Introduction

This publication provides two-party and two-candidate preferred results for the 2019 New South Wales election – by polling place, by pre-poll centre, and by declaration vote type. The publication is the latest in a series first published by the Parliamentary Library after the 1991 election. It is also a companion to "2019 New South Wales Election: Analysis of Results", (Background Paper No 1/2019).

The publication also includes several tables of first preference results by polling place highlighting where the support for selected parties is weakest or strongest. (See pages 1-12). The ordered tables exclude pre-poll centres, declaration vote types and Sydney Town Hall.

Two tables on page 13 disaggregate state-wide results by vote type. The first table shows party first preference vote percentages, two-party preferred vote percentages, informal vote percentages and exhausted preference percentages by vote type. The second table shows the change in each of these percentages by vote type between 2015 and 2019.

A comparison table on Page 14 shows the proportion of votes taken by vote type at New South Wales elections since 1984. The table highlights the declining proportion of the vote taken on polling day, as well as the rise in the use of pre-poll voting.

Two-Candidate versus Two-Party Preferred results.

The two-candidate preferred count in a district represents the final tally of votes between the two remaining candidates after all other candidates have been successively excluded and their preferences distributed. In most cases, the final pairing of candidates will represent a contest between the Labor Party and the Liberal-National Party Coalition, a pairing also known as the two-party preferred count.

In 2019 there were 74 districts where the final pairing of candidates was a two-party preferred count, and 19 districts where it was not. There were seven contests where a Green candidate was in the final pairing, four versus the Liberal Party (Davidson, Manly, Pittwater, Vacluse), two versus Labor (Balmain, Newtown) and one versus the Nationals (Ballina). There were three National-SFF contests (Barwon, Murray, Orange), four National-Independent contests (Coffs Harbour, Dubbo, Tamworth, Wagga Wagga), three Liberal-Independent contests (North Shore, Sydney, Wollondilly) and two Labor-Independents contests (Cabramatta, Lake Macquarie).

There are 93 tables of two-candidate preferred results in this publication, plus another 19 tables of two-candidate preferred results. All results have been derived from the 'Two Candidate Preferred Analytical Tool' published on the NSW Electoral Commission's website.

A full summary of the overall two-party and two-candidate preferred results by district can be found on pages 31-33 of "2019 New South Wales Election: Analysis of Results", (Background Paper No 1/2019).

Calculation of Polling Place Swings

All two-candidate preferred tables include a swing column showing the change in two-candidate percentage vote since the 2015 election for each polling place and counting centre. No swing is shown for new polling places, and some swings are shown after taking account of changes in address for polling places and pre-poll centres. Swings for Enrolment/Provisional votes are shown compared to the combined Enrolment and Provisional/Silent categories used in 2015. Swing figures are not shown in tables of alternative two-party preferred results.

In all tables, the swing figure is measured against the percentage vote for the first listed party in the table. A swing towards the first party is shown with a '+' sign, a swing away from the first party with a '-' sign. Where the pairing of candidates in the table are the same as in 2015, the swing signs can be reversed to express swing in relation to the second listed party. A note explaining the swing is provided at the bottom of each table.

Tables in the 74 districts that were both two-candidate and two-party preferred contest are shown with the Labor candidate listed first and the Coalition candidate second. A further four tables have the Labor candidate listed first and an Independent or Green candidate second. In the 15 districts where Labor candidates were excluded in the distribution of preferences, the tables have Coalition candidates listed first, and other party or independent candidates listed second. The 19 tables of alternate two-party preferred counts list Labor first and the Coalition second.

In 10 districts (Barwon, Cabramatta, Coffs Harbour, Dubbo, Murray, North Shore, Orange, Tamworth, Wagga Wagga, Wollondilly), the swing shows a different pairing of final parties compared to the 2015 election. This is noted at the bottom of each table, and the swing shown can only apply to the party listed in the first column.

The tables do not take account of by-elections between 2015 and 2019. In the case of Murray, Orange and Wagga Wagga, the swings shown are exaggerated by not taking account of the intervening by-election.

Table Sub-Totals

Three totals are provided for each electorate table.

Ordinary Votes – the total of all ordinary votes cast on election day, including at joint polling places.

Pre-Poll Ordinary – total of pre-poll votes taken at pre-poll centres assigned to the district. The total also includes Sydney Town Hall pre-poll votes and Declared Facility ordinary votes.

Declaration – all votes cast as declaration votes. Note that Absent votes includes votes taken at polling places outside of a district on polling day, as well as pre-poll votes taken at early voting centres that were not declared to take pre-poll votes for the district.

Abbreviations Used in Tables

ALP	Labor Party
CLR	Country Labor
GRN	Greens
IND	Independent
LIB	Liberal Party
NAT	National Party
SFF	Shooters, Fishers and Farmers Party

Exhst	Exhausted votes

Acknowledgments

This publication is based on vote data published by the NSW Electoral Commission. The author takes responsibility for the calculations of all percentages. The author also takes responsibility for the pairing of polling places across the two elections, for the calculation of swings, and for the accumulation of state-wide results by vote type.
