alcohol has one great attribute, which is the power to destroy human life.

12378. Have you ever taken it? Never.

Mr. W.
Richardson.
8 Nov., 1886.

12379. One might almost infer, from one portion of your evidence, that you had no objection to drink of a good quality? I object to all drink. My object, in referring to adulteration so frequently, is in consequence of my wish that while the sale of liquor is permitted persons who purchase it should not be defrauded.

12380. Have you ever made any inquiries to ascertain whether any supervision is exercised with regard to the drinking habits of boys during the period of their apprenticeship? No, but I know that it is a common thing to see children of tender years trotting in all directions with jugs. That certainly ought to be prevented; in fact I do not think that any youth under 18 years of age should be served with liquor—either to be consumed on the premises or to be taken out. With reference to apprentices I do not think there are many in this city.

12381. Mr. Hutchison.] In referring to the bad results which had followed from legislation, I suppose you did not mean to say that the earlier closing of public-houses had not been beneficial? No, certainly not.

12382. You also think that the total Sunday closing is a good alteration in the law? I think it is a great improvement.

12383. President.] Do you represent, as far as you know, a temperance party, or are you a free lance. I observe that you wear a blue ribbon. I suppose you belong to the blue ribbon movement? Yes.

12384. Are you one of a party, or are you a free-lance? I am quite willing to work with all the other organizations. I belong to several associations.

12385. In advocating prohibition by direct legislation are you giving us your own views, or the views of any party? I believe that the Good Templars advocate total abstinence for the individual, and prohibition by the State.

12386. But you would accept no reform as a progressive reform? I cannot say that.

12387. Would you oppose any reform if in your opinion it should not happen to be sufficiently revolutionary? That would depend upon the action the party to which I belong would decide to take. Speaking for myself, and without binding any party, I should like to see entire prohibition. I do not say that if we were as a party defeated in our efforts to obtain it that we would not accept less.

12388. Have you ever investigated the drink bill of the Colony? Yes.

12389. Have you ever attempted to check or to verify Mr. Boyce's conclusions? No, and I will tell you why. I have been firmly imbued with the idea that the Customs returns do not cover anything like the quantity of liquor sold.

12390. Do you think that no confidence is to be placed in Mr. Boyce's figures? I think that every confidence is to be placed in his figures, but I think that the drinking is possibly worse than his figures would represent it.

12391. What is done with the Lowndes' casks to which you have referred? I think that rum is made out of chemicals, and is put in them. Perhaps one gallon of genuine rum would be used as a basis in a mixture containing all sorts of injurious ingredients.

12392. Do you not think that the casks may be filled with Colonial rum, and that that rum may be sold as imported rum? It may be so.

12393. Have you any idea of the number of habitual drunkards? I have no idea how many there are in the Colony.

12394. We are anxious to know what is the proportion of habitual drunkards. I am sorry to say that I cannot give you any information upon that point.

12395. Have you noticed any increase of drunkenness among women? I have seen a large number of women in a state of drunkenness, but I do not know that their drinking habits are increasing.

12396. We have been told that one of the effects of Sunday closing has been to increase female drunkenness, in this way: That the artisan brings his beer home in large quantities on Saturday night—the habit of female drinking being thereby engendered? My opinion is that it is only a minority of drunkards who would go to the bother of taking home drink on Saturday night. Women have told me that their husbands, who were formerly notorious for wasting their Sundays when the houses were open on that day, have, since the law was altered, become quite reformed.

12397. And you believe that to be a fact? I do.

12398. Do you share the confidence of many intemperate people? Yes.

12399. You are a sort of father confessor to many of them, I suppose? I am.

WEDNESDAY, 10 NOVEMBER, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,	}	A. HUTCHISON, Esq.,
T. COLLIS, Esq., J.P.,		J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.,
G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Thomas Davis, Secretary to the Seamen's Union, recalled and further examined:—

Mr.
T. Davis.
10 Nov., 1886.

12400. President.] Have you been able since your last examination by this Commission to obtain any expression of opinion from the Union with reference to the question of Sunday closing? I have had so much business on hand that I have been unable to put the question before the members officially, but during the week, on board a great many ships which have been in the harbour, I have spoken about the question. All the men seem to agree with me that it would be better to have the public-houses open for a specified time. They seem to think it hard that they are unable to obtain any refreshment in Sydney without breaking the law. There are many sailors who, I have no doubt, would not bother themselves much whether the public-houses were opened or not, because they very seldom go inside a house. Now that the lemon-squash shops are opening in greater numbers, I see a large number of the members of our Union patronising them.

12401.

Mr.
T. Davis.
10 Nov., 1886.

12401. How many men do you represent? 4,036. The whole federation numbers over 10,000. The New South Wales contingent numbers 4,036.

12402. What proportion, approximately of that number of men would, in your opinion, be in favour of opening the houses at intervals on Sunday? I could scarcely give an opinion on that point. A great many of the men are not teetotallers, and yet they are not drunkards. The fact of the matter is, I think, it would bother the majority very little whether the houses were opened on Sunday or not. Perhaps the largest proportion of members, however, might be in favour of having the houses opened for a specified time on Sunday.

12403. You think more than half would favour that course? Yes; I have no hesitation in saying so. Of the number of men whom I have recently questioned upon the subject only four or five told me that they could do without public-houses at all. For every one who spoke against the houses being opened on Sunday, there were among the men to whom I spoke at least seven who were in favour of their being opened for a certain specified time.

12404. I suppose it is a fact that the sailors' habits are improving in regard to the taking of liquor—that is to say, they take less now than they used to do? Yes.

12405. Is that true both in regard to deep-sea ships and coasting vessels? I believe it would hold good in both cases, but it would apply in a greater degree to the coasting class. You see that in the deep-sea ships the men are hemmed up for a long time, and when they get on shore they sometimes get so overjoyed that they take more than a fair share of liquor, especially if they drop into the hands of some of those land sharks or publicans. If they are sufficiently unfortunate to do that, they are very seldom sober, what with getting bad grog, and one thing or another.

12406. Is it the custom on board the London and Liverpool ships to pay anything at this port? If the voyage extends over twelve months a man can claim a month's wages and twenty-four hours' liberty, but in the absence of that he must take what the captain gives him. Some captains give the men 2s. 6d. on Saturday night, and some give them 5s.

12407. But he must be content with what the captain gives him? Yes. Some captains will not give their men money at all, but they give them an order for the supply of a pair of boots, or underclothing, or something of that kind, which the men may happen to require.

12408. Do you think these orders are always acted upon, or do you think the men obtain in lieu of clothes so much money? I think there is very little doubt but that they often get drunk.

12409. Then that means that a "suit of clothes or oilskins" is something that the man puts into his stomach? Yes. It is an understood thing; there are different outfitting shops close to the public-houses in Lower George-street. In fact they say that there was one establishment which is both an outfitting shop and a public-house, but I think the proprietor is dead. There is another place worked on just the same principle. They say to the men, "If you take so many clothes, and take them off us, we will give you a pound to spend in the public-house, and mark it down as clothes," so that a good deal of the money which is supposed to be spent upon clothes is not expended in that direction at all.

12410. Do you consider that there is a good understanding between most of these Lower George-street dealers and outfitters and the publican next door? I think there is a pretty good understanding between most of them. There is also a good understanding between the publicans and some of the loafers round about the corners, in the Argyle Cut, for instance. I know men who have been on shore out of a ship for as long as six months, and I should like to know what they had been living upon. They had been living upon either money which they had robbed directly from men whom they had got under the influence of liquor, or they have dragged some of their victims to public-houses, and have obtained money indirectly from the publican.

12411. In the shape of commission? Yes.

12412. I suppose they are employed as a kind of runner for the publican—they run the men in, and get something for their trouble? Yes. They board frequently with the publican, and if they run in a good few customers they might get their board for nothing.

12413. Are there many crimping-houses down in that neighbourhood? No; they are frightened to carry it on to the length to which it is carried in some ports. They have been pretty well stopped.

12414. Do you think the crimping-houses are pretty well abolished? I think the last here was the "New York Hotel," when Mr. John Dunn had it. He lost his license a little while ago.

12415. Mr. Hutchison.] Is it not done sometimes by unlicensed people? Yes.

12416. Has it not always been more largely done by that class? Yes. The system is not so bad as it was, but it exists to some degree. Sailors are still decoyed. There is a notorious man who is a runner for American ships. He works through the American Consul, and lives upon it. He gets so much from the captains of American ships for getting men, and in many cases he gets something off the men themselves. He induces the men to run away from English ships, and ships them to American ships in Newcastle. After the wool season is over in Newcastle I have known them to take sometimes sixteen or eighteen men round in the Newcastle boat, and the biggest portion of these men would have been decoyed out of English ships. The man gets as much as he possibly can from a ship, and after he has got that, the decoy says: "You are now only getting £2 10s., but I will get you £5, or £5 10s." Very likely he puts the man on board a ship at Newcastle with a wage of £4 10s., the men sometimes being kept in a state of intoxication.

12417. Do you not think that the men who are so supplied with sailors have a knowledge of the manner in which they are so obtained? There is no doubt about it.

12418. President.] Besides the crimping-houses is there not a little shanghaiing? I suppose by shanghaiing you mean getting the men away drunk or drugged, the man actually not knowing what he has done until he finds himself 40 or 50 miles off the land. I can tell you of the case of a man, running a boarding-house at Newcastle, who had a man shanghaiad on board an American ship. The man only pretended to be drunk, and made the boarding-master think he was worse than he was. He allowed himself to be taken on board the ship at Nobby's. The boarding-master came alongside in a waterman's boat, to square with the captain, and got his money per head. As soon as he got on board, the man who had been pretending to be drunk, got down the gangway, took away the waterman's boat, and left the boarding-master on the ship. The captain said, "Well, since I have not the man for whom I have paid, I must keep you." That man was away for about four months. That occurred about six years ago. The system is not nearly so bad here as it is in America. In Callao it is dangerous to allow sailors to go ashore on liberty.

- Mr. T. Davis. 12419. Do you think that in cases of shanghaiing and similar modes of procuring men for ships the drinking business plays a prominent part? Yes, although so far as our members are concerned they have become so changed and have so altered their mode of living since they have been in the coasting trade that there is no fear of any of these runners attempting to shanghai them.
12420. Do you know Newcastle well? Yes.
12421. Is there not a good deal of crimping going on there? Yes.
12422. I suppose the public-houses in Newcastle are pretty nearly as numerous as they are in Lower George-street? They are quite as numerous in one part of Hunter-street. There are some notoriously bad houses there. I believe they are a shade worse than some houses in Sydney.
12423. Coming to another point: I suppose when sailors get drunk it has often been—very often—because the drink is drugged, and there is generally another inducement, and that is, prostitutes? Yes.
12424. I suppose that that inducement is a frightful source of disease among sailors. I refer to the kind of prostitution under which a man goes with these creatures when drunk, and becomes perfectly at their mercy? There is no doubt about it. I have not seen much of it in the Colonies because I have always sailed in coasting vessels, but I once sailed out of Liverpool with sixteen able seamen, thirteen of whom were suffering from disease.
12425. Do you mean syphilis? Yes.
12426. I suppose the runners and the crimpers have a good understanding with the prostitutes? Yes; just as well as some cabmen have in Sydney.
12427. And they do not care how bad or how foul the women may be? Nothing of that kind is taken into consideration.
12428. I suppose many of them are creatures whom the sailor would avoid if he were sober? There is no doubt about it. A great many sailors would never think of going near such creatures. A man gets drunk and is perhaps partially deprived of his senses, and at that moment one of these decoys is drawn right in his path and he is led away.
12429. Do you consider that, having regard to the importance of Sydney as a seaport town, the Sailors' Home here is sufficient for the maritime population? It is one of the worst got up and managed institutions of the kind I ever set my foot in, and I have been in seven different Homes.
12430. Do you know it as a matter of fact? I ought to; I lived ten years in the Home.
12431. Do you speak now with regard to the accommodation, or the tariff, or both? I speak both with regard to the accommodation and the food supplied. The food, instead of making a man think he was in the Sailors' Home on shore, would make him fancy he was afloat again. I was for some time the oldest boarder on the books. I stayed there until quite recently, just before I obtained my present situation. I had a room to myself, and that is why I stopped on. I was able to keep clear of the other lodgers. Notwithstanding the bad food and the system of management I thought that it was not worth while to sacrifice that advantage. The Home has not a good superintendent. I was there two years before Captain Robertson died. Captain Chatfield has not with him a way which would induce a sailor to go back to the Home a second time. Of all the hundreds of coasting men we have in our Union I do not suppose you would find the names of more than forty on his books. Men sometimes go there when they leave a foreign ship, but they do not remain when they are able to find another place, or when they get into a coasting vessel. The food is considerably worse than that which is obtained on board the coasting ships.
12432. Is it within the power of the inmates to obtain liquor? No, it is not.
12433. It is a temperance establishment? Yes, nothing but cold water is allowed there. Even on Christmas Day they allow only a glass of lime-juice.
12434. They do not take out a license? No. In other Homes they generally allow a bottle of something of that kind, especially on Christmas Day.
12435. Is the Sailors' Home in Sydney a private institution or not? I believe it is vested in trustees and contributions are given by various firms in the city. The foundation stone was laid by the Duke of Edinburgh. He gave a small library of books for the use of the inmates, but the books are kept carefully locked up, and you cannot get one of them for love or money. They are there for an ornament. You may look at them through the glass doors of the case. No change is ever made in the food. There is a scale for the week. There is a change from day to day, but every week is the same from the beginning to the end of the year.
12436. What is the charge for boarders? 17s. 6d. a week. I know that the authorities of the Home are making money. Money is being accumulated every year.
12437. What number does the Home accommodate? Fifty altogether. Last year the average was thirty-three.
12438. You say you have been in seven Homes? Yes.
12439. I suppose they were all temperance Homes? No. At Liverpool and London the men have beer for dinner; it is put on the dinner table. In London a man can have three or four glasses of light beer. There is in the London Home a bar where the men can obtain almost anything they like to drink with the exception of spirits. Beer, porter, and wine can be obtained. The same rule holds good in the Bombay Home.
12440. And in the Victorian Home? There the men get a glass of beer for supper.
12441. And in the Adelaide Home? That I think is a temperance Home.
12442. Then you consider the Sydney Sailors' Home a failure? It is a disgrace to the seaport.
12443. Do you think that if the Home were reorganized and were made more attractive, and that if the accommodation were largely increased it would have the effect of diminishing drunkenness among sailors? I am certain that it would.
12444. Do you think that it would do so to any appreciable extent? I am certain of it. I know of at least twenty public-houses, at each of which there are from six to ten sailors boarding. These are round what are called the Rocks. Every public-house there has sailors boarding in it.
12445. Then, I suppose, there are in your Union some hundreds of sailors who are always boarding in public-houses? Yes.
12446. And you think that could be remedied if the Sailors' Home had more accommodation, and was rendered more attractive? Yes, and you might add, if it were under better management.
12447. Is it your opinion that there is any necessity to dispense drink at Sailors' Homes, in order to make them attractive to the sailor? No.

