My thanks to the staff of the Australian Electoral Commission for making available preliminary results by booth for the 1998 Federal election. All estimates for transferring the Federal results to state boundaries are the responsibility of the author.

A Note on Calculations

Calculations for the two Federal elections are based upon votes cast in booths on the day of the election. All declaration votes (Pre-poll, Postal, Absent etc) have been excluded. Because of the delay in the 1998 election for the Federal electorate of Newcastle, caused by the death of a candidate, it has not been possible to provided estimates for the state electorates of Port Stephens and Newcastle. Estimates for Charlestown and Wallsend have also been affected. Declaration votes have been included for re-calculated NSW elections, and figures have been taken from "1997/98 NSW Redistribution: Analysis of Final Boundaries" by Antony Green, NSW Parliamentary Library Background Paper No 4/98.

The Author

Antony Green is an Election Analyst for ABC Television, and has worked for the ABC on every state and federal election coverage since 1989. He also writes regularly on electoral matters for the Sydney Morning Herald.

Comparing Overall State and Federal Election Results.

While the popularity, and more particularly the unpopularity, of Federal governments and Prime Minister can influence New South Wales state elections, the evidence of the past three decades is that New South Wales elections are primarily decided by the popularity (or unpopularity) of the state government. While Federal issues may play a part, New South Wales governments have generally risen and fallen according to their own life cycles.

For instance, in December 1975, Malcolm Fraser led the Coalition to a smashing victory following the dismissal of the Whitlam Labor government. Yet six months later in May 1976, Neville Wran led his state Labor Party to office with a narrow seats but comfortable vote majority over the Coalition. (It can be argued that Labor would have won a more comfortable victory without the memory of the Whitlam government.) The Fraser government's second victory in December 1977 was just as emphatic, yet in October 1978, New South Wales saw the first 'Wranslide' election, the Labor Party polling 57.8% of the vote in New South Wales compared to 42.4% for the Federal Labor Party ten months earlier.

It is more than twenty years to the last unambiguous examples of state governments profiting from the unpopularity of Federal governments. In 1973 the Askin government achieved a swing to it after campaigning strongly against the Whitlam government. The Wran government in 1978 also profited from the unpopularity of the Fraser government.

At the 1981 and 1984 state elections, Labor's vote declined and the Coalition's improved, at the same time as Labor's support surged at the Federal level, the Hawke government succeeding the Fraser government in 1983. The 1987 Federal and 1988 State elections saw marked swings away from Labor in its undustrial 'heartland'. But the election of the Greiner government in 1988 was against the trend of politics throughout the rest of the country, punctuating a decade when Labor governments became the norm across the country. At the 1991 and 1995 elections, the swing was against the state Coalition government while a Federal Labor government was in office. However, the election of the Carr Labor government in 1995 took place with a substantially lower vote than Labor recorded at the 1993 Federal election. The 16.2% swing in the Federal Canberra by-election, conducted on the same day as the 1995 state election, suggests that the unpopularity of the Keating government may have dampened the state swing to Labor.

Since 1972, the same side of politics has been in government in Canberra and Macquarie Street for only six of the 26 years. This is substantially less than the record in all other states, Tasmania 9 years, Queensland 16, Victoria and South Australia 18 years, and Western Australia 22. But this does not seem to provide evidence that the voters of New South Wales are deliberately voting to maintain different parties in office. Only in 1973, 1976 and 1978 is it unambiguous that Federal politics was an issue in the state campaign.

Swings at New South Wales elections are better explained by accepting that once a government is elected to office, the normal trend is for it to begin to lose support. The swing at New South Wales elections has been against the state government at every election since 1971, with the exception of 1973 and 1978. This seems to provide a much better explanation of swing at state elections than any attempt to use Federal results. A similar trend has existed at most interstate elections for the past two decades, and at Federal elections, since 1966, the only Federal government to achieve a swing to it was the Keating government in 1993.

However, state governments do appear to have influenced Federal elections in New South Wales. Federal elections in 1987, 1990, 1993 and 1996 exhibited swings against unpopular state governments. October's Federal election is the first since 1983 in which the swing in New South Wales was towards the party in government in Macquarie Street.

However, examining trends in other states suggests this pattern of non-influence may be a matter of chance. If New South Wales had held an election in the unemployment peaks of 1982/83, the unpopularity of the Fraser government would have been an issue. The same applies to the 1992/93 recession and the Keating government. Both recessions coincided with changes of government in Tasmania, Victoria, South Australia and Western Australia, though in each case, the state government involved may have already been in terminal decline.

Apart from the period of the Whitlam government, when Labor suffered reverses in elections in every state, the clearest example of a Federal issue dominating a state election campaign was the December 1989 South Australian election, when the Bannon government came close to defeat because of high interest rates.

With the Federal election campaign now over, and the Howard government's tax package on hold until its debate in the Senate, the issues that dominated the Federal election are unlikely to become prominent in the State election campaign next year. The prospects for the Carr government's re-election probably depend more on its own performance in office than any actions of the Howard government.