12447. You think they might be made sufficiently attractive without the sale of drink of any sort? Yes.
12448. Do you know of any Seamen's Homes which are on a purely charitable footing? No.
12449. Not even where the sailor might happen to be a thorough cripple, or shipwrecked? When Captain Robertson was living in the Sailors' Home, there were several men there whom he would not turn out. They were incapacitated through rheumatism. But as soon as Captain Chatfield came to the institution only paying members were allowed to remain.
12450. Has the institution any income besides that which it obtains from its boarders? It has money invested in the bank, and there are regular subscriptions.
12451. Then you think it could extend its operations? Yes; it could do so without the assistance of anyone if it were properly carried on. Our Union is on the point of starting a company among themselves to get a large Home for our own members in order to relieve them of the necessity of living in hotels. We propose to raise a capital of £20,000. There will be at the Home a hall for the Union. We recognise the want of a good Sailors' Home in Sydney, but in the Home to which I refer we can receive only our own members.
12452. That is, members who belong to the Federated Unions? Yes. If the Sailors' Home were properly conducted there ought to be from 200 to 300 sailors always staying there. In Melbourne there is an average of from ninety to a hundred.
12453. Is there a Sailors' Home in Newcastle? Yes.
12454. Is it managed on temperance principles? I do not know; it has been built since I was last there.
12455. Mr. Colls.] I think I heard you say that a publican in Sydney forfeited his license for crimping? He forfeited his license for Sunday trading.
12456. Do the public-houses which take in sailors as boarders endeavour to compete with the Sailors' Home as regards prices? They charge, I believe, a pound a week.
12457. What does the food consist of generally in the Home? Well, as regards breakfast on Sunday morning the men get a little bullock's liver and a bit of bacon. On Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday they usually get curry and rice—I suppose the stale meat from the day before—the same sort of stuff you get in what are called "hash factories." You may have this or a chop or steak, but there is no variation from that on the four days to which I have referred. The steak and chops are not of a quality which members of your Commission would care to eat. The meat is so tough it takes a man all his time to get through it. On Friday there is salt fish, or steak or chop. On Saturday again there are chops and steak, and curry and rice.
12458. President.] There is no porridge every morning? No.
12459. What vegetables do you get? The potatoes are always boiled in their jackets, and if a man feels inclined he can have one. As to the dinner on Sunday, the inmates get what I call the one decent meal of the week. They usually have a piece of stuffed veal, a small bit of cabbage, not much, and a potato.
12460. Mr. Colls.] But it is your opinion that the food would not induce any men to take up their quarters there? No; a man very soon finds out that he is being imposed upon, so far as the food is concerned. On other days of the week the men get for dinner roast beef or mutton; on alternate days they have vegetables in addition to the potatoes.
12461. Do you think they go to live in the public-houses because they get better food there? There is no doubt about it. I could bring up a hundred men living in public-houses who will all swear the same thing. About fifteen of our members are staying at the "York Hotel" at the present time. They are all respectable men, and they consider themselves too respectable to be seen inside the Sailors' Home.
12462. Mr. Withers.] Does the Superintendent live on the premises? Yes; but although he sits at the same meal-table he does not eat the same food. He gets some nice special chops. They call out for the captain's chops, and they are brought in nicely done up with bread-crumbs, and so forth. Everything is made tasty. He also has his fried potatoes.
12463. Is he supposed to preside over the table? Yes; the same as the captain of a vessel would do.
12464. Is the distinction between the Superintendent and the inmates very marked with regard to the food all the way through? Certainly. At dinner they call out for the captain's pudding. There are special dishes prepared for him, and between meals he has cake and such things taken into the cottage in which he lives. I do not think what he has there is so objectionable, but I think it is highly objectionable that he should have different fare from the inmates when he presides at the table.
12465. You think that the distinction creates a feeling of unpleasantness among the men? Yes; because many of them hold masters' certificates, and there are chief and second mates at the table.
12466. You think that that part of the management should be altered? Yes; the men object to the captain's tone of voice. He goes about as if he were boatswain's mate on board the "Nelson."
12467. Do you think the discipline is unnecessarily severe? Yes.
12468. Do you think it interferes with the quiet enjoyment of the Home? There is no Home at all. Men are not going to pay 17s. 6d. a week to be treated as dogs.
12469. You think their independence is interfered with? Yes.
12470. Notwithstanding that they are simply there as lodgers? Yes; I could obtain 3,000 signatures to get Captain Chatfield removed out of the Home.
12471. What class of man do you think would best manage the institution? A man such as we had before—such as Captain Robertson—a man who has some sympathy with the seamen.
12472. Do you think he ought to be a seaman? I do not know that it is necessary. The Superintendent of the Sailors' Home at Bombay is a soldier, and that Home is a very good Home. The discipline is certainly not unnecessarily severe.
12473. Are there any religious observances carried out in connection with the discipline? The captain says grace at every meal.
12474. Are the lodgers prevented from taking liquor into the Home themselves? Yes.
12475. Do you think it probable that many men are led into drunken habits in consequence of living in hotels? I am certain of it.
12476. Do you think that if the attendance average and surroundings of the Home were improved, notwithstanding that drink was omitted, the place would attract most sailors who are now living in public-houses? It would be full of boarders. When Captain Robertson was alive the Home was always full, and they were mostly all coasting men. I have often had to sleep on a shake-down on the landing.
12477. I suppose you left the Home on good terms with Captain Chatfield? Yes; but I told him before Sir William Manning that he was not fit for that place.

Mr.
T. Davis.
10 Nov., 1886.

Mr.
T. Davis.
10 Nov., 1886.

12478. Some reference has been made to the money made by this institution;—have you any idea of the extent of the accumulated funds? I could not state positively; I know they have some funds in the bank; I believe they have something like £3,000. The institution ought to be a credit to the city.
12479. Do you think the system of "shouting" amongst sailors is carried on now to the same extent as among other working men? No doubt they do "shout" for one another to a certain extent when shipmates meet, perhaps only once in three months, but taking the men as a body they are what I call moderate drinkers.
12480. Are a large proportion of them married men? A very small proportion. I think you might put it down at 16 per cent.
12481. And a large percentage of the men are away from their families? No; they have their wives and families here.
12482. Has there been any change in connection with the apprenticing of lads on board vessels of late years? Not that I am aware of.
12483. Are there any restrictions in the indentures intending to have the effect of restraining the boys from drink? I do not know; but on board sailing vessels at the present time they never think of giving the men drink.
12484. You do not think that is embodied in the indentures? It is not.
12485. Mr. Roseby.] Do you say that you know a number of public-houses which are resorted to by sailors, and which are notoriously bad? Yes. I think they exist by making the men drunk in as short a time as possible.
12486. And you think that in a very large number of these houses very bad drink is given? Yes. Many of the men have complained to me that they have been overcome after taking a glass or two.
12487. Mr. Hutchison.] You promised that you would obtain particulars of some cases? Yes. I have been too busy during the past week, but I am certain that I could obtain the particulars for you.
12488. I think you said that of late years there has been a great reform in the general habits of sailors? Yes; there has been a greater reform on this coast than anywhere.
12489. One of the reasons why you complain of the present condition of the Sailors' Home is, that you think it might be made sufficiently comfortable and attractive to take a number of seamen away from the temptation of the public-houses? Yes.
12490. You do not consider a public-house with its ordinary surroundings a good house for a sailor? I consider it the very worst kind of home. I have known many men to come to the Colony for the first time perfect teetotallers, but they could not stay in the Home for the reasons I have mentioned, and being obliged to take up their residences in public-houses they fall into bad ways, and some of them have become drunkards.
12491. You say that you believe that there are a number of loafers and hangers-on in connection with public-houses who try to rob the sailor of his money? A few weeks ago a sailor residing in the Home was last seen drinking in the "London Hotel." His body was subsequently found floating near the Circular Quay with a big gash in the head, a black eye, and several bruises, leading one to suppose that violence had been used. The jury returned a verdict to that effect. Mrs. Collec, of the "Soudan Hotel," said she remembered the man being in the bar, and that in paying for the drink he pulled out a good handful of notes.
12492. Have you heard whether any games or gambling are carried on in any of these places? I believe there are some games of that sort; I know there are some houses where they provide prostitutes. Prostitutes make the houses their regular place of resort.
12493. In your opinion should every form of game be rigidly suppressed in public-houses? I think so.
12495. You have had an opportunity of conversing with some of your men upon this matter. Do you think it is a general opinion with the large majority of seamen that there are too many public-houses in the city? Yes.
12496. Have you noticed whether a number of young fellows have been attracted to public-houses and have given way to drink of late years? No; as a rule they keep away from public-houses.
12497. That answer would apply to the sailor class? Yes.
12498. Have you noticed any increase in the drinking habits of young landsmen? Yes.
12499. Do you think that a publican ought to be allowed to employ barmaids? I do not think so. I think that barmaids are only put in the bars as decoys.
12500. I think I understood you to infer that it is because of men having to break the law on Sunday to get a drink that the members of your Union would prefer to have the houses opened at certain hours on Sunday. Suppose the houses could be securely closed on Sunday do you not think it would be better for all parties? I do not see any more harm in the houses opening for an hour or two on Sunday than in their opening during the week. I have spoken to a good many men on the subject, and they all seem to say that it is a great shame that they cannot get a drink without running all round the city, and finally getting into a house secretly.
12501. You understand what I mean when I say that when you were going the round of the ships to ask this question of the men it might be just possible that you would give the colour of your own opinions in asking others, and that they may be led into deciding as you have done? If they had given way to me in that instance it would be about the only time they ever did so. Every member has very firm opinions of his own upon this and other questions. They are not easily led. The members of our Union by constantly mixing with other bodies of workmen and with various classes on shore have become quite a different class of men from the deep-water seamen. I represent more seamen, I suppose, than any other man examined by this Commission, but it is quite possible that the class who go to Mr. Bradley's Bethel would tell him that they would rather have the houses closed on Sunday. I have given you the opinion, however, of the majority of the men who belong to our Union.
12502. Does not Mr. Bradley visit all the ships? No.
12503. He has told us he does? I have been sailing out of this port for thirteen years altogether, and during those years I have never seen either Mr. Bradley or his predecessor on board a coasting steamer.
12504. You said that many of your men now frequented the lemon-squash shops? Yes.
12505. Would there be any grounds for the suggestion that there was anything improper at the back of those places? No; I do not think there is anything of that kind. Mr.

Mr. W. Atkinson called in, sworn, and examined:—

Mr.
W. Atkinson.
10 Nov., 1888.

12506. Mr. Hutchison.] You are a seaman? Yes.
12507. Do you consider that you represent the views of the Seamen's Union? Well, I am a member of the Union.
12508. Are you an Australian? Yes; I am a Victorian.
12509. Have you done any deep-sea sailing? Yes; my first five years at sea were on a deep-sea ship.
12510. Do you think there is any improvement in the habits of seafaring men with reference to drinking; are they or are they not more sober? The men are much steadier than they used to be.
12511. Are you an abstainer or do you take a glass when you want it? I take a glass when I want it.
12512. Are there many ships afloat now in which grog is not served out as it used to be? In a great many deep-water ships grog is only served out on very rare occasions; generally before and after bad weather, for instance, when taking in sail, &c.
12513. The usage is dying out? Yes, but in some steamers they allow the men grog three times a day.
12514. Are you familiar with the large steamers leaving Liverpool? No. I have sailed out of this port in large steamers though.
12515. Are there many total abstainers among seamen? Not a great many in the Society to which I belong. I suppose there are four or five hundred out of 4,500 men.
12516. Do they belong to Temperance Societies? I could not say.
12517. Is a sailor ridiculed now if he declares himself a non-drinking man—is he chaffed about it? Not that I know about.
12518. Have you sailed with abstainers—with sailors who have been abstainers? I have sailed with a great number who abstained from drink.
12519. Can they do their work as well as the other men? Yes.
12520. Do you think that, taking them all round, they are better than the men who take rather more than a moderate quantity of drink? No, I do not. It has always been customary with sailors to have a glass of grog. I think it encourages them. By taking the grog they are often encouraged to get through ten times the quantity of work that they would otherwise do. I have noticed that after taking grog they do their work much better and quicker.
12521. How long would the spur last? Until the duty was performed.
12522. And would he be as well able to do his duty after the spur was over? If a second glass of grog were offered him.
12523. What is your opinion about Sunday closing? I do not altogether hold with it. I think we might have the houses open one or two hours during the day. That would be much better, and I think it would do away with much drunkenness that now occurs. You will notice that there is an increase in the number of cases of drunkenness in the Police Court on Monday morning.
12524. Are you sure of it? I fancy so.
12525. You think that if the houses were open then it would be in the interests of temperance? Yes, and in the interests also of men who are in the habit of taking their glass of grog. If the houses were open for a short time on Sunday I do not think the men would rush so headlong for drink as they do at the present time.
12526. Suppose the houses were closed altogether, and that a man could not obtain drink even clandestinely, would it not be as well for the working man on Monday morning? If the houses were closed altogether I do not know what the consequences might be.
12527. Do you think it would be an advantage to the average working man? It might be to his advantage. I think it perhaps would be, if the public-houses were closed altogether.
12528. Do you think there are too many public-houses in Sydney? I fancy so. I think the lower class of houses, such as those which are to be found at Woolloomooloo, and the lower end of George-street and other parts of the city, should be stamped out.
12529. Do you live in George-street? No, but I have lived close to Flagstaff Hill for seven years.
12530. You are in private lodgings? Yes.
12531. Do you think your class suffer from this particular kind of public-house? I think they do a great deal.
12532. Do many men live in such houses? A great many do, because it is convenient to them. All men cannot get employment, and when they are living in a public-house they can run up four or five weeks' board. They could not do that in a private lodging.
12533. You think it is a snare to a man to live in a public-house? I am almost sure that it is.
12534. Do you think that they drink more than they would probably do otherwise? Yes.
12535. Would it be a right thing for the people to have the option of saying by vote how many or if any public-houses should be licensed in their neighbourhood? I think it would.
12536. Do you think that merely because you are democratic in your opinion, or would you advocate it for the correction of an abuse? I would advocate it for the correction of an abuse.
12537. You think that irresponsible men who grant licenses, and who do not know the locality, should not have that power in their hands? I think not.
12538. You would allow the people to vote these low dens out of existence? Yes.
12539. Do the men speak about these low houses among themselves? Often, and it frequently happens that they regret it.
12540. They heartily curse the houses at which their money has been taken? Yes.
12541. Do you think there are very bad practices at some of these houses;—do you think, for instance, that there are men who conspire to get sailors to public-houses, and who receive some consideration from the publican for fetching them and keeping them there? I am sure of it.
12542. What is the mode of procedure? Suppose I had a few pounds on me I can go to a public-house and get a drink or two. A man standing alongside would see that I was flush of money and perhaps a little silly, he would make my acquaintance, and for the time-being would spend an equal amount with myself; presently he would bring me to some place for which he was working.
12543. The men then go out to procure customers? Yes.
12544. Would that be the ordinary runner who meets steamers on their arrival and hands you cards, or would it be some other sort of man? Some men who have cards are quite as bad as the rest.
12545. However there is a class of men who make a business of duping sailors? Yes. Suppose I am staying at a public-house for a considerable time, and that I am indebted to the publican to a large amount,

- Mr. W. Atkinson.
10 Nov., 1886.
- amount, I have to do something for a living, and the publican may say to me, "You are so much in debt, you must do the best you can to pay it or I cannot keep you longer." Perhaps he would suggest that if I were to bring him customers he would knock off a percentage of the debt. In that case the man to whom the suggestion was made would go out and bring into the hotel as many customers as possible.
12546. He would not enter into conspiracy to take the sailors' money then? He might not do that.
12547. But are there not men who do so? I believe there are men who would do anything to get money out of sailors.
12548. The sailor always succeeds in melting his money when he gets into the hands of the men you describe? Yes. I have known some men to be paid off with £10 or £12 for instance. On the next morning he will go on board ship, and will say I have lost all my money, and he will think no more about it, and will go about his work for another month's pay. Many men lose their money in that way, and seldom say much about it.
12549. Would it be true to say that some of these houses even find women for sailors? I believe such is the case.
12550. Are there attractive barmaids at some low-class houses you have referred to? In a number of them.
12551. Do you believe in that sort of thing? No.
12552. If you had a voice in the matter would you object to girls being in the bars at all? I would.
12553. You think that the barmaids are decoys? I am almost sure they are to the class of men to whom I belong.
12554. Do you think that there is much drugging of drink? I have known of two or three cases of drink being drugged. An instance of that sort happened to me once in Brisbane. I went into a public-house called the "Prince of Wales," in Albert-street, and had a glass of whiskey. I had had a few drinks, but I had my senses about me, but after drinking this glass of whiskey I felt a peculiar sensation stealing over me. Something told me that things were not right. In getting the drink I had to change a five-pound note. Immediately I felt the sensation coming over me I commenced to walk down the street towards the ship, but I had to lean against places to steady myself. Although I managed to get on board the ship safely I retched several times and felt very ill. I felt the effects of this for two days afterwards.
12555. Mr. Colls.] Sailors generally drink rum, do they not? As a rule they do.
12556. I suppose you have heard them complain of the bad descriptions of liquor which have been served to them in certain houses? Yes; in many cases. I may say that a great number of men in the society to which I belong would walk right up George-street as far as King-street, and would pass all the public-houses with the exception of two or three houses, into which they would go for a drink.
12557. I suppose those are known to be houses which sell superior liquor? Yes; a publican who keeps good liquor in George-street generally gets a good call.
12558. Mr. Withers.] Do you think the wives and growing-up daughters of the men who desire to have the public-houses open on Sunday would also desire to have them open? I believe they would. I have heard the wives say in many cases that they would rather have the houses open for an hour or two on Sunday than continue the present system under which their husbands travel from one house to another, and perhaps will eventually find himself some distance away from his home.
12559. Do you think a large proportion of the sailors feel it a hardship that they are deprived from getting grog legally on Sunday? I think it is very hard on seafaring men. A great proportion of seamen would uphold the opening of houses on Sunday.
12560. Do you think that owing to the large number of houses in the city there is an undue temptation to the men to take more liquor than is good for them, or more liquor than they would take if there were fewer public-houses? Yes.
12561. Do sailors drink much Colonial ale? A great deal.
12562. Do you think they drink more ale than spirits? Yes; they fancy a glass of ale quenches their thirst more than a glass of spirits.
12563. Have you been to many other ports beside Sydney? I have been to ports in China, America, England, and the West Indies.
12564. How many years' service would that cover? I have been at sea seventeen years.
12565. How long have you been in Sydney? I have been sailing out of Sydney constantly since 1880.
12566. What do you think of the conduct of the drinking trade here as compared with its conduct at other places which you have visited? Do you think it is carried on as respectably and as safely in the interests of the public? Yes. I think New South Wales, on the whole, will, in that respect, bear fair comparison with any other place I have visited. I think it is ahead of them as regards temperance.
12567. Going back six years, do you see any change for the worse or better in the conduct of business? There is not much change. I think the place was, if anything, quieter when I sailed out of it in 1874.
12568. Mr. Colls.] Do you think that the closing of the public-houses on Sunday has caused drink to be taken home on Saturday night? I am sure of it.
12569. You would not be in favour of opening houses on Sunday during Divine service? No.
12570. Only in the middle of the day? Well, say three hours a day. I think that would be sufficient. An hour in the morning, an hour in the afternoon, and an hour in the evening.
12571. Mr. Roseby.] You know a number of sailors who abstain? Yes.
12572. Do you know of anything which causes as much trouble to the class to which you belong as the drink? Drink certainly causes a lot of trouble among seamen, as it does among every other class of people.
12573. Are there many seamen in this port whom you know to be the victims of intemperance? There are some.
12574. Are these unfortunate beings supplied as often as they have money with the liquor which makes them drunk? Yes.
12575. They have no trouble in getting drink? No, so long as they have the money.
12576. Do you know that we have in Sydney a number of notoriously bad public-houses? I know that there are some.
12577. Do you think it would be a benefit if the houses were closed absolutely on a Sunday? Yes.
12578. Do you think there are more total abstainers among seamen than there were years ago? Yes.
12579. Do you know anything of the Seamen's Home here? Yes.
12580. Is it made as attractive to sailors as you think it might be? I do not think there is any cause of complaint. I lived there two years myself under Captain Robertson.
- 12581.

12581. Have you been there since the present Superintendent has been in the Institution? I was there just before he came, and a short time afterwards.
12582. Were there a large number of sailors staying there in your time? Yes, the place seemed to be always full.
12583. You don't think it desirable that sailors should make homes for themselves in public-houses? I do not.
12584. You think that a place like the Sailors' Home should be made as attractive as possible in order to keep sailors away from public-houses as lodgers? Yes.
12585. Mr. Hutchison.] When the Sailors' Home was as full as it could be, what would be the average number of men who would be there? I have seen it so full that men would have to sleep on the landings.
12586. Mr. Roschy.] But you have noticed that the habits of seamen generally, as far as drinking is concerned, have materially changed for the better of late years? Yes. Seamen are not quite so fond of their liquor now, I think, as they were in olden days. When the Orient boats first started running, a great many men who came out here were thorough drunkards. A number of these have since joined the Union, and they are now very respectable and quiet; in fact they are quite different in their habits.
12587. You never allow any of your Union meetings to be held in public-houses? Never.
12588. Do you think that temperance organisations have done much good in reclaiming a number of seamen? I cannot say definitely that they have done so. I know that temperance meetings are held by Mr. Bradley, but his exertions are almost entirely confined to deep-water vessels and men-of-war's men.
12589. Mr. Colls.] Suppose any seamen go back to the Home unexpectedly, are they always admitted? Yes; when I was there if a man came to the Home unexpectedly he was always assisted into the Home.
12590. Did you occupy any position in the Home? I was watchman and used to look after the place.

Mr.
W. Atkinson.
10 Nov., 1886.

WEDNESDAY, 17 NOVEMBER, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,	J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.,
A. HUTCHISON, Esq.,	T. COLLS, Esq., J. P.,
G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. John Samuel Shearston called in, sworn, and examined:—

12591. President.] You are I think what we may call the Church of England missionary for the seamen;—is that your proper denomination? Yes.
12592. How long have you been acting in that capacity? Since the beginning of 1880. I have been doing seamen's work for fourteen years, but I have only been licensed by the Bishop and set apart for the work since 1880.
12593. With what class of seamen are you most associated—the seamen of the Royal navy, or the mercantile marine? With the seamen of the Royal navy, but I visit every merchant ship which comes into the harbour once a week at least; I visit many of them twice and three times a week.
12594. Are you well acquainted with the Merchant Seamen's Home here? Very well indeed.
12595. Do you consider the Seamen's Home such a Home as might be expected in a city of this size? I do not.
12596. Are you acquainted with the Seamen's Homes in any other parts of the world? I know the Melbourne Home very well.
12597. Does our Home compare unfavourably with the Melbourne Home? I think, taking everything into consideration, it compares favourably with the Melbourne Home. The Melbourne Home labours under the disadvantage of being far away from the ships, while our Home has the advantage of being quite close to them.
12598. Do the authorities of the Melbourne Home supply any rum or liquor to the lodgers? I think I am quite right in saying no.
12599. They certainly do not here? No.
12600. Do you consider that an advantage? A very great advantage.
12601. Do the class of seamen who lodge at the Seamen's Home regard it as a disadvantage that they cannot obtain any beer? I have heard many sailors speak of it as being an advantage that no liquor is sold at all, and the reason I have heard given is this: That in Sailors' Homes in other parts of the world in which liquor is sold there is generally a great deal of that conduct which one sees in the neighbourhood of public-houses, the Homes becoming too much like a public-house, so far as the brawling and disorder, which arises in consequence of the presence of drink, is concerned.
12602. Do you consider that state of things inseparable from the sale of liquor. That is to say, do you think that, even if a glass or two of beer were sold to lodgers, the brawling you speak of would necessarily ensue? No, I do not think that. Much actual brawling would not take place as the result of the sale of one or perhaps two glasses of liquor; but it is very hard to draw the line.
12603. With regard to the general conduct of the Seamen's Home, as a substitute for a Home for this class of men, do you think that it is such as to render the place sufficiently attractive? No, I do not.
12604. Do you consider the Home large enough? There are times when it is not large enough.
12605. When is the largest demand made upon the accommodation of the Home. Is there any particular time of the year when the sailors are paid off or discharged? The busiest time of the year I take it is when ships come in as they are doing at the present time for cargoes of wool.
12606. You think that at that time most lodgers will be found at the Seamen's Home? Exactly. But I do not think the number now in the Home could be taken as a proof of that fact on account of the overcrowded condition of the labour market. So many men are remaining on their ships instead of leaving them, as sailors frequently do in this port, with a view to get the higher Colonial rate of pay for the voyage Home. At the present time there are so many old sailors on shore unable to find employment that the men are not leaving their ships as they usually do.
12607. Then there is a larger supply than demand at the present time? Yes.
12608. In what way do you think the Sailors' Home ought to be made a kind of counter-attraction to the public-public-houses? I think the Home might be made more comfortable. I think the whole arrangement of the place might be more home-like, instead of its being like an empty wool store, as it is at the present time. I think weekly entertainments might be provided, and that a refreshment bar, at which all kinds of light drink could be obtained, might be kept. I have strongly advocated the establishment of such a place, opening out to the Circular Quay, again and again. Improvements at a cost of £700 or £800, which have been effected in the course of the last three or four years, have been made in consequence of representations made with the assistance of lady friends. We pressed the committee to take action. The committee have £2,000 or £3,000 in hand, representing public subscriptions, and instead of spending any of that money, have been keeping the place more like a barn.

12609. The Home is supported by public subscription? Yes, but the men pay 17s. 6d. per week, and as far as I know that should make the Home self-supporting. I think the subscriptions are simply allowed to accumulate. The beds are very miserable things of their kind. They are in little cupboards built round a flat gallery sort of place, boarded right up to the ceilings. They have very defective ventilation. The mattress is laid on two or three narrow movable planks, and there is hardly room to move round.