Comparison of Labor Vote at State and Federal Elections

Comparison of State and Federal Election Results by Electorate

The seat by seat results shown in Table 5, and the full results on pages 10-30, show significant differences in the vote recorded by party at the most recent state and federal elections. There are a number of factors that help to explain these differences.

Overall Result: The overall Labor result was higher at the 1998 Federal election than at the other three elections, and this will be reflected in the results in many seats.

The Sitting Member Factor: Particularly in rural and regional parts of the state, sitting members attract a significant vote in their own right. For instance, the recently retired National Party MP for Monaro, Peter Cochrane, polled significantly higher than the Liberal Party at Federal elections, in part because of a strong personal vote.

Changed Coalition Candidates: In parts of New South Wales, the Liberal and National parties are competing for support from amongst the same conservative voters. However, the Coalition agreement means sitting MPs are not challenged by their Coalition partner, and the difference in Coalition support between state and Federal electorates often reflects the pattern of Liberal and National Party candidates.

The Presence of Independents: The Federal seat of Calare, and the state seats of Bligh, Manly and Tamworth are currently held by Indepdnents. This cannot be taken into account in comparing election results.

Informal Vote: The informal vote was very high at the 1991 and 1995 State elections. This was because of confusion caused by the conduct of referendums at both elections. While the referendum ballot paper instructed voters to use a tick, if a tick was used on the Legislative Assembly ballot paper, the vote was informal. At the 1991 election, the highest informal vote was recorded in electorates with only two candidates, in which case the Assembly ballot paper closely resembled the referendum ballot paper. At the 1999 State election, the informal vote will fall significantly, because a referendum will not be conducted, and the formality rules for the Assembly have reverted to their pre-1991 state, where ticks and crosses are valid, the sole test of formality being that a voter's intent is clear. Comparisons of state and federal elections suggest that the Labor vote may have been depressed by the high informal vote in 1991 and 1995.

Declaration Vote: Calculations based on the 1996 and 1998 federal election results have been unable to include postal, absent, pre-poll and other declaration votes. In rural electorates, inclusion of the declaration vote generally lowers the Labor vote.

Optional Preferential Voting and One Nation: Optional preferential voting works in favour of the candidate with the highest primary vote, as each exhausted vote brings the candiate leading on primary votes closer to the 50% required to win after preferences. At the 1998 Federal election, it appears that the Coalition suffered more from loss of primary vote support to One Nation. Converting the Federal results to state boundaries, the impact of this can be illustrated with the electorate of Murray-Darling, where exhausted votes could have helped the Labor Party turn a primary vote lead into a victory after preferences.

(Commentary on underlined seats is provided on pages 8-9)

Notes on Electorates

Albury: As Albury is contained entirely within the Federal electorate of Farrer, held by National Party Leader Tim Fischer. As a result, federal results show the seat as being held by the National Party.

Bathurst: Contained within the Federal electorate of Calare, won by Independent Peter Andren at both the 1996 and 1998 Federal elections. The two-party preferred count available for the 1996 election indicates that if Andren's preferences had been distributed, Bathurst would have been won by the Labor Party.

Bligh: Held by Independent Clover Moore. Federal results show Bligh to be a Labor seat. On the old boundaries, Bligh would have been a more marginal Labor seat.

Blue Mountains: On 1996 results, Blue Mountains would have been a Liberal seat, as it was based on 1991 state results. The 1998 Federal election produced a similar result to the 1995 State election.

Burrinjuck: The retirement at the 1998 election of Federal National MP for Hume, John Sharp, saw the seat fall to the Liberal MP for Burrinjuck, Alby Schultz. As a result, Burrinjuck switches from being a National seat in 1996 to a Liberal seat in 1998. Note that Burrinjuck is currently vacant, a by-election not being conducted ahead of the state election.

Clarence: The seat was gained for Labor at a 1996 by-election by Harry Woods, who had lost the Federal seat of Page at the 1996 Federal election.

Drummoyne: Would have been a Liberal seat at the 1996 Federal election results, based on the Liberal victory in Lowe.

Georges River: Recent State results all show Georges River as a Liberal seat. However the results in the Federal seats of Banks, Barton and Watson see Georges River with a Labor majority in 1998. The Labor Party has held all Federal seats in the St George district since 1983, though the Liberal Party has held Georges River, on different boundaries, since 1988.

Heathcote: Shown as Liberal held on Federal election results. This is most likely to be because while the Liberal Party has conducted intensive campaigns in Hughes, it conducted only a nominal campaign the old state seat of Bulli in 1991 and 1995.

Kogarah: Contains parts of the existing electorate of Georges River, and based on the good Liberal result in that electorate in 1991, the seat would have been won by the Liberal party at that election.

Lachlan: With the Liberal Party contesting the Federal seats of Parkes, Hume and Riverina in 1998, the Liberal Party outpolled the National Party within the boundaries of the state seat of Lachlan.

Maitland: Contained within the Federal seat of Paterson, Maitland would have been Labor held on both 1996 and 1998 Federal election results. The difference between state and federal results may be explained by sitting member factors.

Manly: On the old electoral boundaries, Manly was won by Independent Peter Macdonald at the last two state elections. On Federal results, it would be a safe Liberal seat.