12610. I suppose they remind the sailors of ships as much as possible? Yes. The cabins are an idea taken from the English Sailors' Homes, and are probably very comfortable in a cold climate, but are altogether out of place here. A considerable number of cabins do not get light in them at all during the daytime, because they are built on the side of the house, and the windows do not extend all the way along. Some of these little rooms, therefore, are in darkness all day, and that is decidedly a feature which tells against them.

12611. This Commission has no business with this branch of the subject except from one aspect. We have reason to believe that the condition of the Sailors' Home makes a large number of sailors compulsory boarders in public-houses. Do you think that this is so? I most certainly do.

12612. We have been told by a person, who officially has a large association with sailors, that some hundreds of sailors consider themselves compelled to board at a public-house because of the unattractive unhomelike condition of the Sailors' Home? I would like to say that I consider that the Sailors' Home is clean—very clean. I consider that the superintendent does all that he can to keep the place clean and orderly, but I cannot say more than that.

12613. You have in the performance of your duties to pay periodical visits to all the men-of-war on the station? Once or twice every day, sometimes three or four times a day. In fact I almost live in the fleet.

12614. Sometimes the number of blue-jackets in the port I suppose reaches 1,500? Very rarely. We have 1,700 on the station. When the fleet is here there are 1,700 all told.

12615. On the occasion of these visits you have a very good opportunity of seeing how far the habits of sailors are changing? Yes.

12616. The sailor used to be somewhat notorious as a man given to intemperance whenever he had the opportunity. Speaking of the majority of the men do you think that this is true now? No, it is quite the other way.

12617. You think that the majority of a ship's company then would be temperate men? On the "Nelson" there are 600 men, out of which 217 are total abstainers. A large number of other men are temperate. So great is the change, that on board the "Nelson" there has not been a man punished for coming on board drunk during the year and ten months the ship has been in commission. There has not been a petty officer disgraced. I attribute this change largely to the spread of temperance principles. In the old days, say 15 years back, I remember that when I commenced my work among sailors, and was trying to do something for them, I used to go with them to every place to which they went—to the public-house, and even to the brothel—and all kinds of places. I did so deliberately, in order that I might become acquainted with the men and their ways. I wished to found a work among them. Having had that experience, I am able now to speak of the very great change which has taken place in their habits. In the interval I have followed them up so closely that I have been well able to observe it.

12618. Do you find it necessary to follow the men up in this manner now? Yes, when new men are on "general leave." I leave my home, as a rule, at 10 or half past 10 o'clock at night, and hunt about the city where I know they are. I do not find very many; however I sometimes follow individual cases in the beginning of the quarter, when the men have been paid down. When I know that they have a lot of money, I think that it is a good thing to keep them out of the public-houses, and get them home to the Goodenough House, or to my own house. I generally take one or two of the reliable temperance men with me for help. I frequently meet the police-officers of the district, and have conversations with them on the subject. They are quite aware of what I do, and of the means which I adopt to secure the men.

12619. Is it not a fact that you generally have to run down these men into the brothels because they happen to be drunk? I do not follow them to the brothels now, but I go to the public-houses.

12620. But is it not a fact that they go to a brothel because they are drunk or because they have more liquor in them than is good for them? I should say mostly, but not always.

12621. Do you think there is any compact between the publicans' runners, in some of the lower class of public-houses, and the keepers of brothels? I presume you refer to the decoys who are employed by the publicans. I hear a great deal about such an understanding as you refer to. The men tell me of these things themselves, but I do not know a house in which such a thing exists. I have every reason to believe that there is such an understanding as you describe. I also hear that in public-houses, when change is not forthcoming, the remark is often made: "You can have the change upstairs," referring to the presence of women with whom the men might have communication. I hear of this kind of thing from the men, not once or twice, but frequently.

12622. You do not think that the men would invent these stories? I do not think they would invent them for me. They have been told me by persons who have been ill, and who have been in prison; also by men who have been intemperate, but who have reformed, and who have expressed a desire to help me in my mission work. This is the way in which I have become aware of these facts.

12623. You must know the sea-side resorts of sailors pretty well? Fairly well. That is to say, Miller's Point, the Circular Quay, and round this way towards the wool stores.

12624. Knowing the resorts of sailors along the Quay side, what is your opinion about the proportion of public-houses to the actual requirements of the place? I think it is disgraceful that so many public-houses should be licensed. There is quite a row in front of the Sailors' Home. Round about the neighbourhood in which these houses exist there are stores, flour-mills, biscuit factories, the Bethel Church, and the Sailors' Home; but very little real population.

12625.

Mr. J. S.
Shearston.
17 Nov., 1886.

12625. But there is a large traffic? Oh yes.
12626. And it is understood that it is the large traffic which induces Magistrates to renew the licenses. If you were to take your stand at the intersection of George-street and the Argyle Cut you would be able to count at least fifteen public-houses? Yes; I should say so.
12627. Some of the public-houses are a recognised necessity within certain limits, but you think that there are obviously too many in this particular quarter? Oh yes.
12628. Is there not an excess of public-houses at Miller's Point? There is a greater standing population at Miller's Point; still I think there are far too many public-houses. Miller's Point is a narrow tract of land. I think one public-house would supply all the wants of Miller's Point proper. There is no great traffic there.
12629. What would be a reasonable proportion of houses for lower George-street? That is a very awkward question for me to answer. My strong inclination is to say none, but I should think that for the requirements of the drinking community two or three public-houses would be ample.
12630. You would be glad to see a reduction in the number of public-houses in the interests of the sailors? Very glad indeed.
12631. Do you think the lower class of public-houses here induce men to drink, that is, that they ply them with drink, and afterwards continue to serve them with liquor when they are intoxicated? I regard it as being in the very nature of the proprietor of the public-house to induce people to drink. It is partly for that object that the houses exist, and in the lower parts of the city which are frequented by the sailors I think they use the utmost endeavours to induce people to drink.
12632. But there are some decent publicans who would not allow any man to be served with drink if he had already had enough. Are there not publicans of that class in the neighbourhood to which you refer? There may be some.
12633. Are there any decent licensed victuallers down there who lay themselves out to give accommodation to the public, as well as to sell drink? Yes. I should say that there were one or two.
12634. But is it not a fact that the majority of the houses are mere drinking shops? Yes, emphatically so. They are nothing else.
12635. Have you interested yourself in preventing the renewals of the licenses of any of these houses? Not very directly. I have sent petitions, and that sort of thing.
12636. I suppose your work as a Missionary would be very much lessened in difficulty if the sailors were separated from drink? There is no question about that.
12637. I suppose it is the drink which is the chief trouble? It is the greatest hindrance to all kinds of religious work. As far as sailors are concerned it is the all potent temptation. You see ships companies of fine young men, such as those which recently arrived for the station, for instance, fresh out from the training ships at home, led away entirely by the influence of drink, which they obtain in the houses in the parts of the city to which we have been referring, until they become degraded and brutalised, losing their badges and every other mark of good conduct. The unfortunate position of the Royal Naval Depot at Sydney is the cause of a great deal of trouble to the service, because on either side of it there are public-houses, and when men on service are on shore there at work, it is constantly happening that they go on board the ships again in a state of semi-intoxication, and become insubordinate or quarrelsome. You may see these young fellows from home landing clean and respectable and fresh looking at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, and if you go down to Clark's wool store at 11 o'clock at night, you may see some of them coming on board their ships drunk and quarrelsome. This happens until they have been brought under our influence, but the extent of the vice is nothing as compared with what it used to be even five or six years ago. Still there is quite enough of it even at the present time. The improvement has not been in the grog seller, the temptation still stands as it used to do, but the men themselves are better.
12638. Do you think that is the result of the training on board the Navy training-ships? I have no doubt that that has had a great deal to do with it. That training makes our work among the men much more possible than it used to be. Twenty-five years ago the training-ships came into vogue in the Navy, and men who are to-day leaving the service pensioned, after twenty-three or twenty-five years with their ships, are the first fruits of that system. It has undoubtedly done a great deal towards improving the men. The service has been weeded of all the old hands who were shipped from the sea-ports as men, and it is now composed almost entirely of boys who have been trained in the naval training-ships at Home. They are there at school for two years, and I think that their education has a great deal to do with the improvement which is visible in them at the present time. It makes all kinds of missionary work much easier.
12639. Do you think the transformation which took place in the young men to whom you have referred, between 1 o'clock in the afternoon and 11 o'clock at night, was due to the publican or to some other source;—do you think the men might not have been at brothels? Some of them might have been there, but I think the majority of them would be found to have been at public-houses. I would like to say that it does not follow that the young men whom I have described would, as a rule, be really drunk. They are often three or four months without any drink at all, and it does not take much of a kind of drink to which they are not accustomed to reduce them to a state of semi-intoxication.
12640. I understand that grog is now knocked off on board Her Majesty's ships? No; it is not knocked off, but the quantity is reduced.
12641. It is still served out? Yes; the quantity was reduced by one-half in, I think, the year 1854. Now each man is allowed half a gill of rum a-day, with three times the quantity of water in it. Officers and men were allowed that quantity up to the 1st of April, 1881, when the officers' rum was stopped. Up to that date boys from the age of 18 were allowed the same quantity, but they are not allowed any rum now until they are 20. Every man is allowed half a gill of rum, but he may instead take tea and sugar or cocoa and sugar, or 1½d. a-day added to his pay. I am not quite sure of the number, but there are many thousands in the service who take the tea and sugar or cocoa and sugar, or the money instead of the rum.
12642. Did you say that when they come here they become subject to the effects of drink somewhat suddenly? I was not referring to Sydney especially. The same thing would apply when the men land anywhere after making a voyage of any distance.
12643. Do you think that is because the spirits here are worse than the spirits which are obtained on board the ships? I should say that the rum on board the ships was as good as rum could be.
12644. But could you say that of the rum on shore? No, it is a very inferior class of liquor. I have evidence of that from the fact that the men complain very frequently of pains after drinking it. Men

Mr. J. S.
Shearston.
17 Nov., 1886.

have often come to me and asked to be put to bed, saying that they have taken a glass or two in such and such a house, and have since been in great pain, vomiting, with their breath smelling like turpentine or kerosene oil.

12645. Have they often indicated the same house to you? No.

12646. They are indiscriminate in their complaint? Quite. The men go on board the ships sometimes in great pain, and state as the cause of the pain that they have taken something to drink in a public-house.

12647. How often are the men paid? Once a month the men are paid, and are allowed to draw what they require, but once a quarter they are paid down all that is due to them, whether they want the money or not.

12648. Have they ever complained to you of being robbed of their money in public-houses or brothels? They do not talk to me very much about brothels, but they have complained to me of being robbed in public-houses, but not often.

12649. Have they complained of being hocused? Yes, I have heard some make the statement, and I have heard others contradict it, and say that the men who made the complaint had actually had too much to drink.

12650. Do you know where it is proposed to have the new Naval Home? Yes, the plans are in my hands. The site is at Dawes' Point.

12651. Are there any public-houses there? There is a public-house almost next door.

12652. Do you consider that public-houses ought to be licensed within a short distance of such an institution? I do not think it would matter very much.

12653. Why? The men do not remain in the house, they go out all over the city, and if they want liquor they will get it, even if they went as far as the Post Office; it would be no great distance. I do not see that the fact of a public-house being near the Home would make much difference to them.

12654. Then you do not think the neighbourhood of a public-house is an incentive to intemperance? I do not say that, but I do not think it matters whether a public-house is 100 or whether it is 300 yards away from the Home. At the present moment we have a public-house next to the Goodenough House in Princess-street, and the men very seldom enter it.

12655. Is it a good house? It is a very respectable place I believe.

12656. Perhaps the contiguity of the house deters the men from entering it—that is to say, they consider it too near their own home? That may be the reason.

12657. Then you do not think the sailors would be likely to "happen in," (as the Americans say), to a public-house because it happened to be near? No.

12658. The Goodenough Home does not supply drink? No.

12659. Is it contemplated that the new Goodenough Home shall follow the same rule? As far as I am concerned it is.

12660. Is your opinion shared by the officers on the station? I have so rarely heard them express an opinion upon the subject that I think I should be scarcely justified in speaking of it.

12661. Putting aside for the moment the marine community, do you think there has been any considerable amelioration in the habits of the people following upon the new Licensing Laws of 1881 and 1883? I think so.

12662. Do you ascribe that to the shutting of the houses on Sunday, and to the earlier closing on week days? I think so. I may say that so far as the men of the fleet are concerned, the Act has been a most beneficial one to them. Before the Act was passed you would see many of them coming on board their ships at half-past 6 in the morning, on the expiration of their leave, unfit for duty. This was quite a common occurrence, the men having called in at a public-house on their way down to the ships. On the passing of the Licensing Act there was a noticeable change. The officers asked me how it happened that all the men on the expiration of their leave came on board sober. I attributed the change to the passing of the new Licensing Law. Then again, at night a boat is provided at 11 o'clock to take the men on board their ships. This is done in order that they may be encouraged to sleep there instead of in houses on shore. Knowing that the houses close at 11 o'clock, many of the men make a point of catching this boat. Prior to the passing of the Act the liberty boat, as it is called, had scarcely any passengers at 11 o'clock at night.

12663. What is the length of the liberty period generally? It is according to the class of conduct and character. The first-class, known as the special leave men, can leave from 5, or half-past, every evening, until half-past 6 the next morning, in alternate watches. The next class, called the privileged leave men, are allowed on shore from half-past 1 on Thursday until half-past 6 on Friday, and from half-past 1 on Sunday until half-past 6 in the morning on Monday, in alternate watches. There is another class of men on leave, known as general leave men. They are allowed by the service 48 hours' leave once a month, beginning on the first Monday of the month. One watch goes at half-past 1 on Monday until half-past 6 on Wednesday morning; the other watch goes from half-past 1 on Wednesday until half-past 6 on Friday morning. There is a fourth class called the habitual leave breakers' and drunkards' class. There are very few in that class. They are allowed 48 hours' leave once in ninety days. They go on shore by themselves when there are no other men there. All the men of the first-class get all the advantages of the second class of leave as well as those of their own; and all the men of the second class, as well as the men of the first class, get all the advantages of the monthly 48 hours' leave in addition to the leave they have had during the month. But none of these classes are allowed on shore when the habitual leave breakers' and drunkards are there.

12664. Was this system of leave in force six or seven years ago? Yes, I think so. It is the Queen's regulation leave, and I am not aware of any alterations.

12665. Do you think that in the old times the opening of the public-houses on Sunday frequently tempted the sailors to intemperance? Yes. From 300 to 500 men would land in Sydney at 1 o'clock on Sunday with no attraction for them, and with nothing to do. At that time no Art Galleries or Museums or Libraries were open. There was no Goodenough Home, and there seemed nothing for them to do but to go into the public-houses, the publicans being only too glad to get them. But now that the public-houses are closed, and that the institutions to which I have referred are opened to attract and elevate the men, things go the other way. The whole question of Sunday closing does not affect my case very much, but there is a feature in it which affects our case more than it affects the case of ordinary shore-going people, because sailors belonging to Her Majesty's ships can gain access to a house at any time on Sunday, or after 11 o'clock at night, on week days. They are told that they are lodgers if they pay a shilling and take

Mr. J. S.
Shearston.
17 Nov., 1886.

take a bed for the night. I explained that to the Minister for Justice, and he gave a decision that the men were not lodgers and should not be received as such, but I find they are still received under the conditions to which I have referred. If they present themselves at the door of a public-house on Sunday they are regarded as travellers, and can be admitted and served. I should like a strong point to be made of instances of this practice, because it is a source of weakness to the police. They go into the houses and find them crammed with men-of-war's-men. They ask how it is that the men are there, and it is then shown that all of the men have their names entered as lodgers, and have paid a shilling for a bed. I find that as a matter of fact many of the men who have paid the shilling afterwards sleep at the Goodenough Home.

12666. Mr. Hutchison.] Then it is a bogus shilling? You might regard it as such. What I speak of now is a very large matter, because there are sometime hundreds of men taken into these houses as lodgers. I believe that some of the houses at the lower end of George-street would have to close were it not for the naval trade, which they secure in this way.

12667. President.] Has the point come before the Courts as to whether a sailor whose name is borne on the books of one of Her Majesty's ships on this station can be regarded as a lodger? I am not aware of any case.

12668. Have there been any prosecutions? I am not aware of any.

12669. Mr. Hutchison.] Do you think that any of the men go on board the ships after putting their names down as lodgers? Oh yes, that is a very common occurrence. I should be very glad indeed to have the question decided. I know that there are houses in Lower George-street at which any man-of-war's man can be admitted by coming to the door and knocking and giving the name of one of the ships in the fleet. I have seen them do so, and gain admission.

12670. You say that there are a large number of total abstainers on the "Nelson." I suppose they influence a number of the men who are not total abstainers? Oh yes; I daresay they have influence among their chums and friends.

12671. Are there any specific organizations in connection with the seamen which you find useful in your temperance work? Yes; we have naval Templar lodges. There are six at work in the squadron, and they form the backbone of all our temperance work among the men-of-war's men.

12672. Is that work recognised by the superiors. Are there any privileges given? The work is unquestionably more than recognised; it is helped in every possible way.

12673. The Templar lodges are really secret societies, are they not? Well, they are as much secret as any ordinary church meeting or conference in which the members only are allowed to participate. With a view to keeping outsiders from intruding themselves they use a pass-word, which is merely a verbal ticket of admission. That is all the secrecy which exists in connection with the lodges.

12674. Such an organization is permitted on board the ships? It is encouraged and helped.

12675. Do you attribute much of the reformation which has taken place in the Navy to these societies and their ramifications? A very great deal of it; but the service itself has done more for itself than any organization outside of it has done for it. The training-ship system and the spread of education have done a great deal.

12676. Do you know whether every member of a temperance organization takes something in lieu of his rum? I am not absolutely certain that every member does so, but I should say that there were not more than one or two on each ship who would be guilty in that respect, that is to say who draw their rum and who do not consume it. The man who does so unquestionably violates the regulations, because there is a regulation which says that no man is allowed to barter or to give away intoxicating drink on the ship's lower deck. The man who is allowed rum rations and who does not consume it, but who leaves it for someone else to drink, violates the law of the service.

12677. If the man does not want to take the rum he should report the circumstance? He is in duty bound to attend at the ship's office and officially discontinue the issue of his rum ration. He will then be asked what he will take in lieu of it, and whatever he may elect to take will be issued to him in due course.

12678. Are many of the men married? No, not very many.

12679. Do not a good number of them volunteer to remain here until their time is expired, and then become citizens? The more respectable, thrifty, and sober men do.

12680. Do you think they make good citizens? Yes; disciplined people always make good citizens.

12681. What are the opinions of that class of men as regards Sunday opening or closing? I do not know that I can quite answer that question. I do not know that I have ever heard an opinion definitely expressed, but so far as the temperance men as a body are concerned they consider it an evil to sell drink, not only on Sunday but on Monday, or on any other day of the week.

12682. I suppose you are often present when the public-houses are closed at night? Often.

12683. Is there much outcry against the closing at 11 o'clock? I should say that as far as our men are concerned they do not trouble very much about it. I have heard people new to the colony remonstrate a little about being turned out, and I have often heard the publican say, "I cannot help it, gentlemen; we live under an iniquitous law; I am bound to kick you out; if you do not like it why do you not get the Act amended?" That expression from the publican is as familiar to me as possible.

12684. It is a common practice for the publicans to make that statement at 11 o'clock at night? Yes; so far as my experience goes in the locality of which we have been speaking.

12685. Do you believe in local option? Very much.

12686. You would allow the people to vote as to whether public-houses should or should not exist? Certainly; because the people alone are concerned. When small-pox visited us we allowed people to take all kinds of precautions, and only three or four persons were killed; but I suppose the drink traffic ruins thousands yearly, and certainly kills a great number. I do not see why the people should not have the right to get rid of such a traffic if they are inclined to do so.

12687. Mr. Roseby.] You think that the temperate habits of sailors have increased? Yes, so far as the men-of-war's-men are concerned. There are not nearly as many men seen drunk or riotous in the street as formerly. Perhaps late at night, especially after some new men have arrived, you will see a few men going down to the ship in a state of semi-intoxication, but the numbers are very small compared with what they used to be.

12688. Notwithstanding this very substantial reform, is not drink at the present moment as widespread a curse among the seafaring class as anything else which you could mention. Do you know of anything else which is doing as much harm among the sailors at the present moment as is drink? I think not. I think

Mr. J. S.
Shearston.
17 Nov., 1886.

think the fact that so many public-houses flourish in vicinities in which there is no settled population, near the shores of the harbour, is a proof that they must be doing a very great trade with seafaring men. I most strongly hold the opinion that whenever a publican is doing a great trade he is doing a great harm. 12689. And under the present regulations in the navy young men are not supplied with drink until they are 20 years of age? No.

12690. Have you noticed in your travels about our city whether there has been of late years an increase of intemperance among our young people? I believe there is, and there is a cause for it.

12691. Do you think that the age, 16, at which a publican can now supply a youth with drink is too low? I think it is much too young, but I do not think that has so much to do with juvenile intemperance as the existence of confectioners' and fruitsellers' shops with wine licenses. The lads and girls would hesitate to go into a public-house, but they do not object to going into a fruit-shop. In Princes-street there is a fruit-shop with a Colonial wine license, and the children of the Public School at Fort-street buy and drink the Colonial wine. They would be in no danger of doing that if the licenses were confined to public-houses. It may be they only sell to children over the age of 16.

12692. You think the Colonial wine-shops are doing a great deal of damage in the community? Unquestionably. I cannot understand how anyone can doubt the fact. I know of one family in which two boys have got into the habit of going to a wine-shop every day, and purchasing a pint of wine. They were once in the way of becoming abstainers in one of our juvenile temperance societies, but now they will not hear of such a thing. I regard the Colonial wine-shops as being nurseries for the public-houses.

12693. You think the idea that the spread of wine-shops would be beneficial is altogether fallacious? Certainly. The people who make such a suggestion must lose sight entirely of the interests of the young people.

12694. You think that in the interests of young people the Colonial wine-shops should be altogether suppressed? I am certainly of that opinion, for undoubtedly Colonial wine is intoxicating if you drink it in a sufficient quantity, and children can be easily intoxicated by it. I cannot see that it can be a good thing in a young community like ours to train our children to drink wine.

12695. At what age do you think a publican should be permitted to serve a youth with drink? I could not fix an age.

12696. I suppose you think that publicans should not be permitted to supply children with drink for their parents or any one else? I do not think so, because I do not know how the publican can assure himself that the drink is intended for an adult. I certainly think the surroundings of a public-house are not calculated to improve the child who is sent there.

12697. Do you think that barmaids ought to be employed in public-houses? I do not. So far as barmaids are concerned I should like to mention that the girls who act as barmaids in a good number of houses in the lower parts of the city are made use of in a way which I think is not generally known. They are employed to distribute cards and advertisements on board the men-of-war and on board steamers. I know of at least ten or twelve houses where quite young girls are employed as barmaids. Sometimes they are the daughters of the licensee, but at other times they will be hired servants. Almost every Sunday afternoon you may see them on board the ships of Her Majesty's fleet in the harbour, distributing their handbills and little cards giving the names and addresses of their hosts' houses, and intimating that lodgers are taken, that they keep beds, and that sort of thing. This happens especially when there are new ships' companies. You are perhaps aware that the public are admitted on board any of Her Majesty's ships between 12 and 4 on Thursdays and Sundays. Of course if any of these women are known to be women of bad character they are not admitted. The commanding officer as a rule makes regulations upon the subject, but if nothing is known against the girls they are admitted. I am not certain that they pursue this practice every Sunday. When the men are strangers here, and are landing at night, girls and women come down from the public-houses and await them at the landing steps at the back of Government House. They distribute cards to the men as they come out of the boat. That is a feature of the barmaid question which probably has not yet come before you.

12698. You believe the law should prohibit girls and young women being employed in such a capacity? I think it is a great evil to the girls; it tends to make them coarse and low, and tends to debase them that they should stand before a rough crowd of men, and hear the kind of conversation which usually goes on in public-house bars.

12699. Have you heard of any public-houses having private or up-stairs bars presided over by females? I do not think there are any down in our neighbourhood. The houses are not large enough for that sort of thing. But there is something worse than up-stairs or down-stairs, or any other kind of bar, and that is tobacconists' stores, shaving saloons, and eating-houses in connection with public-houses next door. In fact the business premises form a portion of the lower premises of the public-house, and there is a doorway through which the men can go if they want a shave or meal, or some tobacco on Sunday. This bar is kept open after 11 o'clock at night, and is used as a means of entering the licensed premises from the shop, which is of course open after the public-house is ostensibly closed. I know of one house a portion of which is a tobacconist's store. I know of another a part of which is an eating-house. I know of another house which has a barber's place attached to it, and men frequently go there on account of the easy access to the shaving saloon on Sunday. But strangely enough although many of these houses in our neighbourhood only found sufficient accommodation for themselves, the Licensing Act of 1881 was no sooner passed than they were all advertised as lodging-houses. I think the sudden change was very suspicious.

12700. Most of the houses provide no accommodation for the ordinary traveller? Most of them do not.

12701. The houses which provide that kind of accommodation are the exception? There are a good number who provide accommodation for those who want it.

12702. Have you any knowledge of the barracks at which the permanent Artillery are quartered? Yes, I know them.

12703. Have you visited them? Yes.

12704. Is there a canteen there? There used to be; I believe there is one now.

12705. Have you any knowledge of how it is kept, or to what extent it is used? No. I know that none of the military canteens are licensed.

12706. Mr. Hutchison.] Do you think that the eating-houses, shaving saloons, and tobacconist's stores adjoining the public-houses to which you have referred form part of the accommodation originally required by the Act? No. In each of the cases I have referred to the house has sufficient accommodation exclusive of the premises next door. 12707.

12707. Mr. Roseby.] Do you believe that if the seafaring class as a body were polled upon the question the majority of them would support the closing of the public-houses on Sunday? I have heard the more sober and respectable men express their delight on coming here at finding that we had so far advanced in civilization as to close the public-houses on Sunday. They tell me that they consider the country is progressing on that account. I have heard other men landing for the first time in Sydney on Sunday express their disgust at not being able to get a drink, but they appeared to be men who would be benefited by their inability to do so.

Mr. J. S.
Shearston.
17 Nov., 1886.

12708. Then you think the majority of the sailor class would favour the closing of the houses on Sunday? No, I do not think the majority would favour the closing of the houses.

12709. But you would regard the opening of the houses as retrograde legislation? Unquestionably; but I do not think we are likely to have any retrograde legislation upon this question.

12710. Mr. Withers.] Do you think the wives and families of the men who are desirous of having the houses opened on Sunday would favour that movement? No, I do not think so. I think the question of the wives scarcely comes within my aspect of the case, because there are so few of our men who have wives here.

12711. But have you no general knowledge of the opinions of the wives of the working-classes? Yes, I have. I thought you were referring to the men-of-war's-men.