Monaro: The popularity of the recently resigned National Party MP Peter Cochrane is illustrated by him polling more than ten percent higher than the Liberal Party at Federal elections. Based on 1998 results, Monaro would have been won by the Labor Party.

Murray-Darling: A marginal Labor seat on 1998 Federal results, though if the large postal vote in this electorate were included in the calculations, the National Party would probably have retained the seat. If the 1998 election had been conducted under the New South Wales system of optional preferential voting, exhausted One Nation preferences would have slighly favoured the Labor Party.

Orange: Included within the boundaries of the Federal seat of Calare, won by Independent Peter Andren in both 1996 and 1998.

Parramatta: A marginal Liberal seat based on 1991 state election results.

Peats: The Federal electorate of Robertson was won narrowly by the Liberal Party in both 1996 and 1998, and based on these results, Peats is much more marginal than at State elections, even having a narrow Liberal majority based on the 1996 result.

Penrith: The huge lift in Liberal support at both the 1996 and 1998 election is reflected in the notional Liberal majority in the state seat of Penrith. However, at state elections, the sitting member factor works in favour of the Labor Party.

Riverstone: A very narrow Liberal majority based on 1996 results, reflecting the poor Labor result in the Federal seat of Greenway at that election.

Strathfield: Includes parts of the Federal seats of Lowe and Grandler, and a notional Labor electorate in both 1996 and 1998.

Tamworth: A safe National Party seat held at state elections by Independent Tony Windsor.

The Entrance: A narrow Liberal majority based on the 1996 Federal election. Won narrowly by the Liberal Party at the 1991 state election, but lost at a by-election in January 1992. The by-election was caused by a Court of Disputed Returns judgement.

Wagga Wagga: A Liberal seat, but contained within the Federal National Party electorate of Riverina.

Comparing Senate and Legislative Council Elections

At the 1996 and 1998 elections, a half-Senate election was conducted for six Senators. Since 1995, Legislative Council elections have been conducted for half the Council, 21 Councillors at each election. The quota for Senate election is 14.3%, for Legislative Council election, 4.55%.

Tables 6 to 9 provide some detail of past elections for the Legislative Council. The first direct election for the Council was held in 1978. Until 1991, one-third (15) councillors retired at each election. In 1978, 28 indirectly elected Councillor retained their seats, 14 retiring in 1981, and 14 in 1984, when the Council finally became fully elected with 45 members.

Following a referendum in 1991, the Council was reduced to 42 members, with half retiring at each election The position of three councillors was abolished, one Labor, one Coalition and former Call to Australia member Marie Bignold. The first election for 21 members was held in 1995. At the 1999 election, the 15 members elected in 1991 will face election, along with the remaining six members elected in 1988.

Since the 1995 election, three Legislative Councillors have resigned from the political party under whose banner they were elected. Richard Jones has resigned from the Australian Democrats, Franca Arena from the Labor Party, and Helen Sham-Ho from the Liberal Party. Mr Jones and Ms Sham-Ho were elected in 1995, and do not face reelection in 1999.

Commentary on Senate Results

Based on the 1998 Senate results, a Legislative Council election would have seen 19 of the 21 vacancies filled on the initial quotas, 8 Labor, 8 Coalition, 2 One Nation and an Australian Democrat. The final two vacancies would have to be determined by the distribution of preferences.

More than 95% of votes are cast using the group ticket or 'above the line' voting option, in which case, preferences are distributed according to tickets lodged with the Australian Electoral Commission. From the votes cast, it was apparent that the final two vacancies would be filled from the Labor, Democrat, Green and Christian Democrat (CTA) tickets. The registered preference tickets for all other parties were examined, and so at the point when only four candidates remained in the count, the totals for each party would have been approximately as follows.

Party remaining in count	Votes	Group	Party Excluded
Australian Democrats	105 195		(Surplus beyond first quota)

Table 12: Possible Distribution of Preferences for Legislative Council Election (Based on 1998 Senate Vote and Registered Ticket Votes)

The initial count for each of the four parties would in reality be slightly lower due to the leakage of below the line votes out of these tickets. The total votes added to each party as preferences represent ticket votes only. The approximately 16,000 Below the line votes for other parties have been ignored, as they would not have changed the order in which the above parties finished.

One Nation preferences are shown as flowing to Labor. This is because while One Nation registered two preference tickets, splitting preferences between Labor and the Coalition, by the time the third One Nation was excluded, there were no Coalition candidates remaining in the count, resulting in all preferences flowing to Labor ahead of the Greens, Australian Democrats and Christian Democrats.

At the point in the count shown in Table 12, the Greens candidate would have been excluded, electing the second Australian Democrat candidate. As a result, the election would have finished electing 9 Labor, 8 Coalition, 2 One Nation and 2 Australian Democrats. This would have resulted in a Legislative Councl made up of 17 Labor, 15 Coalition, 3 Australian Democrats, 2 One Nation, 2 Independents, and one Councillor each representing the Christian Democrats, Greens, Shooters Party and A Better Future for Our Children.