12712. What do you think their opinion on this question of Sunday opening would be? I think the wives generally regard the closing of the public-houses on Sunday as a great blessing. When I first came to live at this end of the city my attention was directed a great deal to the wharf labourers' class. There were something like 1,200 wharf labourers employed upon the wharves which I visited, and they were as a rule an unthrifty lot of men. In almost every case of accident which happened I visited the patients in the Hospital, and the man would tell me that he did not know how his old woman was going to get on while he was there, as she had no means. I found that they were in the habit of eating and drinking the whole of their wages, amounting to 1s. an hour. In nearly every case I discovered that the man and the wife were in the habit of drinking, and that they lived close to some public-house. Now, however, they have a union and matters are very much improved. At that time I formed a wharf labourers' accident assurance club, and I got some hundreds of members to join it. By paying 6d. a week they received certain benefits, and it was in discharge of my duties as chairman that I came a great deal into contact with the wives and families of the men. When the club was registered under the Friendly Societies' Act I retired. In every case in which an accident occurred I think I found that the man, and generally the wife, were given to drinking, and in every case of that kind which I visited the drinking wife regarded it as one of the greatest blessings that the hours for the sale of liquor had been shortened, and that they could no longer get the liquor on Sunday.

12713. President.] Do you think the wharf labourers still continue these habits of intemperance? I do not think they are nearly as intemperate as they were some years ago. I think they are very much steadier.

12714. Mr. Withers.] I suppose in the benefit society which you established there was a provision to the effect that a man should receive no benefit in the case of an accident brought about through drink? I think there was a provision of that kind.

12715. Do you think that that tended to make the men sober? I think it did something in that direction, but not very much.

12716. Do you think the women who canvass for the hotels would include among their number any canvassers for houses of ill-fame? I do not think so. I know every man on the station, more or less, and every man on the station knows me, and I am not aware of any other reason for the canvassing than that which I had named.

12717. You think it is the rule for the hotel-keepers to send their barmaids to canvass for the custom of the men who have newly arrived upon the station? It is not the rule, but some of the houses do so.

12718. Supposing it were determined to reduce the number of public-houses by a certain percentage, which would you consider the most desirable to extinguish, higher class hotels or the lower class hotels? It is very hard to say. The higher class of houses are those which respectable people frequent, and in which they are sometimes gradually drawn down until they become patrons of the lower class of houses. The lower class of houses is purely a grog shop, and is known as such. People are not very likely to go into those houses and stay there. I have noticed, however, that in many of the so-called higher class houses suicides have taken place, and persons have stayed there until they have become affected by delirium tremens, frequently making the place their home. It seems to me that the evil consists not so much in the higher or lower class of houses, and not so much in the presence or absence of adulteration as in the fact that the houses are opened for the sale of drink. Once people drink all kinds of evils follow. I think the drink itself is an evil.

12719. But the surroundings of the two classes of houses must have a great deal to do with the extent to which people are induced to drink? Then I should regard the houses presenting the greater cleanliness and comfort and good surroundings as offering the greater evil.

12720. Then you would consider the higher class of houses the more dangerous of the two? Well, they would be more dangerous to the class of people who are in the habit of having a certain amount of comfort in their own homes.

12721. I suppose you admit that we must have public-houses, that is to say, places into which you or I could walk with as great a feeling of independence as though we were walking into our own homes? They are very necessary places, especially in a country like ours.

12722. Mr. Coles.] Are you aware of the existence of any working man's clubs which have been formed for the purpose of evading the Act by obtaining drink on Sunday? I am not aware of any.

12723. Has the bad victualling of the Sailors' Home ever been brought under your notice as having induced persons to go and live in public-houses? Yes; I have heard complaints of it. I am not able to say that it has led to men leaving the home, but the bad victualling has been named to me as one of the reasons why the home is not so comfortable as it might be.

12724. Is there much drinking in your part of the town on Sunday? Well, I have seen knots of two or three people waiting about to be admitted into certain public-houses. Nearly every public-house keeps an attendant at the door. This man opens the door, looks up and down the street, and then beckons to the men who are waiting for a drink to enter. Presently they are let out, and another lot of men are admitted, and so on.

12725. Do you think that anything stronger than Colonial wine is sold in the Colonial wine-shops? I am not aware that that is so.

FRIDAY, 19 NOVEMBER, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,	T. COLLS, Esq., J.P.,
A. HUTCHISON, Esq.,	G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.,
J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. J. C. Simpson called in, sworn, and examined:—

- Mr. J. C. Simpson.
19 Nov., 1886.
12726. President.] You are a member of the Sydney Progressive Carpenters' and Joiners' Society? Yes.
12727. You have been selected as a representative of that body to give evidence here? Yes.
12728. Are you a total abstainer or are you a moderate drinker? A moderate drinker.
12729. How many men does your society contain? About sixty-five. It is a local society. There is an amalgamated society which is much larger and stronger.
12730. In coming here do you represent the carpenters and joiners generally, or only the particular society to which you have referred? Only the society.
12731. You are not justified in speaking for any society of carpenters and joiners other than your own? No.
12732. Are the members of that society chiefly total abstainers, or are they like yourself, moderate drinkers? I believe the majority are moderate drinkers. I know of very few total abstainers in the society.
12733. What is the view taken by your society of the present law which closes or tries to close public-houses on Sunday? I believe the majority of the society are in favour of the law being carried out as it now stands.
12734. They do not ask for the opening of the houses on Sunday? No; if the question went to a vote in the lodge I am certain the majority would be against that step.
12735. Have you ever heard it stated that the public-houses ought to be opened for a limited time on Sunday in the interests of temperance, inasmuch as there is said to be more intemperance caused by the houses being closed than would take place if they were opened for a certain time? I have never heard that.
12736. Is there any discontent in your society with the earlier closing of the public-houses on week days? No.
12737. They are content with 11 o'clock as the hour of closing? Yes. I believe the majority of the members are.
12738. What are the hours of labour in your business? Eight hours a day.
12739. Then I suppose you go to work about 7 o'clock? A great many start at 7 o'clock, but many start at half-past 6.
12740. The men do not require the public-houses to be opened earlier than they are opened at the present time? No.
12741. Or closed later? No.
12742. Where do you reside? In South Sydney—68, Cleveland-street.
12743. Do you think that there are an excessive number of public-houses in that district? I think there are quite sufficient.
12744. But do you not think there are too many? I believe there are.
12745. Taking the city generally do you not think the public-houses are too numerous? Yes.
12746. Where is your place of business? At Alexander Dean's.
12747. I suppose you meet a good many men there with whom you exchange views—men who are not members of your society. Are they of the same opinion as yourself with regard to the Licensing law? Yes, I believe the majority of the men are.
12748. That is to say, they would object to any alteration of that law in regard to Sunday closing, and the hours of opening and closing on week days? Yes, I believe they are satisfied with the law as it now stands.
12749. Have you a local option vote? No.
12750. Have you ever formed any deliberate opinion upon the question of local option—the phrase used to express the proposed system by which the direct vote of the people shall be brought to bear upon the number of public-houses, or upon their existence at all within given areas? I certainly believe that the people should have a voice in determining the number of houses.
12751. But do you think that they should have the right to prohibit public-houses in any given locality? I believe that a certain number of public-houses are a necessity, and I think we should have a limited number if they are well conducted.
12752. Have you noticed among the members of your society any cases of destitution or distress caused by drink? Not in our body. I am the secretary of the society, and if there were any such cases I think I should know of them.
12753. I gather from that then that your men are a particularly sober body? Yes.
12754. Do you regard habitual drunkenness as a vice or as a crime. Do you think the drunkard ought to be punished by being sent to a gaol, or do you consider that he should be sent to a reformatory. Suppose you were an habitual drunkard yourself, in which of the two ways would you like to be treated? I should certainly prefer to be sent to a retreat. I believe that would be found the best remedy.
12755. You would treat the habitual drunkard as an irresponsible agent or quasi lunatic? Yes.
12756. Mr. Colls.] Have you been long in the city? Twelve years.
12757. How long have you been a member of the Carpenters' Union? Three or four years.
12758. Is it usual for any member who is taken ill to be supported by the society? Yes.
12759. And do you give him that support if his illness is caused by drunkenness? No.
12760. Have you ever heard of drink being taken home on Saturday night since the houses have been closed on Sunday? Oh, yes. I am aware that that is done.
12761. Do you approve of it? Well, I do, inasmuch as it saves the hotel-keepers from opening their houses.
12762. Do you think it has caused a spread of drunkenness among females and in families? No, I do not think so.

12763.

12763. Have you ever known or heard of wives obtaining spirits from grocers and having them charged as groceries? Never.
12764. You are in favour of Sunday closing? I am in favour of rigid Sunday closing. Many of the houses are not properly looked after at the present time.
12765. Are there any objectionable houses in your part of the town? There are not any very objectionable ones.
12766. Are they houses which could accommodate families arriving from the country, or do they go in for a bar trade only? I think they could accommodate families if required.
12767. Have you any drinking clubs in your part of the town? Not that I am aware of.
12768. Mr. Withers.] What would you take to be a moderate drinker;—would you consider a man who takes a couple of glasses of ale a day a moderate drinker? Yes; or perhaps three glasses.
12769. But you think that if a man took any quantity beyond that he would show a tendency towards excessive drinking? If it were his constant habit to take more than three glasses a day I should think so.
12770. I suppose it depends greatly upon the work upon which a man is engaged. If, for instance, he had a very dusty job, such as pulling down an old house, he might be inclined to take an extra glass now and again? Yes, or he might do so if he happened to be hot, but if he did not exceed the limit to which you have referred I should still consider him a moderate drinker.
12771. You think, that on the average, a moderate drinker would take from two to three glasses a day? Yes.
12772. During your experience in the trade have you witnessed many accidents resulting directly from the effects of drink? No.
12773. Do you think that among mechanics "shouting" is carried on to the same extent as it used to be? No.
12774. Could you give me any reason for the change which has taken place? I believe that it is owing, in a great measure, to the fact that the men are getting homes of their own, and therefore have something else to think about.
12775. You think then that a very beneficial change has resulted from the agency of Building Societies? Yes.
12776. You think that the fact of the men endeavouring to procure homes of their own, through these institutions, has assisted in making them better citizens? Yes.
12777. You think that money which was formerly spent in "shouting" is now spent in the improvement of residences? Yes.
12778. In the indentures of apprentices to your trade is there any provision for supervision of the habits of the apprentice in regard to drinking? In the shop to which I belong a very strict supervision is exercised with regard to the youths.
12779. But do you know whether the indentures prohibit them from visiting public-houses? I do not think there are any indentured apprentices in Mr. Dean's employ.
12780. But nevertheless Mr. Dean exercises some supervision over their habits in this direction? Yes.
12781. Do you see any change in the accommodation and surroundings of public-houses, and in the character of the people who keep them? I think they have improved considerably of late years.
12782. You think the business is more elevated in these respects than it used to be? Yes.
12783. Do you think that any very large proportion of respectable mechanics spend as much of their spare time in public-houses as they used to do in years gone by? I do not believe they do.
12784. I suppose you attribute that change also to the effect of their having homes of their own? Yes.
12785. Have you observed whether in the selection of men for important positions in connection with the building trades, regard is had for sobriety—that is to say, would not a man who was understood to have a tendency to excessive drinking, have a difficulty in obtaining any position of responsibility? Yes.
12786. I suppose you think that that is a very wise provision? Yes.
12787. It is not an uncommon thing I suppose for a man who is reckless of his own life when engaged in the construction of public works to be reckless of the lives of his fellow workmen? That is very true.
12788. I daresay you have heard it stated that the working men generally are clamouring for the opening of public-houses on Sunday;—do you think that that statement is a libel upon the class? Yes; I do not believe the respectable section of the community wish to have the houses opened on Sunday.
12789. Do you think the wives and the families of the men who wish to have the houses opened would desire that their wish should be granted? I do not believe the wives of the men would wish it, but I cannot refer to any particular cases.
12790. Do you think that much time is lost in the morning in consequence of men getting drunk before breakfast? I do not think so.
12791. As a rule, I suppose, that the man who becomes troublesome through coming to his work drunk is soon left without employment? Yes; if the man has been for any length of time in the service he is cautioned, and if he continues his bad habits he is dismissed.
12792. You find that as a rule the mechanics in connection with the building trades are fairly temperate? Yes.
12793. Mr. Roseby.] You think that the public-house business is a dangerous one to the morals of the community as compared with any other business? I am afraid I cannot answer that question.
12794. Do you know of any other business in the community which produces as much demoralization as does the public-house business? No, I know of none.
12795. Do you think it is a proper thing for a publican to employ young women to serve drink behind the bar? No; I think it is very improper.
12796. Do you think publicans should be permitted to supply young persons with drink? Well, in these Colonies a young man who is 16 considers himself pretty well a man; at the same time I do not think the age fixed by the present Act is high enough; I think the age should be fixed at 20.
12797. And I suppose you think that the publican should be prohibited from supplying children with drink for any other persons? I think so, decidedly.
12798. President.] What is your opinion of the quality of the drink supplied by the public-houses as a rule? As far as my experience goes I think the spirits which are sold are very bad, and are frequently adulterated.
12799. Have you found yourself suddenly and unexpectedly the worse for a very moderate quantity of drink? Yes; I have on one occasion. I know that in some houses they are in the habit of taking the liquor out of one bottle and putting it into another bottle, upon which there is a label indicating liquor of a superior quality.

Mr.
J. C. Simpson.
19 Nov., 1886.

- Mr. J. C. Simpson. 12800. Have you reason to believe that the bottle from which the liquor is poured contains inferior liquor? Yes.
12801. Would it be brandy, gin, or whisky? Whisky.
- 19 Nov., 1886. 12802. Mr. Colls.] I suppose you know that there are marked houses where you cannot get good spirits? Yes.
12803. You have never attempted to get drink on Sunday I suppose? No; but I am sure I should have no trouble in getting it if I wanted it.

Mr. Edward Riley called in, sworn, and examined:—

- Mr. E. Riley. 12804. President.] You represent the United Plasterers' Society? Yes.
12805. You have been elected to represent them here? Yes.
- 19 Nov., 1886. 12806. Are they a large body? The plasterers number 700 I think, but they are not all members of the society.
12807. Are you a total abstainer? Yes.
12808. Do you belong to any temperance organization? No.
12809. Can you speak with any confidence about the opinion of a majority of your members on the subject of Sunday prohibition;—are they content with the law as it now stands? No; I think they are in favour of some alteration.
12810. We want the opinion of the majority? I think the majority are of opinion that there is something wrong in the law. They think, for instance, that inspectors ought to be appointed to taste the quality of the liquor. I have known men to be working out in the sun and to go and get a glass of beer. On returning to their work they will be more thirsty than when they went to the public-house. They do not get the proper quantity either, and they think that if they pay for a pint they ought to get a pint. Then as regards barmaids. They think that no girls should be employed behind public-house bars, and that if girls are employed at all they should not be employed under the age of 20, as, till they reach that age, they have not the sense to take care of themselves.
12811. Are you a married man? Yes.
12812. You think the majority of your friends are against barmaids in the first place, but they are decidedly against juvenile barmaids? Yes.
12813. I suppose you know that it is not difficult to get into public-houses on Sunday? It seems to be the general opinion that men can get as much drink on Sunday as they can get on any other day of the week.
12814. Do you think that if the houses were rigidly closed on Sunday it would be a cause of offence to a large number of the people you represent? No, only to a few. I think there are not a great many drunkards in the body which I represent. I should like to say that in Scotland they do not allow liquor to be sold except over bars which are not connected with any private house. The bars open directly into the street, and there is only one door. I think that if you adopt that kind of bar in this Colony you would get rid of a great deal of the difficulty which seems to exist in regard to Sunday trading, because it would be impossible under these circumstances for the publican to say that he was supplying drink to boarders during prohibited hours.
12815. That is provided for by the Scotch Act? Yes, and it works very successfully. It was found to be the only means of keeping down Sunday trading. I come from Glasgow, where I have seen the Act in operation.
12816. Glasgow for many years has been regarded as one of the most intemperate towns in Scotland? Yes, but it is impossible for any liquor to be obtained on Sunday now, unless a person has travelled 7 miles. On ordinary week-days the houses do not open until 8 in the morning, and they close at 11 o'clock at night.
12817. Are all the large towns in Scotland like Glasgow in that respect? Yes.
12818. Then I suppose that within a certain distance of the town you would find a large number of public-houses at which people are in the habit of getting drink on Sunday as travellers? It is necessary to prove that you are a bona-fide traveller before you can get a drink.
12819. We have heard that there is a perfect stream of people on Sunday going to get a drink at a certain distance from the town? That may be, but any number of those persons are punished. It is not sufficient to have walked 7 miles. A man must prove that he is really a traveller going from one place to another.
12820. Do the publicans ask many questions on that point? Yes.
12821. Are there many convictions? Yes, a good many.
12822. Where do you live? In Forbes-street, Woolloomooloo.
12823. Do you consider that there are enough public-houses in that neighbourhood? Yes; I think there are too many.
12824. You think they would stand reducing? I think so.
12825. Are they as a rule well-conducted? Well, I see a number of people going into and coming out of the houses on Sunday.
12826. Do you think that your Union considers that the number of public-houses spread about the city and suburbs is in excess of the demand? That I cannot say.
12827. You can only speak for yourself? Yes.
12828. How would you reduce the number of public-houses? I would give licenses only to those persons who keep respectable houses.
12829. But even that might not prevent you having some in excess of public requirements? That is 12830. Have you considered the question of local option? Yes.
12831. Are you content with that plan? I go thoroughly with local option, but I think that something beyond it is needed.
12832. Local option gives discretion only, but you would go further? Yes.
12833. You would advocate prohibition? Yes; I think we shall get to that some day.
12834. But if the people are being educated in the direction of prohibition would not the chances be in favour of local option meaning as a rule prohibition? I believe it will come to that.
12835. Then you would be content with local option as a means to prohibition? Yes.

12836. You would have no public-houses? I would have no public-houses licensed for the sale of liquor. I consider that in issuing these licenses the Government practically gives licenses for the making of paupers.

Mr.
E. Riley.

19 Nov., 1889.

12837. Would you not allow hotels to supply liquor to inmates and bonâ-fide travellers? I do not think that bonâ-fide travellers have any more right to liquor than any other persons in the community.

12838. You want to suppress the drink traffic? As much as possible, but I should be sorry to do an injustice to any section of the community because I happen to hold these strong views.

12839. I suppose you will agree with me that it will be a long time before we get rid of the drink traffic. I think we shall, therefore, have the habitual drunkard with us for some time? I think people are more inclined to abstinence now than they used to be. The majority of people now-a-days have to pay off amounts of money which are owing upon land and houses, and these payments take up their attention and all the money they can command.

Mr. Alfred Wagg called in, sworn, and examined:—

12840. President.] You are a delegate from the Sydney Progressive Society of Carpenters and Joiners? Yes.

Mr.
Alfred Wagg.

19 Nov., 1886.

12841. Have you been long in the Colony? All my life.

12842. Are you a total abstainer? I am, and always have been.

12843. Your colleague, Mr. Simpson has told us that, in his opinion, the majority of the Society to which you and he belong favour the Licensing Law as it now stands in reference to the Sunday prohibition and the hours of opening during the week? I believe that is the case; in fact some of the men would like to see the law more rigidly enforced on Sunday.

12844. If the law could be enforced you think that the majority of your Society would acquiesce in it? Yes.

12845. In what part of the city do you live? Nithsdale-street.

12846. Where do you carry on your trade? I work for Mr. Alexander Dean.

12847. Do you consider that the number of public-houses in the neighbourhood in which you reside is in excess of the requirements of the people? I do. There is a house in Goulburn-street called the "Hen and Chickens," and another just off Brisbane-street, which we could do without very well.

12848. Are those houses of good character? I do not know.

12849. Are they decently conducted? One is; I could not say much about the other, because I know that the landlord does as much Sunday trading as he can.

12850. Is it your opinion that taking the city and suburbs as a whole there are too many public-houses? I am of opinion that there are.

12851. I suppose you think there should be some public-houses? Yes, but I think the houses should exist more for the accommodation of people. The bulk of the present houses are mere drinking shops, and provide no accommodation whatever.

12852. You mean that there should be hotels? Yes.

12853. The houses to which you have referred accommodate boarders do they not? Yes, and they are very fond of saying that men are boarders when they desire to evade the Act.

12854. Do you consider that well conducted houses, capable of supplying decent and reasonable accommodation, together with liquor, under proper regulations, should be allowed to exist? I should have no particular objection to seeing that class of house. Although I am a total abstainer I do not want to force my opinions upon every one else.

12855. But the houses which are badly conducted, and the houses which are in excess of the public requirements, you would get rid of? Yes.

12856. Do you think local option would be a good way of getting rid of these houses? Yes; I would put the matter into the hands of the electors.

12857. Have you a local option vote? Yes.

12858. Do you exercise it? Yes.

12859. Perhaps you can tell us why there is so much apathy exhibited by the local option voters? The only reason I can assign for it is that they do not properly understand the matter.

12860. You think there is room for some educational process to make them understand it? Yes, I think they want educating up to it.

12861. You think they value the franchise? I have no doubt they do, but they do not understand it.

12862. Do you think the franchise should be extended so as to operate upon renewals of licenses? I think it ought.

12863. Do you think that that is the general opinion of the people you represent? Yes, I think it is. They are much of my opinion in regard to these matters.

12864. Are you including moderate drinkers as well as total abstainers? Yes.

12865. Do you think that as the roll now stands the local option voters fairly represent the voice of the community, or would you extend the vote to the Parliamentary voters? I certainly would not extend the roll.

12866. You are aware that the vote is now dependent upon the arrangement which a tenant makes with his landlord as regards the rates? Yes.

12867. Then you think that if a man does not procure from his landlord the right to vote he should not have the local option franchise? No.

12868. Do you see any reason why in a matter of this kind the privilege of exercising a vote should be attached only to the ownership of property. If a man is entitled to vote for so and so as his representative in Parliament, should he not also have a vote in a matter of local option, which concerns his family? No, I think not. For instance, there is a public-house near a house which I myself own, and I should vote against the existence of that public-house, because I know that if it were taken away it would improve my property. I think the local option vote is quite a different matter from the exercise of the Parliamentary vote.

12869. Do you think that if the public-houses were reduced in number the owners of the licenses would have a right to compensation? I do not think I should be inclined to give the licensees any compensation for the loss of their business.

12870. Have you heard many complaints as to the character of the liquor which is sold in the houses in and about Sydney? I have.

- Mr. A. Wagg.
19 Nov., 1886.
12871. Do you think that the liquor is generally of an inferior character? In attending the meetings of the various societies I hear men complain frequently about the quality of the drink which they have obtained in certain houses. There is one house in the city in which the trade societies meet, where the liquor is so bad that the men are obliged to go to a public-house on the other side of the road to get a drink.
12872. Have you ever considered whether the habitual drunkard should be punished by being sent to gaol when he cannot pay a fine, or whether we should endeavour to reform him by sending him to an inebriate retreat? I certainly think that the drunkards should be confined in some place by themselves, and that they should not be allowed to go among the criminals in our gaols.
12873. You think that the system of treating habitual drunkards as criminals is based upon a wrong foundation? I do.
12874. Suppose an habitual drunkard is ordered to be detained for six months in a certain retreat, and suppose that he has a family which is left in destitution? Things would be much in the same position as they are now when the drunkards are sent to gaol for a certain time, but I think that some steps should be taken with regard to the publican. In the first instance I think a law should be passed forbidding a publican to supply men who are in the habit of taking more liquor than is good for them.
12875. Do you mean that you would limit the number of drinks with which any man could be served? Yes.
12876. But some men can consume eight or ten drinks, whereas other men will be made drunk by one drink? No doubt there would be a difficulty in the matter, but notwithstanding that I think that the quantity of liquor which the publican is entitled to serve should be limited.
12877. Do you not think the liberty of the subject, which we all hold so dear, would be to some extent evaded by permitting magistrates to send drunkards away for six or nine months. Do you think the people would tolerate such a law? If the law were passed they would have to tolerate it, but I believe that taking all the circumstances of the case into consideration they would submit to it.

Mr. Frederick James Spencer called in, sworn, and examined:—

- Mr. F. J. Spencer.
19 Nov., 1886.
12878. President.] You are a member of the Plasterers' Society, and have been delegated to come here? Yes.
12879. We are told that the plasterers number 700? Nearly.
12880. Have you been long in the colony? Four years next March.
12881. Are you a total abstainer? No.
12882. What can you tell us with regard to the views of your fellow members, on the subject of the closing of public-houses on Sunday? The majority of our Society are in favour of the houses being opened for about four hours on Sunday.
12883. Do you think that there is a decided majority in favour of that step? Yes, I am sure of it. When we were discussing this matter last Monday a number of men said that if the houses were opened for four hours on Sunday it would do away with a great deal of the intoxication which now takes place in consequence of persons drinking in public-houses all day.
12884. You think that you have a right to your beer on Sunday? I think I have as much right to get it on Sunday as on any other day of the week.
12885. Then you think that, provided the time is arranged so as not to interfere with religious service, the people you represent would by a distinct majority favour the opening of the houses on Sunday? Yes.
12886. Do you think that they consider it right in the interests of temperance itself that the houses should be opened on that day? They consider it right in all respects that the houses should be opened on Sunday. They think that it would in a great measure do away with drunkenness.
12887. Can you say what goes on in public-houses on Sunday? Suppose four or five men meet on Sunday morning. One man knows where he can get a drink; they all go in and get a drink; the other men do not like to appear mean, and to go away without "shouting," so everyone "shouts," and the consequence is that a great deal of drink is consumed within a very short space of time; five or six glasses of beer or whisky are swallowed in about 10 minutes, and then the men have to hurry up and get out in case the policeman should come along. Many men having a large quantity of drink within such a short space of time find themselves intoxicated. If the houses were opened for a couple of hours I think that moderate drinkers would go into the houses as they do on week days and have a glass of beer, and the matter would then be done with.
12888. As we put a great deal of reliance upon the gentlemen who are sent to us from such Societies as yours, we need hardly tell you that what you tell us should be in the best faith. Do you honestly believe then that the effect of the present system is to increase the amount of intemperance? I honestly believe that it does increase the amount of intemperance.
12889. Suppose the public-houses were rigidly and absolutely closed on Sundays, do you think you would still try to get your beer? Unless the law were greatly altered from its present form I am sure that beer would be obtained.
12890. But suppose the law were altered so as to make the closing of the houses a fact instead of a fiction, would you still insist on having drink through the public-house? I should like to get it if I possibly could.
12891. That means that you and those who think with you would make it difficult for the publican to obey the law? Just so.
12892. It is not enough for you to take home beer on Saturday night? No, I do not think that it is.
12893. You do not like your beer stale and you do not like to have it in the house? No, I do not care to have it in the house.
12894. You think you have a right to go out and get it on Sunday? Yes.
12895. Is that the view of the majority of your friends? That is the view of a large majority of our society. I think I can go as far as to say that there are 30 to 1 in favour of that course.
12896. Then out of 700 there would be only 23 against the opening of the houses? I believe that if the society were polled upon the question it would be found that the proportion was 40 to 1.
12897. Is the occupation of plastering in itself a great incentive to drink—is it what you would call a thirsty trade? No, I do not consider that it is.
12898. It is indoor work as a rule? There is a great deal of out-door work as well as in-door work, but

I could not call it a thirsty trade. I know a number of total abstainers who are of opinion that the houses should have the privilege of opening for an hour or two on Sunday. They can see the evil of the present system. The law makes the publican a complete prisoner.

Mr.
F. J. Spencer.
19 Nov., 1886.

12899. Will you explain how that is? If a publican shuts his house up entirely and acts in accordance with the law it means that men who cannot get a drink at his house will go elsewhere for it, the consequence of that being that his trade will gradually be taken elsewhere. If a man cannot get a drink at a publican's house on Sunday he will not go there during the week, therefore the man who acts honorably gradually loses the whole of his trade.

12900. On Sundays do you not manage to get as many drinks as you want in one public-house without perambulating, or is there an ever present fear of the police? There is generally some fear of that kind in some houses, but in the majority of the houses you can sit down comfortably and take your drink without fearing anything.

12901. I suppose that when you are in a public-house under those circumstances you are considered an inmate? Yes.

12902. Or perhaps a lodger? Yes, you can be a lodger if you like.

12903. In what part of the city do you reside? I reside in Abercrombie-street.

12904. I suppose that in that locality there is no difficulty in getting drink on Sunday? Well, in that immediate neighbourhood there is a difficulty. We have to go some distance in order to get a drink.

12905. Do you have to go out of the city? Oh, no; it is not necessary to go out of the city.

12906. Have you ever heard of publicans making use of the arguments which you have used here to-day? Yes, often.

12907. Do you think it spoils a publican's week-day trade if he refuses drink on Sunday? It does in a great measure. It is a great annoyance I know to people who are what may be termed religious, to see five or six men coming out of public-houses, as they do at the present time, in a state of semi-intoxication; but I think that that state of affairs would be remedied if you made the alteration in the law which I have suggested.

12908. You think that religious persons going to or coming from church would not be shocked in the manner you have described if the houses were opened for certain hours on Sunday? No, I do not think they would. I have seen more drinking here in Sydney before 11 o'clock than I ever saw in my life-time in London. I have seen more drunkenness on Sunday in twelve months in Sydney than I saw during the whole of the time I spent in London.

12909. You are referring exclusively to Sunday drunkenness? Yes.

12910. The general drunkenness therefore would not be as great? No, I do not think it would.

12911. But on Sunday you think that the drunkenness, as compared with the drunkenness in London, is outrageous? It is.

12912. And you ascribe that to the closing of the houses? Yes.

12913. And, perhaps, to men being compelled to drink often and rapidly? Yes.

12914. Do you think that men drink more because they know the law prohibits them from obtaining drink on Sunday? I am certain of it.

12915. I suppose you have seen a good many good men go to destruction through drink? Not many. I have seen one or two.

12916. Suppose it happened to you by some misfortune to become intemperate to the extent of being a habitual drunkard, and that you came under the control of the law as such;—do you think it would be better to put you in gaol for seven days if you could not pay a certain fine, or to place you in some retreat for inebriates where you could be treated properly, and possibly reformed and handed back to society a useful and better man? The question has never occurred to me before, but I should certainly prefer to go to an inebriate asylum rather than to gaol.

12917. Are you a married man? Yes.

12918. You do not see on the face of the suggestion which I have made any outrage upon the liberty of the subject. I suppose you are of opinion that the object justifies the means. You see it would be a serious thing for a man to be kept away from his family for six months, and that would not be justified, except as a last resource? Of course it would be a serious thing for the man's family, but I do not think the punishment in gaol in this Colony is sufficiently severe.

12919. Then you would favour the establishment of a penitentiary or workhouse? I do not think there should be a workhouse. And returning for a moment to the subject of Sunday-trading, I should like to say that in London there are no violations of the law during prohibited hours.

12920. But suppose we recommended the opening of the public-houses on Sunday, there would still remain this fresh question of the treatment of the drunkard. Is he in your opinion a man who should be punished or reclaimed? I think that in many cases of habitual drunkenness a little punishment would bring a man to his senses, but it is a difficult question to answer. Perhaps such a retreat as you have described would be a good thing.

12921. I suppose you have seen a good many habitual drunkards? I have seen hundreds of them.

12922. Do you think they are generally of an age at which they could be reclaimed? Yes, I think so.

12923. You have known of men who have voluntarily reclaimed themselves? I have known of plenty.

12924. If they can voluntarily reclaim themselves by the strength of their will, is it not also possible for treatment in an asylum to be successful? Yes, I should think so; but I may mention that I have seen several cases in which men have been taken into custody by the police when they have not been intoxicated. A man who was taken up in Belmore Park a few weeks ago was sentenced to six months' imprisonment. The man was simply lying on the grass, and I saw a policeman come up to him and deliberately kick him. The man was charged with being drunk and incapable. He was quite as sober as I am at the present moment.

12925. You were a witness of the occurrence? Yes; I was standing by, but you have to be very careful in interfering in these matters, or the police will have you up too.

12926. Do you know what charge was entered against the man at the lock-up? I think he was charged with being drunk and incapable and threatening to assault the police. He received six months' hard labour.

12927. But you did not volunteer yourself as a witness? Had I done so I should have had to lose all my time for nothing, and I could not afford that. It would have involved the loss of perhaps several days. If you speak a word to a constable while he is doing this kind of business it is immediately considered that you are trying to rescue the prisoner, and you are locked up with the other man. It is therefore necessary to be very careful.

12928.

- Mr. F. J. Spencer. 12928. Would you like to refer to any other matters in connection with the drink traffic? I should very much like to see what I may term an analytical inspection of the drink which is sold in public-houses. In England a Customs-house analyst goes into a public-house at any hour of the day and helps himself to a certain quantity of liquor. He gives half to the publican under seal, and keeps the other half for himself for analysing. In every house in England you will see over the door an announcement that spirits are diluted according to prices. I think it would be a very good thing to have different prices according to the strength of the liquor. If in a beer-cellar at home only half a pound of sugar were found the publican would be fined. The law there is also very severe in regard to penalties for violations of the law on Sunday. For a first offence I think the publican is fined £50, and a red mark is put against the house. If the publican sells out to another man the mark still remains against the house.
12929. That is to say, the house always bears a stigma? Yes; that is why the publicans in England are now so careful.
12930. Was it not the practice to have convictions posted up in the bar? No; I never saw such a thing. I can remember one case that a man was fined £20, and a red mark was put against the house because he served a man with three pennyworth of rum when he was under the influence of drink—that is to say, that if the house in which the offence was committed were worth £4,000, the red mark placed against it would reduce the value by £1,000. The house would not afterwards be worth more than £3,000.
12931. I suppose that a certain number of red marks disqualifies a house? Yes; after three red marks have been made the house loses its license entirely.
12932. And it cannot be relicensed? No.
12933. Mr. Withers.] The percentage of plasterers who desire to have the houses opened on Sunday seems to be very large;—are you quite sure that the proportion is thirty to one? Yes.
12934. Do you not think that there is a great danger of many of those men becoming excessive drunkards? No.
12935. Would you consider that 93 per cent. of the criminals in our gaols attribute their incarceration directly or indirectly to the effects of drink? I should think that percentage you have named would be very high.
12936. Do you not think that that percentage should be taken into consideration when we are dealing with the question of opening the houses on Sunday? It certainly ought to be considered, but on the other hand I think that if a person is thoroughly given to drink he will obtain drink in defiance of any law which you may pass.
12937. Do you not think there is a prospect of thousands of persons being initiated into drinking habits in consequence of there being undue facilities for obtaining drink? I was in Glasgow when the houses were supposed to be closed from 11 o'clock on Saturday night until 8 o'clock on Monday morning, and when the publicans were not allowed to live in their own houses. There are 480 public-houses in Glasgow, and only four of the large hotels at or near the railway stations were allowed to open on Sunday. A padlock used to be placed upon the doors of the bars, and the publican was allowed to go in twice a day, if he had a bird or animal of any kind there which he desired to feed. While that very stringent law was in operation you might see men lying in the parks speechless from the effects of drink which they had obtained in large quantities on Saturday night.
12938. Do you think there was a better state of things under the previous law in Scotland? Yes; I have heard people say that the state of affairs under the old Act was very much better.
12939. Do you think that the wives of the men whom you have spoken of to-day would wish to have the public-houses opened for four hours on Sunday? I do not think they would object to it.
12940. You say that you consider the publican under existing circumstances a prisoner? Yes.
12941. But would he not be very much more a prisoner if he were forced to open his house on Sunday, and to work seven days instead of six days a week? I do not think the publican would be in such a bad position as he occupies at the present time, because if he closes his house rigidly on Sunday now he loses a great deal of his trade during the week.
12942. You assume that the 800 publicans in this city can set the law at defiance? Yes; I think they can do so unless it is materially altered.
12943. But if the law could be enforced would not the publicans be better pleased by being allowed to have complete rest on Sunday? I do not think they would object to open their houses for certain hours during the day.
12944. Are you acquainted with any workman's clubs which have been established for the purpose of obtaining drink on Sunday? I have not heard of any.
12945. Mr. Roseby.] Do you think the people themselves ought to have a voice as regards the existence of public-houses? I think so.
12946. Do you think that barmaids ought to be employed in public-houses? I do not.
12947. Do you think that young people should be served with drink in public-houses? No; certainly not.
12948. At what age would you allow a young man to be served with drink? I think he should be 20.

MONDAY, 22 NOVEMBER, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,
J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.,

A. HUTCHISON, Esq.,
G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. John Cyril Marie Des Anges Weale re-called and further examined:—

Mr. J. C. M. D. Weale. 12949. President.] You are the Secretary of the Amalgamated Licensed Victuallers' Association of New South Wales? Yes.

22 Nov., 1886. 12950. It is by your own desire I believe that you are re-examined? It was intimated to me at the close of my last examination that I should be re-examined. My last examination closed when a new question had been opened up—the question as to the growth of local option in different communities. In connection with that question I should like to refer to the question of compensation, and to read you some extracts from judgments of the Supreme Court Judges in the States of Iowa, Kansas, and Washington.

12951. In what way do you think these judgments would affect the condition of affairs as regards compensation in this Colony? I think they affect the question in this way: The question of local option has always been discussed here side by side with the question as to whether there shall or shall not be compensation. It has always been urged, until quite recently, in Victoria, that the question of compensation has never been heard of in any other country, and have sought to weaken the claim which we considered that the publicans have to compensation if they are deprived of their property.

12952. But it seems to me that in the judgments to which you refer the question lay in the difference between State legislation and Congressional legislation. Here we have no such difficulty. We legislate for the whole Colony? Yes; but the judgments to which I refer also contain important evidence from a moral as well as a legal stand-point. I have the judgments copied in full, and I shall be very glad to furnish you with extracts bearing only upon the moral aspect of the question.

12953. Your Association is of course dissatisfied with the present law? Yes.

12954. And I suppose that among other things it is dissatisfied with Sunday closing? Yes.

12955. That is a part of its platform is it not? Yes.

12956. Do you also propose to increase the open hours during the business day? Yes.

12957. Representing the Association, what have you to say in support of your proposed amendments? In regard to the effect of the present Act upon the public and upon the trade I should like to say that in my opinion the constant supervision and interference with the trade on the part of the police, the spy system, the use of agents who actually induce publicans to break the law, the traps which are laid for publicans under the agency of the police, naturally bring the trade into antagonism with that body.

12958. But is not that a natural antagonism; is it not what you would expect? Not under a reasonable law. If the supervision were carried out on proper grounds there would be nothing to say against it.

12959. What evidence can you furnish as to the use of spies? You have evidence of it every week in the Police Courts.

12960. But you know that the Inspector-General is opposed to that system? He has told me so several times, but there can be no doubt that spies are used because they appear in the Police Courts, and admit that they have made use of false representations in order to get into houses, and also that in some cases they have tried to induce the hotelkeeper, sometimes successfully, to break the law.

12961. But do you not think that the publicans themselves have spies to find out when the police are coming. Do you not think that the one action is a counterpoise to the other? No; the hotelkeepers simply use spies to ascertain when a policeman is coming.

12962. I suppose that the whole of the houses which sell do that? I am quite sure they do not, from my own knowledge. I believe that in the case of the small houses it is done as a rule, but the more respectable houses do not do so.

12963. Is it not only the small and disreputable houses which sell on Sunday? Certainly not. The best and leading houses—houses which are at the top of the tree—sell.

12964. In the city? Certainly.

12965. Have you any established facts which will tend to show that the existing law has the effect of making these persons law-breakers? That brings me back to the point about which I gave evidence at my last examination. I then pointed out that the present law as to Sunday closing did compel the public to break the law in the first instance, and the publican afterwards. For every publican who breaks the law there are certainly 100 of the public who are parties to the violation.

[Here a conversation ensued, the result of which was that the witness was requested to state his views in the form of a paper. Vide Appendix.]

Mr. James Cook called in, sworn, and examined:—

12966. President.] You are at present a brickmaker? Yes.

12967. Have you not been a sub-contractor under contractors to the Government? Yes.

12968. Is it your wish that you are here to be examined? Yes.

12969. I suppose that in the course of your business as a contractor you have seen a great deal of the drink traffic? Yes, especially on public works.

12970. You mean illegitimate traffic? Yes.

12971. That is to say, traffic which is conducted by storekeepers and others not having licenses? Not by storekeepers, but in shanties by persons who have no licenses.

12972. Will you mention on what contracts, and how long ago this occurred? It occurred on the contracts for railways from Arncliffe to Glen Innes, and from Glen Innes to Tenterfield.

12973. You were on the spot? Yes.

12974. Can you speak as to any other contracts? No, only as to those two works.

12975. From your knowledge of other contracts do you consider that the same system has been carried out in connection with them? Yes, on every Government contract.

12976. Can you tell us why this illicit trade has not been suppressed by law? The reason I believe is that the police will not take it upon themselves to suppress it. They could easily do so if they wished, because the trade is carried on so openly. I drew the attention of Sergeant Lees to the matter on several occasions. He made two raids on one party, and instead of the man himself being punished his wife was punished. She underwent three months imprisonment on two occasions, and the husband was allowed to carry on the trade as before.

12977. She elected to take the punishment, and he continued the selling? Yes.

12978. Tell us what kind of establishments these are? Mostly bark huts and large tents. They are generally kept for the accommodation of the men, that is say, for the accommodation of navvies and any travellers who may be passing by. There were no less than seven of them at one time within a radius of half-a-mile.

12979. Are they worse than public-houses would be? Far worse.
